The program was completed by a Wagner group made up of the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the prelude to "Lohengrin," the bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser" and prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

The festival came to its termination on a note of triumph for all concerned. Although the attendance has been the largest in the six-year history of the festival, all indications point to a still greater attendance next Summer. There is a possibility that the season henceforth will be at least a week longer than in the past to meet the growing demand for seats. That 100 persons have already made reservations for the next festival is a most encouraging sign for the festival authorities, since nothing of the kind happened during the previous seasons.

With Dr. Koussevitzky holding his new music academy here for six weeks next Summer, a completely new aspect will be given the festival activities. It will mean, for one thing, a far larger number of young music students at the concerts. The festival will reach its height with a performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor, when for the first time here a choral work will be presented. With promise of this sort in view, the present festival has proved even more of a success than was anticipated.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

AUG 14 1939

Berkshire Festival Closes Rapturously

By C. R. ROSEBERRY

The sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to a rapturous close at Tanglewood yesterday, and Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony conductor who had led his splendid orchestra in the six triumphal concerts of the season, was fairly lionized at the end.

An audience wild with enthusiasm applauded and huzzaed for five minutes or more, calling the ruddy, white-haired conductor back a half dozen times to his podium for bows. Koussevitzky, however, clug to the rule of no encores which he had maintained throughout the series.

Indeed, an encour would have been superfluous after those two invigorating symphonies of a memorable Sunday afternoon — the Schumann Fourth and the Sibelius Second—not to mention the singularly poetic interpreations given two examples of the modern French chool, Debussy's "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune" and Ravel's "La Valse."

In the second year the Tnglewood Music Shed (a modest name for such an imposing structure) has been in use, it becomes increasingly apparent the accommodations have already been outgrown. Total attendance at the six concerts was announced as 38,000. Reckoning the official seating capacity at 5,700, this means that the capacity was over-sold by 3,800.

Saturday night's program had been easily the most acutely variegated of the series—ranging from the pure simplicity of Haydn's Symphony No. 102, through the wild discord and primitive rhythm of Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring," to the rich sensuality of Wagner.

There were conflicting reactions among that vast audience, to be sure, when the frequently hideous distortions of sound in the Stravinsky ballet assaulted the ear. But Koussevitzky approached it with the same conscience he would apply to Beethoven or Brahms, so that, musically as it might appear to those who believe music to be synonymous with beauty, it was at least interesting.

At any rate, Koussevitzky this year has answered those complainants who felt that he was making his programs too conventional, that he should include music not so traditionally heard in the concert hall.

This season we have heard not only the horrendous Stravinsky, but Walter Piston's Concerto for Orchestra, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," the Richard Strauss tone poem, "Thus Spake Zarathustra," and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition"—none of which can exactly be called repetitions.

Koussevitzky's Wagnerian offerings this year were somewhat abbreviated, but played with the same colorful abandon that he habitually lavishes upon Wagner. The selections Saturday night were the overture to "Der Fliegende Holländer," the prelude to "Lohengrin," the Bacchanale from "Tannhauser" and the prelude to "Die Meisterhinger."

With the exception of the opening night, when a furious thunderstorm interrupted the program in mid-course, the Berkshire Festival enpoyed ideal weather throughout. As if by prearrangement with the elements, a gathering storm yesterday withheld its assault until the concert was over and the audience well dispersed.

139

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ALBANY, N. Y.
TIMES-UNION

AUG 14 1939

Thousands Attend Closing Stockbridge Programs

Modern Offerings Feature Sunday Night's Bill

By EDGAR S. VAN OLINDA

"The song is ended but the memory lingers on" may be the popular song's validictory to a popular season of the world's greatest symphonic music held during the last two weeks at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., in the shadow of the Berkshires. The word, popular is used advisedly when it is considered that Saturday night and yesterday afternoon, between 7,000 and 8,000 people attended each of the week-end offerings.

Last night's concert was the most controversial of the series, including as it did, the "World of Tomorrow" as expressed in music by Stravinsky's "The Rite of Spring." From the refined and brocaded melodies of "Papa" Hayden, father of the symphony, whose 102nd child was the grateful offering which opened the concert last night, Dr. Serge Koussevitzy then went off the deep end from the musical springboard into the swirling waters of modernism, with a capital M, in music. While the conductor never got beyond his depth, musically during the playing of the contemporary composer's problem-child, we gathered from bits of conversation heard during the intermission that the majority of members of the audience were way over their heads and swimming valiently to keep afloat. The montage of sound pictures, superimposing bizzare and unorthodox melodies on the framework of barbarous, aboriginal rhythms is exciting, if not soul-satisfying, and while it expresses the unrest of the world today, it is not the therapeutical solution of those problems. Duke Ellington and Benny Goodman can produce the same result playing different "hot-cha" tunes simultaneously. The young people approved it last night with the same degree of enthusiasm with which their elders expressed their disapproval.

WAGNER OPERATIC EXCERPTS

The glorious orchestrations and melodic grandeur of the group of four Wagner operatic excerpts which closed the concert still will be played when Stracinsky, musical meteor of the moment, is dust. When a musical critic like Olin Downes, lecturing in the morning on the music of the "Rite" professes ignorance of what it is all about we feel we are not hopelessly lost in a maze of atonal under undergrowth.

One of the most unusual experiences of the series was the absorption of the Wagner group from the lawns back of the shed, sitting propped up against a tree with the nebulous forms of the real music lovers lying prone on the ground with nothing between them and the stars but a blanket spread under and over them as protection from the night air, like a bivouacked army, casting strange shadowy silhouettes against the illuminated orchestra shell, listening breathlessly to the clearly, defined music, undisturbed by the gesticulations of the conductor, or the distraction of outside influences.

STRICTLY MELODIC PROGRAM

Sunday's program hewed strictly to the melodic musical line. Starting with the noble Fourth Symphony of Schumann, Dr. Koussevitzky directed his men through the languorous cadences of Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun" in an atmosphere of mid-summer haze with a gentle breeze blowing through the nearby cedars much as the imaginative French composer originally conceived the work. Ravel's "Valse" followed and emerged as a Strauss Waltz in sport clothes. The final work was the monumental second symphony of the Finnish nationalist, Sibelius who has incorporated into his

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

AUG 1 4 1939

StraussTonePoem Heard at Berkshire

"Thus Spake Zarathustra" Dominates Second Festival Series

By THOMAS ARCHER.
(Gazette Drama and Music Critic.)

Stockbridge, Mass.—It would be difficult to wish for a more interesting and more balanced program than that given last Thursday night by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the first of the second series of concerts of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in the music shed at Tanglewood. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's combination of an early Beethoven symphony, one of Richard Strauss's most ambitious tone poems and Ravel's colorful transcription of Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" was a tribute to his taste and skill as a maker of programs. Here, if anywhere, was an instance of a bold and imaginative sense of contrast.

The audience, as large as ever in numbers and as quiet and attentive during performance, evidently thought so for conductor and musicians received unlimited applause at the conclusion of each item. And from here and there all over the shed came shouts of "bravo!" Due to perfect weather this applause extended from the sheds across the lawns of the Tanglewood estate.

Richard Strauss's "Thus Spake Zarathustra" stands out in perspective like a high tower. This mighty score, of course, is one of the exhibition pieces of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and after hearing it, one can well understand why. There are still those who claim that Strauss knew nothing of the spirit which inspired Nietzsche. But it is safe to say that had the laughing philosopher heard last Thursday night's performance he would have seen at least a part of himself in the tremendous sweep of this proud music and in the atmosphere, half nostalgic, half sardonic and invariably defiant which Dr. Koussevitzky and his men infused into it.

As a demonstration of sheer orchestral virtuosity, it is doubtful if the Boston Symphony's "Zarathustra" [redacted] surpassed. The texture of Strauss's music is pretty complex and the detail seemingly inexhaustible. Motive is piled upon motive and Strauss demands that each individual member of the orchestra shall be to all practical purposes a virtuoso.

Yet the huge work proceeded with the easy precision of an exquisitely adjusted, well-oiled machine. The music sounded in turn loud and commanding, soft and wooing, strong and passionate, and again full of good, broad Bavarian humor. By his gesture alone the conductor showed how well he understands that Strauss is never so happy nor so certain as when he is moving through great, sweeping lyrical moods and taking his audience with him whether they will or not.

The performance of Beethoven's Symphony No 2 in D major which preceded the "Zarathustra" was equally a demonstration of the virtuosity of the Boston Symphony Orchestra but in a different way. Here Dr. Koussevitzky played down fullness of tone in favor of meticulous detail. The conductor managed some method known to himself to maintain a sense of the majesty of Beethoven's genius and at the same time give a performance which was of a lightness unexcelled. The opening allegro was delivered in exactly the lithe, springy way the spirit of the music demands. The slow movement was like a subdued, but penetrating song. Each poetic nuance was brought out with never an undue emphasis, yet was made abundantly clear to those who listened with care and understanding. The scherzo was a dance, and the finale a full-blooded peroration on what had gone before. Throughout the symphony the flow of the music was conveyed with perfect logic and feeling.

It would be expected that Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation of the Moussorgsky - Ravel score would be a very personal one. As a master of the orchestra he was also able to persuade you that Ravel did, as an authority has claimed, make the best orchestral transcription in musical literature when he reworked this uncommonly picturesque fantasy which the Russian composer sat down and wrote after seeing an exhibition of paintings by a second-rate painter of the 1870's.

Dr. Koussevitzky and his musicians captured and held for the listeners the vision of that funny, naive Russian, whose theme always makes you think he was bow-legged, and his abrupt, astoundingly imaginative views of the various pictures in the gallery. It is an astonishing score and it should be heard in Ravel's version as played by the Boston Symphony before its rough and sometimes startling beauties can be appreciated.

As it were in preparation for the Moussorgsky score Dr. Koussevitzky held an impromptu picnic for the orchestra on the previous afternoon and introduced Carleton Smith who lectured on his recent visit to Soviet Russia in search of folk songs. Mr. Smith brought back enough specimens from the Caucasus, Siberia and Lapland to show that music is still practised in the natural in those parts of the world. Even a modern electrical gramophone could not dis[redacted]act that these songs were meant for nowhere else but where Beethoven, Brahms and even Moussorgsky had not yet penetrated.

As a surprise, Dr. Koussevitzky introduced Dorothy Mayner, a young and quite unknown colored soprano of whom the conductor evidently expects much. It is whispered that the conductor even quoted the greater names from the Metropolitan Opera lists to make comparisons.

Miss Mayner possesses a high lyric soprano of unquestioned beauty of tone and she is able to manage her voice with a skill not always common in these days. Her program included songs by Handel, Mozart, and she sang the "Ho-jo-to-ho" from "Die Walkuere" as well as "Depuis le jour" from "Louise" and some Negro spirituals. "Depuis le jour," as a French member of the orchestra claimed, was a piece of singing perfectly French in style. The Mozart was lovely and the Handel a model of subdued singing. There was no need, however, even

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 1 4 1939

Sixth Music Festival Ends In Great Ovation

Audience of 7,000, Establishing New Record for Single Concert, Pays Great Tribute to Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky—Schumann and Sibelius Symphonies Feature Concluding Program—Attendance for Series of Six Concerts Estimated at 38,300—Trustees May Vote to Extend 1940 Season.

A tremendous ovation for Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra brought to a close last night the sixth and most successful Berkshire symphonic festival at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Total Attendance 38,300

A record crowd of 7,000, which used up the available printed tickets and had the box office attendants stamping empty envelopes for substitutes, brought attendance figures for the second concert series to 19,-800. Audiences for the entire festival numbered 38,300.

Although the seating capacity of the shed itself is only 5,700, many persons have discovered the delights of listening to the music from the spacious lawn, where the music can be heard almost as perfectly as from within the shed.

Rain Holds Off to End

Even yesterday's sticky heat did not detract unduly from enjoyment of the concert. Rain considerately held off until the entire audience were safely in their cars.

Although there were some delays in leaving yesterday, and a few minor collisions occurred, traffic was, on the whole, remarkably well handled.

Yesterday's record attendance was anticipated in view of the fact previous records had been broken the night before when an estimated 6,800 persons crowded the shed and grounds.

Fine Program Performed

Musically, the entire festival was on the high level which has distinguished it from most summer symphonic efforts. With works of two modern French composers providing an interlude, two familiar and generally appreciated symphonies formed the substance of the closing program yesterday.

The exuberant happiness of Robert Schumann's life at the time he wrote his Symphony in D minor, was well reflected in the Boston orchestra's interpretation. Though the music makes no pretense to the stature of the works of the greater symphonists, it is overflowing with beautiful melodies. The occasional halts when the composer seems searching for instruments to express his next thought are soon forgotten when he finds his voices.

Sibelius Work Ends Festival

In great contrast was the compelling music of Sibelius, whose Symphony No. 2 in D major concluded the program. In this music there is no let down in the steady building up of a mood which finally finds its complete expression in the climactic splendor of the third and fourth movements, played without interruption. The music has a satisfying architectural completeness which characterizes the greatest symphonic woks.

Always a delight, and never more so than in the romantic Tanglewood setting, is the languid and enchanting "Afternoon of a Faun" by Debussy. In view of present conditions, it seemed that Ravel was almost prophetic when he composed his "La Valse" in 1920, with ~~its snatches~~ of superbly beautiful Viennese waltz melodies obscured by ominous undertones, occasionally breaking out in anguished dissonance.

Saturday Evening Program

The audience accepted either with enjoyment, tolerance or forbearance the performance of Stravinsky's "Rites of Spring" Saturday night. Many who were hearing the work for the first time were frank in professing their distaste, but even those who found no enjoyment in the savage music "stuck it out," while a large part of the audience found the performance, if not pleasing, at least thrilling.

No one, however, could complain at the delicate perfection of Haydn's Symphony in B-flat minor, No. 102, which opened the program, and those who had found the Stravinsky music arduous and tiring found compensation in the Wagnerian selections which concluded the concert.

Extended Program in 1940?

Speculations as to the future of the festival center around rumors that next year concerts will be extended to three weeks instead of two. Those close to the management are quite positive in their belief that the trustees will adopt this course when they meet at the end of the month, in view of the outstanding success of this summer's festival.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 14 1939

Final Concert Of FestivalHeld In Berkshires

Dr. Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Play in Shirtsleeves for Large Crowd

Special to the Herald Tribune

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13. — The Boston Symphony Orchestra in shirtsleeves, and even Dr. Serge Koussevitzky himself in that state of informal attire, did not faze an audience of crushing proportions which gathered in the shed of Tanglewood here this afternoon for the closing concert of the sixth Berkshire Musical Festival.

Dr. Koussevitzky began these matinee proceedings, as an ominous cloudiness outside threatened a downpour, with the Schumann Symphony in D minor, which is really the second in order of composition, but was published as No. 4.

There were several points in this interpretation which might occasion some comment, such as accelerated tempi in the horn fugue of the last movement, a lack of lyric color in the first statement of the secondary theme of the second, and a few other matters unnecessary to mention in detail.

But if one could cavil in such minutiae, there was nothing but praise to greet the succeeding efforts of conductor and orchestra in Debussy's "L'Apres Midi d'un Faune" and Ravel's "La Valse." Dr. Koussevitzky engenders a vision of the Mallarme-Debussy faun, "a simple, sensuous creature," belonging to some far-off other time, beyond the veil of odious reality, yet very much within the scope of human frailty.

The attendance record seems to have been reached this afternoon. The box office reported that more than 7,000 persons heard this final concert. The rows of unsheltered seats had expanded and the scattered groups reclining on rugs and blankets were so thick that one could scarcely step between them.

Certainly the acclamation for conductor and orchestra which came at the conclusion of the Sibelius Symphony in D could be described as thunderous, for it lasted during the better part of half an hour, and the departure of the audience was reluctant.

In this work Dr. Koussevitzky attained new heights of tonal veracity and dramatic climax. It was a performance of stunning effort and glittering precision. Especially in the last movement, with its fragmentary hint of the tremendous coda, the glowing and intense development and the glorious fulfillment of a promised splendor, did this great orchestra write a final and indelible record of achievement. J. S.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 14 1939

Mrs. Bok Congratulates Negro Singer

[Don Jose Browning Photo

"Congratulations!" Thus spoke Mrs. Curtis Bok, of Philadelphia, as she met Dorothy Maynor, the young Negro soprano hailed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, as the "native Kirsten Flagsted."

Miss Maynor gave an impromptu recital for Mrs. Bok at the close of the festival at Tanglewood Sunday afternoon. It was supposed to have been private but when the notes of the arias she sang from the musician's tuning shed carried out over the rapidly emptying grounds there soon was an audience.

The audience, composed of Boston and New York music lovers, thought nothing of being seated atop the trunks, boxes and instrument cases of the musicians, in contrast to the expensive boxes they had just vacated at the close of the Festival. Herbert Graf, stage manager of the Metropolitan Opera Company, is shown with Mrs. Bok.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

AUG 1 4 1939

The fifth concert of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, given here tonight at Tanglewood, in Lenox, attracted the largest audience of this year's series to date, those in attendance numbering nearly 7,000, writes Noel Straus in the New York Times.

Tonight's program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, was received with unbounded enthusiasm. Dr. Koussevitzky and his forces were in a particularly inspired mood with results in consequence difficult to appraise without piling up superlatives.

The first part of the program was given over to the Haydn Symphony in B flat major, No. 102, and Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps." After the intermission a Wagnerian group completed the offerings. These Wagnerian selections comprised the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the prelude to "Lohengrin," the Bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser' and the prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

This morning the orchestra gave the second of its open rehearsals, which as a rule only members and patrons of the festival organization are privileged to attend. As last Saturday, however, an exception again was made, in favor of pupils of the Berkshire County public and parochial high schools, who had taken the music appreciation course offered this Spring by the layman's music course, under the auspices of the festival organization. More than 1,000 of these eager young music lovers were in the audience as Dr. Koussevitzky came on the stage to put the finishing touches on certain of the offerings on the final schedule.

Before the conductor began his activities Olin Downes gave a lecture on works about to undergo finishing touches on the part of the orchestra, namely the Haydn and Stravinsky compositions mentioned above and also Schumann's Fourth Symphony, figuring on tomorrow's list. Thereafter the musicians began their morning's duties with a detailed consideration of the Stravinsky "Sacre du Printemps." Because the provocative and revolutionary work was given particularly in its entirety, those fortunate enough to be present virtually heard an extra performance of it, played in an incomparable manner, and projected with all the intensity and brilliance of tonight's concert presentation.

Following an intermission the rehearsal continued with a brief refurbishing of parts of Schumann's Fourth Symphony, including the introduction of the first movement, most of the romanza, and various passages of the scherzo and the finale. Evidently the leader felt it unnecessary to put the players through their paces in the Haydn Symphony, save for the last half of the concluding presto.

The rest of the rehearsal was devoted to Sibelius' Second Symphony in preparation for tomorrow afternoon's concert. The scherzo of this masterpiece was given in its entirety, but only passages here and there from the other movements received attention.

To be present at one of Dr. Koussevitzky's rehearsals of his orchestra is a rare privilege, for which plenty of serious musicians would give their eye teeth. Almost all of the director's comments and admonitions to the men were given in such a low tone of voice that only an occasional word here and there became audible to the 3,000 persons in the audience. Nevertheless the gist of what he had to say nearly always became obvious from the immediate effect his remarks invariably had in the improvement of a given passage in one way or another.

In the slow movement of the Sibelius, for instance, where the chief melody is intoned by the bassoon to rolling of tympan, it became evident that Dr. Koussevitzky desired much greater delicacy and shaping of phrase by the accompanying low strings from the amazing response of the players. The men at once heeded his whispered orders by completely transfiguring their pizzicato measures into a music of unbelievable beauty of texture with a message of eerie import quite unlike the initial attempt in all essential respects.

Now that the festival is nearing its close and a sold-out house is assured for the final concert tomorrow, the great success of the venture this year is beyond question. Naturally Dr. Koussevitzky, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, the festival organization's president, and all the other festival authorities are elated. Miss Smith said today that even larger audiences are expected next Summer. She reported that already 100 rseervations have been made for the 1940 festival. It is the first time in the festival's history that membership tickets have been taken and paid for so far in advance. At present the festival office is busy preparing 10,000 circulars, which will be sent out to prospective members for next season within a few days.

RECORD AUDIENCE PRESENT AT LAST FESTIVAL EVENT

Sibelius, Debussy, Ravel on Closing Program at Tanglewood

By Willard M. Clark

STOCKBRIDBE, Aug. 14—The sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to a close yesterday with an electrifying performance of the Second Symphony of Sibelius. Such performances have marked the current festival and one will not soon forget Dr. Koussevitzky's superb readings of such works as the first symphony of Brahms, the second symphony of Beethoven or Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra." Seven thousand persons heard the program, the largest audience in the history of the festival.

Sure of Appeal

With uncanny skill the conductor of the Boston Symphony has arranged his programs so that they will include something which would be sure to appeal to those who made up the large audiences. It was announced that more than 35,000 persons attended the six concerts, by far the largest audiences in the history of the festival. Programs have followed conservative paths, but there have been exciting works, both old and new, to lend variety.

The festival authorities now look forward to next season when the new school will be inaugurated and it is rumored that the season next summer may include additional concerts. Whether an extension of the series is wise or not remains to be seen.

The festival has prospered thus far because it has gone slowly. Every move has been carefully considered with the result that the festival has paid its way, a historic achievement in American music annals. It also remains to be seen whether or not students will flock to the new school. Economic conditions will have much to do with the success or failure of the new enterprise. Tuition costs are quoted as $100 for the season and then there will be the little matter of additional living expenses and such expenses come high in the vicinity of Lenox and Stockbridge.

Dr. Koussevitzky chose yesterday to interpret works with which his name has become closely associated. He has an affinity for the works of Ravel and Debussy and no conductor in America has done more than he has to make the symphonies of Sibelius known here.

Great Performances

Yesterday the Boston Symphony players gave virtuoso performances, with virility, color and expressiveness. Especially was this true of the Ravel "Valse" and Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun." The valse glowed with color and the sweeping, compelling rhythms of the music were a marvelous evocation of the orchestra's powers. To the "Afternoon of a Faun," Dr. Koussevitzky brought a lovely and imaginative reading, rich in exquisite languors and estatic melody.

The Boston conductor's reading of the Second Symphony of Sibelius is legendary. It is terse, powerful and convincing. The music itself is enormously vital. Listening this afternoon one wondered anew at the amazing economy and effectiveness of the orchestration. Dr. Koussevitzky's reading was all that could be desired. There were blazing proclamations with climax piled upon climax in the final movement, played with an intensity that will not soon be forgotten. It was a magnificent achievement for both conductor and players.

The program opened with the fourth symphony of Schumann. It was a clever opening for this type of program. The symphony is the most aggressive of the Schumann symphonies, yet it does not lack the romantic or melodic qualities of the others.

Dr. Koussevitzky read it with great care, yet there was a certain tense quality to the reading which robbed the work of some of its innate charm. The scherzo was played with fine spirit and the romance was lovely in its tenderness. The first and final portions of the work were notable for their virility.

The large audience seemed loth to leave after this final concert. There was prolonged cheering and not until conductor and players had acknowledged applause many times would the people leave the music shed.

No. Adams News

Cardillo Wins Koussevitzky's Compliments On Festival Work

Pasquale Cardillo of 102 Francis street, local clarinetist who realized a life-long ambition when he took his place in the membership of the Boston Symphony orchestra during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival which ended yesterday, played in all but one of the series of six concerts which made up the Festival program this year.

When an unexpected vacancy occurred in the clarinet section of the orchestra the day before the opening of the Festival, Mr. Cardillo, who is well acquainted among the membership of the orchestra, having met a number of them during his four years of study at the New England Conservatory of Music at Boston, was called in and given a personal audition by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the orchestra. His musical ability met with the approval of Dr. Koussevitzky and he took his place in the orchestra, playing in every concert but that of Sunday, Aug. 6, when none of the selections played called for his instrument.

In the programs given Thursday evening, Aug. 10, and Saturday, Aug. 12, the scores included a number of difficult solo passages for the E-flat clarinet, Mr. Cardillo's instrument. He was personally complimented by Dr. Koussevitzky at rehearsals on his handling of these passages.

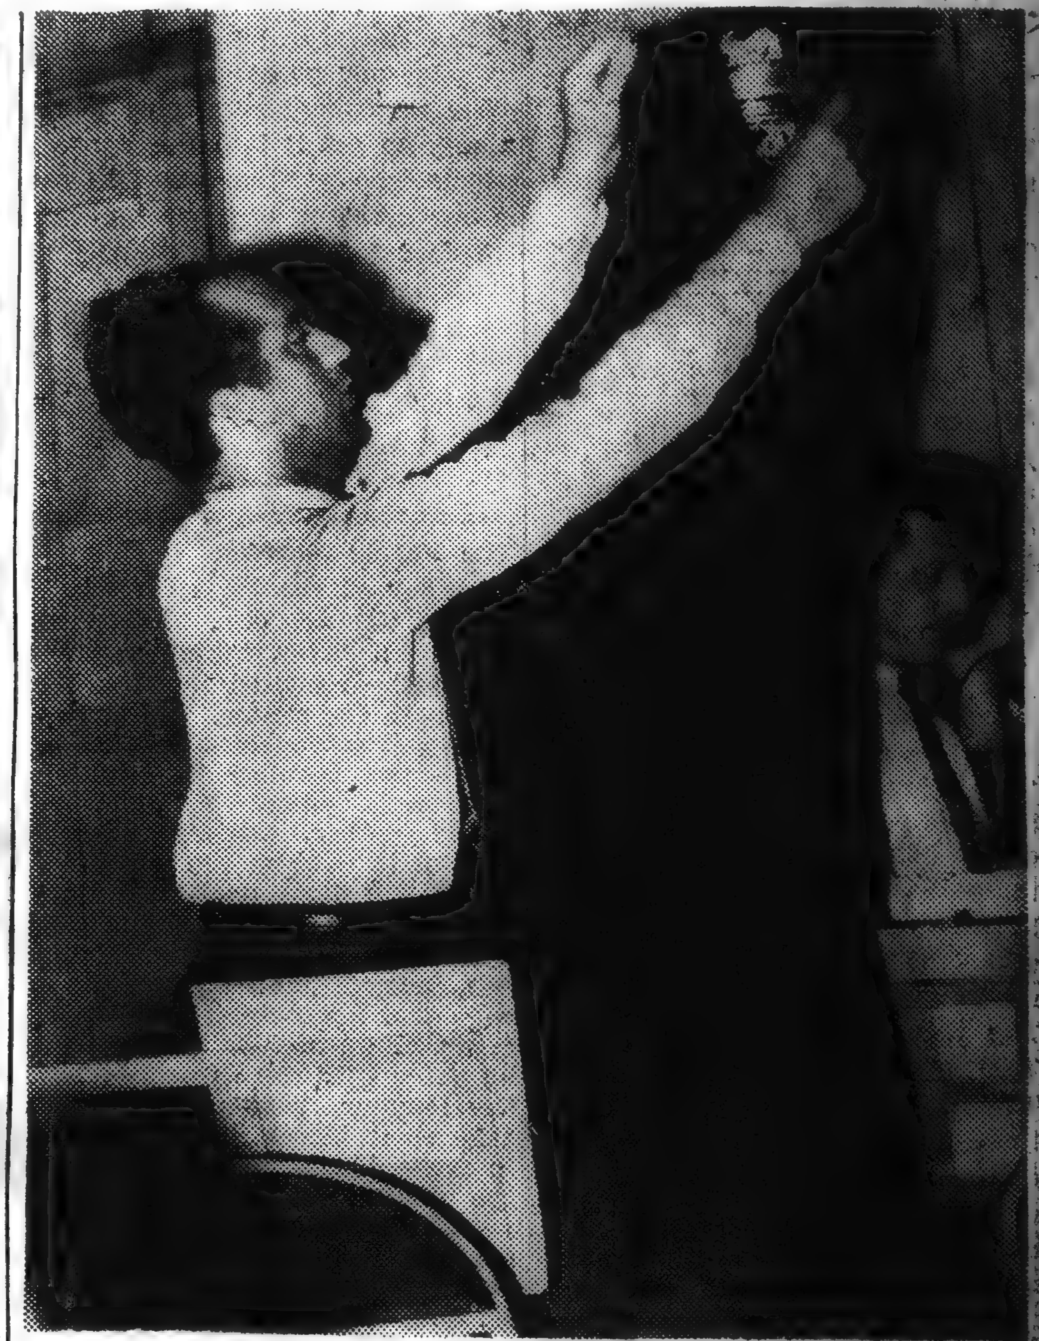
Mr. Cardillo graduated from Drury high school in 1935. His remarkable musical ability won him a small scholarship at the New England Conservatory, which he attended for four years, working at various jobs in order to help himself in his musical education. For many years it has been his ambition to become a member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, but he never dreamed that fate would allow him to take his place in its ranks, even if for a few days, so soon. His friends in this city are delighted with the opportunity given him and feel that his success during the Festival may mean that he will take his place permanently under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton much sooner than had he not had this opportunity to demonstrate his ability.

Mr. Cardillo appeared with two other musicians in one of several informal photographs of the activities of the members of the orchestra at Tanglewood which appeared in the Boston Globe yesterday, accompanying a feature story on the famous orchestra's "back to nature" movement during the Festival series. It showed the local boy and the two other players engaged in a little woodcraft at a camp which some of the musicians occupied for the two weeks of their Berkshire season.

Koussevitzky Given Tremendous Ovation as Berkshire Symphonic Festival Ends

Dr. Koussevitzky, plainly showing signs of exhaustion, takes a final bow.

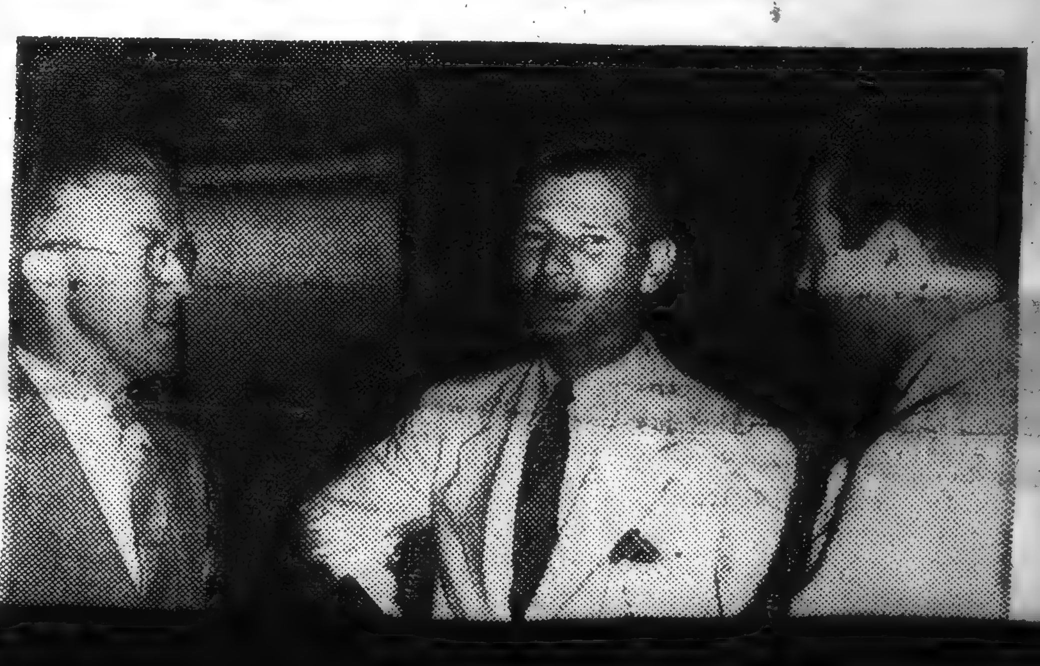
The audience acclaims Koussevitzky and the orchestra following the final movement of Sibelius's Symphony No. 2 in D Major, concluding composition on yesterday afternoon's program ending the sixth Festival season.



Bernard Zieghera, harpist, puts away his instrument, and it's not an easy job.

A. A. Berle Jr., Under Secretary of State, summer resident of Great

Joseph Franz, chairman of the Tanglewood committee, takes a well deserved rest after the final concert.



All Classes Enthusiastic Over 1939 Festival Series

Program Pleased Large Majority Of Listeners—Some Suggestions For Physical Improvements Made

Thrilled enthusiasm was evident among all classes attending the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood but many had their own ideas of the now famous event.

Some were satisfied with the arrangement of programs for the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, while others, particularly those of the "Third Estate," had some ideas for improvement in the physical aspects and the arrangements for the Festival.

Mrs. Bok Thrilled

Mrs. Edward Bok of Philadelphia, Pa., president of the Curtis Institute of Music, who was the guest of Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky in her box yesterday afternoon, said she "was thrilled with the aristocracy of the building," and was particularly impressed with the number of young people who attended the concerts. "It only goes to prove that the young are becoming interested and are educating themselves in music," she added.

"If there is anyone under this shed who disapproves of today's program," said Mrs. Josephine Daskam Bacon, author of New York, "he should be shot." Mrs. Bacon was so enthused over Sunday afternoon's program that she said "If Dr. Koussevitzky asked me before the concert to make out the program I would have made it just as he did."

Another boxholder, speaking anonymously, who had attended every concert since the Festival was established six years ago, described the 1939

Box Office Runs Out of Festival Tickets

Gordon Simpson, in charge of the ticket sales at the box office, ran out of tickets when he hit the 900 mark for admissions and had to use a Berkshire Symphonic Festival stamp on ticket envelopes to make some kind of an official looking pass that would be acceptable to the ticket takers. He issued about 100 of these.

Tanglewood Tales

J. Alcott Sandrews of Austin, Tex., hitch-hiked from that city to Lenox for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the World's Fair in New York. He arrived Saturday night. Unable to get a room in Stockbridge or Lenox he went to the Festival grounds, enjoyed the concert and then was taken to Pittsfield by Manager Robert Tryon of the Western Union who obtained a room for him for the weekend. Sandrews is a former music critic at the University of Texas.

Robert K. Shattuck of Wilming-

Koussevitzkys Leave for Maine Vacation

Orchestra Leader To Return Here In September

Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, leaves Stockbridge today for a vacation at Seal Harbor, Me. He plans to return some time in September with some members of the Boston Symphony trustees and they will discuss details of the academy to be opened at Tanglewood next summer.

Before leaving, Dr. Koussevitsky expressed himself as tremendously pleased with the reception given him and the orchestra by the Festival audiences. Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky stayed at the summer home of Dr. and Mrs. Artus Rodzinski during the Festival period.

George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra and Mrs. Judd, who stayed at the Curtis Hotel, left this morning for their summer home in Norwell. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Spaulding who were at the Wendell Hotel in this city, returned to Boston today. Mr. Spaulding is the assistant manager. Gordon Simpson, in charge of the box office for the orchestra at Symphony Hall, who came on to help the Festival left this morning for Baltimore, Md., with Mrs. Simpson. They also stayed at the Wendell.

was forced to change his plans because he was called unexpectedly to Chicago.

Mrs. William Francis Gibbs,

Hitchhikes to Tanglewood, Then Pushes Wheelchair

Among those who hitchhiked to Tanglewood for all six concerts was Paul De Porte of 331 West Avenue, Albany. Paul, a student at Rensselaer Polytechnical Institute in Troy, N. Y., earned his admission to the concerts as a member of the "wheelchair brigade" directed by E. M. Bliss. Paul thumbed his way to and from Tanglewood and while there had charge of one of the chairs used to take invalids to and from their cars to their seats in the music shed.

Miss Maynor Sings in Tuning Room

Gives Brief Concert for a Few Friends

The music shed at Tanglewood was deserted. Lightning occasionally flashed among the Hawthorne pines. Rumbles of thunder seemed to shake the firmament. Then came the rain and striking the roof of the shed, sounded like the tympani of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra whose concert had brought the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to a climatic close less than a half hour before.

An occasional automobile horn

A. A. Berle Jr., Under Secretary of State, summer resident of Great Barrington, leaves the box office after buying a ticket for Saturday's concert.

Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, and Kenneth M. Simpson, Republican National Committeeman of New York, discuss the Festival at intermission.

[illegible] Artur Rodzinski [illegible] great bulk from the Rodzinski farm in Stockbridge

phia, Pa., president of the Curtis Institute of Music, who was the guest of Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky in her box yesterday afternoon, said she "was thrilled with, the aristocracy of the building," and was particularly impressed with the number of young people who attended the concerts. "It only goes to prove that the young are becoming interested and are educating themselves in music," she added.

"If there is anyone under this shed who disapproves of today's program," said Mrs. Josephine Daskam Bacon, author of New York, "he should be shot." Mrs. Bacon was so enthused over Sunday afternoon's program that she said "If Dr. Koussevitzky asked me before the concert to make out the program I would have made it just as he did."

Another boxholder, speaking anonymously, who had attended every concert since the Festival was established six years ago, described the 1939 series as "wonderful," and expressed the desire to have more concerts. "It seems too bad," he said," to have such a beautiful building and use it for only two weeks of the year."

"Today's large attendance is just one of the evidences of America coming of age," commented Roy Harris, the composer, on the 1939 Festival. "Our people are beginning to want the best in culture along with their vacations," he added. "Combined, cultural events and vacations, are helping the growth of music in this country." The 1939 series has been "all very exciting to me," he continued, "and I am looking forward to even more thrilling concerts under the music shed here at Tanglewood."

Against Request Programs

Mrs. Cornelia Colton Hollister of Toledo Ohio, and Lenox, wants "to see 25,000 people at the Festival next year." She is not in favor of request programs. Mrs. Hollister praised Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, on "the success of the Festival far beyond her imagination the first year."

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Williams Steele of South Norwalk. Conn., who attended the Festival yesterday afternoon, expressed great enthusiasm for the whole idea. Mr. Steele, who is a choral director for several societies, including the Borden Glee Club, the Men's Choral Club of Norwalk, Conn., the New York Life Insurance Glee Club, and Savings Bank Glee Club, both of New York, and the St. Cecilia Society of Old Greenwich, Conn. and the Apollo Club of Stamford. Conn., was par-ticket takers. He issued about 100 of these.

Festival Series
Continued on 16th Page

pleased with the reception given him and the orchestra by the Festival audiences. Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky stayed at the summer home of Dr. and Mrs. Artus Rodzinski during the Festival period.

George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra and Mrs. Judd, who stayed at the Curtis Hotel, left this morning for their summer home in Norwell. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Spaulding who were at the Wendell Hotel in this city, returned to Boston today. Mr. Spaulding is the assistant manager. Gordon Simpson, in charge of the box office for the orchestra at Symphony Hall, who came on to help the Festival left this morning for Baltimore, Md., with Mrs. Simpson. They also stayed at the Wendell.

Tanglewood Tales

J. Alcott Sandrews of Austin, Tex., hitch-hiked from that city to Lenox for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the World's Fair in New York. He arrived Saturday night. Unable to get a room in Stockbridge or Lenox he went to the Festival grounds, enjoyed the concert and then was taken to Pittsfield by Manager Robert Tryon of the Western Union who obtained a room for him for the weekend. Sandrews is a former music critic at the University of Texas.

Robert K. Shattuck of Wilmington, Del., attended all of the concerts. Shattuck, who is 25, was registered at the Hotel Wendell during the series. He hitch-hiked to Tanglewood on the days of the concerts. He enjoyed the Festival, he said, hopes the series will be extended next year.

Adolf A. Berle Jr., Under Secretary of State, and Mrs. Berle, the former Beatrice Bend Bishop of Lenox, summer residents of Great Barrington were at the weekend concerts. They came late Saturday night, bought their tickets at the box office and took their seats in the front section after the first number was played.

Newbold Morris, president of the City Council of New York, attended Saturday night's concert with Kenneth, Simpson of New York well known member of the Republican National Committee. They sat in Section Three, Row Three. Mr. Morris said that Mayor La Guardia of New York had planned to attend Thursday's concert but was forced to change his plans because he was called unexpectedly to Chicago.

Mrs. William Francis Gibbs, daughter of Paul D. Cravatt of New York, motored from the Adirondacks for the final concert yesterday. She was the luncheon guest yesterday of Mr. and Mrs. Donald McPherson at Court Hill, this city.

Madame Koussevitzky's box was the center of activity at yesterday's final concert. With her were Mrs. Edward Bok of Philadelphia, Mrs. John Braun, Dr. James F. Herlihy, Carlton Smith of Esquire and Mrs. Artur Rodzinski, wife of the conductor of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra. Photographers grouped around the box making pictures of Madame Koussevitzky, Mrs. Bok and Mrs. Rodzinski when Dorothy Maynor was called to the box to meet Mrs. Bok.

Mrs. Allen Craig of Bangor, Me., formerly of Torrington, Conn., a member of the advisory board of the Festival, motored down from Maine yesterday for the final concert.

Candid camera fiends did everything but stand on their heads making "shots" of Koussevitzky at the conclusion of the Festival yesterday afternoon. Earlier in the afternoon some were in the trees, others on the roof of the Tanglewood house and one atop another's shoulders making pictures of the crowd on the spacious lawn at intermission.

More than 800 standing room tickets were sold at Saturday night's concert and about 1000 yesterday. People filled the lawn near the northwest side of the shed while the accoustics carried the music as far as the main house where several listened while viewing Lake Mahkeenac from the lawn.

The gardens at Tanglewood

Tanglewood Tales
Continued on 16th Page

Sings in Tuning Room

Gives Brief Concert for a Few Friends

The music shed at Tanglewood was deserted. Lightning occasionally flashed among the Hawthorne pines. Rumbles of thunder seemed to shake the firmament. Then came the rain and striking the roof of the shed, sounded like the tympani of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra whose concert had brought the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to a climatic close less than a half hour before.

An occasional automobile horn sounded from some of the last members of the parking crew making their departure. The musicians' instruments were being packed on the stage and scores were being filed away near Serge Koussevitzky's exit.

All music at Tanglewood until another year seemed ended, but suddenly the mellow tones of a rich soprano voice came from the direction of the tuning room back of the stage. Inside as Miss Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro singer, performing for the benefit of a few friends, some who had heard her before, some who had missed her appearance at Dr. Koussevlitzky's picnic and at First Church in Pittsfield yesterday. She sang for 20 minutes to the delight of those fortunate enough to have lingered until the storm arrived.

Every State but Idaho Represented at Festival

"There are people here from every part of the United States but Idaho," said one of the traffic men at intermission yesterday afternoon.

And it seemed that he was right for your inquiring reporter started walking through the parking area, taking a casual glance at number plates. He found about every state in the union was represented.

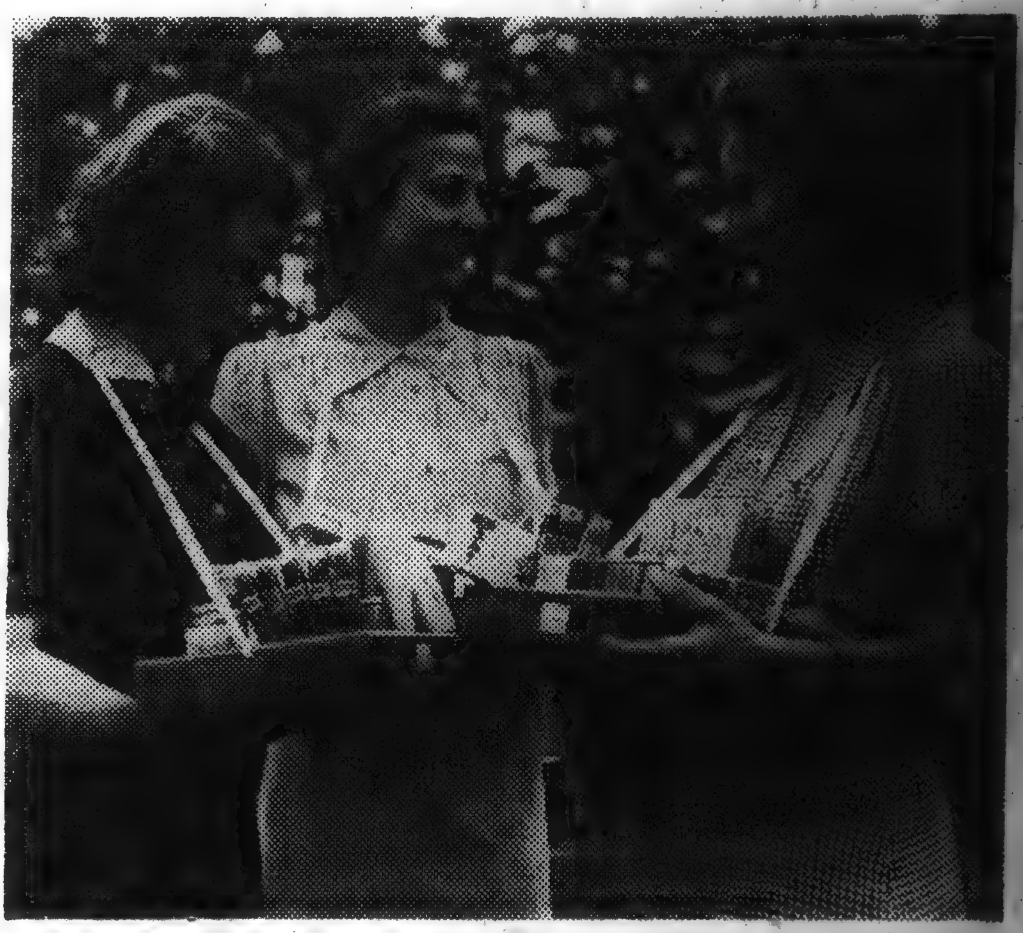
After he passed the 40 mark and was hunting for the other eight he decided he would give up and today stands unchallenged in his prediction that every state in the union was represented with the exception of Idaho — because he was compelled to take the word of the traffic man who watched them all pass by.

Representatives of the Montreal Symphonic Orchestra attending yesterday's concert included left to right: Pierre Be[illegible], treasurer; [illegible] F. [illegible] president [illegible] Librarian.

General view of the Festival grounds taken during intermission at yesterday afternoon's concert. This, of course, shows only part of the large crowd which broke all attendance records [illegible] Festival [illegible] did not prevent many from [illegible] the [illegible] shed [illegible] patronize [illegible] meat booth [illegible] by the [illegible] Morning Club of Great Barrington.

Joseph Franz, chairman of the Tanglewood committee, takes a well deserved rest after the final concert.

Willard M. Sistare, chief usher, chats for a minute with Ushers Kenneth D. Cuddeback and Neil F. Bridges.



Three cigaret girls, left to right, Maryann Giddings, Lorna Calder and Dorothy Giddings, all of Great Barrington, taking a rest after intermission.

The [illegible] Club's refreshment [illegible] place at [illegible] the above group.

38,000 Is Total Attendance For Six Festival Concerts

Yesterday afternoon's attendance of 7000 persons at the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood pushed the attendance figures for the 1939 Berkshire Symphonic Festival to 38,000 for the six programs, an increase of more than 3000 over last year, although the capacity for the six concerts is only 34,000.

The second half of the concert series attracted 19,600 people while 18,400 were present for the opening half. The figures for the six concerts follow: First half, Thursday, 5700, Saturday, 6200, Sunday, 6500; second half, Thursday, 5900, Saturday, 6700, Sunday, 7000.

Persons close to the management said today the now famous Festival, in addition to including an academy of music next summer, probably would be extended to three weeks of concerts instead of the traditional two weeks.

Tanglewood Drenched After Concert Ends

Within a half hour after the final notes of the Sibelius symphony had died out yesterday afternoon at Tanglewood, a heavy downpour of rain fell but most of the 7000 people in attendance at the last concert of the 1939 series escaped getting wet. However, the Legionnaires, State and local police who were directing traffic were drenched. Caught unawares, the traffic men stayed at their posts during the storm directing traffic out of Tanglewood grounds.

Festival

Continued From First Page

stantly in mind that it was written to accompany a ballet.

It is not music that one can love, as one loves a Schubert song. If it pleases a person's taste and judgment to receive it with an open and a favorable mind, we could assume that the very acerbity of the harmonies and the percussive reiteration of short staccato chords has a sort of cumulative effect which conceivably can please a willing listener. It was a tour de force for the conductor and the orchestra, and the ovation accorded them was most surely for them as the executants more than for the music per se.

Disregards All Rules

There is not one feature of this music which follows the rules of composition. There is not a melody, unless one considers the improvisation of the solo bassoon in the introduction a tangible theme. Neither is there a rhythm of palpable form, for the raucous, savage tom-tom beats are hardly any more rhythmic than the exhaust of a motor. The harmonies and all other manner of divisions are equally haywire.

A credulous music public has given this work charitable probation for 25 years, and it is no nearer to an established niche in the structure of musical progress than it was at the time of its first hearing in 1913.

At that time Stravinsky brought his score to the south of France to Pierre Monteux who was to conduct the initial performance. There with Ravel he played it for the conductor and prepared it for a Paris audience. To interject a bit of personal gossip, we once heard the wife of the conductor relate how she was seated in her box in the concert hall when, just before the performance was to start, the manager of the hall presented himself at the door, and, all in a dither, blurted out that Saint-Saens, the eminent composer, was at the theatre door and wanted to come in. But where could one find a single place to sit or even to stand in the packed house.

Of course, a Saint-Saens could not be left at the door, and so the conductor's wife displaced someone less important and gave the composer of "Samson and Delilah" a place beside herself. As the music started, the venerable old man turned to her and queried "Vous aimez ca?" (You like that?), and kept repeating it over and over again, indicating that even his cosmopolitan ear could not assimilate any such strange cacophany.

Composer Showed Scant Courtesy

A sequel to that story is the fact that when Stravinsky's many friends and well-wishers tried to speak to him at the completion of his music, he was in an irascible mood, and gave them scant courtesy. In fact, he started to walk away from them, and they, keeping close to him, incited him to increase the speed of his departure until it culminated in a quasi-flight with the pack in pursuit. To cap the climax, the police, seeing an individual fleeing from a seeming angry mob, joined in and apprehended what they thought might be a dangerous outlaw. A musical outlaw he most definitely is.

Koussevitzky expended every bit of his vast store of musical learning and experience to give this music substance. The well-known but ever-marvellous responsiveness of the inimitable band of men which comprise the Boston orchestra reflected his every minute indication, so that, no matter what one might have thought was going on, it is reasonably certain that what we heard, as far as notes are concerned, was what the composer wished. But we are not sure that the composer would have approved Koussevitzky's valiant attempts to turn a phrase with grace or give perspective to contrasting sequences. We overheard Stravinsky once berating a pianist who had attempted to do the same thing to the accompaniment of some songs to which the poor musician had tried to give form and reason. Stravinsky asserted that his music should not be played with "interpretation," but should be performed with mathematical precision, and nothing more.

Lovely, Crisp Symphony

The concert had opened with the lovely, crisp Symphony in B flat, No. 102, of Haydn. In retrospect its crystal clearness was doubly intelligible and transparent. The light gaiety of the finale, played really presto, had the charm of chamber music in its most intimate aspects. Koussevitzky has tended to play the classics with an ascetic symmetry. Perhaps the beauty of the orchestra's tone and the keen edge it gives to every delineation of the music, influences him to bring those facets of their skill into prominence. This is not a disputable view, except that we are continually moved to speculate if the music was not played with more fantasy at the time of its composition.

Austere Purism Pardonable

But Saturday night such austere purism was pardonable in the light of the last half of the program where the romanticism of Wagner was in supreme command. In swift succession came the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the Prelude to "Lohengrin," the Bacchanale from "Tanhauser," and the prelude to the "Meistersinger." Koussevitzky revelled and wallowed in the luscious colors of his orcestra, and if it was the least rehearsed, it was none the less not the least enjoyable. Nothing so contrives to show off the latent possibilities of an orchestra as Wagner. The "Lohengrin" prelude unfolded in its eerie passage as the sunrise dispells the mists, until the lower registers of the orchestra joined the floating strings in their highest harmonies in the glory of Wagner's orchestral voluptuousness. The Tannhauser had been as distinguished in its own way. The compelling impulse of the Bacchanale's magnificent grandeur was uttered with steadily mounting intensity to peaks of musical expression. The audience subsided in happy exhaustion at its conclusion.

Tanglewood Tales

Continued From Ninth Page

proved to be popular with the Festival visitors. Thousands of patrons of the concerts visited the beautifully kept gardens over the weekend

Marjorie Edwards, child violinist, attended all of the concerts at Tanglewood. She was at yesterday's concert with Donald L. Coleman of Pittsfield, who managed her concert tours before she was signed by Community Concert Association.

Mrs. Gorham Brooks, donor of Tanglewood as a Festival site, was scheduled to return to Dublin, N. H., Saturday for a wedding, but when time came for her departure, she couldn't bear the thought of missing Saturday's concert and remained. She and her daughter, Miss Violet Brooks, were guests last week of Mr. and Mrs. David T. Dana of Lenox. They left today. Her son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Prout, who had a cottage in Egremont during the Festival, returned to Boston today. Mrs. Brooks was thrilled with the success of the sixth annual Festival.

Joseph Franz, who built the Tanglewood shed, was approached over the weekend by a Mr. Black from Cincinnati, Ohio, who said that a music building was projected in that city and has recommended that Mr. Franz do the job.

A woman stood disconsolately on the curb in front of the Red Lion Inn yesterday and asked Officer Thomas Killfoile if she had missed the bus for Tanglewood. "You most certainly have," replied the officer. "Hmpf. All the way from Africa to attend the Festival, and I miss the bus," commented the woman. Officer Killfoile, however, helped the woman in distress by arranging for a ride with a doctor from Albany who happened to be at the inn and was bound for the concerts.

Among the weekend guests at the Festival was Herbert Graf of the Metropolitan Opera staff. He has staged many operas for Toscanini in Salzburg and other European centers.

Festival Series

Continued From Ninth Page

ticularly interested He hopes that some day Tanglewood will broaden out to include other forms of music in its annual concert series.

"Boiler Room" Music

Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Ramsey, of Ryders Mills, N. Y., who had attended the past three concerts, claimed a "layman's ignorance of the music," but thoroughly enjoyed all the programs. Mrs. Ramsey was completely bewildered by the comments of her two daughters on the Stravinsky number played Saturday night. The youngest felt it all sounded like a "boiler room," while the oldest, Barbara who is definitely more "Festival conscious," claimed it was "terribly exciting."

Among the more modest souls who were asked for a statement, the majority felt "not equal to comment or criticize," as they felt they were not an authority on the music played. Most of them were completely satisfied with the whole setup. One family were a little disappointed in the fact that although they had purchased their three tickets in January they arrived to find two seats were on one side of the shed, and the other was on the opposite side. They were assured, however, that it must have been an oversight on the part of the box-office. Actual comments on the choice of pieces included "The Ravel number should have been cut in half": "The title, 'La Valse' (played at yesterday's concert) is the biggest understatement of a waltz I've ever heard!": "I certainly liked today's (Sunday) program, and would like it if there were more selections like Ravel's and Debussy'c played": and "How about a Pop Concert program?"

Alphonse J. Pelletier, himself a skilled director of Symphony Concerts, has given the Stravinsky once, describes it as one of the wildest of compositions—one of the most debated of all time. "Musically speaking—one might almost call it a cat and dog fight," he said with a laugh.

Other Opinions

A couple from New York City who were in their thirties expressed their thoughts as follows:

"The whole scheme of such a season of music in the Berkshires is a grand one. We are pleased with the programs, the orchestra, the audience reactions. In fact, almost everything that could be done has been done to make the concerts enjoyable and educational. We came to two concerts last weekend, and were so marvelously impressed that we determined to come back as soon as we could. We couldn't come Thursday, on account of our work, but we came for the weekend again.

"If you want our ideas for improvements, we wish more money were available for new seats. We find these a little hard and too close together. We are subscribing to the fund for new seats, and hope we'll see them next year."

This couple was particularly pleased that "Koussevitzky uses the music of Sibelius so much." They stated they always went to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra in their New York concerts, as well as other orchestras, and like Koussevitzky's reading of Sibelius, in particular.

Another ciriticism as to seats came from two woman from Pennsylvania. The back seats, in their opinion, are too low.

"Half the interest is in seeing Koussevitzky conduct," they agreed, "and these rear seats could easily be raised to increase our enjoyment."

The pair praised particularly "the parking arrangement and the excellent entertainment aside from the concerts, during the daytime." However, they were not so pleased with the accommodation arrangements in connection with the Festival, stating they had seen the Festival advertised in the newspapers they read, but had no idea about where to stay. "We had a terrible time finding a place to stay, because we found almost all the places around here full," said one of the ladies. "It's too bad there isn't some central place here where they would know what accommodations there are."

Praise Programs

Several praised the mixture of modern and classical music used on the Festival programs by Koussevitzky. Others, however, felt like an elderly lady who attended Saturday night, she said:

"I don't understand this Stravinsky music and I don't like it." Asked why she came to that concert, she said she wanted to bring her grandson, who liked the modern music. "I guess I just don't understand music enough anyway," she added. "It's a wonderful thing for the Berkshires, though, and I think Koussevitzky is doing wonderfully well."

Two youths from New Jersey enthused about the modern Stravinsky piece and about the whole concert. "The whole setting struck us when we arrived," was their first impression. "We expected more of an outdoor bowl, like an amphitheatre. This is much better, as a matter of fact. Also, the seats are much better than we expected for the price. We're not worrying about the price of the seats, but about finding a place to stay.

In general, they said, they favored modern music, particularly the Debussy and Ravel type, though they admitted that "Stravinsky is a little beyond us, but we really enjoyed it. They will be back next year, they assured a reporter. In fact, they would have been here for the first series this year if they had known about the Festival earlier.

The most modest-minded of those interviewed were two girls, who replied in answer to a reporter's request for any ideas about the present series and what they would like for next year:

"We're from the West and we haven't formed any ideas. Things seem to be all right here as they are."

Calls Aridity Festival's Crowning Glory

(Special to THE EAGLE)

LEE, Aug. 14.—Peter J. Tyer, the Sage of Frog's Landing, said today:

"One of the most noteworthy events in the history of Berkshire County — the Symphonic Festival—has come to a conclusion with an attendance of 7000 for a grand total of 36,000—a figure undreamed of a few years ago.

"I have been told it was the dryest affair on record—that is was conducted on nothing stronger than coffee and ginger pop and that the only way to get a drink was by obtaining a written permit from your pastor and inasmuch as nobody cared to address him on so delicate and intimate a matter, the privilege was foregone.

"This proves, if it proves anything, that we can do things in a big way, give everybody a good time, win worldwide recognition and applause and do it with sober spirit and contrite heart. Good luck to all concerned, and may success continue to be their portion through the Festival years to come."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

AUG 15 1939

BARRETTS HOSTS AT THE SKY FARM

Give Buffet Supper for Dr Koussevitzky, Also—Wyantenuck Country Club Holds Election

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Aug. 14—Visiting Mr and Mrs William Felton Barrett at Sky farm, North Egremont, are their son and daughter-in-law, Mr and Mrs Julian Shumway Barrett of Buffalo, N. Y., Mrs Edwin M. Watson of Washington, wife of the naval aid to the President; Mrs Roswell C. Tripp of Rye, N. Y., and Miss Isabel M. Kearny and Mr and Mrs Thomas Hooker Trimble of New York. Today Mrs Barrett was a luncheon hostess at the farm and last night she and Mr Barrett entertained at a buffet supper for Dr Serge Koussevitzky.

Mr and Mrs William Caldwell Plunkett gave a dinner at their summer home near North Adams in compliment to Mr and Mrs Hervey Thompson of Greenwich, Ct.

New Country Club Governors

Wyantenuck Country club, Great Barrington, elected Dr Thomas T. Mackie and Robert L. Redfield, Jr., as new members of the board of governors. Officers reelected were: President, John B. Hull, Jr.; vice-president, William F. Flaherty; secretary, Frederick A. Pearson; treasurer, William T. Place. Mrs Sayre Starbuck was reelected chairman of the entertainment committee and her daughter, Miss Barbara Bryan, chairman of Women's golf committee.

Former Gov Joseph B. Ely and Mrs Ely of Westfield were in a luncheon party at Olde Egremont tavern, South Egremont. Among others who registered there were Mrs F. G. Barrett and Mrs S. E. Ryan of Longmeadow, Misses Madeline C. Hunt and Eleanor M. Walker of Springfield.

Mrs Thomas M. Carnegie, Jr., of New York city, and Kingsland, Ga., has arrived at Red Lion inn, Stockbridge. In a dinner party there were Mr and Mrs John S. Begley and Miss Constance Shea of Holyoke.

Newcomers at Curtis Hotel

Newcomers at Curtis hotel, Lenox, include Mrs Starr Tyson, Mrs William Francis Gibbs of New York, Mrs Edward W. Bok of Philadelphia.

Mr and Mrs Bruce Crane have Mr and Mrs Philip Hobson of Little Boar's Head, N. H., and Eric Warbasse of New York as their guests at Sugar hill, Dalton.

Godfrey Haggard, British consul-general in New York city, will address the Wednesday Morning club of Pittsfield at Unity parish house on Monday, the 21st, at 11 a. m. His subject will be "Reflections of a British consul-general."

MUSIC AND RECORDINGS

by JEROME PASTENE

WITH the Monday series now concluded, we now come to the point where we can look back in retrospect and judge the series as a whole. That there can be no quarrel with the standard of performance goes without saying; Dr. Koussevitzky insists — and rightly — on a single standard, and that one a constant striving after perfection. But we can dispute Dr. Koussevitzky's choice of programs. Perusal of the total works reveals that the programmes suffered from a paucity of concerti — only one, the Brahms Violin Concerto, was heard — and a preponderance of all too familiar symphonies, to the detriment of other types of orchestral music. On one series of six concerts, there can be little excuse for the prominence of so many works of almost Pops calibre — the Mendelssohn Fourth, the Mozart Fortieth, and others. On the credit side, one must mention the opportunity given to hear the Szostakovicz Fifth and the Vaughn Williams "A London Symphony." It is not with individual instances that one may cavil, but rather with the tenor of the individual concert, and also the series as a whole.

The impression received from sitting through this series was that Dr. Koussevitzky assumes that the level of musical intelligence among his Monday audience is considerably lower than that of his Friday afternoon listeners. We take absolute exception to this opinion, if such it be. Surely no one will argue that the musical tastes of a Friday audience, composed in the main of a social nature, and therefore limited to listeners who are generally but musically dilettantes, is superior to that of the Monday group, made up for the greater part of those who find music a necessity of life, and who (many of them) make their living at music. The fact that these people, subscribing to a shorter, and therefore less expensive series, do not attend the Friday-Saturday series does not mean that they are less appreciative. If anything, their level is far above that of the average attendant to the longer series.

Therefore, when they have but a comparatively few concerts to hear, it seems to the writer that it would behoove Dr. Koussevitzky to eschew programme experimentations with them, and give them less of a diet of popular fare, more of a selection of lesser-heard music. This need not mean that he must experiment on them with harshly atonal music.

Let us hope that next year will show a change in this policy, and meantime be grateful for his splendid performances, outstanding among which were the readings of the Leonore No. 3, the Szostakovicz Fifth, the Sibelius Sixth and Second, and the Violin Concerto of Brahms.

On the new records, listen to Lynn Fontanne's honest, simply sincere reading of "The White Cliffs of Dover" . . . watch for a terrific performance of the "Rhapsody in Blue," by Alec Templeton and Andre Kostelanetz and his Orch., on sale the 25th.

BOSTON DISCOVERS
NEW YORK'S
NEWEST
HOTEL
ABBEY
51st STREET AT RADIO CITY
400
OUTSIDE ROOMS WITH BATH FROM $2.50

For that bracer before or after the next show or game
A favorite with women as well as men.
The TAM
CHOICE WINES
ALES
LIQUORS
222 Tremont Street, Boston
Near Stuart
Opposite side entrance to Little Bldg.
John W. and Wm. F. Donoghue, Props.

FieldStoneS
A CHARMING PLACE TO EAT A MOST DELECTABLE MEAL
by sally bodwell
Telephone
Andover 1401
On Highway 28
ANDOVER, MASSACHUSETTS
Barn scientifically heated for winter use

New York's
Friendliest Hotel
Convenient location; quiet, spacious rooms; friendly, attentive service make the Prince George New York's outstanding hotel value.
1000 Rooms with Bath
Single $2.50 to $4.00
Double $4.00 to $7.00
Prince George
Hotel
14 East 28th St.
New York

WISCONSIN JEWISH CHRONICLE
MILWAUKEE, WIS.
4/11/41

Tempo Is Flawless

The interpretation of Brahms' Fourth symphony is the one done by Serge Koussevitzky's Boston Symphony orchestra. It's too bad that union troubles have held up the recording work of this orchestra because it ranks as the finest American ensemble on Victor's list. I don't think it's an exaggeration to say this is the all-round finest recording of the Brahms Fourth now available. The tempo is flawless; the sounds that come out of the orchestra are rich; the recording is good.

Another great symphony, the Franck "D Minor," is done on Columbia records by Dimitri Mitropoulos and the Minneapolis orchestra. To me this is one of the most perfect symphonies ever written; it has sweep, terseness, nobility — all the things one looks for in a symphony. Mitropoulos' job is good, but I don't think it plombs all the depths of the work. The Minneapolis conductor's forte is intensity rather than subtlety.

I don't know why it is, but Philadelphia orchestra performances always seem to set a new high in clarity of recording. No exception is Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote," with Eugene Ormandy as conductor and Emanuel Feuermann, Alexander Hilsbergand, Samuel Lifschey as cello, violin and viola soloists. To many "Don Quixote" is the outstanding of the Strauss tone poems. It is performed with full sense of the pathos and comedy that the story and the music contain. A special gold star to Feuermann, whose cello carries Quixote theme.

LAST NINE DAYS!

Fantasia

"is the most discussed and controversial film ever to come to Boston. Challenging, big, astounding."
—Marjorie Adams, Globe.

Fantasia

"is the most moving and unprecedented experience we have ever encountered.—Helen Eager, Traveler.

Walt Disney's

FANTASIA

In Technicolor • Stokowski conducting the magic music of RCA FANTASOUND

Majestic Theatre

219 Tremont Street • Liberty 7725
ALL SEATS RESERVED
MAIL ORDERS FILLED
Twice Daily 2:30 p. m. and 8:30 p. m.
Extra shows Sat. Mornings at 10:30 a. m.

Reservations at Filene's and Jordan's

Sunday to Friday Matinees, Saturday A. M.
50c, 75c, $1.10
Evenings and Saturday Matinees
75c, $1.10, $1.65
All prices include tax
CHILDREN UNDER 16 HALF-PRICE ALWAYS

The Host
HELPS VISITORS IN NEW YORK
The Metropolitan host
Ask for a copy of the Magazine at your New York Hotel

SPORTS

WITH the B. A. A. Marathon past history, baseball and horse racing have taken over the spotlight in the local sporting world. In the baseball world the race for the pennants is just getting under way. The Red Sox will be in town for the next two days to display some of their devastating power at the plate. The anticipated victims will be the Philadelphia Athletics. After their short home stay, the Yawkeymen start on their first Western trip of the year with Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, and St. Louis stopping off points before they return to Fenway Park. Although this first trip won't decide whether or not the Sox are going to win the pennant it will give a good idea of whether or not they are to be a good road team this season, a necessity for any team to remain in the thick of the race for top honors. The Bees return to the Beehive on Tuesday for their first prolonged stay of the season, and Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis and Pittsburgh will be the invaders in that order. Spasmodic lack of power has been the Bees big draw back to date, but if the potential power that is there unfolds itself, the Boston club is going to make the going plenty tough for the rest of the league.

The racing season here in the East enters its fourth week at Narragansett Park. To date many thrilling races have been run off with the future events listed promising as much in the way of thrilling excitement.—C. G.

WISCONSIN JEWISH
CHRONICLE
MILWAUKEE, WIS.
4/11/41

Tempo Is Flawless

The interpretation of Brahms' Fourth symphony is the one done by Serge Koussevitzky's Boston Symphony orchestra. It's too bad that union troubles have held up the recording work of this orchestra because it ranks as the finest American ensemble on Victor's list. I don't think it's an exaggeration to say this is the all-round finest recording of the Brahms Fourth now available. The tempo is flawless; the sounds that come out of the orchestra are rich; the recording is good.

Another great symphony, the Franck "D Minor," is done on Columbia records by Dimitri Mitropoulos and the Minneapolis orchestra. To me this is one of the most perfect symphonies ever written; it has sweep, terseness, nobility — all the things one looks for in a symphony. Mitropoulos' job is good, but I don't think it plombs all the depths of the work. The Minneapolis conductor's forte is intensity rather than subtlety.

I don't know why it is, but Philadelphia orchestra performances always seem to set a new high in clarity of recording. No exception is Richard Strauss' "Don Quixote," with Eugene Ormandy as conductor and Emanuel Feuermann, Alexander Hilsbergand, Samuel Lifschey as cello, violin and viola soloists. To many "Don Quixote" is the outstanding of the Strauss tone poems. It is performed with full sense of the pathos and comedy that the story and the music contain. A special gold star to Feuermann, whose cello carries Quixote theme.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (S 63,350)

This Clipping From
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& REPUBLICAN
APR 20 1941

Horowitz, Toscanini Make Fine Recording

Victor Issue of Brahms Concerto No 2 in B Flat Major Combines Talents of Valdimir Horowitz, Arturo Toscanini and NBC Symphony Orchestra — Composer Described Monumental Work as 'Tiny, Tiny Piano Concerto.'

THE RECORDING of the Brahms Concerto No 2 in B flat by Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, and Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Symphony orchestra (Victor M-740) has already made the current year, young as it is, memorable in the field of records.

This work, which the composer described in a letter to Elisabet von Herzogenberg as "a tiny, tiny piano concerto with a tiny, tiny wisp of a scherzo" is of such monumental proportions that only by repeated hearings can the listener assimilate all of its implications. Brahms in this work developed a new conception of the concerto form by integrating to an unprecedented degree the contributions of the solo instrument and the orchestra. It is almost superfluous to add that Horowitz, whose limited public recitals are sold out months ahead, and Toscanini fully realize the composer's intentions.

The concerto, first performed at Budapest from manuscript on November 9, 1881, with Brahms himself as soloist, has four movements—Allegro non treppo, Allegro appassionato, Andante and Allegretto grazioso. Philip Hale wrote in his Boston Symphony Program Notes that "this concerto shows the high purpose and the pure aim; for the second concerto of Brahms is not one to tickle the ear, stun the judgment, and provoke cheap and boisterous applause. And as the Second symphony of Brahms is to the First, so is the Second concerto of Brahms to the First. In each case, while the passion is less stormy, the thoughts are less crabbed and gnarled. The second movement fascinates by its sturdiness and rhythmic capriciousness; the third movement is Brahms at his noblest, when his thought is as lofty and serenely beautiful as a summer sky at noon. And who can describe in words the enchanting, haunting delight of the finale-music like unto the perfect verse of a supreme poet whose imagination is kindled by wild or melancholy tales told him in youth by gypsy lips."

Richard Specht in his study of Brahms found the B flat major concerto "new in its solution of the problem of reconciling the piano with the orchestra and even not now (1928) fully appreciated in all its fruit-laden abundance." The concerto, he felt, most completely solves the problem of embedding the sound of the keyboard instrument in that of the orchestra and at the same time preserving their contrasting qualities. "It has poetry that is not yet within a measurable striking distance of exercising its full sway over mankind. Its time will come once the music of our own days has again become aware of art's dignity. Like all true and great things, it can wait."

In his life of Brahms, William Murdoch observed that "conductors have fought shy of the work in the past, partly owing to its length, and partly because of its orchestral difficulties; and, consequently, it has hardly achieved its deserved recognition. For a completely satisfying performance, he wrote, an artist "must possess fingers of steel and terrific powers of endurance, but amazing lightness of touch and an almost uncanny sense of color."

When the concerto was finished early in July of 1881, Brahms sent it to his friend Billroth still indulging in his delight for understatement in the accompanying note which said: "I am sending you some small piano pieces." Later that month Hans von Bulow invited Brahms to come to Meiningen and use the Ducal orchestra to rehearse any novelties he might have. Brahms went to Meiningen in October with his concerto and returned in November to play it again. The program of the latter concert included his Tragic Overture, the B flat major concerto, the Academic Overture and the C minor symphony. Three years later Brahms played the concerto on tour with von Bulow and the Meininger orchestra in Vienna, Budapest and Graz. New York had the honor of being the first city outside of Central Europe to hear it. Joseffy played the concerto here on December 14, 1882.

MILTON BERLINER

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 127,570) (S 173,121)

This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
APR 13 1941

Music On Records

+ \+ \+ \+

Koussevitzky Marshals Forces for Recording Beethoven "Missa Solemnis."

By CORBIN PATRICK.

BEETHOVEN: "Missa Solemnis," Opus 123 — Sergei Koussevitzky wields the baton of his authority over the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society in as near an approach to an ideal performance of Beethoven's mighty "Missa Solemnis" as you are likely to hear in a good, long time for reproduction on Victor records released this month.

Like a good general, Koussevitzky keeps his far-flung musical forces well in hand and co-ordinates their efforts with the master plan, his own magnificently conceived realization of the composition's form and flow. Richard Specht tells us that Beethoven himself ranked this work with the ninth symphony as his greatest.

Specht, a Beethoven idolater, declares that "indescribable are the devotional solemnity of the Kyrie, the rushing storm of light of the Gloria, the convincing weightiness of the Credo, the inner fervor of the Sanctus, the unearthly clarity, the overflowing serene emotion of the Benedictus with the angel voice of the violin solo descending from above."

The orchestra is excellent in its utterance of this majestic music and even the voices seem "adequate"—which is praise indeed in view of the enormous obstacles Beethoven was always putting in the way of his singers. The soloists include two artists who have been heard here: Jeanette Vreeland, soprano, who has appeared with our orchestra and Anna Kaskas, contralto, who has been here in recital. The others are John Priebe, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass. The performance preserved in these records (12 large ones in two albums, Victor M-758 and M-759) was given about a year ago at a concert for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund.

✤ ✤

MOZART: Sinfonia Concertante In E Flat—Victor is celebrating the 150th anniversary of the death of Mozart by fulfilling a promise to include one of his works in each month's release this year. Best of all, it isn't content to repeat recordings of works already well represented in the catalogue, but is industriously bringing forth a number of new items which deserve to be heard—and certainly would have been long before now if they hadn't been overwhelmed in the profusion of beauty produced by Mozart.

Such a work is the Sinfonia Concertante here recorded for what is believed to be the first time. It is a perfectly charming work, polished, melodic and delicious.

Written for a wind quartet and orchestra, it is given an elegant reading by Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia orchestra. Stokowski, who is best known, particularly among record collectors, as a champion of the romantic and modern composers, adjusts his style to Mozart admirably. The sometimes over-rich string tone of the Philadelphia orchestra is here light and flexible and the soloists are splendid. There are four 12-inch records in the set, Victor M-760.

✤ ✤

SEVITZKY ON RECORDS—The country at large this month is celebrating an event which is already part of musical history in Indianapolis, the debut of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra on Victor records. The coupling of Glinka's "Russian and Ludmilla" overture and Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Dubinushka" on a single 12-inch disc which was selected for the occasion is now being released nationally, following its pre-release distribution locally. It's still a brilliant debut—we haven't changed our mind about that—and anyone who hears it is going to like our orchestra.

Mr. Sevitzky, who conducted the performance, of course, also is represented in the current Victor list with a single disc recording of Gretry's "Pantomime," "March de la Caravane" and "Tambourin," performed by his Philadelphia Chamber String Simfonietta. They are sparkling pieces in the formal mode and Mr. Sevitzky gives them a sparkling rendition. His ensemble achieves a vibrant, singing tone.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 219,428)

This Clipping From
PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST-GAZETTE
APR 9 - 1941

STARRING ☆ ☆ ☆ ☆

The New RECORDS

By Donald S. Steinfirst

Beethoven—Missa Solemnis—Boston Symphony Orchestra, Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society conducted by Serge Koussevitzky—Victor M-758 and M-759.

★★★Beethoven's great mass in D is one of the noblest choral works of all time. Its sonorities, its impressive climaxes, its drama combine to make a work of absorbing beauty. Dr. Koussevitzky is usually not considered as much at home with the voice as he is with instrumentation, yet this recording made at an actual performance belies that thought. The student chorus sings with vehemence and reverance for the score and the soloists, Jeanette Vreeland, soprano, Anna Kaskas, contralto, John Priebe, tenor and Norman Cordon, bass are acceptable but the Boston Symphony takes honors in the set, along with Dr. Koussevitzky and the ponderous music. The work is divided into two volumes, the first containing the Kyrie, the Gloria and the Credo. The Sanctus and the Angus Dei are in the second volume.

Beethoven—Symphony No. 3 (Eroica) in E Flat Major (Op. 55)—NBC Symphony Orchestra conducted by Arturo Toscanini—Victor M-765 also Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra of New York conducted by Bruno Walter—Columbia M-449.

It was evident that in their the two major would collide important

are very slight. Played movement by movement, first one conductor's version then the other, the sets are so compelling, the musicianship revealed so sincere, there is little to between the two. Toscanini
Walter is Classical Records

By CYRUS W. DURGIN

"MISSA SOLEMNIS"—Victor Albums M-758 and M-759, price for both $13. There is timely connection between the pension fund performance of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" at Symphony Hall a week hence, and release of the Boston Symphony's recording of the same great choral score. The "Missa Solemnis" was recorded at the Friday and Saturday concerts at Symphony Hall in December, 1938. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the orchestra, the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, trained by G. Wallace Woodworth. The soloists were the late Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass. E. Power Biggs was the organist, and Richard Burgin, concert master, played the long violin solo of the Benedictus. An earlier recording had been made at a pension fund concert in April, 1938, but this was found unsatisfactory, and so the whole thing was done over some eight months later.

Beethoven's colossal score, over which he spent so much time and effort, comes in two hefty volumes, not so thick as those containing that previous Boston Symphony accomplishment in recording—the "St. Matthew" Passion—but hefty just the same. The two albums are surely a major release of the year.

Recording choral music is very difficult. Perhaps one which duplicates concert hall excellence is not possible. Though of varying merit, this of the "Missa Solemnis" is prevailingly fine. At times the choral tone is shrill or thick (at least on this reviewer's phonograph, with a hard-pointed needle), at others the orchestra and voices are rich and clear. Intensity of sound differs on some of the records. Ordinarily this reviewer does not refer to "breaks" at the end of record sides which may abruptly terminate the music; they are often unavoidable. But considering the amount of space on some of these disks it does not seem to have been necessary to end a side between the syllables of an "Amen!"

Such things are, actually, minor details in a gigantic and praiseworthy task. The performance was noble, imaginative and extraordinarily intense, and the four soloists sang their difficult parts well. This recording may not be perfect but it is an important addition to recorded choral masterpieces.

MOZART SONATAS — Columbia Masterworks Set M-433, $3.50. The Mozart Sonatas in D major (K. 576)

LEOPOLD
STOKOW

New Records

Missa Solemnis

Beethoven: Missa Solemnis in D, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky, with the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, and for soloists, Jeanette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; and Norman Cordon, bass; and E. Power Biggs at the organ; 2 albums of 6 12-inch records; Victor M-758 and 759; $13.00.

Periodically reviewed by Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra assisted by the Harvard and Radcliffe choruses, Beethoven's enormously difficult Missa Solemnis in D has been recorded by Victor and is now released coincidentally with its performance this afternoon at Symphony Hall. It is of course, a most valuable and important addition to the not over large musical library of recorded choral music, and prospective purchasers should find it worth the asking price. There are difficulties involved in listening to it, just as there are even greater difficulties involved in singing it, for the fact that the recording was made during a performance has necessitated some awkward breaks in the music. So far as extraneous sounds are concerned, however, they are limited to a few very mild coughs.

Real enjoyment of a work of this kind, no matter how great it may be, presupposes pretty thorough knowledge of Beethoven and a deep affection for choral singing. Those who like symphonic music would rather hear it played than sung and still others that choral works tend to grow monotonous and are almost sure to overtax the reproductive qualities of any phonograph, no matter how fine. Beethoven does ask a great deal of his listeners as well as of his performers, for his tendency to regard human voices as instruments rather than as fallible organs has led him to write terrifically demanding pages. Without such youthful and well-trained voices as those of the Harvard and Radcliffe singers a satisfactory performance would be impossible, and even as it is there is some sense of surplus volume in the fortissimo passages. In the lovely Sanctus and Benedictus both chorus and soloists reach their peak, and the orchestra has its one opportunity to provide something more than notable support. The four soloists handle their trying musical acrobatics admirably on the whole, though there is an unexpected edge to the late Jeanette Vreeland's high soprano.

E. L. H.

This Clipping From
ST. PAUL, MINN.
DISPATCH
APR 19 1941

Pressing of Beethoven Mass Acclaimed

One of the year's major undertakings has been impressively brought off by Victor in the form of the great Missa Solemnis by Beethoven presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Harvard Glee club and the Radcliffe Choral society, with E. Power Biggs at the organ and a solo quartet composed of Jeanette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, John Priebe and Norman Cordon. Serge Koussevitsky, of course, conducts, and the product is something that every one should hear, and of which as many persons as possible should possess themelves. The opus as recorded fills two volumes containing five and six discs, respectively.

Recent lists of lighter music include the following records:

COLUMBIA

Dorsey Brothers Orchestra,

Album with four records: "Prayin' the Blues" (Jimmy Dorsey); "Oodles of Noodles" (Jimmy Dorsey); "I'm Gettin' Sentimental Over You;" "By Heck;" "Shim Sham Shimmy;" "Mood Hollywood;" "Anything;" "Jazz Me Blues."

Benny Goodman: "Take It," and "Yours."

Horace Heidt: "Hi, Cy—What's Cookin'?" and "When Johnny Toots His Horn."

Harry James: "Dolores," and "Walkin' by the River."

Xavier Cugat: "Babalu," and "Bambarito."

Orrin Tucker: "You're Just So So," and "Two Hearts That Pass in the Night."

Eddy Howard: "My Sister and I," and "Do I Worry."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 34,405) (S 26,492)

This Clipping From ERIE, PA.
DISPATCH-HERALD
APR 20 1941

Record Review

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY'S supreb direction of Beethoven's Mass in D, the Missa Solemnis, is still top record news of the month. It's an event seldom equalled in record history and a treat which will not be equalled for many months. Koussevitzky blends the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society into a perfect organization breathing forth the reverent, yet fiery spirit of the mass. It's in Victor Red Seal albums.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

In speaking of this recording John Cottler has said, "Of the great store of ecclesiastical art only a small part is of secular value. The fact is not surprising. The business of religion turning upon a stock of symbols and specialized forms, has produced an art correspondingly specialized. But now and again we meet a work in which the formal symbols are dominated by a personality powerful enough to give them scope beyond the limits of the church. Like the Mass in B Minor of Bach, the Missa Solemnis is at the core of our body of musical literature. Beethoven who used to appraise his brain children like a mother her marriageable daughters, thought it his best work."

The work comes in two beautifully bound albums totalling twelve 12 inch records. It will enrich your library and your knowledge of the world's best music.

THE NEW YORK TIMES, SUNDAY, APRIL 13, 1941.

RECORDS: MISSA SOLEMNIS

Koussevitzky Leads Two-Album Version Of Work—Other Recent Releases

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

A GAPING void in recorded literature has been filled with this month's issuance by Victor of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis. The only hitherto available recording of this towering score of Beethoven's maturity has been a Brunswick version, of ancient vintage considering the advances made in the phonograph field. The new release is not only in step with modern progress on disks, but it is an excelling interpretation led by Serge Koussevitzky.

There are large forces involved in this performance, which is packaged in two albums of six twelve-inch records each, $13 for both. There is, to begin with, the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The chorus is made up of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. The soloists are Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass. The organist is E. Power Biggs.

The recording was made during a performance, which means that breaks between records are not always fortunate. On the other hand, extraneous noises that are almost inevitable when a large audience is present are largely eliminated. Mechanically the records are excellent, and the splendor of the Boston Symphony tone is vividly conveyed.

Mr. Koussevitzky's performance has passion and grandeur. He has integrated his instrumental and vocal resources with the thrust and authority one would expect from a great leader. That his orchestra plays with richness and precision is hardly surprising. But it is a tribute to him, as well as to the conductor or conductors of the college singers, that these young vocalists do their share so reliably. Remember that Beethoven was not easy on the voices; some of these pages present difficulties that trouble the most experienced choirs.

The problems for the soloist are also manifold. The quartet in this recording fits into the picture, although there are places where individual singing leaves something to be desired. Mr. Cordon does the most consistent and most satisfying job.

Beethoven's Missa Solemnis is rarely performed. Arturo Toscanini led a magnificent performance earlier this season, but the work, because of its difficulty and the large ensemble required, does not appear on programs as often as its stature as music warrants. This recording should be the answer for those who would like closer acquaintance with it.

RECENT RECORDS

By JEROME D. BOHM

TWO of Beethoven's greatest works, the "Missa Solemnis" and the "Eroica" Symphony have called forth some of the finest efforts of the recording companies. Victor has transferred to the disks the Boston Symphony's performance with the aid of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society and Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass, of the "Missa Solemnis," and both Victor and Columbia have brought forth new versions of the Third Symphony; the former has issued Toscanini's interpretation with the NBC Symphony Orchestra; the latter, Bruno Walter's conception with the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra.

The "Missa Soiemnis" is the most inaccessible of Beethoven's works, and the commentators have, with the exception of Riezler, paid little attention to the purely musical aspects of the work. It is Riezler's contention that the "Missa Solemnis," unlike Bach's B minor Mass, cannot achieve its fullest effect in the atmosphere of the concert hall, and that, although it is eminently suited to church presentation, it can from the interpretive facet never be justly unfolded in a religious edifice, and remains a creation which lies without the realms of satisfactory realization. Perhaps the nearest solution is to be found in this recorded form of the work, which can be heard in the privacy of one's home, although, of course, it is still not the perfect medium for the conveyance of Beethoven's loftiest thoughts.

Riezler also asserts that it is false to assume that the work is not truly Catholic in feeling; for, although Beethoven was no devout Catholic, as were Haydn and Bruckner, he was closely associated with Catholicism from early childhood, and he was no deist but a true Christian. Riezler points out further that although the "Missa Solemnis" was not finished in time for the enthronement of Archduke Rudolf as Archbishop of Olmutz, he conceived it with the church only in mind. That it finally grew in dimensions so that it was no longer suited for ordinary religious services does not alter the original purposes of the mass.

No other composer has approached the writing of a mass so symphonically as Beethoven. Even in the B minor Mass, the vastest earlier setting of the text, Bach has made no attempt to formally relate the separate monumental sections. Even the second "Kyrie" has no connection to the first. The "Gloria" of Mozart's C minor Mass falls into pieces, sometimes of true grandeur in development, but without inward relation, or even uniformity of style. And although all composers, from Palestrina on, made use of a kind of "Leitmotif" as binding material, architectonics on the Beethovenian scale were never thought of. Beethoven alone succeeded in achieving a symphonic whole, in which the text, although profoundly interpreted, cannot be considered as a thing apart.

The recording is in many ways an excellent one. The choralists surmount the stupendous difficulties of their music with considerable success and the choral masses sound forth with uncommon fullness. Of the soloists, the late Jeannette Vreeland, in the face of the superhuman demands made by Beethoven, who viewed the soprano voice, much like an orchestral instrument, sang much of her music with tonal loveliness, when the high tessitura did not preclude anything but a mere production of the tones called for by hook or crook. The other parts are much less arduous, and are voiced capably excepting by John Preibe, who has his usual difficulty in projecting focused tones of pure intonation. Mr. Koussevitzky's disclosure of the score has breadth and nobility and the tone of the orchestra emerges with glowing resonance.

For the first time Columbia, on this side of the ocean, has put forth an orchestral recording of the highest quality with the "Eroica" Symphony. The tonal volume achieved is enormous, yet without loss of quality on my phonograph. Mr. Walter's interpretation of the music is extraordinarily moving in its intensity, its integration of Beethoven's ideas and justness of pacing. It is indeed more impressive than Mr. Toscanini's disclosure, which is rhythmically precise and finely proportioned, but less deeply felt. The Victor recording is good, although not so fully resonant as Columbia's. Columbia's version, which occupies one side less than Victor's, breaks at less disturbing moments and continues without the stretches of silence which separate several of the Victor disks.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 1941

MUSIC

The New Recordings

Boston Symphony in Beethoven Mass; Mozart Sinfonia Concertante; Bach, Wagner; Singles

By EDWARD DOWNES

The long waited Boston Symphony recording of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis with the Harvard Glee Club, the Radcliffe Choral Society, E. Power Biggs, organist, Jeanette Vreeland, soprano, Anna Kaskas, contralto, John Priebe, tenor, Norman Cordon, bass, and Koussevitzky conducting, has at last been published by the Victor Company in two volumes (Musical Masterpiece Series, M-578, M-579, each volume with six twelve-inch records $6.50 apiece). It is disappointing to report that the recordings are poor. They are so poor, in fact, that it is difficult to tell whether the actual performance is up to the usual high standards of the Boston Symphony or not.

Certainly the Boston Symphony never sounded as thin as it does here, either in the concert hall or on records. Then the balances between orchestra, chorus and soloists is badly messed. Finally the music (which was recorded during an actual performance) is fitted to the individual discs in the awkwardest possible manner. Not only are the breaks badly chosen from a musical point of view, they take up more discs than should have been necessary, and thus increase the price of the albums. The surprising sloppiness of this undertaking in no way resembles other Boston Symphony recordings, which are usually of top-notch quality, technically as well as musically.

Mozart: Sinfonia Concertante

Have a Good

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE NEW YORK
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Saturday Review of Literature
NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.
APR 12 1941 ✓

Records in Review

Edward Tatnall Canby

RECENT recordings of three major Brahms works brings to mind the immense change in the popular notions concerning his music in the last half-century. Though for today's listeners he is almost universally a romantic (Stokowski's lush recordings of the symphonies were for years the standard), opinion sixty years ago was different. Then Brahms was champion of the classic school, as opposed to the "new" music of Wagner and Liszt, and many musicians and critics heaped scorn on him in terms which are disconcertingly familiar. (The moral is clear!) "He occupies a position in music similar to . . . mathematics in the curriculum of study . . . (He) represents a school of composition abstract and cold," said one critic, and another said of the 3rd symphony that, "it is painfully dry, deliberate and ungenial," and, "We yearn for more tunes in Brahms . . . There is something else in music beside mere science." Yet others applauded his classical sense of form and restraint, and it is perhaps this that is most important in a consideration of present day performances. Thus Frederick Stock's interpretation of the 3rd with his Chicago orchestra (C M-433; $4.50) will be called by some pedestrian and uninspired, since it is decidedly not super-romantic, but my own opinion is, that though the performance is certainly not earth-shaking, it holds considerable interest for those who agree that a revaluation of Brahms in somewhat less Stokowskian terms is desirable . . . On the other side of the fence is the already famous Toscanini-Horowitz version of the 2nd Piano Concerto. (V M-740; $6.50) This, one of the most romantic of Brahms's works is given a whirlwind performance which carries conviction because of its very intensity. A definitive recording, but to my mind the quieter, less verbose Brahms is often the greater composer . . . Finally comes Kousseyitsky, the lone cat, with an astonishing 4th Symphony (V M-730; $5.50) full of "Koussie's" idiosyncrasies, but great nonetheless, and technically one of the most remarkable recordings ever made. The aural perspective is uncanny; one can almost measure the distance from each instrument to the mike. Countless orchestral details emerge clearly for the first time on records and the naturalness of the tutti equals that of recent English recordings.

★ ★

An unusual recording is that of Aaron Copland's Music for the Thea- played by the Eastman- $3.50).

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 346,783) (S 527,759)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y. HERALD TRIBUNE
APR 13 1941

RECENT RECORDS

By JEROME D. BOHM

TWO of Beethoven's greatest works, the "Missa Solemnis" and the "Eroica" Symphony have called forth some of the finest efforts of the recording companies. Victor has transferred to the disks the Boston Symphony's performance with the aid of the Harvard Glee Club ~~and Radcliffe~~ Choral Society and Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass, of the "Missa Solemnis," and both Victor and Columbia have brought forth new versions of the Third Symphony; the former has issued Toscanini's interpretation with the NBC Symphony Orchestra; the latter, Bruno Walter's conception with the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra.

The "Missa Soiemnis" is the most inaccessible of Beethoven's works, and the commentators have, with the exception of Riezler, paid little attention to the purely musical aspects of the work. It is Riezler's contention that the "Missa Solemnis," unlike Bach's B minor Mass, cannot achieve its fullest effect in the atmosphere of the concert hall, and that, although it is eminently suited to church presentation, it can from the interpretive facet never be justly unfolded in a religious edifice, and remains a creation which lies without the realms of satisfactory realization. Perhaps the nearest solution is to be found in this recorded form of the work, which can be heard in the privacy of one's home, although, of course, it is still not the perfect medium for the conveyance of Beethoven's loftiest thoughts.

Riezler also asserts that it is false to assume that the work is not truly Catholic in feeling; for, although Beethoven was no devout Catholic, as were Haydn and Bruckner, he was closely associated with Catholicism from early childhood, and he was no deist but a true Christian. Riezler points out further that although the "Missa Solemnis" was not finished in time for the enthronement of Archduke Rudolf as Archbishop of Olmutz, he conceived it with the church only in mind. That it finally grew in dimensions so that it was no longer suited for ordinary religious services does not alter the original purposes of the mass.

No other composer has approached the writing of a mass so symphonically as Beethoven. Even in the B minor Mass, the vastest earlier setting of the text, Bach has made no attempt to formally relate the separate monumental sections. Even the second "Kyrie" has no connection to the first. The "Gloria" of Mozart's C minor Mass falls into pieces, sometimes of true grandeur in development, but without inward relation, or even uniformity of style. And although all composers, from Palestrina on, made use of a kind of "Leitmotif" as binding material, architectonics on the Beethovenian scale were never thought of. Beethoven alone succeeded in achieving a symphonic whole, in which the text, although profoundly interpreted, cannot be considered as a thing apart.

The recording is in many ways an excellent one. The choralists surmount the stupendous difficulties of their music with considerable success and the choral masses sound forth with uncommon fullness. Of the soloists, the late Jeannette Vreeland, in the face of the superhuman demands made by Beethoven, who viewed the soprano voice, much like an orchestral instrument, sang much of her music with tonal loveliness, when the high tessitura did not preclude anything but a mere production of the tones called for by hook or crook. The other parts are much less arduous, and are voiced capably excepting by John Preibe, who has his usual difficulty in projecting focused tones of pure intonation. Mr. Koussevitzky's disclosure of the score has breadth and nobility and the tone of the orchestra emerges with glowing resonance.

For the first time Columbia, on this side of the ocean, has put forth an orchestral recording of the highest quality with the "Eroica" Symphony. The tonal volume achieved is enormous, yet without loss of quality on my phonograph. Mr. Walter's interpretation of the music is extraordinarily moving in its intensity, its integration of Beethoven's ideas and justness of pacing. It is indeed more impressive than Mr. Toscanini's disclosure, which is rhythmically precise and finely proportioned, but less deeply felt. The Victor recording is good, although not so fully resonant as Columbia's. Columbia's version, which occupies one side less than Victor's, breaks at less disturbing moments and continues without the stretches of silence which separate several of the Victor disks.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 295,897)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SUN

APR 19 1941

The New Records

Koussevitzky and the Beethoven Mass—~~Stock's~~ Brahms—The Lighter Side.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

For the second time in a few weeks, we are asked to consider an "actual performance" recording of a major work, with the release by Victor of the long-promised "Missa Solemnis" of Beethoven under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. Peculiarly, too, though this was made at a public concert in Symphony Hall it is a good deal more successful than the "Eroica" of Toscanini taken from the more controllable surroundings of a radio studio.

What They're Selling.

Circle—
"Amapola"	D
"Dolores"	D
Gramophone—
"Amapola"	D
"Night in Rio"	D
Gaiety—
"Amapola"	D
"I Understand"	D
Rainbow—
"Jitters"	Voc.
"Amapola"	D

Queries on records, needles, machines, &c., are invited.

One reason for this, of course, is that Symphony Hall is as fine a setting for recording as one could want, and the Victor engineers have devised an arrangement of microphones which gives consistently splendid results. There is, in this case, some dissatisfaction with the balance, for the relationship of chorus, orchestra and soloists is still a vastly difficult one for the phonograph to cope with. However, the shifts from one body of sound to another are a good deal better adjusted than in the "St. Matthew Passion," the whole sound reasonably close to the level one expects from the Boston orchestra. This does not minimize the irritation of annoying breaks between every one of the twenty-four sides of the work. One winces most in the "Benedictus" where the splendid playing of the solo violin part (presumably by Richard Burgin) is shattered in mid-phrase.

Rather more serious to the total artistic quality of the release is the indifferent ability of the solo quartet. Anna Kaskas, the alto, and Jeanette Vreeland are at least consistent in their workmanlike but undistinguished performances; Norman Cordon, the bass, is splendid in the "Miserere" but rather hollow-sounding elsewhere; and the tenor John Priebe is only a little less overburdened here than he was in the "Passion." However, they are unable to offset very much the clarity and eloquence of Koussevitzky's conception of the work, which is brilliantly executed by the orchestra, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. I find it rather difficult to understand why record sides 13 and 14 together contain barely four minutes of music; and there are several other short sides in the two albums, though no others as skimpy as these. Taking all elements together, this is quite the most desirable recording of the Mass that is now available; but the purchaser should understand the many qualifications implied in that evaluation.

Stock's Brahms.

Frederick Stock's performance of the Brahms third symphony with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra must be ranked in a middle position between the recent extremities of Columbia recordings. It is distinctly inferior to the Bruno Walter "Eroica," which represents a more recent approach to recording by this company, though the two issues appeared simultaneously; on the other hand, it is far better than the Cleveland "Heldenleben" of only a few weeks ago. This may possibly be inherent in the character of the work itself, for it is, comparatively, an uncomplex score, with little of the constant interplay of brass and woodwinds that came off badly in the Strauss score. However, I find the strings lacking in the kind of clarity I like, the whole sound of the orchestra a little distant from the microphone. Stock's performance is about the best he has put on records of any work—thoroughly composed, consistently understanding, and energetic enough in the fast movements.

The Lighter Side.

I cannot offer valid defense for citing the Golden Gate Quartet's album of "Bible Tales" in this corner, for the material is scarcely "light" nor "popular" in any shading of those terms. However it is intensely rhythmic, and closely related to the blues; moreover, it has even more swing than all but a handful of records that are likely to be produced by the best jazz artists this year. And, finally, it is handsomely entitled to a recommendation, in whatever corner it presents itself. Included in the set of three disks are the quartet's inimitable singing of "Jonah," "Job," "The Preacher and the Bear," "Samson" and, above all, the superb "John the Revelator," one of the most remarkable musical experiences one can have in any genre. It is hardly necessary to labor the amazing unity and polish of this group, or to repeat one's admiration for their endless spirit. Let it be said, merely, that the recording is consistently faithful to the sound of the four singers, reproducing all of their shadings and nuances. (Victor Set P-61.)

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 63,851) (S 65,262)
This Clipping From
YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR
APR 20 1941

Beethoven's Great Mass Brilliantly Recorded

Boston Symphony, Harvard Glee Club, Radcliffe Choral Society Present "Missa Solemnis"

By L. R. Boals

Victor has recorded Beethoven's monumental "Missa Solemnis" as performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. The recording was done at a public performance in Symphony Hall, Boston.

The mass is recorded in two albums of six disks each, M-758 and 759, price for both, $13. This is probably the best "actual performance" recordings we have had. From the records, the hearer would not know the recording had been done where there was an audience.

The four soloists are Jeanette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Norman Cordon, of the Metropolitan Opera Company, bass. Despite the demands Beethoven makes of the soprano soloist, Miss Vreeland does an exceptional piece of work. Possibly Cordon is the most consistently satisfactory of all the soloists.

Because of the tremendous requirements, this great mass is seldom performed, so that records are the only means through which most of us can hear it. It has needed new recording for some time, as the Victor album M-29 (recorded in Barcelona, Spain) has been discontinued.

Composing Was Huge Task

Originally Beethoven intended to compose the mass for performance at the installation of his patron, Archduke Rudolph, as Archbiship of Olmuetz, March 20, 1820, but the work grew to such gigantic proportions that it was not finished until three years later, March 19, 1823.

Beethoven considered the mass was his best work. He was deaf when he composed it, and his titanic struggles are well illustrated by a quotation from his biographer, Schindler, who writes of calling on him one day:

"In the living room, behind a locked door, we heard the master singing parts of the fugue in the Credo—singing, howling, stamping. After we had listened a long time to this almost awful scene, and were about to go away, the door opened and Beethoven stood before us with distorted features, calculated to excite fear. He looked as if he had been in mortal combat with the host of countrapuntists, his everlasting enemies. His first utterances were confused, as if he had been disagreeably surprised at our having overheard him. Then he reached the day's happenings and with obvious restraint he remarked: 'Pretty doings, these! Everybody has run away and I haven't had anything to eat since yesternoon'."

No other composer has approached the writing of a mass so symphonically as Beethoven. Even Bach, in his great B minor mass, made no attempt at formally relating the different movements. Koussevitzky's reading of the score has nobility and breadth, and his great orchestra, of course, is all that could be desired.

This is music to be heard again and again, without ever hoping to plumb its depths; and the authenticity of this performance and the excellent recording make the set not only a valuable one for any library, but just about the only way one can gain a true appreciation of the great masterpiece.

Black Label Specialties

The fans of NBC's Chamber Music Society of Lower Basin St. will be glad to know that one of the society's best concerts has been recorded in album form by Victor, complete with program notes by Welbourn Kelley, script writer for the show. Guest stars for the concert are Mlle. Dinah "Diva" Shore and "Prof." Sidney Bechet, backed up by "Dr." Henry Levine with his Barefooted Dixieland Philharmonic, and Maestro Paul "Fugitive-from-the-Julliard" Laval, with his Woodwindy Ten.

Contents of the three disk set (P-56, $2.00) include: "Mood Indigo," "Muskrat Ramble," "Runnin' Wild," "Dinah's Blues," "Shoemaker's Holiday" and "Basin Street Blues."

Lending a shoulder to the wheel of Pan Americanism, Victor issues an album of "Folk Songs of the Americas," North, South and Central. A collection of 23 songs ranging from a Mexican lullaby through the heart of South America, back up to Canada in a united melodic front.

The Popular List

The soundness of Artie Shaw's idea of adding a string section to an essentially jazz band, demonstrated in his recording of "Frenesi" and "Stardust," is further borne out in his new recording of "I Cover the Waterfront." It is played in moderate tempo with full orchestration, and in the second chorus, with strings and woodwinds behind Artie's clarinet. On the other side is a contrasting piece, "Marinela," a rumba, arranged by Shaw and William Grant Still, played in Latin fashion.

Bea Wain delivers a ballad interpretation of "My Sister and I," singing with good enunciation and dramatic effect this sentimental story of two refugee children. She couples it with "Afraid to Say Hello," a new number done up in straight vocadance style.

The Bluebird Release

Glenn Miller plays "Perfidia," a coming hit, with all his old power and smooth blending. Dorothy Claire and the Modernaires handle the vocal duties, and the unusual vocal scoring reveals these five voices to be a valuable addition to the Miller group. The Modernaires are heard on the other side also, with Ray Eberle in a slow, sweet version of the new tone "Spring Will Be So Sad."

A new girl quartet enters the list of vocal teams, with Dick Todd on his pairing of "Just a Little Bit South of North Carolina" and "We Go Well Together," the latter being an accurate description of the combination. Titled the Four Bells, the new quartet is smooth, rhythmic and harmonious, providing a good setting for Todd's baritone.

Teddy Powell skips from the "classics" to boogie-woogie in his latest release, playing "Talking to the Wind," which is based on a Schumann melody, and "Straight Eight Boogie," an incredible performance of eight to the bar tempo. This is one of the warmest boogie band numbers out.

Lena Horne gives another demonstration of her acumen in the vocal to Charlie Barnet's "Haunted Town." Her popularity is growing by leaps and bounds. Charlie wisely gives her free rein in addition to excellent support. The reverse, "Buffy Boy," is one of those Barnet instrumental numbers with plenty of lift and brass.

Unusual Orchestrations

Larry Clinton can always be counted on for clever and unusual orchestrations such as his current "Sahara" and "Because of You." The first is a desert mood picture, and the second a revival of more than a decade ago. Peggy Mann sings in both.

Una Mae Carlisle takes "There'll Be Some Changes Made" from the Hit Parade for her particular brand of indigo vocals, thereby, in all probability, annexing the tune as her own. For the reverse, she rejuvinates "Beautiful Eyes," which is older than jazz but plenty mellow. The powerful little accompanying band of six musicians kicks mightily.

The Duke's famous clarinetist, Barney Bigard, aided by a small group from the Ellington band, plays two originals, "Lament for Javanette" and "Ready Eddy." "Lament," a slow Oriental number, features Barney's clarinet. The B side is faster but again features Barney's low register clarinet.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 474,277) (S 788,977)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
APR 13 1941

RECORDS: MISSA SOLEMNIS

Koussevitzky Leads Two-Album Version Of Work—Other Recent Releases

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

A GAPING void in recorded literature has been filled with this month's issuance by Victor of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis. The only hitherto available recording of this towering score of Beethoven's maturity has been a Brunswick version, of ancient vintage considering the advances made in the phonograph field. The new release is not only in step with modern progress on disks, but it is an excelling interpretation led by Serge Koussevitzky.

There are large forces involved in this performance, which is packaged in two albums of six twelve-inch records each, $13 for both. There is, to begin with, the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The chorus is made up of the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. The soloists are Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass. The organist is E. Power Biggs.

The recording was made during a performance, which means that breaks between records are not always fortunate. On the other hand, extraneous noises that are almost inevitable when a large audience is present are largely eliminated. Mechanically the records are excellent, and the splendor of the Boston Symphony tone is vividly conveyed.

Mr. Koussevitzky's performance has passion and grandeur. He has integrated his instrumental and vocal resources with the thrust and authority one would expect from a great leader. That his orchestra plays with richness and precision is hardly surprising. But it is a tribute to him, as well as to the conductor or conductors of the college singers, that these young vocalists do their share so reliably. Remember that Beethoven was not easy on the voices; some of these pages present difficulties that trouble the most experienced choirs.

The problems for the soloist are also manifold. The quartet in this recording fits into the picture, although there are places where individual singing leaves something to be desired. Mr. Cordon does the most consistent and most satisfying job.

Beethoven's Missa Solemnis is rarely performed. Arturo Toscanini led a magnificent performance earlier this season, but the work, because of its difficulty and the large ensemble required, does not appear on programs as often as its stature as music warrants. This recording should be the answer for those who would like closer acquaintance with it.

OTHER REVIEWS

Wagner: Parsifal, Second Act Duet. Kirsten Flagstad, soprano, Lauritz Melchior, tenor, and Victor Symphony Orchestra conducted by Edwin McArthur. (Victor, four twelve-inch records, $4.) Singing at the top of their bent, Miss Flagstad as Kundry and Mr. Melchior as Parsifal traverse these difficult pages with the authority of mature interpreters and with the vocal opulence of artists in their prime. The album contains the duet beginning after the withdrawal of the flower maidens and goes on to the end of the act. The singers bring out the special qualities of this final Wagner work, and Mr. McArthur directs with knowledge and understanding. The orchestra, however, is placed too far in the background at times, sounding almost like an accompaniment, which is not what Wagner wanted in his music-dramas. Gordon Dilworth sings the brief passages of Klingsor commendably. The recording is fine.

Schumann: Sonata No. 2, in G minor. Sascha Gorodnitzki, pianist. (Columbia, two twelve-inch records, $2.50.) Mr. Gorodnitzki's debut under the Columbia imprint discloses the qualities that have marked his recitals. He plays with technical assurance that makes light of any problems posed by Schumann, but there is occasionally the feeling that technique bulks larger than the heart of the music. There is not enough of the Schumann warmth and tenderness. The pianist's tone sounds more solid on records than it does in the concert hall, and the records are acceptable mechanically.

Lily Pons in Classic Airs. Lily Pons, soprano, with the Renaissance Quintet and Henry Bove, flutist. (Victor, four ten-inch records, $3.50.) This album appeals to us more than previous volumes by Miss Pons, principally because it contains music that does not depend exclusively on florid passages for its effect. Of course, many people want to hear coloratura sopranos perform the customary vocal tricks. These Miss Pons can manage nicely, thank you. This album has such moments, and they do not excite us. But Miss Pons's sensitive and intelligent singing of worth-while music is amply rewarding. The Renaissance Quintet provides fine-fibered support. Contents: An air from Gretry's Zemire et Azor, Sir Henry Bishop's Echo Song, which is thin stuff; Handel's Alma Mia and an air from his Alessandro, Pergolesi's Se tu m'ami, a lovely arietta, and the Air de Momus from Bach's Phoebus and Pan.

Bach: Church Cantata No. 158, Der Friede sei mit dir, David Blair McCloskey, baritone; Boris Schwarz, violin; Ernest White, organ; Eva Heinitz, 'cello; a small chorus and Ernst Victor Wolff conducting from harpsichord. (Columbia, two ten-inch records, $2.) This cantata was written for the Easter season, and it is music of devout simplicity. The performance is direct and unaffected. Mr. McCloskey's voice is warm and flexible and he sings with honest feeling. Mr. Wolff draws a balanced performance from his ensemble.

Columbia Presents Square Dances. Carson Robison and his Old Timers with calls by Lawrence V. Loy. (Columbia, four ten-inch records, $2.50.) Hard upon Victor's first aid for those who want to join in the returning square dances, Columbia issues an album to celebrate the old steps. The insides of the cover of the album give you instructions on how to do the dances. The records play the music and Mr. Loy does the calls on all but the last two sides. All you need is a willing group of eight and the album. Contents: The First Two Ladies Cross Over, Darling Nellie Gray, Buffalo Boy Go 'Round the Outside, Oh Susanna, Dive for the Oyster, Little Brown Jug and 'Possum in the 'Simmon Tree.

In the Popular Field

The improvisations issued by Blue Note continue to be in the front rank of jazz recordings. The latest two records (twelve-inch, $1.50 each) present the Edmond Hall Celeste Quartet which consists of Edmond Hall, clarinet; Charles Christian, guitar; Meade "Lux" Lewis, celeste, and Israel Crosby, bass. Each of these boys is a virtuoso in his own right, and Mr. Lewis, who is a jazz pianist of standing, shows you what can be done with the celeste. The pieces have titles which are just handy labels: Edmond Hall Blues, Jamming in Four, Celestial Express and Profoundly Blue. But the essential point is that here is music-making of fresh and spontaneous feeling; there are moments on these records that show jazz developing its equivalent of exalted chamber music.

Gems of Jazz, Vol. I, is another in the series of reprints of outstanding jazz recordings. These were made in New York and Chicago for release in England. (Decca, six ten-inch records, $3.50.) To list the musicians is to read the roll of some of the most celebrated figures in the field. Mildred Bailey and Her Alley Cats do Honeysuckle Rose, Willow Tree, Squeeze Me and Downhearted Blues; Jess Stacy plays The World Is Waiting for the Sunrise; Meade "Lux" Lewis offers Honky-Tonk Train Blues; Joe Marsala and his Delta Six do Twelve-Bar Stampede, one of the best items in the album, and Feather Bed Lament; and Bud Freeman and his Windy City Five play Tillie's Downtown Now, The Buzzard, What Is There to Say and Keep Smiling at Trouble.

Edmond Hall, clarinetist in new Blue Note records of improvisations.

144

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 14 1939

Records of Festival Broken As Colorful Season Concludes

A mangled program, a smashed cigaret butt on the Tanglewood lawn this morning, were significant of the end of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

With the final bars of the second Sibelius Symphony, Serge Koussevitzky, leading the Boston Symphony Orchestra, brought the sixth Berkshire Symphonic Festival to an impressive close yesterday afternoon. The huge audience stayed to applaud and cheer long after the last vibration of music had ceased and the conductor, called back time after time, bowed low from among the loyal men of his orchestra, who rose to their feet at his gesture, to share with him the wildly enthusiastic tribute.

They stayed to cheer and shout, and the renowned conductor, accustomed as he is to applause, was visibly touched by the wholehearted acclamation. Possibly the glamour of the idyllic situation of Tanglewood and the gay and colorful crowds add a degree or so to the temperature of the receptive cordiality of the audience, but the performances which have been proferred the record-breaking audiences needed no extraneous support.

Dr. Koussevitzky paid his courteous respect to those attracted to the Shed by giving them the best of which his orchestra is capable, and that is something to which music lovers will willingly travel miles, as has been demonstrated. The programs, with the wisest, most far-seeing judgment, have been kept on the plane of those given in Symphony Hall during the winter season, making this the only semi-outdoor venture in the country devoted to the highest and best serious music.

A Festival of Progress

This has not been just another in the succession of Festivals. It has been a Festival of progress. It has gone beyond the experimental stage of last year's event, the first in the new permanent home on the grounds so magnanimously donated to the orchestra association by Mrs. Gorham Brooks. This year, without any distracting influences, the Festival was a purely musical event and the standard of the performances has been on a plane which has brought glory to everyone connected with it.

Yesterday's program contains two selections which had appeared on programs of previous festivals: The "Afternoon of a Faun" of Debussy and the Sibelius Second Symphony, which Koussevitzky had played at the third festival, the first at which the Boston orchestra performed. The Boston conductor has long been a champion of the Finnish composer and yesterday's performance was done with profound reverence. The grateful rich orchestration of this symphony finds perfect conveyance in the Boston orchestra.

In a Festival replete with peaks projecting above a very high level the two excerpts played in the middle of the program will still stand out for their superlative performance. The Debussy "Afternoon of a Faun" and the Ravel "La Valse."

Somnolent Warmth—Anesthetic Perfumes

Debussy's somnolent warmth and anesthetic perfumes of a summer day were deftly and exquisitely wafted to our ears, in brilliant contrast to the menacing and stunning impact of the Ravel climax. Koussevitzky made of Debussy's score a vaporous web of sound. He deservedly called George Laurent, the flute soloist, to his feet at the completion of the Prelude for his superlative work.

Ravel distills the graceful rhythm of the early parts of his Valse into something dreadful and bitter, and speeds the piece, which he calls a choregraphic poem, to a violent culmination. The audience was roused to explosive excitement by one of the most thrilling moments of the Festival.

Love-Song Symphony

The concert had started with the love-song symphony of Schumann, the fourth in D minor. The afternoon was gray and at times there was a threat of disastrous weather, but there was no reason to fear the elements; not until everyone had left the parking lots safely in their cars did the rain start falling. With five perfect concert sessions, and the one which was at all disturbed, only disrupted for a short stretch, the weather was certainly benign. We have no idea if the Festival committee considers that a good record or not, but we believe that, all in all, they were extremely fortunate.

Model of Contrast and Balance

From the viewpoint of program arrangement Saturday night was a model of contrast and balance. The pivot upon which the whole evening hinged was the "Sacre du Printemps" of Igor Stravinsky. This is undoubtedly the most contraversial piece composed in this century, and even far back into the last. The descriptive legend indicates that it is supposed to depict pictures of pagan Russia, and in listening to it, one should keep con-

Festival
Continued on 16th Page

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWICH, CONN.
RECORD

AUG 15 1939

SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL TO BE EXTENDED

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 15—(AP)—Persons close to the management said yesterday the famous Berkshire Symphonic Festival, in addition to including an academy of music next summer, probably would be extended to three weeks of concerts instead of the traditional two weeks.

This summer, according to Gertrude Robinson Smith and George Edman, of the festival board, 38,000 persons attended the six programs, although capacity for six concerts is only 34,200.

Yesterday's audience ran over 7,000 persons, making the spacious lawns around the "shed" seem almost as populous, and considerably more colorful, than the "shed" itself. The loungers heard quite as well as those in the seats and, incidentally, were little bothered with insects and other annoyances.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky played two of his favorite symphonies on the concluding program, Schumann's in D minor, Nor. Four, and the second Sibelius.

At the end he and the redoubtable Boston Symphony were given a fervent demonstration which seemed almost as noisy as the sounds from a football stadium in the fall.

The program included also Debussy's "L Apres Midi D Un Faun" and Ravel's "La Valse."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 15 1939

Symphony Leader Takes Vacation

Koussevitzky Goes to Seal Harbor, Me.

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 14 — Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which last night concluded its concerts at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, left today for a vacation at Seal Harbor, Me. He plans to return in September with trustees of the Boston Orchestra to discuss details of the academy to be opened next summer, and the possibility of extending the concert series to three weeks.

George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, left today for his summer home in Norwell, and members of the orchestra are gradually packing up and leaving for their homes.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

AUG 15 1939

World of Lively Arts

By T. H. PARKER

Beautiful On The Mountains.

With the Berkshire Festival now but two days over, I have joined its devotees who are already crossing off the days on the calendar towards its celebration again next year. I am convinced that it is the pleasantest musical event available to us in these faubourgs, the most rewarding esthetically, the most civilized and the most comfortable. It is modish, raffine and amiably Bourbon, qualities which I think we especially need in these days when significance, higher seriousness and slack suits are being cried up so strenuously around the place. If the fenders of your car are sheared off, it is somewhat consoling to know that the offending car was probably a Mercedes or a Bugatti, to say nothing of the fact that the owner is probably highly sue-able. Those who elegantly swish about you are recognizable to any reader of Harper's Bazaar and Cecil Beaton, yet different from some more local audiences in being neat but not gaudy. It is the only place where I have ever picked up a stray bill from the grass and found it a ten-spot instead of a single. Another bottle of champagne, waiter. I like the Festival.

I shall omit to say that the Festival also provides the most superlative symphonic entertainment in the country. I have let my back hair down farther than the Sutherland Sisters so often for Dr. Koussevitzky and his valiants, that I turn the color of a well-cured 'cello every time I think of it. They afford us what is known in the vernacular as "the mostest and the bestest," and no more can be said. I do wish to object once more, however, to the purebreds who shie off at what they deprecatorily call the orchestra's "virtuosity." On Sunday Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra played Ravel's Gargantuan burlesque "La Valse," the effect of which is like becoming very inebriated on extra dry sherry. They did it with such terrific brilliance and whizz-bang that the audience came up shouting. I think that's a good sort of thing. I think it shakes the must and dust out of you when an orchestra knocks you into the hedgerows by sheer razzle-dazzle. Music has got to be more than a cult and it seems to me that virtuosity, in frequent doses, can offset the stiffening of the neck incident to simon-purity.

The program also included Schumann's Fourth Symphony, and I must say that Dr. Koussevitzky has a warmly sympathetic perspective for this sometimes overlooked symphonist. He keeps him good humored and piquant, and neither builds him too big nor slights him.

The program and Festival closed with Sibelius's Second Symphony, which despite that discursive first movement, gathers a huge head of steam by the time it closes. The vehemence of the final pages, the inflammatory performance and the fact that the Festival ended on those last brazen expostulations, left the audience simply yelling. A houseful of White Russians cheering the opening night of ballet would be a cage of canaries compared to the salute given Dr. Koussevitzky and his men. A white-haired woman leaping about in front of me, shrieking and waving her handkerchief and pounding on the chair seat as on a jungle drum, was typical of the rest of the 6500 other enthusiasts. It was like election night. The Doctor seemed pretty tickled with it all, and had a fiery chariot carried him off at the moment, it would have been thought more appropriate than startling.

As I look back over the six Festivals, it seems to me that they are becoming more of a do each season. Each year there are fewer boys with shirts open at the neck and the spraddling walk of student 'cellists, and fewer young women with scores and scowls. Now everyone sports an expensive camera about the neck and squints through range finders instead of parts.

The atmosphere is more Bailey's Beach than Juilliard. Yet the talk about music remains distinctly intelligent and attention is rapt while the band plays. But the audience is more and more fitting the Festival into their fun and games, instead of leaving their shoes outside the temple door as was the awed custom of six years back.

I should be poorly following my desire to be all things to all constituents, if I did not report at least briefly on the couture aspects of the Festival. The turnout is definitely smart and soignee but still not overtly plush. Most everything is small but expensive, except the girlies themselves. They are tall, lithesome and copper colored, un-made up except for lush, empurpled lipstick. From 16 to 36, they are in cottons and tub-silks, shoulder length hair and enough turbans for an Arab encampment. The per cent of blondes is high. From 35 to 55, they are exceedingly modish. There was a wonderous array of hats made of flowers and wisps of feathers, still set aslant. One elegant bit was a tiny natural straw, supporting half a dozen white birds with extended wings. They looked like fledglings when the mother bird arrives with an extra special consignment of insects. Above 55 they come swathed in lavender and old Rolls-Royces.

I note the lads were more modish this season, too, sporting summer suitings and the most dashing of them crowned with the new ultra flat straw bonnets vogue this year. A few were in plaid jackets, some so baroque that it took two men to wear the whole pattern.

SANDWICHES

Among the leading improvements of a humane kind this last week was that made in the refreshment tent. Formerly it was an enclosed square, where the wild-eyed help stood off the mob trying to purchase soft drinks and simple sustenance such as sandwiches. Sunday this formation was abandoned, the tables and iceboxes were set out in rows as in a self-service store, and the famine driven horde passed through from north to south, cleaning out the counters like a plague of locusts going over a Kansas wheatfield. It was a wonderful, simple idea.

The sandwiches are a snare and delusion and remind of the diner who complained to the waiter that there was no meat in his. "Perhaps you've gone past it," the waiter said.

Speaking of the weather, the Festival closed just in time not to have to record a cloudburst which chewed up the center of Stockbridge like anything.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 15 1939

SYMPHONY LEADER OFF FOR VACATION

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Goes to Seal Harbor

BACK NEXT MONTH

Will Meet at Lenox With Festival Directors to Discuss 1940 Concert and Academy Plans.

Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, leaving yesterday after the completion of the two weeks Festival series in Stockbridge for a vacation at Seal Harbor, Me., said that he planned to return in September with the Boston Symphony orchestra trustees to discuss the details of the Academy of Music opening next year and to consider the proposal to extend the concert season in the Berkshires to three weeks in 1940 instead of the traditional two week period.

George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, left yesterday for his summer home in Norwell and the 104 members of the orchestra are picking up their belongings and are gradually leaving the Berkshires for their homes.

145

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRISTOL, CONN.
PRESS

AUG 15 1939

GOOD SOURCES HINT FESTIVAL WILL BE EXTENDED IN 1940

z STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Aug. 15—(AP)—Persons close to the management said today the now famous Berkshire Symphonic Festival, in addition to including an Academy of Music next summer, probably would be extended to three weeks of concerts instead of the traditional two weeks.

This summer, according to Gertrude Robinson Smith and George Edman, of the Festival Board, 38,000 persons attended the six programs, although capacity for six concerts is only 34,200.

Sunday's audience ran over 7,000 persons, making the spacious lawns around the "Shed" seem almost as populous, and considerably more colorful than the "Shed" itself. The loungers heard quite as well as those in the seats and, incidentally, were little bothered with insects and other annoyances.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky played two of his favorite symphonies on the concluding program, Schumann's in D minor, No. Four, and the Second Sibelius.

At the end he and the redoubtable Boston Symphony were given a fervent demonstration which seemed almost as noisy as the sounds from a football stadium in the fall.

The program included also Debussy's "L Apres Midi D Un Faun" and Ravel's "La Valse."

THIS CLIPPING FROM WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

AUG 15 1939

Summertime Culture

Summer once was considered the season for disintegration of the human personality. People traveled to the mountains and went to pieces. They read only the most trivial books, and for entertainment they seldom enjoyed anything more taxing than a local baseball game.

Summertime customs have been radically changed during the past ten years. The Summer theaters are an institution and if their usual fare is not heavy, they do insert occasionally into their schedules plays by Shaw or Chekhov.

Music in the hot months was once largely confined to the band on the village green on Saturday nights. It is far more pretentious, nowadays, and there are numerous series of concerts and operas throughout the country.

One of the most successful concert series was held at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Lenox, which was closed for the season Sunday. Under the leadership of Serge Koussevitsky, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the concerts have been astonishingly good, and were brought to a brilliant finish. The attendance was greater this year than it was last year, and the indications are that it will be even greater next Summer.

The popularity of music festivals of the sort dissipates somewhat the weary cynicism that says that the public will support only the most meretricious programs, especially in Summer. There is a large public that likes the best that it can get. Fluctuations of the temperature have nothing to do with its taste.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

AUG 16 1939

Sibelius Symphony Berkshire Climax

Boston Orchestra Brings Sixth Annual Festival To Masterly Close

By THOMAS ARCHER.
(Gazette Drama and Music Critic.)

Stockbridge, Mass. — Everyone stood and many cheered in the music shed at Tanglewood last Sunday afternoon after the trumpet calls of the Boston Symphony Orchestra had closed the Second Symphony of Jean Sibelius and, with it, the Sixth Annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival. By a dramatic coincidence a threatening storm held off all the afternoon to burst in full fury a few minutes after the huge crowd of listeners had dispersed.

This forbearance on nature's part was more than ordinarily fortunate. Had the storm broken earlier it would undoubtedly have ruined one of the two best concerts of either series. The respite gave Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the orchestra an opportunity to demonstrate that something new could be put into a performance of Debussy's "Prelude to the Afternoon of a Faun" and also to attest Dr. Koussevitzky's uncommonly dramatic sense in choosing the Sibelius Second as a peroration to the festival itself. There could be no mistaking the implications of that great full-throated song which forms the finale of the latter work. Ringing trumpets accompanied by the steady tread of the trombones seemed to chant "it is well done!" This effect followed by the tremendous ovation from the audience made living drama out of that last ten minutes.

There were such memories to carry away from the concerts of Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon that some of them will probably endure with visiting musicians and lay lovers of music until they return to Tanglewood next year. There was, for instance, the virtuosic performance of Stravinsky's "Rite of Spring" and the "Tannhaeuser" Bacchanale on Saturday. Debussy's "Faun" Prelude, Ravel's "La Valse" and the Sibelius Symphony on Sunday. The playing of these works was such that it drew from a visiting French conductor the compliment that "we have no orchestra in Europe to equal this one."

"MOST SIGNIFICANT SCORE."

The greatest sensation among those who came from long distances was caused by the Stravinsky work. In conversation, Dr. Koussevitzky declared that it was easy for the orchestra to play. Probably it is for the Boston Symphony, but scarcely for others. Saturday's performance, it is safe to say, could be taken as the final, authoritative one allowing the audience to judge whether or not they agreed with Olin Downes, music critic of The New York Times, when he maintained in his lucid description at the public rehearsal on the morning previous that it was the most significant score since Wagner and Debussy.

Dr. Koussevitzky's interpretation of "Le Sacre" revealed Stravinsky as a great engineer of music, a maker of sound-combinations which even at this late date seem new and striking. It also showed the composer as a direct descendant of the line of masters of ballet music fostered at first by the Russian Imperial Ballet and then by Serge Diaghileff and of which Stravinsky himself was at once the climax and the conclusion.

Like Strauss's "Zarathustra" on Thursday, "Le Sacre" was a remarkable exhibition piece for the orchestra. Dr. Koussevitzky may have been unable to hide its kinetic as opposed to symphonic qualities, its episodic progression and the fact that it cries for the complement of a visual theatre. He gave it, however, as logical a shape as it could conceivably have in the concert hall. And he and his musicians certainly executed the stark and brutal passages suggesting the ritual dances with an astounding fury. Even more admirable were the preludes to the two sections calling for the soft playing for which the Boston Symphony Orchestra is so famous. The execution of the so-called "Pagan Night," in particular, seemed to bear out the opinion of an English musician present at the festival who admitted afterwards that "the pianissimi of our orchestras are the mezzo piani of the Boston Symphony."

As if to confirm this there was the "Faun" Prelude. Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra made Debussy's music sound as if it came from a long way off, perhaps from the woods of the Tanglewood estate. It made the listener realize that this Debussy was an exquisite decadent, a master of the kind of art which Baudelaire and Verlaine put into words. And through it all there ran a suppressed excitement emphasized all the more because the orchestra never rose above a third of its strength in sound production.

The performance of Ravel's "La Valse," an effective if not altogether a great score, like much heard at the festival, reminded the hearer that Dr. Koussevitzky is a connoisseur of sound, one who remembers the dress as well as the body it clothes. You could swear that he actually listens to his orchestra while he is directing it. He seems to pick out timbres as a jeweller selects gems for display. And Debussy and Ravel give him marvellous scope to practice this unusual art.

The Sibelius symphony was chosen, as has been hinted, with a fine sense of what might be called symbolic theatre. It was a Sibelius of long sweeping phrases leading to impassioned climaxes. The beautiful unfolding of the song of the strings in the first movement was a notable instance. The music was presented by turns gravely and pensively but always with strength and drama. Dr. Koussevitzky seems to interpret the Finn as a writer of symphonic dramas which is possibly not the least of the qualities which make the Boston performances so individual and stirring.

WAGNER EXCERPTS GIVEN

The only Wagner music in the festival was given on Saturday night after "The Rite of Spring." It sounded curiously classical through the "Dutchman" Overture and the "Lohengrin" Prelude, the latter done with great refinement. The execution of the Paris "Venusberg" was something else, however. Here we recaptured much of the fury of "Le Sacre" modified naturally by the unparalleled sweetness, humanity and continuous singing of Wagner.

A clear-cut and finely balanced performance of Haydn's Symphony No. 102 served as a prelude for the record audience of 6,700 people on Sunday evening. Schumann's Fourth Symphony led in on Sunday and was heard by a crowd only slightly smaller. Dr. Koussevitzky kept his Schumann consistently in the style of early romance, gallant and lovable.

The Schumann symphony formed a link with more early romantic music in the shape of a performance of Schubert's Quartet in C major, opus 163, on Friday afternoon by the South Mountain String Quartet assisted by Harvey Shapiro in Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge's Temple of Music which actually is situated on the top of a mountain.

Those who went could sit in the temple or outside on benches. The writer chose a bench where distance really did seem to lend enchantment to the ear. The alternation of Schubert's pathos and good humor was interpreted with such musical feeling and intimate understanding that occasional lapses from absolute impeccability of tone seem hardly worth mentioning. A pleasant quartet by Glazounow and a number of brief pieces were also played.

Ted Shawn and his male dancers, down the road at Lee, gave visual interpretations of Bach's music on Saturday afternoon. Shawn and his eight stalwarts matched choreographical counterpoint with the musical counterpoint of Bach. The idea is so feasible and effective that it is a wonder nobody thought of it before. Discipline and spirit were what would be expected of his very intelligent and successful group. The dancing of Barten Mumaw is still outstanding.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SPRINGFIELD, O.
NEWS

AUG 18 1939

Koussevitsky Will Direct Music School

By ALICE HUGHES
King Features Syndicate, Inc.

NEW YORK, Aug. 18.—Among the summer events a top-flight experience is attendance at the Berkshire Music Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and since my first visit there last year, I'll try never to miss it again unless broke or bedfast. Ten days ago I managed to make it, and reveled in the beauty of the countryside, the richness of the music and the charm of the site, which is "Tanglewood," where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote so many of his tales.

The Boston band is unique among this country's orchestras at present. It has more prestige than our own Philharmonic Symphony, now that Toscanini has left Carnegie Hall, and most musicians seem to think it a better band, too. But of course its guiding spirit is Serge Koussevitzky, that strange combination of musicmaker, dictator and showman who waves the stick over it. He is a dominating personality, and he has the rich Bostonians eating right out of his paw. What Koussy wants, Koussy gets. He wanted a permanent music shed for "Tanglewood"—he got it. He wants a music school there, too, with himself as Professor of Conducting. Next summer he gets it.

But the audiences are the most fascinating feature, to me. Their nucleus is the small corps of surviving lady brahmins from Bahston. They are usually tall, slender, stately patricians—white haired, blue-veined and wearing many classic diamonds and pearls. They seem to me the last of the rear guard of American gentlewomen as our grandmas reckoned such, and I can't take my eyes from them as they sit erect in their boxes. Their granddaughters may be "cuttin' the rug" in shorts to Benny Goodman symphonies, but the tattered flag of these grande dames still flutters above "Tanglewood" and Boston's Symphony Hall.

* * *

GIRL IN THE BERKSHIRES—The lady brahmins wear lacy or silken clothes to the concerts, and many of their men even wear opera cloaks—and so does Koussy himself, when the air is a mite coolish. The Great Man turns up at the Shed in a long broadcloth cape lined with satin. The rest of us wear modest sports clothes, and some youngsters even turn up for the Flow of Soul in slacks. . . .

Koussevitzky's showmanship is evidenced by the fact that he pops in from Europe each year with some new piece of music which is Boston's exclusively for a while. This season Koussy's pet is a simple but colorful descriptive piece called "Peter and the Wolf," written by the Russian, Prokofieff. It has a narration explaining the fairy tale characters, well done by Richard Hale. It was a treat to see scores of kids turn up from nearby summer camps to hear this attractive novelty, which appeals to adults as well, naturally. . . . For these two weeks the yeomen of the neighborhood and the simpler inns cash in on the influx of visitors, as does Saratoga during August. I stayed at Oaklawn Inn, packed from cellar to eaves for the Festival. The grub was fine—fresh things from the garden, luscious blueberry pies which are the Yankees' late summer delight, and, of course, baked beans on Saturday. That is unshatterable tradition. The rest of the year the Inn coasts. . . .

Since my brother-in-law fiddles in the band I can get into rehearsals, which are a circus at all times with the respected Koussy, mighty disciplinarian, muttering in eight of nine languages as he whips the boys through the night's pieces. . . .

But no whoopee in the Berkshires after the show! Two night spots in the immediate neighborhood, the Red Lion Inn and the Log Cabin, turn off the tap at midnight Saturday. When I asked why no leeway was given later revelers, I was gently told that the district wanted no riff-raff. All is genteel and re-fained.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ROANOKE, VA.
WORLD-NEWS

AUG 18 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

AUG 18 1939

146

THIS CLIPPING FROM
FORT WORTH, TEX.
Morning Star-Telegram

AUG 18 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
OAKLAND, CAL.
POST-ENQUIRER

AUG 21 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM

AUG 21 1939

Gentility Reigns at Boston Symphony

By Alice Hughes

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—Among the Summer events a top flight experience is attendance at the Berkshire Music Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and since my first visit there last year, I'll try never to miss it again unless broke or bedfast. Ten days ago I managed to make it, and reveled in the beauty of the countryside, the richness of the music and the charm of the site, which is "Tanglewood," where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote so many of his tales.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
. . . eat out of his hand.

The Boston band is unique among this country's orchestras at present. It has more prestige than our own Philharmonic Symphony, now that Toscanini has left Carnegie Hall, and most musicians seem to think it a better band, too. But of course its guiding spirit is Serge Koussevitzky, that strange combination of musicmaker, dictator and showman who waves the stick over it. He is a dominating personality, and he has the rich Bostonians eating right out of his paw. What Koussy wants, Koussy gets. He wanted a permanent music shed for "Tanglewood"—he got it. He wants a music school there, too, with himself as professor of conducting. Next Summer he gets it.

But the audiences are the most fascinating feature, to me. Their nucleus is the small corps of surviving lady brahmins from Bahston. They are usually tall, slender, stately patricians—white haired, blue-veined and wearing many classic diamonds and pearls. They seem to me the last of the rear guard of American gentlewomen as our grandmas reckoned such, and I can't take my eyes from them as they sit erect in their boxes. Their granddaughters may be cuttin' the rug" in shorts to Benny Goodman symphonies, but the tattered flag of these grand dames still flutters above "Tanglewood" and Boston's Symphony Hall.

GIRL IN THE BERKSHIRES—The lady brahmins wear lacy or silken clothes to the concerts, and many of their men even wear opera cloaks—and so does Koussy himself, when the air is a mite coolish. The Great Man turns up at the Shed in a long broadcoth cape lined with satin. The rest of us wear modest sports clothes, and some youngsters even turn up for the Flow of Soul in slacks . . .

Koussevitzky's showmanship is evidenced by the fact that he pops in from Europe each year with some new piece of music which is Boston's exclusively for a while. This season Koussy's pet is a simple but colorful descriptive piece called "Peter and the Wolf," written by the Russian, Prokofieff. It has a narration explaining the fairy tale characters, well done by Richard Hale. It was a treat to see scores of kids turn up from nearby Summer camps to hear this attractive novelty, which appeals to adults as well, naturally . . . For these two weeks the yeomen of the neighborhood and the simpler inns cash in on the influx of visitors, as does Saratoga during August. I stayed at Oaklawn Inn, packed from cellar to eaves for the Festival. The grub was fine—fresh things from the garden, luscious blueberry pies which are the Yankees' late Summer delight, and, of course, baked beans on Saturday. That is unshatterable tradition. The rest of the year the inn coasts . . .

Since my brother-in-law fiddles in the band I can get into rehearsals, which are a circus at all times with the respected Koussy, mighty disciplinarian, muttering in eight or nine languages as he whips the boys through the night's pieces.

But no whoopee in the Berkshires after the show! Two night spots in the immediate neighborhood, the Red Lion Inn and the Log Cabin, turn off the tap at midnight Saturday. When I asked why no leeway was given later revelers, I was gently told that the district wanted no riff-raff. All is genteel and re-fained.

The clergy is much in evidence at "Tanglewood." I saw a fashion highlight struck among the reverend brethren when two arrived wearing white mohair suits, black dickeys and white collars. The clericks looked awfully nice, but I couldn't help but feel that it was a little—er—well, advanced, I hope it was all right with the bishop.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MONTCLAIR, N. J. ✓
SEMI-WEEKLY TIMES

AUG 18 1939

The following letter describing the Berkshire Music Festival which concluded last week was written to the editor of this column by a local Smith College student of music who attended the final series, presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday last.

"The Tanglewood Shed is a simply huge affair, holding about 6,500 people. It's in a lovely place, surrounded by great quantities of trees, arbors, terraces and shrubbery. Persons who don't have seats can sit outside the shed on the lawn, which is enormous, and listen. Then there is a great tent arrangement across from the shed where refreshments are served during intermissions and where people can buy picnic lunches Sunday before the afternoon concert. In the background are the Berkshires and the lake—and it is gorgeous!

"The accoustics in the shed are perfectly marvelous and you can hear the music no matter where you're sitting. As for Mr. Koussevitsky—well, he is wonderful. He never lets up a minute while he is lead-

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREAT NECK, N. Y
LEDGER
8/18/30

RETURNS FROM MUSIC FESTIVAL

Lyra Nicholas, Douglaston concert-pianist, is at her Douglaston Parkway home again after a fortnight's attendance at the series of six concerts in the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Mass.

Mrs. Nicholas was appointed a member of the board of advisors for the festival and attended several of the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. She is the director of the Douglaston Music Guild, the Long Island representative for the festival.

Among other visitors at the concerts, which drew an average attendance of 6,000, were Miss Gladys Ware of Bayside, teacher of music in P. S. 98, Douglaston; Miss Ruth Sapio, teacher of piano, Douglaston; J. Cecil Prouty, conductor of the Long Island Symphony, and Mrs. Prouty, Flushing; Mr. and Mrs. Augustus B. Kinzel, Douglas Manor, and Mr. and Mrs. George H. Nixon, Flushing.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TORONTO, CAN.
GLOBE & MAIL

AUG 19 1939

The sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed this week at Stockbridge with the audience standing and cheering Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for many minutes. So great was the success of the undertaking this summer that the Festival may be extended from two to three weeks next year.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 20 1939

CONCERT AND OPERA ASIDES

THERE once was a time when the words "late Beethoven," laden with sundry cosmic philosophies by the musical literati, represented a region accessible only to the intellectual and artistic élite. If you could recognize a theme as coming from Beethoven Op. 106 upward, you had, if you desired, an undisputed claim to esthetic snobbishness. Lip-service paid its highest tribute to late Beethoven, but, until recent years, the public at large has had to take the scholars' rhapsodies on credit.

Radio, phonograph, the spread of concerts and the resultant popularization of good music have changed all this, for which the conclusive proof was the huge audience that came to Lewisohn Stadium last week to hear the Beethoven "Ninth," Op. 125. If there is anything esoteric in this work, it was certainly not beyond the heads and hearts of 15,000 plain folk.

The versatile Igor Stravinsky will be occupied in this country next season as conductor-composer, pianist and lecturer. He will arrive early in October to take the distinguished Norton Chair of Poetry at Harvard University, his particular subject as yet not announced. There is a strong possibility that he will appear as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, probably in November and March. He has definite conducting commitments with the Chicago Symphony in February and with the San Francisco Symphony in December, and there is again "a strong probability" that he will direct his ballets, "Jeu de Cartes" and "Petruchka" in Los Angeles. The likely guess is that the orchestra will be the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES-HERALD

AUG 20 1939

SUMMER FESTIVAL IN BERKSHIRES IS GREAT SUCCESS

Record-Breaking Crowds and Enthusiasm Suggest It May Rival Salzburg and Bayreuth in Few Years.

By JOHN WILLIAM ROGERS.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 19.—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival has just closed its fifth annual season here this week with such extraordi- ary acclaim that it seems clear it is destined to become the great erican summer music festival and to take its place beside such ld musical events as Bayreuth and Salzburg.

The six programs which the Boston Symphony has offered during August under Serge Koussevitsky began with an attendance of over 000 people and this number steadily climbed until the last two concerts had audiences that totaled 000. Not only did visitors from all over the union summering in the Berkshires flock to them, but the performances were received with such mounting enthusiasm, both by critics and a musically sophisticated public, that many music lovers made the journey from as far away as New York and Boston to attend.

While the festivals to date have concerned themselves purely with symphonic music, Dr. Koussevitzky, into whose competent hands their destiny has been placed, has already visualized them as widening their scope and becoming a significant center of the arts in America. Already definite steps are being taken toward the realization of his plan and early in July, 1940, a new academy will begin its first session here.

The academy will function in two distinct parts: One for the advanced instruction of a limited number of pupils and the other a general session for a larger schol Each student will belong either to the festival chorus or the school orchestra. They will attend the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony, and already scheduled for performance in the 1940 festival is Bach's Mass in B Minor which Koussevitzky will conduct. Somewhat later, if all goes well, the activities will probably be extended to the operatic field.

◆ ◆ ◆

Setting of the Festival.

Besides the excellence of the performances which has sent the most exacting music lovers into a search for superlatives, the setting of the festival is such as to leave anyone fortunate enough to be present breathless with delight. For in 1936 the Boston Symphony Orchestra was presented with the gift of the superb 200-acre estate of "Tanglewood." It lies in the loveliest part of the Berkshire mountains and overlooks a shimmering lake. It was here that Hawthorne lived when he wrote "The House of Seven Gables" and "The Wonder Book," and no festival in the world has a more magnificent setting. Tangleewood is situated between Stockbridge and Lenox, just about midway between Boston and New York, a little more than a hundred miles from each. In the center of what is probably the most wealthy and populous summer colony area in the East, it could not have a better location for drawing audiences, as the mounting attendance has already proved.

The first festival was held in the summer of 1934 as an open air affair with sixty-five members of the New York Philharmonic orchestra. It was conducted by the late Henry Hadley, who conceived the idea of naming it. Dr. Hadley also conducted its second season.

Uncertain weather led to the utilization of a tent the second year, and then a larger tent—and for three years the programs were given on various estates. Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony entered the picture in 1936, and by 1937, the need for a permanent all weather auditorium became so obvious that the festival sponsors determined to invest $80,000 in such a structure to be erected at Tanglewood. It was finished in time for last year's festival. It is a simply designed functional building with a large shell for the musicians and seats for more than 5,000 people. It is open around the sides, keeping one's contact with the surrounding countryside, but so designed as to make audience and orchestra relatively independent of summer storms.

Phonograph Records in Evidence

The old homestead on the estate has been given over to the display and sale of phonographs and symphonic records, one more evidence of the growing acceptance on the part of discriminating music lovers of the importance of modern recordings.

The striking thing about the festival and the thing which speaks for its justice is that its setting and geneeral plan seems to result in the most marked inspiration of the musicians. These in turn affect the audience and receive back from them the kind of delightful response that makes each concert a memorable event.

Under the able generalship of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of festival, the woole community has been persuaded to take a part. The ushers are volunteer workers from the region. The American Legion undertook to superintend the not inconsiderable task of getting some thousands of cars properly parked and out of the grounds again, and the local club women set up a refreshments tent for the convenience of the visitors. An example of just how thoroughly each detail was managed could be seen in the fact that a fire truck stood parked nearby, ready for any unforeseeen emergency.

The fare which the six audiences heard was made up of such representative things as Bach's Brandenberg Concerto No. 3, Brahms First, Beethoven's second, Scheherazade, Tschaikowsky's Fourth, Strauss' Thus Spake Zarathustra, and Schumann's Fourth. On the novelty side was a concerto for orchestra by Walter Piston and Prokoffieff's Peter and the Wolf.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL

AUG 20 1939

He Should Know

HOLLYWOOD, Aug. 19.—(INS)—Akim Tamiroff, the mad Russian who learned his acting in the Moscow Art Theater, like all good Russians, loves good music. Riding in from a location set, he heard the driver of the studio car whistling a tune. "Where did you learn Rachmaninoff?" queried the actor. "That isn't Rachmaninoff, that's Tschaikowsky," answered the driver. "Yes, how do you be so sure," queried Tamiroff. "I used to be in the Boston Symphony Orchestra," replied the driver.

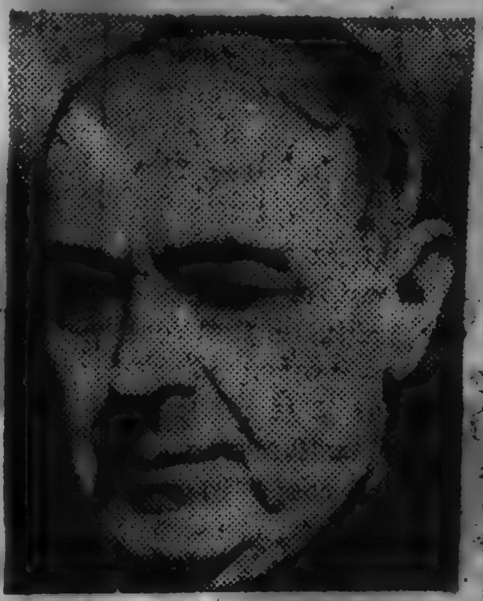
THIS CLIPPING FROM
FORT WORTH, TEX.
Morning Star-Telegram
AUG 18 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
OAKLAND, CAL.
POST-ENQUIRER
AUG 21 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
ITEM
AUG 21 1939

Gentility Reigns at Boston Symphony

By Alice Hughes



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY
. . . eat out of his hand.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—Among the Summer events a top flight experience is attendance at the Berkshire Music Festival of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and since my first visit there last year, I'll try never to miss it again unless broke or bedfast. Ten days ago I managed to make it, and reveled in the beauty of the countryside, the richness of the music and the charm of the site, which is "Tanglewood," where Nathaniel Hawthorne wrote so many of his tales.

The Boston band is unique among this country's orchestras at present. It has more prestige than our own Philharmonic Symphony, now that Toscanini has left Carnegie Hall, and most musicians seem to think it a better band, too. But of course its guiding spirit is Serge Koussevitzky, that strange combination of musicmaker, dictator and showman who waves the stick over it. He is a dominating personality, and he has the rich Bostonians eating right out of his paw. What Koussy wants, Koussy gets. He wanted a permanent music shed for "Tanglewood"—he got it. He wants a music school there, too, with himself as professor of conducting. Next Summer he gets it.

But the audiences are the most fascinating feature, to me. Their nucleus is the small corps of surviving lady brahmins from Bahston. They are usually tall, slender, stately patricians—white haired, blue-veined and wearing many classic diamonds and pearls. They seem to me the last of the rear guard of American gentlewomen as our grandmas reckoned such, and I can't take my eyes from them as they sit erect in their boxes. Their granddaughters may be cuttin' the rug" in shorts to Benny Goodman symphonies, but the tattered flag of these grand dames still flutters above "Tanglewood" and Boston's Symphony Hall.

GIRL IN THE BERKSHIRES—The lady brahmins wear lacy or silken clothes to the concerts, and many of their men even wear opera cloaks—and so does Koussy himself, when the air is a mite coolish. The Great Man turns up at the Shed in a long breadcoth cape lined with satin. The rest of us wear modest sports clothes, and some youngsters even turn up for the Flow of Soul in slacks . . .

Koussevitzky's showmanship is evidenced by the fact that he pops in from Europe each year with some new piece of music which is Boston's exclusively for a while. This season Koussy's pet is a simple but colorful descriptive piece called "Peter and the Wolf," written by the Russian, Prokofieff. It has a narration explaining the fairy tale characters, well done by Richard Hale. It was a treat to see scores of kids turn up from nearby Summer camps to hear this attractive novelty, which appeals to adults as well, naturally . . . For these two weeks the yeomen of the neighborhood and the simpler inns cash in on the influx of visitors, as does Saratoga during August. I stayed at Oaklawn Inn, packed from cellar to eaves for the Festival. The grub was fine—fresh things from the garden, luscious blueberry pies which are the Yankees' late Summer delight, and, of course, baked beans on Saturday. That is unshatterable tradition. The rest of the year the inn coasts . . .

Since my brother-in-law fiddles in the band I can get into rehearsals, which are a circus at all times with the respected Koussy, mighty disciplinarian, muttering in eight or nine languages as he whips the boys through the night's pieces.

But no whoopee in the Berkshires after the show! Two night spots in the immediate neighborhood, the Red Lion Inn and the Log Cabin, turn off the tap at midnight Saturday. When I asked why no leeway was given later revelers, I was gently told that the district wanted no riff-raff. All is genteel and re-fained.

The clergy is much in evidence at "Tanglewood." I saw a fashion highlight struck among the reverend brethren when two arrived wearing white mohair suits, black dickeys and white collars. The clericks looked awfully nice, but I couldn't help but feel that it was a little—er—well, advanced, I hope it was all right with the bishop.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ✓
MONTCLAIR, N. J.
SEMI-WEEKLY TIMES
AUG 18 1939

The following letter describing the Berkshire Music Festival which concluded last week was written to the editor of this column by a local Smith College student of music who attended the final series, presented by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitsky, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday last.

"The Tanglewood Shed is a simply huge affair, holding about 6,500 people. It's in a lovely place, surrounded by great quantities of trees, arbors, terraces and shrubbery. Persons who don't have seats can sit outside the shed on the lawn, which is enormous, and listen. Then there is a great tent arrangement across from the shed where refreshments are served during intermissions and where people can buy picnic lunches Sunday before the afternoon concert. In the background are the Berkshires and the lake—and it is gorgeous!

"The accoustics in the shed are perfectly marvelous and you can hear the music no matter where you're sitting. As for Mr. Koussevitsky—well, he is wonderful. He never lets up a minute while he is lead-

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM GREAT NECK, N.Y
LEDGER
8/18/39

RETURNS FROM MUSIC FESTIVAL

Lyra Nicholas, Douglaston concert-pianist, is at her Douglaston Parkway home again after a fortnight's attendance at the series of six concerts in the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Mass.

Mrs. Nicholas was appointed a member of the board of advisors for the festival and attended several of the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. She is the director of the Douglaston Music Guild, the Long Island representative for the festival.

Among other visitors at the concerts, which drew an average attendance of 6,000, were Miss Gladys Weep of Bayside, teacher of music in P. S. 98, Douglaston; Miss Ruth Sapio, teacher of piano, Douglaston; J. Cecil Prouty, conductor of the Long Island Symphony, and Mrs. Prouty, Flushing; Mr. and Mrs. Augustus B. [illegible], Douglas Manor, and Mr. and Mrs. George H. Nixon, Flushing.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TORONTO, CAN.
GLOBE & MAIL
AUG 19 1939

The sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival closed this week at Stockbridge with the audience standing and cheering Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra for many minutes. So great was the success of the undertaking this summer that the Festival may be extended from two to three weeks next year.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
AUG 20 1939

CONCERT AND OPERA ASIDES

THERE once was a time when the words "late Beethoven," laden with sundry cosmic philosophies by the musical literati, represented a region accessible only to the intellectual and artistic élite. If you could recognize a theme as coming from Beethoven Op. 106 upward, you had, if you desired, an undisputed claim to esthetic snobbishness. Lip-service paid its highest tribute to late Beethoven, but, until recent years, the public at large has had to take the scholars' rhapsodies on credit.

Radio, phonograph, the spread of concerts and the resultant popularization of good music have changed all this, for which the conclusive proof was the huge audience that came to Lewisohn Stadium last week to hear the Beethoven "Ninth," Op. 125. If there is anything esoteric in this work, it was certainly not beyond the heads and hearts of 15,000 plain folk.

The versatile Igor Stravinsky will be occupied in this country next season as conductor-composer, pianist and lecturer. He will arrive early in October to take the distinguished Norton Chair of Poetry at Harvard University, his particular subject as yet not announced. There is a strong possibility that he will appear as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, pro[illegible]ember and March. He has definite conducting commitments with the Chicago Symphony in February and with the San Francisco Symphony in December, and there is again "a strong probability" that he will direct his ballets, "Jeu de Cartes" and "Petruchka" in Los Angeles. The likely guess is that the orchestra will be the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES-HERALD
AUG 20 1939

SUMMER FESTIVAL IN BERKSHIRES IS GREAT SUCCESS

Record-Breaking Crowds and Enthusiasm Suggest It May Rival Salzburg and Bayreuth in Few Years.

By JOHN WILLIAM ROGERS.

Stockbridge, Mass., Aug. 19.—The Berkshire Symphonic Festival has just closed its fifth annual season here this week with such extraordinary acclaim that it seems clear it is destined to become the great American summer music festival and to take its place beside such world musical events as Bayreuth and Salzburg.

The six programs which the Boston Symphony has offered during August under Serge Koussevitsky began with an attendance of over 000 people and this number steadily climbed until the last two concerts had audiences that totaled 000. Not only did visitors from all over the union summering in the Berkshires flock to them, but the performances were received with such mounting enthusiasm, both by critics and a musically sophisticated public, that many music lovers made the journey from as far away as New York and Boston to attend.

While the festivals to date have concerned themselves purely with symphonic music, Dr. Koussevitzky, to whose competent hands their destiny has been placed, has already visualized them as widaning their scope and becoming a significant center of the arts in America. Already definite steps are being taken toward the realization of his plan and early in July, 1940, a new academy will begin its first session here.

The academy will function in two distinct parts: One for the advanced instruction of a limited number of pupils and the other a general session for a larger schol Each student will belong either to the festival chorus or the school orchestra. They will attend the rehearsals of the Boston Symphony, and already scheduled for performance in the 1940 festival is Bach's Mass in B Minor which Koussevitzky will conduct. Somewhat later, if all goes well, the activities will probably be extended to the operatic field.

◆ ◆ ◆

Setting of the Festival.

Besides the excellence of the performances which has sent the most exacting music lovers into a search for superlatives, the setting of the festival is such as to leave anyone fortunate enough to be present breathless with delight. For in 1936 the Boston Symphony Orchestra was presented with the gift of the superb 200-acre estate of "Tanglewood." It lies in the loveliest part of the Berkshire mountains and overlooks a shimmering lake. It was here that Hawthorne lived when he wrote "The House of Seven Gables" and "The Wonder Book," and no festival in the world has a more magnificent setting. Tangleewood is situated between Stockbridge and Lenox, just about midway between Boston and New York, a little more than a hundred miles from each. In the center of what is probably the most wealthy and populous summer colony area in the East, it could not have a better location for drawing audiences, as the mounting attendance has already proved.

The first festival was held in the summer of 1934 as an open air affair with sixty-five members of the New York Philharmonic orchestra. It was conducted by the late Henry Hadley, who conceived the idea of naming it. Dr. Hadley also conducted its second season.

Uncertain weather led to the utilization of a tent the second year, and then a larger tent—and for three years the programs were given on various estates. Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony entered the picture in 1936, and by 1937, the need for a permanent all weather auditorium became so obvious that the festival sponsors determined to invest $80,000 in such a structure to be erected at Tanglewood. It was finished in time for last year's festival. It is a simply designed functional building with a large shell for the musicians and seats for more than 6,000 people. It is open around the sides, keeping one's contact with the surrounding countryside, [illegible] audi- [illegible] in-

Phonograph Records in Evidence

The old homestead on the estate has been given over to the display and sale of phonographs and symphonic records, one more evidence of the growing acceptance on the part of discriminating music lovers of the importance of modern recordings.

The striking thing about the festival and the thing which speaks for its justice is that its setting and geneeral plan seems to result in the most marked inspiration of the musicians. These in turn affect the audience and receive back from them the kind of delightful response that makes each concert a memorable event.

Under the able generalship of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of festival, the woole community has been persuaded to take a part. The ushers are volunteer workers from the region. The American Legion undertook to superintend the not inconsiderable task of getting some thousands of cars properly parked and out of the grounds again, and the local club women set up a refreshments tent for the convenience of the visitors. An example of just how thoroughly each detail was managed could be seen in the fact that a fire truck stood parked nearby, ready for any unforeeseen emergency.

The fare which the six audiences heard was made up of such representative things as Bach's Brandenberg Concerto No. 3, Brahms First, Beethoven's second, Scheherazade, Tschaikowsky's Fourth, Strauss' Thus Spake Zarathustra, and Schumann's Fourth. On the novelty side was a concerto for orchestra by Walter Piston and Prokoffieff's Peter and the Wolf.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MEMPHIS, TENN.
COMMERCIAL APPEAL
AUG 20 1939

He Should Know

HOLLYWOOD, Aug. 19.—(INS)—Akim Tamiroff, the mad Russian who learned his acting in the Moscow Art Theater, like all good Russians, loves good music. Riding in from a location set, he heard the driver of the studio car whistling a tune. "Where did you learn Rachmaninoff?" queried the actor. "That isn't Rachmaninoff, that's Tschaikowsky," answered the driver. "Yes, how do you be so sure," queried Tamiroff. "I used to be in the Boston Symphony Orchestra," repl[illegible]

147

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

AUG 20 1939

'Tanglewood' Music Center in 1940 Is Plan With Academy, Festival Concerts Schedule

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor of Boston Symphony Berkshire Festival Will Have Class as Will G. Wallace Woodworth

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, invites the music-minded to consider a music center at "Tanglewood," in the Berkshires, and definite steps now are being taken toward the realization of Dr. Koussevitzky's plan. In early July, 1940, the new academy at "Tanglewood" will begin its first session, the term of six weeks to culminate with concerts of the festival.

The Academy will be in two distinct parts: One for advanced instruction to a limited number of students, qualified by ability and training; the other a general session for a larger school. A feature of the first will be a special class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky. The second will be preparation of a festival chorus in which all will participate.

Each Academy student will belong either to the festival chorus or the school orchestra. General sessions will be devoted to lectures and to choral singing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. Mr. Woodworth was in Syracuse last spring with the Harvard Glee Club in concert in the Syracuse Museum. His mother, Mrs. George L. Woodworth, lives in Cazenovia.

In 1940, the chorus will prepare a large work—Bach's impressive Mass in B Minor, to be sung under direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. Classes in folk dancing will be included in the Academy's six weeks' schedule. Membership in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is limited to 3,000. The list will be closed Nov. 1 or as soon as the limit is reached.

Dr. Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony orchestra have a full concert season ahead with 24 Friday nights and the same number of Saturday nights, six Tuesday afternoons and six Monday nights in Symphony Hall, Boston; five afternoon and five evening concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York City; five evening concerts in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, and five night concerts in Providence, R. I. The orchestra also will appear on eight occasions in Cambridge, Mass., and twice in New Haven, Hartford and Pittsburgh. Other cities on tour: Rochester and Buffalo, Cleveland, O., Ann Arbor, Mich., Chicago, Philadelphia, Montclair, N. J., New Brunswick and Northampton and Springfield, Mass.

Mrs. Harry L. Vibbard, director of the Syracuse Music School Settlement, writes of enchanted hours at the 1939 Berkshire Festival just closed. "It is quite probable the season next year will be three weeks," she says, "the Academy idea is gaining much interest." During her visit at "Tanglewood," Mrs. Vibbard enjoyed several talks with Mr. Theodorowicz, second concertmeister of the orchestra. He was second in the old Kneisel Quartet and for years has been in the Boston Orchestra. Carl Silfer, Syracuse violinist, studies with him and the master is deeply concerned with his pupil's progress.

One of the "sensations" of the Berkshire Festival was the singing of Dorothy Maynor, 28-year-old Negro soprano, native of Norfolk, Va., where her father was a minister. She attended Hampton Institute, sang with the Hampton Choir in Carnegie Hall, New York City, in the soprano section. The next year she studied under R. Nathaniel Dett at Hampton; planned to become a teacher of public school music. Dr. John Finley Williamson of Westminster Choir School encouraged her to become a choir director. Miss Harriet S. Curtis, dean of women at Hampton, followed the girl's work with some interest and has made New York studies possible for the singer. Now Alan Houghton is training her in operatic repertoire.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 20 1939

Berkshire Fete to Sponsor a Music School

During the recent Berkshire Symphonic festival announcement was made of a musical academy that is to become a part of the eastern project next summer. The school will be situated at the festival site, Tanglewood, Mass., and will open in July, 1940.

Designed "for living and working in music" the academy was conceived by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, as neither a "conservatory or a summer school, in any accepted sense." "A large student body will have the opportunity for a life in music, not only by discussion and example, but through participation, and in association with a great orchestra and its conductor." A smaller group will devote its time to particular fields. "An intelligent interest in the subject involved" is the chief entrance requirement.

In its first year the academy will continue for six weeks, culminating in the festival concerts, played by the Boston ensemble. It is planned in two sections, the first of which includes advanced instruction to a limited number of specially qualified students. A class in orchestral conducting under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will be the main feature, but there will also be available individual instruction in vocal or instrumental study under a faculty which will include thirty members of the Boston Symphony.

A second section of the academy is described as a "general session for a larger school." Each student will belong either to the festival chorus or to the school orchestra. General sessions, compulsory for all, will be held twice a day except Saturdays and Sundays, and will extend through the festival period. These will be devoted to lectures on broad phases of musical development, form and style; classes in folk dancing and choral singing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee club and Radcliffe society. All students will be admitted to the festival concerts and to "a certain number" of rehearsals. The chorus will participate in the festival after a period of preparation under Dr. Koussevitzky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAYTON, O.
NEWS WEEK

AUG 21 1939

A Native Flagstad?

A short and plump Negro woman walked out on the platform of Carnegie Hall, New York, last June—and faced a virtually empty house. Only about 35 listeners were scattered around the 2,752-seat auditorium. Then she started to sing—operatic airs, lieder, spirituals. An hour later the small, critical audience that had gathered for a private audition was murmuring amazement over a soprano voice of arresting richness, fluidity, and power. A virtually unknown singer—Dorothy Maynor—had scored a triumph.

Last week the 28-year-old Miss Maynor did it again. Before an audience of 200 guests, including numerous musicians and first-string metropolitan critics, the singer made a surprise appearance at Serge Koussevitzky's annual picnic for his orchestra, in Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony near Lenox, Mass. She sang a string of major arias from Handel, Mozart, Charpentier, and Wagner. Then, to show her versatility, she passed from opera to spirituals.

This time the critics jumped overboard. In The New York Times, Noel Straus named Miss Maynor "a new songstress of startling powers . . . the mature and fully equipped artist of prime rank." Serge Koussevitzky topped that—"a native Kirsten Flagstad," he said. Oscar Thompson chimed in with the opinion that Miss Maynor's voice, in its best moments, could be compared with anybody's.

This week, as a result, the musical world is buzzing with the name of Dorothy Maynor, awaiting her official New York debut. That will come next November. She has already been signed by the concert managers Evans & Salter.

A native of Norfolk, Va., and daughter of the Rev. John J. Mainor (the spelling was changed for professional purposes), Miss Maynor got her first musical experience in the choir of her father's church. At 14 she entered Hampton Institute, and ten years ago she appeared in Europe with the institute's famous Negro chorus. Planning merely to become a music teacher, she was urged on by John Finley Williamson of the Westminster Choir in Princeton, N.J., to become a choral director. Others insisted that she should pursue a solo career. Funds for study (first with Wilfred Klamroth and now with Alan Haughton) were provided by Miss Harriet S. Curtis of Boston, and the interest of other music lovers brought auditions in New York and with Koussevitzky.

Today Miss Maynor sings with equal ease in both French and German and has built up an admirable repertory of vocal masterworks ("about 200 now," she says, "but I'm not sure of the exact number because I haven't counted it in about three months"). The ease with which she passes from the great "Ho-Yo-To-Ho" air in "Die Walküre" to simple Negro spirituals (she likes to sing the latter sitting down, as she did in her father's choir, because "I feel better") is one of her startling attributes. Another is the seeming effortless and tireless quality of her tone production that ranges from a top voice of true soprano brilliance to the deep tonal stream characteristic of her race.

So far, with virtually no experience on the solo platform, Miss Maynor is handicapped by lack of audience technique, and because of that many cautious critics are keeping their fingers crossed. In potentialities, however, nearly all of them agree that she is probably the find not only of this season but of many seasons.

Koussevitzky with Dorothy Maynor, the new singing sensation

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE

AUG 21 1939

FESTIVAL—PLUS ACADEMY.

Next to the now almost traditional thunderstorm, the audience at the 1939 Berkshire festival opening found its interest engaged by the announcement of plans for inauguration next year of an academy of music in connection with the festival.

This academy has long been a cherished part of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's dreams for the musical adventure at Tanglewood, in the Berkshire hills near Stockbridge, Mass.

The first session in 1940 will include a class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky and the preparation of a festival chorus. No diploma or other credit for attendance will be given. Thus the academy is differentiated at once from the conventional school or conservatory of music.

These are ambitious plans, which hold great possibilities in musical education. Their development will be watched closely by musicians and educators.—The Christian Science Monitor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

AUG 20 1939

'Tanglewood' Music Center in 1940 Is Plan With Academy, Festival Concerts Schedule

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor of Boston Symphony Berkshire Festival Will Have Class as Will G. Wallace Woodworth

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, invites the music-minded to consider a music center at "Tanglewood," in the Berkshires, and definite steps now are being taken toward the realization of Dr. Koussevitzky's plan. In early July, 1940, the new academy at "Tanglewood" will begin its first session, the term of six weeks to culminate with concerts of the festival.

The Academy will be in two distinct parts: One for advanced instruction to a limited number of students, qualified by ability and training; the other a general session for a larger school. A feature of the first will be a special class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky. The second will be preparation of a festival chorus in which all will participate.

Each Academy student will belong either to the festival chorus or the school orchestra. General sessions will be devoted to lectures and to choral singing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society. Mr. Woodworth was in Syracuse last spring with the Harvard Glee Club in concert in the Syracuse Museum. His mother, Mrs. George L. Woodworth, lives in Cazenovia.

In 1940, the chorus will prepare a large work—Bach's impressive Mass in B Minor, to be sung under direction of Dr. Koussevitzky. Classes in folk dancing will be included in the Academy's six weeks' schedule. Membership in the Berkshire Symphonic Festival is limited to 3,000. The list will be closed Nov. 1 or as soon as the limit is reached.

Dr. Koussevitzky and his Boston Symphony orchestra have a full concert season ahead with 24 Friday nights and the same number of Saturday nights, six Tuesday afternoons and six Monday nights in Symphony Hall, Boston; five afternoon and five evening concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York City; five evening concerts in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, and five night concerts in Providence, R. I. The orchestra also will appear on eight occasions in Cambridge, Mass., and twice in New Haven, Hartford and Pittsburgh. Other cities on tour: Rochester and Buffalo, Cleveland, O., Ann Arbor, Mich., Chicago, Philadelphia, Montclair, N. J., New Brunswick and Northampton and Springfield, Mass.

Mrs. Harry L. Vibbard, director of the Syracuse Music School Settlement, writes of enchanted hours at the 1939 Berkshire Festival just closed. "It is quite probable the season next year will be three weeks," she says, "the Academy idea is gaining much interest." During her visit at "Tanglewood," Mrs. Vibbard enjoyed several talks with Mr. Theodorowicz, second concertmeister of the orchestra. He was second in the old Kneisel Quartet and for years has been in the Boston Orchestra. Carl Silfer, Syracuse violinist, studies with him and the master is deeply concerned with his pupil's progress.

One of the "sensations" of the Berkshire Festival was the singing of Dorothy Maynor, 28-year-old Negro soprano, native of Norfolk, Va., where her father was a minister. She attended Hampton Institute, sang with the Hampton Choir in Carnegie Hall, New York City, in the soprano section. The next year she studied under R. Nathaniel Dett at Hampton; planned to become a teacher of public school music. Dr. John Finley Williamson of Westminster Choir School encouraged her to become a choir director. Miss Harriet S. Curtis, dean of women at Hampton, followed the girl's work with some interest and has made New York studies possible for the singer. Now Alan Houghton is training her in operatic repertoire.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

AUG 20 1939

Berkshire Fete to Sponsor a Music School

During the recent Berkshire Symphonic festival announcement was made of a musical academy that is to become a part of the eastern project next summer. The school will be situated at the festival site, Tanglewood, Mass., and will open in July, 1940.

Designed "for living and working in music" the academy was conceived by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, as neither a conservatory or a summer school, in any accepted sense." "A large student body will have the opportunity for a life in music, not only by discussion and example, but through participation, and in association with a great orchestra and its conductor." A smaller group will devote its time to particular fields. "An intelligent interest in the subject involved" is the chief entrance requirement.

In its first year the academy will continue for six weeks, culminating in the festival concerts, played by the Boston ensemble. It is planned in two sections, the first of which includes advanced instruction to a limited number of specially qualified students. A class in orchestral conducting under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky will be the main feature, but there will also be available individual instruction in vocal or instrumental study under a faculty which will include thirty members of the Boston Symphony.

A second section of the academy is described as a "general session for a larger school." Each student will belong either to the festival chorus or to the school orchestra. General sessions, compulsory for all, will be held twice a day except Saturdays and Sundays, and will extend through the festival period. These will be devoted to lectures on broad phases of musical development, form and style; classes in folk dancing and choral singing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee club and Radcliffe society. All students will be admitted to the festival concerts and to "a certain number" of rehearsals. The chorus will participate in the festival after a period of preparation under Dr. Koussevitzky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAYTON, O.
NEWS-WEEK

AUG 21 1939

A Native Flagstad?

A short and plump Negro woman walked out on the platform of Carnegie Hall, New York, last June—and faced a virtually empty house. Only about 35 listeners were scattered around the 2,752-seat auditorium. Then she started to sing—operatic airs, lieder, spirituals. An hour later the small, critical audience that had gathered for a private audition was murmuring amazement over a soprano voice of arresting richness, fluidity, and power. A virtually unknown singer—Dorothy Maynor—had scored a triumph.

Last week the 28-year-old Miss Maynor did it again. Before an audience of 200 guests, including numerous musicians and first-string metropolitan critics, the singer made a surprise appearance at Serge Koussevitzky's annual picnic for his orchestra, in Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony near Lenox, Mass. She sang a string of major arias from Handel, Mozart, Charpentier, and Wagner. Then, to show her versatility, she passed from opera to spirituals.

This time the critics jumped overboard. In The New York Times, Noel Straus named Miss Maynor "a new songstress of startling powers . . . the mature and fully equipped artist of prime rank." Serge Koussevitzky topped that—"a native Kirsten Flagstad," he said. Oscar Thompson chimed in with the opinion that Miss Maynor's voice, in its best moments, could be compared with anybody's.

This week, as a result, the musical world is buzzing with the name of Dorothy Maynor, awaiting her official New York debut. That will come next November. She has already been signed by the concert managers Evans & Salter.

A native of Norfolk, Va., and daughter of the Rev. John J. Mainor (the spelling was changed for professional purposes), Miss Maynor got her first musical experience in the choir of her father's church. At 14 she entered Hampton Institute, and ten years ago she appeared in Europe with the institute's famous Negro chorus. Planning merely to become a music teacher, she was urged on by John Finley Williamson of the Westminster Choir in Princeton, N.J., to become a choral director. Others insisted that she should pursue a solo career. Funds for study (first with Wilfred Klamroth and now with Alan Haughton) were provided by Miss Harriet S. Curtis of Boston, and the interest of other music lovers brought auditions in New York and with Koussevitzky.

Today Miss Maynor sings with equal ease in both French and German and has built up an admirable repertory of vocal masterworks ("about 200 now," she says, "but I'm not sure of the exact number because I haven't counted it in about three months"). The ease with which she passes from the great "Ho-Yo-To-Ho" air in "Die Walküre" to simple Negro spirituals (she likes to sing the latter sitting down, as she did in her father's choir, because "I feel better") is one of her startling attributes. Another is the seeming effortless and tireless quality of her tone production that ranges from a top voice of true soprano brilliance to the deep tonal stream characteristic of her race.

So far, with virtually no experience on the solo platform, Miss Maynor is handicapped by lack of audience technique, and because of that many cautious critics are keeping their fingers crossed. In potentialities, however, nearly all of them agree that she is probably the find not only of this season but of many seasons.

Koussevitzky with Dorothy Maynor, the new singing sensation

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BILLINGS, MONT.
MORNING GAZETTE

AUG 21 1939

FESTIVAL—PLUS ACADEMY.

Next to the now almost traditional thunderstorm, the audience at the 1939 Berkshire festival opening found its interest engaged by the announcement of plans for inauguration next year of an academy of music in connection with the festival.

This academy has long been a cherished part of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's dreams for the musical adventure at Tanglewood, in the Berkshire hills near Stockbridge, Mass.

The first session in 1940 will include a class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky and the preparation of a festival chorus. No diploma or other credit for attendance will be given. Thus the academy is differentiated at once from the conventional school or conservatory of music.

These are ambitious plans, which hold great possibilities in musical education. Their development will be watched closely by musicians and educators.—The Christian Science Monitor.

148

THIS CLIPPING FROM TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.

AUG 21 1939

Salt at Stockbridge

For the past six years the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival, near Stockbridge, Mass., has provided an elegant musical salt lick amid the favorite summer grazing grounds of Boston's contented Brahmins. Spooned delicately out by the great Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and his flawless orchestra, the Festival's six annual programs have so far been noted more for purity than for pungency. But last week the Berkshire Festival produced an unusually big and tangy lump of salt. A brown, bosomy, 28-year-old Negro soprano named Dorothy Maynor, who went to Stockbridge to hear the music, ended up by making music for Stockbridge's awed music makers.

John Geo. Mahanna

DOROTHY MAYNOR
She had a nice time.

Invited to the Festival by friends, soft-spoken Dorothy Maynor wangled a chance to sing for Koussevitzky. When her big, velvety voice swung out in a brace of difficult Lieder, ceremonious Koussevitzky threw up his hands, cried: "A native Flagstad!" Next day, at a private picnic given by Koussevitzky to the members of the orchestra and a few hand-picked critics and musicians, Soprano Maynor, perfectly poised, warbled faultless coloratura, crooned deep Lieder, went to town on a Wagnerian Ho-yo-to-ho. The gilt-edged professional audience marveled at her versatility and easy form, found her rich voice one of the finest in a generation.

Asked how she came by her poise and cultivated musical taste (her only previous public appearances had been as a soloist with the Negro Hampton Institute Choir), Soprano Maynor modestly gave all the credit to her teachers. When she had heard the last concert of the Festival, Dorothy Maynor thanked her hostess for a nice time, took the next train for Manhattan, where she lives with her mother (a Methodist minister's widow) in a small upper-West Side apartment. When she got home she started practicing for her first public recital, at Town Hall in November. Said she: "My week has been so exciting I can't believe it's true."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 22 1939

Rear Section of Tanglewood Shed To Have New Chairs

Miss Clapp Makes $1000 Gift— Membership Lists Close Nov. 1— No Action on 1940

Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees yesterday voted to install chairs in the entire rear section of the shed at Tanglewood so that by the time the concerts are given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940, the ~~entire shed~~ will be so equipped. A gift of $1000 from Miss Alice Clapp of Washington, D. C., for chairs will be applied to the total cost of the project.

The trustees expressed the hope that other public spirited citizens might make additional gifts to help meet the cost of chairs and other needed improvements at Tanglewood.

No Action on 1940

No action was taken by the board pertaining to the length of the concert season next year but it was indicated that some action may be taken at the annual meeting next month.

It was voted to close membership lists Nov. 1 or earlier if the limit of 3000 members is reached. Subscriptions will be received from Nov. 1 to July and after July 1 only single concert tickets will be sold.

The trustees passed a resolution of appreciation for the gift of 516 chairs for the boxes made by John Shepard Jr., summer resident of Lenox, former mayor of Palm Beach, Fla. The recommendation was also passed for additional leads from the gutters on the shed and for the erection of a steel fence along the Hawthorne Pines from the Bullard line to the Higginson line and from Hawthorne Street to the southwest corner of the shed.

Whatever surplus accrues from the 1939 Festival will be applied toward these much needed improvements.

In view of installation of chairs in the rear section of the shed, some changes will be made in seating plans. The lowest priced seats instead of being on the extreme sides of the rear section, will be in the last five rows of each of the 12 sections.

Yesterday's meeting was held at the home of the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith in Stockbridge. The trustees agreed with Miss Robinson Smith that the 1939 Festival had been the most successful of the six. Refreshments were served following the meeting.

The various recommendations acted upon were contained in the report of the president. Other reports were submitted by Treasurer Henry W. Dwight, George W. Edman, clerk and chairman of publicity and Joseph Franz, chairman of the Tanglewood committee. Miss Alice Riggs, chairman of the lectures given by Miss Harriet Johnson in the six public schools in the county also submitted a report and recommended that the course be extended to include three more schools in 1939-40.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH

AUG 23 1939

New York Acclaims Local Negro Singer

Dorothy Maynor, Daughter of Norfolk Minister, Hailed as "Native Kirsten Flagstad"

A Negro singer born in Norfolk has been acclaimed within the last week as "a native Kirsten Flagstad," following a sensational audition before leading metropolitan musicians and critics.

She is Dorothy Maynor, 28 years old, a daughter of the Rev. John J. Mainor, formerly a Negro minister here. Her brother, John J. Mainor, Jr., is a caulker for the city water department. The spelling of her name was changed for professional reasons.

She made a surprise appearance last week at Serge Koussevitzky's annual picnic for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Tanglewood, summer home of the orchestra near Lenox, Mass. In the audience were 200 guests, including numerous musicians and first-string Metropolitan critics, as reported in the latest issue of Newsweek.

She sang major arias from Handel, Mozart, Charpentier and Wagner, then passed from opera to Negro spirituals.

In the New York Times, Noel Strauss called her "a new songstress of startling powers . . . . the mature and fully equipped artist of prime rank." Serge Koussevitzky topped that by calling her "a native Kersten Flagstad." Oscar Thompson opined that the Negro singer's voice, in its best moments, could be compared with anybody's.

She got her first musical experience in the choir of her father's church, according to Newsweek, which continus, as follows:

"At 14 she entered Hampton Institute, and ten years ago she appeared in Europe with the institute's famous Negro chorus. Planning to become a music teacher she was urged on by John Finley Williamson, of the Westminster Choir in Princeton, N. J., to become a choral director.

"Others insisted that she should pursue a solo career. Funds for study (first with Wilfred Klamroth and now with Alan Haughton) were provided by Miss Harriet S. Curtis, of Boston, and the interest of other music lovers brought auditions in New York and with Koussevitzky."

She is said to sing with equal ease in both French and German, and has built up an admirable repertory of vocal masterworks. The singer's official New York debut will come in November. She has already been signed by the concert managers, Evans & Salter.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 23 1939

MORE SEATS TO BE INSTALLED AT TANGLEWOOD

Rear Section of Music Shed to Have Chairs; Membership Lists Close Nov. 1

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 23—Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees this week voted to install chairs in the entire rear section of the music shed at Tanglewood. This means that the entire shed will be so equipped in time for the 1940 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A gift of $1000 from Miss Alice Clapp of Washington, D. C., will be applied to the total cost of the new chairs.

Will Care for Overflow

Additional gifts will be received gratefully, the trustees said in announcing Miss Clapp's gift. The benches thus released will be used to take care of any overflow that may occur at the Tanglewood concerts.

The board took no action on next season except to vote to close membership lists Nov. 1 or earlier if the limit of 3000 members is reached. Subscriptions will be received from Nov. 1 to July 1 and after July 1 only single concert tickets will be available. It was indicated that some action on the 1940 season may be taken at the annual meeting next month.

Whatever surplus develops from this year's concerts will be applied to several needed improvements. One of the improvements voted by the trustees is a steel fence to extend from the Bullard to the Higginson line along the Hawthorne pines and from Hawthorne Street to the southwest corner of the shed. Another improvement is installation of additional leads from the gutters on the shed to take care of heavy rains. The steel fence will act as a protection for the shed in winter and during the concert season will help in control of the crowds.

Shepard Thanked

The trustees passed a resolution expressing appreciation to John Shepard, Jr., summer resident of Lenox and former mayor of Palm Beach, Fla., for his gift of 516 chairs for the boxes.

In view of the installation of chairs in the rear section, some changes will be made in the seating plans for the shed. The lowest priced seats, instead of being on the extreme sides of the rear section, will be in the last five rows of each of the 12 sections.

The various recommendations adopted by the board were contained in the report of the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, at whose home the meeting was held.

Reports also were submitted by Treasurer Henry W. Dwight; Joseph Franz, chairman of the Tanglewood Committee, and George W. Edman, chairman of publicity.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 23 1939

BACK OF SHED AT TANGLEWOOD TO HAVE CHAIRS

Trustees Announce Gift of $1000; Membership Lists to Close Nov. 1

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 22—Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees yesterday voted to install chairs in the entire rear section of the shed at Tanglewood so that by the time the concerts are given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940, the ~~entire shed~~ will be so equipped. A gift of $1000 from Miss Alice Clapp of Washington, D. C., for chairs will be applied to the total cost of the project.

The trustees expressed the hope that other public spirited citizens might make additional gifts to help meet the cost of chairs and other needed improvements.

No action was taken by the board pertaining to the length of the concert season next year but it was indicated that some action may be taken at the annual meeting next month.

It was voted to close membership lists Nov. 1 or earlier if the limit of 3000 members is reached. Subscriptions will be received from Nov. 1 to July 1 and after July 1 only single concert tickets will be sold.

The trustees passed a resolution of appreciation for the gift of 516 chairs for the boxes made by John Shepard, Jr., summer resident of Lenox, former mayor of Palm Beach, Fla. The recommendation was also passed for additional leads from the gutters on the shed and for the erection of a steel fence along the Hawthorne Pines from the Bullard line to the Higginson line and from Hawthorne Street to the southwest corner of the shed. Whatever surplus accrues from this year's festival will be applied toward these much needed improvements.

In view of installation of chairs in the rear section of the shed, some changes will be made in seating plans. The lowest priced seats instead of being on the extreme sides of the rear section, will be in the last five rows of each of the 12 sections.

Yesterday's meeting was held at the home of the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, in Stockbridge. The trustees agreed that the 1939 festival had been the most successful of any in the six-year period. The recommendations passed upon were contained in the president's report. Other reports were submitted by Treasurer Henry W. Dwight; George W. Edman, clerk and chairman of publicity, and Joseph Franz, chairman of the Tanglewood committee.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 23 1939

Chairs for Entire Shed at Tanglewood Voted by Trustees

Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees this week voted to install chairs in the entire rear section of the music shed at Tanglewood.

This means that the entire shed will be so equipped in time for the 1940 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A ~~gift of $1,000~~ from Miss Alice Clapp of Washington will be applied to the total cost of the new chairs.

Additional gifts will be received gratefully, the trustees said in announcing Miss Clapp's gift. The benches thus released will be used to take care of any overflow.

The board took no action on next season except to vote to close membership lists Nov. 1 or earlier if the limit of 3,000 members is reached. Subscriptions will be received from Nov. 1 to July 1 and after July 1 only single concert tickets will be available. It was indicated that some action on the 1940 season may be taken at the annual meeting next month.

Whatever surplus develops from this year's concerts will be applied to several needed improvements. Improvements voted are a steel fence from the Bullard to the Higginson line along the Hawthorne pines and from Hawthorne St. to the southwest corner of the shed and installation of additional leads from the gutters on the shed to take care of heavy rains.

In view of the installation of chairs in the rear section, some changes will be made in the seating plans for the shed. The lowest-priced seats, instead of being on the extreme sides of the rear section, will be in the last five rows of each of the 12 sections.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 23 1939

FESTIVAL GIVEN $1,000 FOR CHAIRS

Washington Woman Makes Gift for Tanglewood

BENCHES TO GO.

Decision on Longer Program Next Year Deferred — Improvements Planned at Lenox Property.

Deferring action for the present on the proposal to add three more concerts to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's usual program of six for the 1940 season, the Festival trustees have voted to replace the last benches with chairs in the rear section of the music shed at Tanglewood before next year's season opens.

Action on the expansion of next year's concert program will probably come at another meeting the trustees will hold next month when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be present.

A gift of $1,000 from Miss Alice Clapp of Washington, D. C., will be applied to the cost of installing chairs to replace the remaining rear section benches, it was announced. Chairs were substituted for some of the benches this year when John Shepard, Jr., of Lenox and Miami, Fla., gave the Festival 516 new arm chairs for the boxes, releasing an equal number of the plain chairs which had previously been used in the boxes. The board passed a resolution of appreciation to Mr. Shepard and Miss Clapp.

Following the installation of the new chairs in the rear, changes will be made in the seating plan. The lowest price seats, instead of being on the extreme sides, will be in the last five rows of each of the 12 sections.

Rain gutters on the shed are to be extended and wire fences placed around some parts of the property. Any net profits from this year's concerts will be used for these purposes.

The trustees voted to close the membership lists on Nov. 1 or earlier if the quota of 3,000 members is reached. It was announced that subscriptions will be received from Nov. 1 to July 1 and after July 1 only season tickets will be sold.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TIME MAGAZINE
CHICAGO, ILL.

AUG 21 1939

Salt at Stockbridge

For the past six years the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival, near Stockbridge, Mass., has provided an elegant musical salt lick amid the favorite summer grazing grounds of Boston's contented Brahmins. Spooned delicately out by the great Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and his flawless orchestra, the Festival's six annual programs have so far been noted more for purity than for pungency. But last week the Berkshire Festival produced an unusually big and tangy lump of salt. A brown, bosomy, 28-year-old Negro soprano named Dorothy Maynor, who went to Stockbridge to hear the music, ended up by making music for Stockbridge's awed music makers.

John Geo. Mahanna

DOROTHY MAYNOR
She had a nice time.

Invited to the Festival by friends, soft-spoken Dorothy Maynor wangled a chance to sing for Koussevitzky. When her big, velvety voice swung out in a brace of difficult Lieder, ceremonious Koussevitzky threw up his hands, cried: "A native Flagstad!" Next day, at a private picnic given by Koussevitzky to the members of the orchestra and a few hand-picked critics and musicians, Soprano Maynor, perfectly poised, warbled faultless coloratura, crooned deep Lieder, went to town on a Wagnerian Ho-yo-to-ho. The gilt-edged professional audience marveled at her versatility and easy form, found her rich voice one of the finest in a generation.

Asked how she came by her poise and cultivated musical taste (her only previous public appearances had been as a soloist with the Negro Hampton Institute Choir), Soprano Maynor modestly gave all the credit to her teachers. When she had heard the last concert of the Festival, Dorothy Maynor thanked her hostess for a nice time, took the next train for Manhattan, where she lives with her mother (a Methodist minister's widow) in a small upper-West Side apartment. When she got home she started practicing for her first public recital, at Town Hall in November. Said she: "My week has been so exciting I can't believe it's true."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 22 1939

Rear Section of Tanglewood Shed To Have New Chairs

Miss Clapp Makes $1000 Gift—Membership Lists Close Nov. 1—No Action on 1940

Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees yesterday voted to install chairs in the entire rear section of the shed at Tanglewood so that by the time the concerts are given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940, the entire shed will be so equipped. A gift of $1000 from Miss Alice Clapp of Washington, D. C., for chairs will be applied to the total cost of the project.

The trustees expressed the hope that other public spirited citizens might make additional gifts to help meet the cost of chairs and other needed improvements at Tanglewood.

No Action on 1940

No action was taken by the board pertaining to the length of the concert season next year but it was indicated that some action may be taken at the annual meeting next month.

It was voted to close membership lists Nov. 1 or earlier if the limit of 3000 members is reached. Subscriptions will be received from Nov. 1 to July and after July 1 only single concert tickets will be sold.

The trustees passed a resolution of appreciation for the gift of 516 chairs for the boxes made by John Shepard Jr., summer resident of Lenox, former mayor of Palm Beach, Fla. The recommendation was also passed for additional leads from the gutters on the shed and for the erection of a steel fence along the Hawthorne Pines from the Bullard line to the Higginson line and from Hawthorne Street to the southwest corner of the shed.

Whatever surplus accrues from the 1939 Festival will be applied toward these much needed improvements.

In view of installation of chairs in the rear section of the shed, some changes will be made in seating plans. The lowest priced seats instead of being on the extreme sides of the rear section, will be in the last five rows of each of the 12 sections.

Yesterday's meeting was held at the home of the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith in Stockbridge. The trustees agreed with Miss Robinson Smith that the 1939 Festival had been the most successful of the six. Refreshments were served following the meeting.

The various recommendations acted upon were contained in the report of the president. Other reports were submitted by Treasurer Henry W. Dwight, George W. Edman, clerk and chairman of publicity and Joseph Franz, chairman of the Tanglewood committee. Miss Alice Riggs, chairman of the lectures given by Miss Harriet Johnson in the six public schools in the county also submitted a report and recommended that the course be extended to include three more schools in 1939-40.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORFOLK, VA.
LEDGER DISPATCH

AUG 23 1939

New York Acclaims Local Negro Singer

Dorothy Maynor, Daughter of Norfolk Minister, Hailed as "Native Kirsten Flagstad"

A Negro singer born in Norfolk has been acclaimed within the last week as "a native Kirsten Flagstad," following a sensational audition before leading metropolitan musicians and critics.

She is Dorothy Maynor, 28 years old, a daughter of the Rev. John J. Mainor, formerly a Negro minister here. Her brother, John J. Mainor, Jr., is a caulker for the city water department. The spelling of her name was changed for professional reasons.

She made a surprise appearance last week at Serge Koussevitzky's annual picnic for the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Tanglewood, summer home of the orchestra near Lenox, Mass. In the audience were 200 guests, including numerous musicians and first-string Metropolitan critics, as reported in the latest issue of Newsweek.

She sang major arias from Handel, Mozart, Charpentier and Wagner, then passed from opera to Negro spirituals.

In the New York Times, Noel Strauss called her "a new songstress of startling powers . . . . the mature and fully equipped artist of prime rank." Serge Koussevitzky topped that by calling her "a native Kersten Flagstad." Oscar Thompson opined that the Negro singer's voice, in its best moments, could be compared with anybody's.

She got her first musical experience in the choir of her father's church, according to Newsweek, which continus, as follows:

"At 14 she entered Hampton Institute, and ten years ago she appeared in Europe with the institute's famous Negro chorus. Planning to become a music teacher she was urged on by John Finley Williamson, of the Westminster Choir in Princeton, N. J., to become a choral director.

"Others insisted that she should pursue a solo career. Funds for study (first with Wilfred Klamroth and now with Alan Haughton) were provided by Miss Harriet S. Curtis, of Boston, and the interest of other music lovers brought auditions in New York and with Koussevitzky."

She is said to sing with equal ease in both French and German, and has built up an admirable repertory of vocal masterworks. The singer's official New York debut will come in November. She has already been signed by the concert managers, Evans & Salter.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION

AUG 23 1939

MORE SEATS TO BE INSTALLED AT TANGLEWOOD

Rear Section of Music Shed to Have Chairs; Membership Lists Close Nov. 1

STOCKBRIDGE, Aug. 23—Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees this week voted to install chairs in the entire rear section of the music shed at Tanglewood. This means that the entire shed will be so equipped in time for the 1940 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A gift of $1000 from Miss Alice Clapp of Washington, D. C., will be applied to the total cost of the new chairs.

Will Care for Overflow

Additional gifts will be received gratefully, the trustees said in announcing Miss Clapp's gift. The benches thus released will be used to take care of any overflow that may occur at the Tanglewood concerts.

The board took no action on next season except to vote to close membership lists Nov. 1 or earlier if the limit of 3000 members is reached. Subscriptions will be received from Nov. 1 to July 1 and after July 1 only single concert tickets will be available. It was indicated that some action on the 1940 season may be taken at the annual meeting next month.

Whatever surplus develops from this year's concerts will be applied to several needed improvements. One of the improvements voted by the trustees is a steel fence to extend from the Bullard to the Higginson line along the Hawthorne pines and from Hawthorne Street to the southwest corner of the shed. Another improvement is installation of additional leads from the gutters on the shed to take care of heavy rains. The steel fence will act as a protection for the shed in winter and during the concert season will help in control of the crowds.

Shepard Thanked

The trustees passed a resolution expressing appreciation to John Shepard, Jr., summer resident of Lenox and former mayor of Palm Beach, Fla., for his gift of 516 chairs for the boxes.

In view of the installation of chairs in the rear section, some changes will be made in the seating plans for the shed. The lowest priced seats, instead of being on the extreme sides of the rear section, will be in the last five rows of each of the 12 sections.

The various recommendations adopted by the board were contained in the report of the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, at whose home the meeting was held.

Reports also were submitted by Treasurer Henry W. Dwight; Joseph Franz, chairman of the Tanglewood Committee, and George W. [illegible] chairman of [illegible]

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

AUG 23 1939

BACK OF SHED AT TANGLEWOOD TO HAVE CHAIRS

Trustees Announce Gift of $1000; Membership Lists to Close Nov. 1

PITTSFIELD, Aug. 22—Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees yesterday voted to install chairs in the entire rear section of the shed at Tanglewood so that by the time the concerts are given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1940, the entire shed will be so equipped. A gift of $1000 from Miss Alice Clapp of Washington, D. C., for chairs will be applied to the total cost of the project.

The trustees expressed the hope that other public spirited citizens might make additional gifts to help meet the cost of chairs and other needed improvements.

No action was taken by the board pertaining to the length of the concert season next year but it was indicated that some action may be taken at the annual meeting next month.

It was voted to close membership lists Nov. 1 or earlier if the limit of 3000 members is reached. Subscriptions will be received from Nov. 1 to July 1 and after July 1 only single concert tickets will be sold.

The trustees passed a resolution of appreciation for the gift of 516 chairs for the boxes made by John Shepard, Jr., summer resident of Lenox, former mayor of Palm Beach, Fla. The recommendation was also passed for additional leads from the gutters on the shed and for the erection of a steel fence along the Hawthorne Pines from the Bullard line to the Higginson line and from Hawthorne Street to the southwest corner of the shed. Whatever surplus accrues from this year's festival will be applied toward these much needed improvements.

In view of installation of chairs in the rear section of the shed, some changes will be made in seating plans. The lowest priced seats instead of being on the extreme sides of the rear section, will be in the last five rows of each of the 12 sections.

Yesterday's meeting was held at the home of the president, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, in Stockbridge. The trustees agreed that the 1939 festival had been the most successful of any in the six-year period. The recommendations passed upon were contained in the president's report. Other reports were submitted by Treasurer Henry W. Dwight; George W. Edman, clerk and chairman of publicity, and Joseph Franz, chairman of the Tanglewood committee.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

AUG 23 1939

Chairs for Entire Shed at Tanglewood Voted by Trustees

Berkshire Symphonic Festival trustees this week voted to install chairs in the entire rear section of the music shed at Tanglewood.

This means that the entire shed will be so equipped in time for the 1940 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A gift of $1,000 from Miss Alice Clapp of Washington will be applied to the total cost of the new chairs.

Additional gifts will be received gratefully, the trustees said in announcing Miss Clapp's gift. The benches thus released will be used to take care of any overflow.

The board took no action on next season except to vote to close membership lists Nov. 1 or earlier if the limit of 3,000 members is reached. Subscriptions will be received from Nov. 1 to July 1 and after July 1 only single concert tickets will be available. It was indicated that some action on the 1940 season may be taken at the annual meeting next month.

Whatever surplus develops from this year's concerts will be applied to several needed improvements. Improvements voted are a steel fence from the Bullard to the Higginson line along the Hawthorne pines and from Hawthorne St. to the southwest corner of the shed and installation of additional leads from the gutters on the shed to take care of heavy rains.

In view of the installation of chairs in the rear section, some changes will be made in the seating plans for the shed. The lowest-priced seats, instead of being on the extreme sides of the rear section, will be in the last five rows of each of the 12 sections.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

AUG 23 1939

FESTIVAL GIVEN $1,000 FOR CHAIRS

Washington Woman Makes Gift for Tanglewood

BENCHES TO GO

Decision on Longer Program Next Year Deferred — Improvements Planned at Lenox Property.

Deferring action for the present on the proposal to add three more concerts to the Berkshire Symphonic Festival's usual program of six for the 1940 season, the Festival trustees have voted to replace the last benches with chairs in the rear section of the music shed at Tanglewood before next year's season opens.

Action on the expansion of next year's concert program will probably come at another meeting the trustees will hold next month when Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will be present.

A gift of $1,000 from Miss Alice Clapp of Washington, D. C., will be applied to the cost of installing chairs to replace the remaining rear section benches, it was announced. Chairs were substituted for some of the benches this year when John Shepard, Jr., of Lenox and Miami, Fla., gave the Festival 516 new arm chairs for the boxes, releasing an equal number of the plain chairs which had previously been used in the boxes. The board passed a resolution of appreciation to Mr. Shepard and Miss Clapp.

Following the installation of the new chairs in the rear, changes will be made in the seating plan. The lowest price seats, instead of being on the extreme sides, will be in the last five rows of each of the 12 sections.

Rain gutters on the shed are to be extended and wire fences placed around some parts of the property. Any net profits from this year's concerts will be used for these purposes.

The trustees voted to close the membership lists on Nov. 1 or earlier if the quota of 3,000 members is reached. It was announced that subscriptions will be received from Nov. 1 to July 1 and after July 1 only season tickets will be sold.

149

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 24 1939

Tanglewood Music Shed Receives Gift of Chairs

Berkshire Symphonic Festival Plans 1940 Improvements

Chairs will be substituted for benches in the entire rear section of the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., before next summer's Berkshire Symphonic Festival, thanks to a gift of $1,000 for this purpose from Miss Alice Clapp, of Washington, it was announced yesterday. The benches thus released will be used to take care of possible overflow crowds. The festival trustees who met early this week at the home of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival, in Stockbridge, also announced that contributions toward further improvements on the Music Shed and the grounds would be gratefully received.

Membership lists will be closed by Nov. 1, or earlier if the limit of 3,000 members is reached before that time. Subscriptions for the 1940 concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky will be received from Nov. 1 to July 1. Action on a possible extension of the 1940 festival beyond its present quota of six concerts may be taken at the trustees' next monthly meeting in September.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

AUG 24 1939

Comment

BERKSHIRE'S SUCCESS

(Boston Herald)

If Bostonians of the late George Apley's generation seldom ventured west of Albany, the western horizon of many of his juniors occasionally seems to be limited by the Worcester "cut-off" to New York. Thus Boston interest in the symphonic festival at Stockbridge is apt to be confined to satisfaction derived from hearing how well "our" orchestra has been doing there and how graciously it and Dr. Koussevitzky have been received. Personal attendance has usually seemed out of the question, what with the summertime calls of Maine or Cape Cod, and the fact that all of the musical works on the Berkshire programs are, for the most part, from the orchestra's standard repertoire and have been heard many times in Symphony Hall.

Despite this indifference of the eastern end of the state, the festival has continued to grow in brilliance and popularity. Nearly 7000 persons heard the final concert of this summer's series on Sunday afternoon. Total attendance for the six concerts was about 38,000. Tanglewood, now the permanent home of the Festival, has become the regular destination of thousands of people residing in all parts of western Massachusetts and in eastern New York, northern Connecticut and southern Vermont. The immense congregation of motor cars is a nightmare for the police and a spectacle for the local citizenry. Plans are already well advanced for a unique academy of music at Tangewood next July, at which Dr. Koussevitzky, together with other highly competent musicians, will teach.

All this, the crowds, the congestion and the enthusiasm, is impressive and exciting. But quite as remarkable is the fact that the original intent of the Festival—that of hearing great music out of doors in the natural beauty of the Berkshires—has been preserved. The acoustics of the new shed are so remarkable that you can wander about the soft lawns of Tanglewood, gaze across the lake to the blue hills beyond, and still hear clearly and perfectly a symphony of Sibelius, or, what is peculiarly appropriate, Debussy's "L'Apre Midi d'un Faune." The more adventurous of Bostonians should make a date with Stockbridge for next August. They will never hear great music played amid more beautiful surroundings.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

KANSAS CITY, MO.
CALL
8/25/39

Dorothy Mainor Hailed by Boston Symphony Ork Critic

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass.—(CP) — Miss Dorothy Mainor was hailed by Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, as a singer with "varied style, clarity of voice and wonderful musicality," following her appearance here Wednesday.

Further praising the noted singer, the internationally famous orchestra leader described Miss Mainor as a "native Kirsten Flagstad." Miss Mainor appeared in recital at the Berkshire Music Festival.

She began her career several years ago and first attracted attention as a soprano in her early years at Hampton institute, where she studied under the direction of Nathaniel Dett and was widely acclaimed by Dr. Dett as a soloist with the Hampton Institute Choir under Dr. Dett's direction on its celebrated European tour.

Miss Mainor is the daughter of the late Rev. J. J. Mainor, former A.M.E. minister and ex-supreme commander of the Knights of Gideon, and Mrs. Alice Mainor, who lives with her in New York city.

THIS CLIPPING FROM RADIO GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 25 1939

The March of Music

Edited by LEONARD LIEBLING

"... An ampler Ether, a diviner Air ..."—Wordsworth

The Light Within

A LEADING radio conductor told me the other day that when television becomes universal in the homes he intends to give some Haydn and Mozart performances, with the studio orchestra wearing powdered wigs and period costumes and the music-racks lighted by candles.

I reminded him that a hundred years ago Charles Lamb (who was not over-fond of music), in one of his essays, invoked blessings on the man who had invented wax candles, which he considered the great comforter on the long nights of study and writing. At that time Chopin was composing all of his works by candle-light. In his book "Lutece," Heine describes one of Liszt's recitals in Paris in 1844 and speaks about the heat of the flaming candles. No doubt the brilliant early concert pieces of Liszt were written by the light of candles. Bach and Handel knew nothing better. In Haydn's diary for November 5, 1701, we find that the London fog was so dense "I had to light a candle as early as eleven o'clock in the morning."

The ancient Greeks and Romans wrote by candle-light, but later adapted a primitive form of lamp consisting of one or two wicks projecting from a vessel containing some kind of oil. Cicero, writing to his friend Atticus, about 40 B.C., said that he burnt the Atticus letter with the same lamp by which he had written the answer.

We write by electric light, but thus far nothing much superior to the works of Cicero, Shakespeare, Bach, Beethoven, Chopin has appeared. Perhaps the outside illumination is not as important as the light of genius.

Speaking Up

By V. Vidal

WITH all the moaning about the decline of the Salzburg Festival since Hitler's advent, and the excitement over the broadcasts of the Lucerne Festival, what, I wondered, about music festivals in America? I had, of course, heard of the Bethlehem, Worcester and Berkshire Festivals. But I had never been to any of them. So I decided to look into the situation and spent part of my vacation on a busman's holiday in the beautiful Berkshire Mountains--listening to music.

I found the country around Stockbridge, Lenox and Pittsfield, Mass., simply reeking with history and tradition. Hawthorne, Longfellow, the Beechers, the Fields, Holmes, Melville, Bryant, Edith Wharton are only a few of the names associated with it. The white houses with their velvet lawns and enormous trees look as though they have been there for centuries, as, in fact, some of them have. Authentic picturesqueness, so much a part of the Salzburg charm, is there in abundance. I found, too, a community passionately interested in its music festival, from the hotel bell-boys to the Boston blue bloods. All of them have worked to keep snob appeal away, to make the Festival a community enterprise of purely artistic interest. Tickets are relatively inexpensive. One can live cheaply and well at any one of the guest houses scattered around the towns. And the plumbing is all that could be desired, which was more than one could say for Salzburg!

Originally the idea of the late Henry Hadley, American composer and conductor, the Berkshire Festival was first held in 1934 in the horse-show ring of an old estate near Stockbridge. In 1936 the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky was chosen as permanent orchestra, and finally in 1937 the Festival was presented with the marvelous estate of "Tanglewood," where Hawthorne wrote his "Wonder Book" and "Tanglewood Tales." A music shell, and later an open-roofed shed as a protection against rain were built on the grounds. Next year, a six weeks' music course for musicians and laymen will be held at "Tanglewood" as a preliminary to the Festival.

Already "Tanglewood" attracts an international audience. I heard a dozen languages spoken. The grounds are thrown open early, and many people come and have supper or lunch under the trees. They then drift into the shed and listen to great music played superbly by a magnificent orchestra under a conductor who ranks almost equally with Toscanini. The smooth lawns dip down to a silver lake and the rolling Berkshire hills. At night the moon gleams through the tall old trees. True, sometimes it rains, fierce, brief storms. The rain pelts down on the shed roof. Dr. Koussevitzky, with a wry grimace at the sky, lays down his baton until the elements subside. The audience laughs and takes everything with good humor and patience. The fading thunder has a trick of blending impressively with the kettledrums. I found "Scheherazade" considerably improved with thunder and lightning accompaniment.

Last year the concerts were broadcast. This year they were not. The March of Music would like to know why radio goes to the trouble and expense of airing foreign festivals and neglects our own. If America is to build up a Salzburg tradition the first to foster it should be the networks. Conceived in the American tradition, carried through by democratic means, supported by the eager, unfailing and active interest of the cultural hub of our country, the Berkshire Festivals deserve to become a national event, and something for every American to be proud of.

Let radio be in the vanguard of any effort to spread the music festival idea in the United States!

THIS CLIPPING FROM ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

AUG 26 1939

Tanglewood To Add New Chairs

BERKSHIRE SYMPHONIC FESTIVAL trustees this week voted to install chairs in the entire rear section of the music shed at Tanglewood. The shed will be so equipped in time for the 1940 concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A gift of $1,000 from Miss Alice Clapp of Washington, D. C., will be applied to the total cost of the new chairs.

Additional gifts will be received gratefully, the trustees said in announcing Miss Clapp's gift. The benches thus released will be used to take care of overflow crowds at Tanglewood concerts.

The board took no action on next season except to vote to close membership lists Nov. 1 or earlier if the limit of 3.000 members is reached. Subscriptions will be received from Nov. 1 to July 1 and after July 1 only single concert tickets will be available. It was indicated that some action on the 1940 season may be taken at the annual meeting next month.

Whatever surplus develops from this year's concerts will be applied to several needed improvements. One of the improvements voted by the trustees is a steel fence to extend from the Bullard to the Higginson line along the Hawthorne pines and from Hawthorn Street to the southwest corner of the shed. Another improvement is installation of additional leads from the gutters on the shed to take care of heavy rains. The steel fence will act as a protection for the shed in winter and during the concert season will help in control of the crowds.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

AUG 26 1939

Finland to Sponsor Sibelius Program

The Republic of Finland, through its Committee for Finland's Participation in the New York World's Fair, announces an all-Sibelius concert to be held at Carnegie Hall Thursday, September 28, with the NBC Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Georg Schneevoigt, Finnish conductor. This will be the high point of a nation-wide Sibelius week, September 24 to October 1.

Schneevoigt conducted the Los Angeles Philharmonic in 1927 and has appeared as guest conductor with the Boston Symphony. At present he is a conductor of the Finnish National Orchestra and a close friend of Sibelius.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS
AUG 26 1939

Afield In Music

Al Fresco Programs Attended By Hundreds Of Thousands; Berkshire Festival Preeminent

BY GAIL MARTIN

ALL over the land, summer music flourishes with hundreds of thousands in attendance. Call the roll and one finds concerts at the Lewisohn Stadium, New York, the Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., the Robin Hood Dell at Philadelphia, National Symphony concerts at Washington, D. C., opera at Chautauqua, New York and Cincinnati Summer Opera at the Zoo.

In addition, there is the Hollywood Bowl, the Stadium at Portland, summer opera at Forest Park, St. Louis, the Ravinia and Grant Park concerts at Chicago, and Central City's unique opera festival in the heart of the Rockies just out of Denver.

This does not include the scores of programs given by Federal Music Project bands and orchestras all over the nation, open air concerts at San Francisco, and the activities in other communities too numerous to mention.

ALL report a booming business. All strive to maintain a high quality of performance on a mass participation basis. It is notable that so-called "civic pride" is not depended upon for attendance.

Audiences are given their money's worth. There is but one consideration, that of quality and box-office drawing power. Take the Hollywood Bowl as an example. The world's greatest conductors are brought from England, Italy, France and America. The most eminent soloists are sponsored. No expense is too great in the search for talent.

The same principle is followed at the Berkshire Festival, at Chautauqua, at St. Louis, at Washington, D. C. and the Lewisohn Stadium. Promoters know that an audience turns out for but one purpose, that of securing the best show for the least money. Local pride and civic responsibility are frail props with which to sustain an artistic enterprise.

Glance at the policy of the Berkshire Festival, described by Carleton Smith of Esquire Magazine in these words:

"At long last, this culturally barren and boorish land has a summer music festival worth bellowing about. It's in the Berkshires. . .and offers a brand of music-making superior to that existing elsewhere on the globe in August."

At first, people in Stockbridge did not take kindly to the idea," says Mr. Smith. "Little did they realize that when they invited Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony to play, that they were removing it from the realm of local affairs and giving it international prestige and significance. Five thousand people came, whistled, stomped and cheered. There was no deficit.

"Tanglewood—a 200 acre estate where Hawthorne wrote the "House of Seven Gables" and the "Wonder Book"— was given to the Boston Orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival. Music lovers swarmed in from 32 states, from Canada and Europe. . .A branch telegraph office was installed to handle the outflow of newspaper copy.

"Here was a finer orchestra than Mr. Toscanini had in Salzburg or London. . .a finer orchestra than Mr. Furtwangler had in Bayreuth".

As a result, in 1940 the Berkshire Academy will be established where "mature and talented musicians can practice orchestral and choral conducting, where there will be a chance for everyone who enjoys music to associate in an informal and intimate way with professionals, to sing in the festival chorus or play in amateur orchestras, to attend rehearsals and concerts and observe how music is made.

"The only entrance requirement is an intelligent interest in music. No diploma or credit is given. . . It will have no library, no research, no academic formalities. The lectures, which deal broadly with the understanding of music and the arts, will not constitute a course of study but will serve as a background for actual musical experience. . ."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 26 1939

PILGRIMS to the Berkshire Festival report that Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" was the same sensation it was when Serge Koussevitzky, Richard Hale, and the Boston Symphony introduced it to Carnegie Hall last winter. You may listen to this combination of composition and performers any time now, "Peter and the Wolf" having been recorded by Victor. It's album M-566. . . . From the Berkshires, also, come good reports of a young Negro singer, Dorothy Maynor. I heard her in a radio performance several years ago and she was remarkable then. Put her name in the future book of musicians who are likely to be Events in the 1939–1940 season. —ROBERT A. SIMON

THIS CLIPPING FROM BILLINGS, MONT.
NEWS
8/27/39

FESTIVAL—PLUS ACADEMY.

Next to the now almost traditional thunderstorm, the audience at the 1939 Berkshire festival opening found its interest engaged by the announcement of plans for inauguration next year of an academy of music in connection with the festival.

This academy has long been a cherished part of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's dreams for the musical adventure at Tanglewood, in the Berkshire hills near Stockbridge, Mass.

The first session in 1940 will include a class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky and the preparation of a festival chorus. No diploma or other credit for attendance will be given. Thus the academy is differentiated at once from the conventional school or conservatory of music.

These are ambitious plans, which hold great possibilities in musical education. Their development will be watched closely by musicians and educators.—The Christian Science Monitor.

The NATION

MUSIC

THERE was, many years ago, a golden age of singing. And there was, only quite recently, what might be called a golden age of orchestral performance: those ten years or so when simultaneously the New York Philharmonic was playing under Toscanini, the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky, the Philadelphia under Stokowski, each orchestra exceptional in quality of personnel, each highly sensitized to the direction of a conductor exceptional in specific talents for the purpose—the ear for orchestral precision and sonority, the technique and personal force with which to achieve them; each orchestra, then, an instrument with which its conductor produced, in accordance with his individual taste, the distinctive radiance and transparency and sharpness of definition of the New York Philharmonic under Toscanini, the equally distinctive lush sumptuousness and splendor of the Philadelphia under Stokowski, the no less distinctive glow and subtlety and refinement of the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky—sonorities which were to the sounds of these or any other orchestras under other conductors as the voice of Caruso to the voices of other tenors.

Of the three combinations only that of Koussevitzky with the Boston Symphony is still to be heard regularly, functioning with unimpaired brilliance, and with certain of its most famous achievements more miraculous and breath-taking than ever. Only in his programs has Koussevitzky shown lessened vigor, or perhaps merely the normal tendency of the virtuoso to give an ever higher polish to the works he is most successful with instead of learning an unfamiliar symphony of Haydn. I judge from the programs in New York, and also from those of the summer festivals, which merely transfer to a shed in the Berkshires the most overplayed works of the orchestra's winter repertory in Symphony Hall. Even Bach's B minor Mass, announced for next summer, is standard fare; whereas something out of the ordinary for a festival would be a work like Berlioz's "Childhood of Christ."

Stokowski returned to the Philadelphia Orchestra last season for a mere fortnight in Philadelphia, a single concert in New York, and revealed again his phenomenal talent for conducting—his ability to produce dazzling feats of virtuosity and fabulously beautiful sounds with an orchestra; but also revealed again that what interested him most in conducting was to use the orchestra and music to produce feats of virtuosity and beautiful sounds. They may work out occasionally into something as fine as his performance of the Haydn-Brahms Variations in New York; but more often the result is a performance like the one of Bach's D minor Toccata and Fugue for organ, which reduced the work to a succession of effects for the moment. One of the effects was new: a phrase of the Toccata would begin while the preceding phrase was still fading out. It was, apparently, to think out this that Stokowski had devoted the other fifty weeks of the year; and it was for this that Bach had had to wait 200 years, to achieve the full realization of his purpose at last.

As for Toscanini, he conducts the new N. B. C. Symphony which, heard last winter in Newark's Mosque Theater, revealed an improvement in tone and responsiveness that made it a superb instrument in his hands, though still not what the New York Philharmonic had been. His work with his new orchestra is heard in its full beauty only by those who are able to get into the few public concerts. The people who are invited to the broadcasts in N. B. C.'s Studio 8H hear performances deprived of their tonal richness by the studio's acoustic conditions. This N. B. C. admits: the studio, it says, is meant for broadcasting; and it is true that what goes out through the microphones is far better than what can be heard in the studio. But N. B. C. means also that the studio is well adapted to broadcasting; and this is not true. What else can N. B. C. say? A corporation has its pride, like any of us; it has its "face," like the Japanese. Can N. B. C. admit that a studio which is the product of R. C. A.'s financial and engineering resources is not perfection; can it admit that Carnegie Hall, from which the New York Philharmonic is broadcast by Columbia, would be better for the N. B. C. Symphony; can it do anything but stubbornly keep the orchestra in Studio 8H at no matter what cost to Toscanini's broadcasts? True, having insisted after the first season that the studio was perfect, N. B. C. announced before the second season that it had been perfected; and true, it was improved. But when Alfred Wallenstein said in an interview that orchestral performances, including Toscanini's, were not being reproduced perfectly by radio because, in the first place, no substitute had been found for the wood and plaster of Carnegie Hall, and the millions spent on studio walls, floors, and ceilings had therefore not been able to produce anything to equal Carnegie Hall's acoustic excellence, he said what was plain to hear.

Toscanini's performance, then, goes out on the air with a loss due to the acoustics of the studio. It goes out, as Mr. Wallenstein pointed out, with a further loss due to the fact that the stations do not broadcast up to the 12,000 cycles or so which the ear can hear in the living performance; and a loss due to the fact that the lines which connect the stations in a network cannot carry the full volume range of the living performance—a loss, therefore, through monitoring which cuts down the fortissimo of the living performance and steps up the pianissimo, and in this way changes also the plastic proportions of the tonal continuum that are so remarkable in a Toscanini performance. This monitoring, also denied by N. B. C. the first season, was done more skilfully the second; but it was still plain to hear. And finally the performance reaches the ears of the millions outside with a loss due to the deficiencies of most of the radios in American homes. In the end Toscanini conducts but is not heard.

There were, last season, interesting changes in his work that I may discuss later; there were again his appalling choices of music; and there were this time Mr. Chotzinoff's talks, which might have been called "Great Composers as Seen Through the Keyhole"—concerned with the fact that Liszt took a trip to Italy "with the Countess dee Agoult," and Wagner went off with Cosima, and all the rest of what Mr. Chotzinoff thought important about these men and their music.

B. H. HAGGIN

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS
AUG 26 1939

Afield In Music

Al Fresco Programs Attended By Hundreds Of Thousands; Berkshire Festival Preeminent

BY GAIL MARTIN

ALL over the land, summer music flourishes with hundreds of thousands in attendance. Call the roll and one finds concerts at the Lewisohn Stadium, New York, the Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., the Robin Hood Dell at Philadelphia, National Symphony concerts at Washington, D. C., opera at Chautauqua, New York and Cincinnati Summer Opera at the Zoo.

In addition, there is the Hollywood Bowl, the Stadium at Portland, summer opera at Forest Park, St. Louis, the Ravinia and Grant Park concerts at Chicago, and Central City's unique opera festival in the heart of the Rockies just out of Denver.

This does not include the scores of programs given by Federal Music Project bands and orchestras all over the nation, open air concerts at San Francisco, and the activities in other communities too numerous to mention.

ALL report a booming business. All strive to maintain a high quality of performance on a mass participation basis. It is notable that so-called "civic pride" is not depended upon for attendance.

Audiences are given their money's worth. There is but one consideration, that of quality and box-office drawing power. Take the Hollywood Bowl as an example. The world's greatest conductors are brought from England, Italy, France and America. The most eminent soloists are sponsored. No expense is too great in the search for talent.

The same principle is followed at the Berkshire Festival, at Chautauqua, at St. Louis, at Washington, D. C. and the Lewisohn Stadium. Promoters know that an audience turns out for but one purpose, that of securing the best show for the least money. Local pride and civic responsibility are frail props with which to sustain an artistic enterprise.

Glance at the policy of the Berkshire Festival, described by Carleton Smith of Esquire Magazine in these words:

"At long last, this culturally barren and boorish land has a summer music festival worth bellowing about. It's in the Berkshires. . .and offers a brand of music-making superior to that existing elsewhere on the globe in August."

At first, people in Stockbridge did not take kindly to the idea," says Mr. Smith. "Little did they realize that when they invited Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony to play, that they were removing it from the realm of local affairs and giving it international prestige and significance. Five thousand people came, whistled, stomped and cheered. There was no deficit.

"Tanglewood—a 200 acre estate where Hawthorne wrote the "House of Seven Gables" and the "Wonder Book"— was given to the Boston Orchestra as a permanent home for the Festival. Music lovers swarmed in from 32 states, from Canada and Europe. . .A branch telegraph office was installed to handle the outflow of newspaper copy.

"Here was a finer orchestra than Mr. Toscanini had in Salzburg or London. . .a finer orchestra than Mr. Furtwangler had in Bayreuth".

As a result, in 1940 the Berkshire Academy will be established where "mature and talented musicians can practice orchestral and choral conducting, where there will be a chance for everyone who enjoys music to associate in an informal and intimate way with professionals, to sing in the festival chorus or play in amateur orchestras, to attend rehearsals and concerts and observe how music is made.

"The only entrance requirement is an intelligent interest in music. No diploma or credit is given. . . It will have no library, no research, no academic formalities. The lectures, which deal broadly with the understanding of music and the arts, will not constitute a course of study but will serve as a background for actual musical experience. . ."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 26 1939

PILGRIMS to the Berkshire Festival report that Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" was the same sensation it was when Serge Koussevitzky, Richard Hale, and the Boston Symphony introduced it to Carnegie Hall last winter. You may listen to this combination of composition and performers any time now, "Peter and the Wolf" having been recorded by Victor. It's album M-566. . . . From the Berkshires, also, come good reports of a young Negro singer, Dorothy Maynor. I heard her in a radio performance several years ago and she was remarkable then. Put her name in the future book of musicians who are likely to be Events in the 1939–1940 season. —ROBERT A. SIMON

THIS CLIPPING FROM BILLINGS, MONT.
NEWS
8/27/39

FESTIVAL—PLUS ACADEMY.

Next to the now almost traditional thunderstorm, the audience at the 1939 Berkshire festival opening found its interest engaged by the announcement of plans for inauguration next year of an academy of music in connection with the festival.

This academy has long been a cherished part of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's dreams for the musical adventure at Tanglewood, in the Berkshire hills near Stockbridge, Mass.

The first session in 1940 will include a class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky and the preparation of a festival chorus. No diploma or other credit for attendance will be given. Thus the academy is differentiated at once from the conventional school or conservatory of music.

These are ambitious plans, which hold great possibilities in musical education. Their development will be watched closely by musicians and educators.—The Christian Science Monitor.

The NATION

August 26, 1939

MUSIC

THERE was, many years ago, a golden age of singing. And there was, only quite recently, what might be called a golden age of orchestral performance: those ten years or so when simultaneously the New York Philharmonic was playing under Toscanini, the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky, the Philadelphia under Stokowski, each orchestra exceptional in quality of personnel, each highly sensitized to the direction of a conductor exceptional in specific talents for the purpose—the ear for orchestral precision and sonority, the technique and personal force with which to achieve them; each orchestra, then, an instrument with which its conductor produced, in accordance with his individual taste, the distinctive radiance and transparency and sharpness of definition of the New York Philharmonic under Toscanini, the equally distinctive lush sumptuousness and splendor of the Philadelphia under Stokowski, the no less distinctive glow and subtlety and refinement of the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky—sonorities which were to the sounds of these or any other orchestras under other conductors as the voice of Caruso to the voices of other tenors.

Of the three combinations only that of Koussevitzky with the Boston Symphony is still to be heard regularly, functioning with unimpaired brilliance, and with certain of its most famous achievements more miraculous and breath-taking than ever. Only in his programs has Koussevitzky shown lessened vigor, or perhaps merely the normal tendency of the virtuoso to give an ever higher polish to the works he is most successful with instead of learning an unfamiliar symphony of Haydn. I judge from the programs in New York, and also from those of the summer festivals, which merely transfer to a shed in the Berkshires the most overplayed works of the orchestra's winter repertory in Symphony Hall. Even Bach's B minor Mass, announced for next summer, is standard fare; whereas something out of the ordinary for a festival would be a work like Berlioz's "Childhood of Christ."

Stokowski returned to the Philadelphia Orchestra last season for a mere fortnight in Philadelphia, a single concert in New York, and revealed again his phenomenal talent for conducting—his ability to produce dazzling feats of virtuosity and fabulously beautiful sounds with an orchestra; but also revealed again that what interested him most in conducting was to use the orchestra and music to produce feats of virtuosity and beautiful sounds. They may work out occasionally into something as fine as his performance of the Haydn-Brahms Variations in New York; but more often the result is a performance like the one of Bach's D minor Toccata and Fugue for organ, which reduced the work to a succession of effects for the moment. One of the effects was new: a phrase of the Toccata would begin while the preceding phrase was still fading out. It was, apparently, to think out this that Stokowski had devoted the other fifty weeks of the year; and it was for this that Bach had had to wait 200 years, to achieve the full realization of his purpose at last.

As for Toscanini, he conducts the new N. B. C. Symphony which, heard last winter in Newark's Mosque Theater, revealed an improvement in tone and responsiveness that made it a superb instrument in his hands, though still not what the New York Philharmonic had been. His work with his new orchestra is heard in its full beauty only by those who are able to get into the few public concerts. The people who are invited to the broadcasts in N. B. C.'s Studio 8H hear performances deprived of their tonal richness by the studio's acoustic conditions. This N. B. C. admits: the studio, it says, is meant for broadcasting; and it is true that what goes out through the microphones is far better than what can be heard in the studio. But N. B. C. means also that the studio is well adapted to broadcasting; and this is not true. What else can N. B. C. say? A corporation has its pride, like any of us; it has its "face," like the Japanese. Can N. B. C. admit that a studio which is the product of R. C. A.'s financial and engineering resources is not perfection; can it admit that Carnegie Hall, from which the New York Philharmonic is broadcast by Columbia, would be better for the N. B. C. Symphony; can it do anything but stubbornly keep the orchestra in Studio 8H at no matter what cost to Toscanini's broadcasts? True, having insisted after the first season that the studio was perfect, N. B. C. announced before the second season that it had been perfected; and true, it was improved. But when Alfred Wallenstein said in an interview that orchestral performances, including Toscanini's, were not being reproduced perfectly by radio because, in the first place, no substitute had been found for the wood and plaster of Carnegie Hall, and the millions spent on studio walls, floors, and ceilings had therefore not been able to produce anything to equal Carnegie Hall's acoustic excellence, he said what was plain to hear.

Toscanini's performance, then, goes out on the air with a loss due to the acoustics of the studio. It goes out, as Mr. Wallenstein pointed out, with a further loss due to the fact that the stations do not broadcast up to the 12,000 cycles or so which the ear can hear in the living performance; and a loss due to the fact that the lines which connect the stations in a network cannot carry the full volume range of the living performance—a loss, therefore, through monitoring which cuts down the fortissimo of the living performance and steps up the pianissimo, and in this way changes also the plastic proportions of the tonal continuum that are so remarkable in a Toscanini performance. This monitoring, also denied by N. B. C. the first season, was done more skilfully the second; but it was still plain to hear. And finally the performance reaches the ears of the millions outside with a loss due to the deficiencies of most of the radios in American homes. In the end Toscanini conducts but is not heard.

There were, last season, interesting changes in his work that I may discuss later; there were again his appalling choices of music; and there were this time Mr. Chotzinoff's talks, which might have been called "Great Composers as Seen Through the Keyhole"—concerned with the fact that Liszt took a trip to Italy "with the Countess dee Agoult," and Wagner went off with Cosima, and all the rest of what Mr. Chotzinoff thought important about these men and their music.

B. H. HAGGIN

(51)

THIS CLIPPING FROM MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
AUG 27 1939

Stravinsky to Assume Harvard Poetry Chair

The versatile Igor Stravinsky will be occupied in this country next season as conductor-composer, pianist and lecturer. He will arrive in October to take the Norton chair of poetry at Harvard university, his particular subject as yet not announced. There is a strong possibility that he will appear as guest conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, prob[illegible] and March. He has definite conducting commitments with the Chicago symphony in February and with the San Francisco symphony in December, and there is again "a strong probability" that he will direct his ballets, "Jeu de Cartes" and "Petruchka" in Los Angeles. The likely guess is that the orchestra will be the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
AUG 30 1939

Front Views and Profiles

By June Provines

Eloquent Understatement.

The simple eloquence of an inscription on a marble bench in the green garden at Tanglewood, near Lenox in the Berkshires, now the summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra but once the home of Hawthorne, where he was inspired to write Tanglewood Tales, long will remain in the memory, as will the superb view from the garden across the Stockbridge bowl to the mountains. The inscription reads: Given to the Boston Symphony orchestra in honor of—and a half dozen names are inscribed in the stone—who lived here a long time. Gentle understatement that tells so much, Who lived here a long time.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
AUG 27 1939

Improvements For Berkshire 1940 Series

Tanglewood To Be Fully Equipped With Chairs; Donations Welcomed

At a meeting held early last week in Stockbridge, Mass. in the home of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the festival's trustees voted to install chairs throughout the rear section of the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox. This improvement, made possible by a gift of $1,000 from Miss Alice Clapp, of Washington, D. C., means that the entire shed will be equipped with chairs before the Boston Symphony Orchestra und[illegible]erge Koussevitzky arrives for the seventh annual festival next August Benches thus released will be used to accommodate possible overflow crowds. Meanwhile the trustees have announced that further subscriptions toward anticipated improvements in the Music Shed and on the grounds will be gratefully received.

Any surplus remaining from the 1939 festival will be applied to such improvements, including a new steel fence near the Shed and the installation of additional leads from the gutters on the building to take care of heavy rains. Next summer the lowest price seats will be in the last five rows of each of the twelve sections, instead of being on the far sides of the rear sections.

The trustees also passed a resolution of thanks to John Shepard Jr., for his gift of 516 new chairs in the boxes, which were installed in time for the second half of the 1939 series.

The question of extending the length or intensity of the festival next year may be voted upon at the trustees' annual meeting in September. Membership lists, as before, will close by Nov. 1 or earlier if the limit of 3,000 members is reached before that time. Members receive special privileges in regard to tickets and attendance at rehearsals. Subscriptions will be received from Nov. 1 to July 1, and only tickets for single concerts will be sold after the latter date. Information about membership may be obtained from the Festival's office at Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

AUG 31 1939

Music and The Drama

BERKSHIRES PLAN MUSIC ACADEMY

A musical academy "for living and working in music," to be associated with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and situated at Tanglewood, Mass., the site of the festival, was announced recently to begin in early July, 1940. The announcement was made in a leaflet to be distributed to the audiences of the festival.

The first session of the academy will continue for six weeks, culminating in the festival concerts. The academy is planned in two parts: one for advanced instruction to a limited number of specially qualified students, the other a "general session for a larger school." Featuring the first part will be a class in orchestral conducting under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, while an important activity of the second part will be the preparation of a festival chorus in which the whole student body will participate.

The academy, which is the conception of Dr. Koussevitzky, is described as neither a "conservatory or a Summer school, in any accepted sense." "A large student body," according to the leaflet, "will have the opportunity for a life in music, not only by discussion and example, but through participation, and association with a great orchestra and its conductor. The smaller group will devote their time to particular fields."

Each student will belong either to the festival chorus or to the school orchestra. General sessions, compulsory for all, will be held twice a day (except Saturdays and Sundays), and will extend through the festival period. They will be devoted to lectures and also to choral singing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Society. For the season 1940, the chorus will prepare the Bach B minor Mass under Dr. Koussevitzky. Lectures will deal with broad phases of musical development, form and style. Classes in folk-dancing will be included in the tuition.

Individual instruction in vocal or instrumental study will be available under a faculty which will include thirty members of the Boston Symphony. There will be instruction in solfege, harmony, counterpoint, composition and methods of teaching music in schools. All students will be admitted to the festival concerts and to "a certain number" of rehearsals. The concerts were described as "in a very real and vital sense the culmination of the whole work of the academy."

The principal entrance requirement is "an intelligent interest in the subject involved." No diploma or other credit for attendance will be given. Further details of curriculum, faculty and living accommodations will be announced later.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

SEP 7 - 1939

1000 MEMBERSHIPS SOLD FOR TANGLEWOOD

Festival Trustees to Hold Annual Meeting and Election the 26th

Pittsfield, Sept. 6 — Already more than 1000 memberships have been received by the Berkshire Symphonic festival office for the 1940 series of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood. More than 50 boxes have been sold.

The membership lists close November 1.

The annual meeting of the festival trustees will be held the 26th, at which time officers and trustees will be named and reports received.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
The Painter
West Point, N.Y.
9/8/39

Picking Up the Pieces . . .

By THEODORE W. DAVIS

SUMMER has come and almost gone, and with it has come the usual run of summer song hits, some songs exceptional, the others average. Tobyhanna gave us the field artillery and The Beer Barrel Polka along with Joe Rice's and Shimko's. Well, All Right hit the peak in late July. Outside of these, there was nothing startling in Le Jazz Caliente.

There were some changes made. Savoy's Chick Webb played his last one night stand in mid July. Bea Wain left Larry Clinton who immediately enfolded Mary Dugan. B. Goodman exchanged Martha Tilton for Louise Tobin, and Hal Kemp improved his crew by adding charming Nan Wynn, vocalist. Bear Mountain Inn. so near and yet so far, turned up with a delightful orchestra, maestroed by masterful Del Courtney. His recording of An Apple for the Teacher may be heard on Vocalion.

The current lot of records, in general, is mediocre. Artie Shaw has turned out a fair record of Out of Nowhere and I'm Coming Virginia, on Bluebird. There are the orchestra leader's usual clarinet solo and some brief tidbits of resounding base fiddle. If you are a Shaw lover, don't miss this. If you are familiar with Maxine Sullivan's I'm Coming Virginia, get it for the sake of comparing Artie's clarinet with outstanding Buster Bailey's. Otherwise let it stand.

Larry Clinton has lost many files in national popularity ratings during the past six months and gets a few back with his Victor Record of Over The Rainbow and The Jitterbug from the current Wizard of Oz. Bea Wain sings the first in the enticing Wain manner while Ford Leary lends his rich, deep voice to the Jitterbug in much the same manner as he did in The Devil With The Devil. The music is good, the vocals are excellent, but the arrangement is shy. This department says it is danceable and pleasing, but does not rave.

If you like the song Jumpin' Jive, it is recorded best by the man who wrote it, Cab Calloway. This is not the old Cab, but a Cab with more restraint, a clear, full voice, tidy arrangements, and a clever orchestra supporting the rare tenor sax, and firm vocal accompaniment. There's something doing in every groove of this vocalion and Cab should do it in your subdivision—if you like the Jumpin' Jive.

In the cool Massachusetts Berkshires, just west of Pittsfield, there is a summer colony which demands the best; excellent summer theater, leading horse and dog shows, and good polo. However, the outstanding feature of this locale is the Berkshire Music Festival held at Tanglewood. The Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky appears here each summer, and each summer finds and develops at least one outstanding success. Last season there was Prokofieff's Lieutenant Kije and this season another work by the same composer, Peter and the Wolf. This is an orchestral Fairy Tale, effectively narrated by Richard Hale. The music is original, humorous, and from some points of view satirical. The orchestra is, as usual, skillful, the direction clever. If you can forget about The Blue Danube and Tales from the Vienna Woods for a short time, take a safe chance on this collection of three, twelve inch, Victor Red Seal records.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CORPUS CHRISTI, TEX.
TIMES

SEP 5 - 1939

What Others Say

FESTIVAL—PLUS ACADEMY

Next to the now almost traditional thunderstorm, the audience at the 1939 Berkshire Festival opening found its interest engaged by the announcement of plans for inauguration next year of an Academy of Music in connection with the festival.

This academy has long been a cherished part of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's dreams for the musical adventure at Tanglewood, in the Berkshire Hills near Stockbridge, Mass.

The first session in 1940 will include a class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky and the preparation of a festival chorus. No diploma or other credit for attendance will be given. Thus the academy is differentiated at once from the conventional school or conservatory of music.

These are ambitious plans, which hold great interest and great possibilities in musical education. Their development will be watched closely by musicians and educators.—Christian Science Monitor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL
AUG 27 1939

Stravinsky to Assume Harvard Poetry Chair

The versatile Igor Stravinsky will be occupied in this country next season as conductor-composer, pianist and lecturer. He will arrive in October to take the Norton chair of poetry at Harvard university, his particular subject as yet not announced. There is a strong possibility that he will appear as guest conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, prob[illegible]ber and March. He has definite conducting commitments with the Chicago symphony in February and with the San Francisco symphony in December, and there is again "a strong probability" that he will direct his ballets, "Jeu de Cartes" and "Petruchka" in Los Angeles. The likely guess is that the orchestra will be the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
AUG 27 1939

Improvements For Berkshire 1940 Series

Tanglewood To Be Fully Equipped With Chairs; Donations Welcomed

At a meeting held early last week in Stockbridge, Mass. in the home of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, the festival's trustees voted to install chairs throughout the rear section of the Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox. This improvement, made possible by a gift of $1,000 from Miss Alice Clapp, of Washington, D. C., means that the entire shed will be equipped with chairs before the Boston Symphony Orchestra und[illegible]erge Koussevitzky arrives for the seventh annual festival next August. Benches thus released will be used to accommodate possible overflow crowds. Meanwhile the trustees have announced that further subscriptions toward anticipated improvements in the Music Shed and on the grounds will be gratefully received.

Any surplus remaining from the 1939 festival will be applied to such improvements, including a new steel fence near the Shed and the installation of additional leads from the gutters on the building to take care of heavy rains. Next summer the lowest price seats will be in the last five rows of each of the twelve sections, instead of being on the far sides of the rear sections.

The trustees also passed a resolution of thanks to John Shepard Jr., for his gift of 516 new chairs in the boxes, which were installed in time for the second half of the 1939 series.

The question of extending the length or intensity of the festival next year may be voted upon at the trustees' annual meeting in September. Membership lists, as before, will close by Nov. 1 or earlier if the limit of 3,000 members is reached before that time. Members receive special privileges in regard to tickets and attendance at rehearsals. Subscriptions will be received from Nov. 1 to July 1, and only tickets for single concerts will be sold after the latter date. Information about membership may be obtained from the Festival's office at Stockbridge.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
AUG 30 1939

Front Views and Profiles

By June Provines

Eloquent Understatement.

The simple eloquence of an inscription on a marble bench in the green garden at Tanglewood, near Lenox in the Berkshires, now the summer home of the Boston Symphony orchestra but once the home of Hawthorne, where he was inspired to write Tanglewood Tales, long will remain in the memory, as will the superb view from the garden across the Stockbridge bowl to the mountains. The inscription reads: Given to the Boston Symphony orchestra in honor of—and a half dozen names are inscribed in the stone—who lived here a long time. Gentle understatement that tells so much, Who lived here a long time.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN
AUG 31 1939

Music and The Drama

BERKSHIRES PLAN MUSIC ACADEMY

A musical academy "for living and working in music," to be associated with the Berkshire Symphonic Festival and situated at Tanglewood, Mass., the site of the festival, was announced recently to begin in early July, 1940. The announcement was made in a leaflet to be distributed to the audiences of the festival.

The first session of the academy will continue for six weeks, culminating in the festival concerts. The academy is planned in two parts: one for advanced instruction to a limited number of specially qualified students, the other a "general session for a larger school." Featuring the first part will be a class in orchestral conducting under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky, while an important activity of the second part will be the preparation of a festival chorus in which the whole student body will participate.

The academy, which is the conception of Dr. Koussevitzky, is described as neither a "conservatory or a Summer school, in any accepted sense." "A large student body," according to the leaflet, "will have the opportunity for a life in music, not only by discussion and example, but through participation, and association with a great orchestra and its conductor. The smaller group will devote their time to particular fields."

Each student will belong either to the festival chorus or to the school orchestra. General sessions, compulsory for all, will be held twice a day (except Saturdays and Sundays), and will extend through the festival period. They will be devoted to lectures and also to choral singing under the direction of G. Wallace Woodworth, conductor of the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Society. For the season 1940, the chorus will prepare the Bach B minor Mass under Dr. Koussevitzky. Lectures will deal with broad phases of musical development, form and style. Classes in folk-dancing will be included in the tuition.

Individual instruction in vocal or instrumental study will be available under a faculty which will include thirty members of the Boston Symphony. There will be instruction in solfege, harmony, counterpoint, composition and methods of teaching music in schools. All students will be admitted to the festival concerts and to "a certain number" of rehearsals. The concerts were described as "in a very real and vital sense the culmination of the whole work of the academy."

The principal entrance requirement is "an intelligent interest in the subject involved." No diploma or other credit for attendance will be given. Further details of curriculum, faculty and living accommodations will be announced later.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
SEP 7 - 1939

1000 MEMBERSHIPS SOLD FOR TANGLEWOOD

Festival Trustees to Hold Annual Meeting and Election the 26th

Pittsfield, Sept. 6 — Already more than 1000 memberships have been received by the Berkshire Symphonic festival office for the 1940 series of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood. More than 50 boxes have been sold.

The membership lists close November 1.

The annual meeting of the festival trustees will be held the 26th, at which time officers and trustees will be named and reports received.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
The Pointer
West Point, N.Y.
9/8/39

● Picking Up the Pieces . . .

By THEODORE W. DAVIS

●

SUMMER has come and almost gone, and with it has come the usual run of summer song hits, some songs exceptional, the others average. Tobyhanna gave us the field artillery and The Beer Barrel Polka along with Joe Rice's and Shimko's. Well, All Right hit the peak in late July. Outside of these, there was nothing startling in Le Jazz Caliente.

There were some changes made. Savoy's Chick Webb played his last one night stand in mid July. Bea Wain left Larry Clinton who immediately enfolded Mary Dugan. B. Goodman exchanged Martha Tilton for Louise Tobin, and Hal Kemp improved his crew by adding charming Nan Wynn, vocalist. Bear Mountain Inn, so near and yet so far, turned up with a delightful orchestra, maestroed by masterful Del Courtney. His recording of An Apple for the Teacher may be heard on Vocalion.

The current lot of records, in general, is mediocre. Artie Shaw has turned out a fair record of Out of Nowhere and I'm Coming Virginia, on Bluebird. There are the orchestra leader's usual clarinet solo and some brief tidbits of resounding base fiddle. If you are a Shaw lover, don't miss this. If you are familiar with Maxine Sullivan's I'm Coming Virginia, get it for the sake of comparing Artie's clarinet with outstanding Buster Bailey's. Otherwise let it stand.

Larry Clinton has lost many files in national popularity ratings during the past six months and gets a few back with his Victor Record of Over The Rainbow and The Jitterbug from the current Wizard of Oz. Bea Wain sings the first in the enticing Wain manner while Ford Leary lends his rich, deep voice to the Jitterbug in much the same manner as he did in The Devil With The Devil. The music is good, the vocals are excellent, but the arrangement is shy. This department says it is danceable and pleasing, but does not rave.

If you like the song Jumpin' Jive, it is recorded best by the man who wrote it, Cab Calloway. This is not the old Cab, but a Cab with more restraint, a clear, full voice, tidy arrangements, and a clever orchestra supporting the rare tenor sax, and firm vocal accompaniment. There's something doing in every groove of this vocalion and Cab should do it in your subdivision—if you like the Jumpin' Jive.

In the cool Massachusetts Berkshires, just west of Pittsfield, there is a summer colony which demands the best; excellent summer theater, leading horse and dog shows, and good polo. However, the outstanding feature of this locale is the Berkshire Music Festival held at Tanglewood. The Boston Symphony orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky appears here each summer, and each summer finds and develops at least one outstanding success. Last season there was Prokofieff's Lieutenant Kije and this season another work by the same composer, Peter and the Wolf. This is an orchestral Fairy Tale, effectively narrated by Richard Hale. The music is original, humorous, and from some points of view satirical. The orchestra is, as usual, skillful, the direction clever. If you can forget about The Blue Danube and Tales from the Vienna Woods for a short time, take a safe chance on this collection of three, twelve inch, Victor Red Seal records.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CORPUS CHRISTI, TEX.
TIMES
SEP 5 - 1939

What Others Say

FESTIVAL—PLUS ACADEMY

Next to the now almost traditional thunderstorm, the audience at the 1939 Berkshire Festival opening found its interest engaged by the announcement of plans for inauguration next year of an Academy of Music in connection with the festival.

This academy has long been a cherished part of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's dreams for the musical adventure at Tanglewood, in the Berkshire Hills near Stockbridge, Mass.

The first session in 1940 will include a class in orchestral conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky and the preparation of a festival chorus. No diploma or other credit for attendance will be given. Thus the academy is differentiated at once from the conventional school or conservatory of music.

These are ambitious plans, which hold great interest and great possibilities in musical education. Their development will be watched closely by musicians and educators.—Christian Science Monitor.

152

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE

JUN 4 - 1939

RECENT RECORDINGS

Victor adds a notable album to its series of Brahms recordings this month with M-555, in which Marian Anderson gives a superlative performance of the "Alto Rhapsody" (Op. 53), singing with great warmth and beauty of tone and with deep understanding of the profoundly moving music. Eugene Ormandy, the Philadelphia Orchestra and the male chorus of the University of Pennsylvania Choral Society co-operate with fine success in making this album a starred issue.

The "Alto Rhapsody" was one of Brahms' own favorites. It expresses with utter completeness the weltschmerz and sentiment of which Brahms was the master, but never the servant (in spite of what some high authorities say). Other songs in this album are "Dein Blaues Auge," "Der Schmied" (superbly done), and "Immer Leiser Wird Mein Schlummer." The recording is excellent.

A featured release this month for which Victor may well give itself a pat on the back is M-554, which contains a "Concert" by the Boston "Pops." This set should prove one of the company's best sellers of the year, and there is every reason why it should be. The program includes the overture to "Russlan and Ludmilla;" Eduard Strauss' "Doctrinen Waltz," played with all the care and devotion of which a knowing conductor and sympathetic orchestra are capable; Granados' "Goyescas," Tschaikowsky's polonaise from "Eugen Onegin," and arrangements of "Deep River" and "Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen" (these last two being our only quibble about the set. For our taste, they are too fancy and too heavily orchestrated). The "Pops" and Mr. Fiedler perform with their accustomed polish and spirit and the recorders have served them in fine style. The set is a welcome addition to any disc library.

The Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitsky are represented on the new Victor list by K. P. E. Bach's Concerto for Orchestra in D Major, arranged by Maximilian Steinberg. In a recording of crystalline clarity, this work, via Mr. Steinberg, is revealed as full-bodied and vigorous, with a particularly compelling slow movement. Its modern orchestration is not affected and pompous, but preserves the spirit of its original. Philip Emmanuel uses a theme in his allegro which bears more than a family resemblance to the "Caprice" from papa's Partita No. 2, in C Minor. Dr. Koussevitsky gives a beautifully moulded performance of the work and the orchestra, as usual, plays magnificently.

Harl McDonald, recently named manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra and already well known as choral conductor and composer, is on the new Victor list in Album M-557, which offers his Concerto for Two Pianos and Orchestra, played by Jeanne Behrend and Alexander Kelberine, with Mr. Stokowski and the Philadelphia. The concerto departs from traditional form in many respects, including the relative submergence of the solo instruments with the orchestra and in the structural development of the work itself. Mr. McDonald is interested in rhythmic effects and contrasts and the concerto abounds in vigorous experiments along this line.

The work, to us, seems overly orchestrated (although the composer has said this was part of his plan) and not always clearly directed. The final movement, "Juarezca," based on a Mexican dance form, we found most effective, but we prefer the rhumba movement from Mr. McDonald's "Rhumba Symphony" (available on Victor 8919, and a rousing disc, too) to his later experiments in rhythm. The recording is not overly good.

Two American composers, C. T. Griffes and Chadwick, are finely served by the Coolidge String Quartet in Victor Album M-558, which contains the former's "Two Sketches (Based on Indian Themes)", and the second movement from the latter's Quartet in E Minor. Griffes' "Sketches" are exceedingly interesting and are played and recorded to perfection. (Griffes' extraordinarily effective "Pleasure Dome of Kubla Khan" may be had on Victor 7957, a record which should be in every collection).

Berlioz' arrangement of Weber's "Invitation to the Waltz" (or, "Dance;" (take your choice) is offered on V-15192, as played by Maestro Toscanini and the B. B. C. The disc could hardly escape being effective, but it is not the ultimate performance we expected it to be.

Mme. Flagstad and the Philadelphia, under Mr. Ormandy, collaborate with compelling success on Victor 1901 in performances of "Du Bist der Lenz," from "Die Walkure," and "Euch Luften die Mein Klagen," from "Lohengrin." The collaboration is another notable addition to the records recently made by this all-star aggregation.

S.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

JUN 9 - 1939

Recorded Music

Orchestra; Mass

VICTOR has published the concerto for orchestra by Karl Phillip Emmanuel Bach, in the effortless arrangement of Maximilian Steinberg, played magnificently by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky and brilliantly recorded. It is a signal addition to the lists, for it is a strong and superb piece of music, fresh and vital in spite of all the musical change that has taken place since that period when the contrapuntal style was changing into the homophonic. The three movements occupy four surfaces, and of these two contain the remarkable slow movement, which nothing in "Parsifal" exceeds for poignancy.

In distinct contrast to this music which is scientifically knowing and emotionally profound, is Columbia's collection of six "rustic" dances selected from the stage works of Gretry. Not a generation separated the careers of K. P. E. Bach and Gretry, yet already the music of France is sophisticated, appeals to the taste and the intellect, and has acquired a brilliant surface charm. The dances are delightful, somewhat quaint, but an invaluable picture of the 18th century musical times in Paris. The performance of the Orchestra Symphonique under Ruhlmann is excellent. A fourth surface carries the salterella of Vieuxtemps, worth knowing about, but not equal to the rest of the album.

One would not have expected the arch miniaturist touch of Francis Pculence equal to music of real gravity. Yet the C major mass recorded by Columbia is a gem without any exact forerunner. The touch is still light, the ideas are brief and the manner is polished, courtly and knowing in the extreme. Yet it remains a perfect setting of the mass. It is well sung by the Chanteurs de Lyons, directed by E. Bourmauck.

The music of Victor Herbert is palpably founded upon European models, yet its singularly personal quality emerges ever more strongly as the era which produced it grows farther and farther away. The music is fresh and it still seems timeless. Yet it was so notable and so definitive a part of American life at the time that Herbert wrote, those of us who knew it when it was first performed cannot help associating it with the past. Victor's publication of a Victor Herbert album of five discs preserves an amazingly rich selection of the best remembered melodies from "Naughty Marietta," "The Fortune Teller," "Mademoiselle Modiste," "Babes in Toyland," "Sweethearts" and "The Red Mill," plus his "Badinage," "Al Fresco" and "Air de Ballet." The great variety of his style, the constant directness of his appeal and the real distinction of tunes that are nevertheless captivating attest the skill of a composer in his day accepted merely as delightful. The excellent performances are those of Anne Jamison, Jan Peerce and Tom Thomas, singing to the accompaniment of the Victor Salon Group under Nathaniel Skilkret. The three orchestral selections are played by the Victor Concert Orchestra, with Vladimir Selensky, violinist.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

JUN 8 - 1939

Music Views

Berkshires

BY EUGENE STINSON

THE Berkshire Symphonic Festival will take place in the first two weeks of August, Serge Koussevitzky conducting the Boston Symphony. This is the second summer in which the festival music shed at Tanglewood, built last year on an estate of 200 acres overlooking Stockbridge Bowl, will be used. It is the first time that all the 5,700 seats will be reserved. Nearly half have already been subscribed for. Details may be had of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, Inc., Stockbridge, Mass.

As usual, Dr. Koussevitzky's festival will be divided into two subscriptions, of three concerts each, played on Thursday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon.

The first series, Aug. 3, 5 and 6, will consist of Bach's third Brandenburg concerto, Beethoven's seventh symphony, Brahms' first symphony, Mozart's E flat symphony, Walter Piston's concerto for orchestra, Prokofieff's "Peter the Wolf" (with Richard Hale as narrator), Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherezade," Sibelius' fifth symphony and Tschaikowsky's fourth symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky's programs for the second series, Aug 10, 12 and 13, name Beethoven's second symphony, Debussy's Prelude to "L'Apre-Midi d'un Faun," a Haydn symphony, Ravel's "La Valse," the Moussorgsky-Ravel "Pictures at an Exhibition," Schumann's fourth symphony, Sibelius' second symphony, Strauss' "Also Sprach Zarathustra," Strawinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps" and selections from Wagner, the overture to "Fliegender Hollaender," the preludes to "Lohengrin" and to "Meistersinger" and Siegfried's Rhine Journey.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

JUN 9 - 1939

The Music Box

By JOHN D. DONOGHUE

With this edition of The Music Box, we fold our verbal tents and steal away for the summer as silently as our 200 pounds will permit. It has been fun writing the column and we can only hope that it has been enjoyed. A few people have bothered to write with suggestions or contributions, while many have been kind enough to call in ideas of merit or convey them conversationally. For all these, a thousand thanks. We plan to be back in the early fall with a bigger and better Music Box.

* * *

Before we officially sign off, however, we want to urge with all the ink at our disposal a visit to the Berkshire Music festival at Stockbridge during the first two weeks in August. Tanglewood is one of the most beautiful spots in New England and Western Massachusetts music lovers are luckier than is generally believed to have so much good music so handy during the summer. George Edman informs us that there are still plenty of good seats available and the rule is first come, first served when Dr Koussevitzky and company hold forth.

* * *

The waning music season was spiced up a bit this week as Rosamond Chapin had her column and a half say on the music situation in Springfield. A lot of what she had to say about little local appreciation for local talent is true, as were her comments anent the allegedly deplorable necessity of organized sales pressure to put something meritorious across, but art never suffered from good management, and publicity alone will never pull in the shekels unless it is intelligently directed and supplemented by good ticket sellers. Some day we'll write a book on the subject.

* * *

Everybody is so unhappy about the World's fair and its cancelation of all classical music programs. Musical America makes a good point this week when it points out in an editorial titled: "The Fair—An Opportunity Lost:" "Mr Downes, his assistants and his advisory music committee elaborated for the New York exposition a program of music such as no other exposition had ever undertaken. They were justified in doing this, because, from the beginning, it had been claimed—that it was not merely a great commercial venture, but one which would represent all that was best in the life of the people who are to make up the world of tomorrow.—But the crux of the entire unhappy progress of events was the unwillingness of the Fair to look on music as anything worth spending money on. The outlay for the Hall of Music undoubtedly would have financed the entire musical program. The Fair now has its Hall of Music but has decided to get along without the music for which it was designed." Cynical note: The world of tomorrow will be as perfect as The World of Tomorrow.

* * *

Once again we'd like to chronicle our undiluted joy at the performance of the Springfield Repertory Players this week when they Brodied into musical comedy with "Oh Boy"—not "Oh Kay" as we somnolently reported last week. Tech high was filled for the show and it might well be repeated. Bob Day did his usual marvels with a well organized troupe. The leads were excellent and will undoubtedly see service next season in whatever Kiwanis attempts. Paste the name of Evelyn Steele in your hat as somebody to be watched. Though the Players have a fine dramatic season lined up for next year, their success Monday may again lead them into musical fields, and according to our little bird, some of the company would like to tackle "[illegible]."

* * *

We had to wait for the last week of the season to get our farthest away mail. From Carmel, Cal., we learn that the fifth annual Carmel Bach festival will be held there from July 17 to 23, and we pass it on just in case any Bach zealots feel the urge to go West.

* * *

In the Winchell manner: What very well-known lady organist in Springfield is so very, very embarrassed because the church music committee's Mrs Santa Claus offered her resignation when the two pfft! Mrs Claus nearly built the church, and is more than supporting the choir.

* * *

This past week came news of the annual convention of barbershop quartets. The tonsil tearing was terrific. Our sole regret is that there was no local representation at the convention. We maintain that Western Massachusetts, to say nothing of The Daily News office—in off hours—can furnish harmony fit for a king. Much along the same line is the style note that shower curtains are now being sold with the words of popular songs inscribed thereon, for the benefit of bathroom baritones.

* * *

Miriam Fairley, daughter of Mr and Mrs James Fairley of 197 Davis street, earned a neat distinction this past week. She was voted the "sweetest girl" at Boston university's school of music where she graduates this year.

* * *

At New York, the Fordham university band recently presented a concert, inaugurating a nation-wide campaign to erect a bronze memorial at Washington to the memory of the late John Phillip Sousa. It's a deserved if belated tribute to the "march king," but don't reach too quickly for your checkbook. It's going to cost $750,000.

* * *

Now is the time for all good pupils to come to the aid of their teachers. Recital season is here and this becomes as good a time as any to take to the storm cellars. Reviewers have a terrible time explaining why they do not attend every recital—as if it were physically possible. It is worth sitting through an entire deadly program, however, in order to discover some talent that may later grow if properly nutured and encouraged. Critics may be damned a thousand times and earn 999 of those condemnations, but only an incurable musical optimist will sit through all the average reviewer does in order to find that extra special something.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
COURIER
Rockland, Me.
5/10/39

153

REALM OF MUSIC

by Gladys St. Clair Heistad

The announcement that sudden illness compelled Paderewski to cancel the final concert of his American tour brought a note of sadness to us all who are a part of the millions who love and admire the grand old master of the piano. Since arriving in this country on Feb. 21, Paderewski had given 20 recitals, an amazing feat for one 78 years old. When stricken with a heart attack, slight but sufficient to cause alarm for the future, he was prepared to give four more recitals.

* * * *

In some clippings I have come across a program given by Anton Brees, carillonneur, at the Bok Singing Tower a few weeks ago; here it is:

America,
(a) Jeanie With the Light Brown Hair, Stephen Foster
(b) Just A-Wearyin' for You, Carrie Jacobs-Bond
(c) Come Back to Erin, Claribel
Gavotte, Gossec
(a) Just As I Am, Bradbury
(b) Tell me the Old, Old Story, W. H. Doane
(c) My Jesus, as Thou Wilt, from Deber
The Old Refrain, Kreisler
The Star Spangled Banner,

* * * *

In a recent issue of Victor Record Review, a small magazine sent me through the thought of L. W. Fickett of the Maine Music Company, and which I enjoy very much, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has an inspiring article entitled "Soaring Music," devoted to America's position in music today and its future. Quoating we find Koussevitzky saying:

"The musical situation in present-day America is not unlike that which existed in Russia during the middle of the 19th century. There too, the seeds of the future musical development of the nation were sown by a host of visiting artists. There, too, it was not until the appearance on the scene of a typical school of Russian composers that the country was able to play its part in the musical culture of the world at large. These 'new' Russian composers had the inestimable advantage of basing their art on folklore material. It is interesting to note a similar tendency on the part of certain American composers to find a native musical material upon which to base their symphonies and sonatas. It is a question whether this obvious dependence of American composers upon Indian, Negro or jazz sources will serve the composers of this country as the folksong of his country served the Russian composer. For obvious reasons the situation is not quite abalogous. Already one can see a definite trend on the part of contemporary Americans toward attaching themselves to a more universal musical tradition.

"Music in America, whether of the past, the present or the future, depends for its furtherance on the development of three factors: a creative school of native composers, a full flowering of interpretative artists and organizations and a country-wide body of intelligent listeners. The musical history of the United States proves that it is the second element of this indivisble trio which developed first. Indeed, whatever the future may hold in America's life, nothing will surpass the incredible transformation from the primitive musical life of the early 19th century during the pioneering period, when music was confined to the home and the church, to the picture presented by present-day America.

It is a fact to which every American has a right to point with pride that, having begun by merely inviting the best interpretative artists of the Old World to its shores, America has known how to weld its own performers into organizations which have a right to be compared with, and in certain fields surpass, similar organizations in Europe. The development of symphonic orchestras in this country, for instance, may be taken as a symbol of the advance in all the interpretative fields. And it is not the quality of the orchestras alone which is remarkable, but also the breadth and variety of musical fare they present. These and similar organisations lay the groundwork upon which listeners are developed. For it must be remembered that without an educated and responsive music-loving public, there is no chance of having a musical culture. Today American audiences not only show their love and admiration of music but also a deep understanding of the necessity and importance of musical art in the progress of humanity."

* * * *

And yet on top of this hopeful attitude taken by Koussevitzky comes the announcement that the New York World's Fair has decided to scrap its music program in favor of some more "popular" form of entertainment for the Fair's Hall of Music. It is a decision that does not bring applause from America's multitudes of music lovers, and still more particularly America's great numbers of trained musicians. As an editorial in Musical America says:

"The resignation of Olin Downes as music director, and the effort to arrange a last-minute transfer to theatres and other auditoriums in the city of New York of events which had been contracted for as part of the Fair's own recognition of the musical art, brings to a rather sorry close a long struggle between cultural and purely materialistic outlooks in this particular aspect of World's Fair planning and administration."

The fact that Mr. Downes, his assistants and his advisory music committee elaborated for the New York exposition a program of music such as no other exposition had ever undertaken, was justified, because, from the beginning, it had been claimed for the New York Fair that it was not merely a great commercial venture, but one which would represent all that was best in the life of the people who are to make up the word of tomorrow. Although everything with regard to the Hall of Music would seem to have been handled unfortunately from the start—it is badly placed for one thing, adjacent to the amusement concessions—the crux of the entire unhappy progress of events was the unwillingness of the Fair to look on music as anything worth spending money on, and thereby has muddled an opportunity to do something of real cultural value.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
JUN 11 1939

RECENT RECORDINGS

Boston Symphony Plays K. P. E. Bach's Concerto—Schubert's Fifth Symphony

By COMPTON PAKENHAM

THOUGH listed last of the six albums issued by Victor this month, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's recording of Karl Philipp Emanuel Bach's concerto in D is by far the most attractive of the batch. Originally for strings alone, Koussevitzky has adopted the arrangement for augmented orchestra made by the same Maximilian Steinberg who scored Mlle. Chaliapine's Russian songs mentioned here a few weeks ago. For some time this concerto has been a popular item in the orchestra's repertoire.

So it should be, for this is an exceptionally vital and lively affair. Between two energetic movements that remind one that his father produced the Brandenburg Concertos, the composer has placed one of those great singing adagios that might wander on forever and not be too long. Both performance and recording are exceptional, even for the Boston orchestra. This is not a bulky set, only two disks, but we would be willing to sacrfice many a larger one for it.

* * *

The Columbia orchestral album of the month is a welcome replacement of Schubert's Symphony No. 5, in B flat, played by the London Philharmonic under Sir Thomas Beecham. Though new to this list, the symphony is already in existence under Victor and Polydor labels, but neither of these sets were made when electrical recording was advanced and both are sadly dated from the mechanical point of view.

But however well they might reproduce, this version would supersede them, for one cannot imagine the work being played more in its spirit. So felicitously does Beecham turn its phrases and so delicate are his shades that the whole thing seems almost to be spontaneous. There is sparkle in the first movement, poetry in the second, pleasant dignity in the minuet and fun in the finale. The sum total is eminently satisfying.

* * *

The latest from Arturo Toscanini—with the British Broadcasting Orchestra again—is Weber's "Invitation to the Dance" as orchestrated by Berlioz. Recordings of this are legion but, with the exception of that by Felix Weingartner, in his own arrangement, they may just as well be forgotten. Toscanini has a soft spot for this music and here it is in an unusually abandoned mood, for him. A thoroughly exciting performance has been given a finely balanced and exceptionally clear recording.

The "Eleven Viennese Dances" by Beethoven, without opus number, that are played by the London Philharmonic Orchestra under Felix Weingartner in Columbia Album X-133 are something more than mere curiosities. In occasional references to them, these are more generally known as the "Moedling" Dances and were credited to Beethoven by reason of some obviously characteristic turns in their make-up. Composed for the little band at Moedling as a relaxation from the task of creating the Missa Solemnis, they were lost from sight for the better part of a century. Tending to become monotonous if taken at a single sitting, they are full of charm. A spare side carries the larghetto second entr'acte from "Egmont."

* * *

Were it not that in one of its informal regular programs you are likely to hear anything sandwiched between any two other pieces, the "Boston 'Pops' Concert" album (Victor M-554) would suggest it had been put together simply to allow releases to keep up with recordings. Starting and ending in Russia, we have the irrepressible "Russian and Ludmilla" overture of Glinka; "Deep River" and "Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen" in the Burleigh-Jacchia arrangement; "Five Miniatures" by Paul White; "Doctrinen Walzer" by Eduard Strauss; Granados's "Goyescas" intermezzo and the polonaise from Tchaikovsky's "Eugen Onégin."

Which is covering a great deal, geographically as well as in other ways, without much apparent attempt at unity or continuity or whatever program-making requires. In effectiveness, the music runs upward from the orchestrated spirituals, which are somewhat out of place in this company. The miniatures of Paul White are miniature enough and would have lost all charm had they been any larger. The titles give a fair idea of their nature: "By the Lake," "Caravan Song," "Waltz of the Teenie Doll," "Hippopotamus Dance" and "Mosquito Dance." Eduard Strauss has the outline of his famous brother's formula but little of the inner feeling. The remaining three are first-rate in all respects. Performances and recording are in the "Pops" spirit, beyond reproach.

* * *

Columbia's overture to Boïeldieu's "La Dame Blanche" seems to be the first appearance of this mildly captivating piece in American lists. It is played rather boisterously by the Paris Symphony under F. Ruhlmann. The "Roman Carnaval" overture, as set forth by Eugene Bigot with an anonymous French orchestra is rather a useless addition to the Victor catalogue. The above-mentioned Boston "Pops" has done better with it and Columbia has an infinitely finer version.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHARLESTON, W. VA.
MAIL

JUN 11 1939

The Newest Recordings

* * * *

K. P. E. Bach Takes a Bow

IN NEARLY 300 years of musical history, a history which accepts as commonplace the disheartening thought that many a prominent and popular composer will some day drop from public favor, only a few names have preserved undiminished their power to command, even in the mention, a great respect. Of those few, none has been more successful than the name of Bach, not only as the surname for Johann Sebastian, but also of his sons, who, although they may have been overshadowed by the towering majesty of their prolific father, were nonetheless creative and skilled men in their own right and entitled to a public hearing.

Victor has given it to one of them—Karl Philipp Emanuel Bach, second son of J. S. Bach in a June recording (M-599) of his "Concerto for Orchestra in D Major." The performance is by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky. The recording is another of Victor's successful ventures with the Boston orchestra, which sounds with exciting spaciousness and sonority in almost every performance for discs. The combination affords an interesting glimpse of early 18th century music.

K. P. E. Bach was J. S. Bach's son and pupil, but he was also of the age when music was expanding its expressive powers. The "Concerto for Orchestra" testifies to both influences. The workmanship displays the father's concern for contrapuntal niceties and coherent structure, but its form, which approaches that of the classical sonata, is manifestly of another age. The impression of the whole, and particularly of the long slow movement, is that of music moulded to a rigid, classic line and yet rounded and smoothed by a warm emotion into a pleasing as well as a concrete unity.

Victor's singles for June are particularly rich in great vocal artists performing at their best. Kirsten Flagstad sings "Du Bist Der Lenz" from "Die Walkuere" and "Euch Luften Die Mein Klagen" from Lohengrin" to an accompaniment by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy. Flagstad's soaring and faultless voice production find fit vehicles in the Wagnerian excerts, and the only possible objection to the two is that they are too short.

1.54

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
AUG 4 - 1939

Recorded Music

Prokofieff

VICTOR has released this month a performance by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." It is one of those unique offerings that will appeal to every taste that is not lacking in either a sense of humor or else a sense of music.

The recording and the performance are of the first class, and the narrative which divertingly precedes and interrupts the score is read in the best manner, if somewhat breathily, by the actor Richard Hale.

The score is a children's story and describes—with appropriate motifs—how the bear swallowed the duck and how Peter, though warned by his grandfather, catches him. The denouement is like that of mystery plays, and must not be told. An even more ingratiating character than Peter, musically at least, is his friend and accomplice, the bird.

The music is an ideal suite for children, but its significance does not stop here. In it the peculiar attributes of Prokofieff are illustrated in their greatest refinement and subtlety. The satiric and the grotesque have always had a part, and sometimes a puzzling one, in his personality as a composer. In "Peter and the Wolf" they are free to act to everybody's complete understanding. But simple and catchy as the score is, those who will want to whistle it will in most cases find it too elusive for their purpose.

The orchestration is brilliant but simple, and as almost each instrument used is definitely labeled as belonging to a specific character—or vice versa—the recording will, in addition to its intrinsic merit, offer a clear and compact laboratory experiment for those wishing to familiarize themselves with the orchestral instruments and with the spotting of thematic material.

To some "Peter and the Wolf" will be sheer entertainment, to some it will be either delightful or sophisticated nonsense; to others it will be one of the newest masterpieces from one of the most original of present-day composers. For appeal to be whole phonographic public, of all tastes, this release probably excels all that have been made in the past.

* * *

ARTHUR FIEDLER and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra record for a Victor two-pocket album the overture to Wagner's "Rienzi" and the march from "Tannhaeuser." They also record two single discs: "La Paloma" and "La Golondrina" are paired on one; on the other are two Brahms numbers, the "Cradle Song" and the A flat waltz, Strauss's Perpetuum Mobile occupying the other surface.

The most significant single record of the month—ten-inch—is Victor's release of two spirituals sung by the incomparable Marian Anderson. "Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child" is one of the most beautiful and popular of all the spirituals and Miss Anderson sings it with spell-binding beauty; "I Don't Feel Noways Tired" is its equal.

Close after Miss Anderson's recording comes that of Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia orchestra, also ten-inch. Mr. Stokowski, with his remarkable ear for orchestral color, has transcribed the familiar C minor fugue of Bach and a beautiful gagliarda of Frescobaldi. They are both ideally suited to Mr. Stokowski's treatment and the performance is superb, of course.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DECATUR, ILL.
REVIEW
AUG 5 - 1939

Orchestral Fairy Tale With Narrator On New Recording

By W. ST. CLARE MINTURN
Director, Millikin Conservatory

Peter and the Wolf, an orchestral fairy tale by Prokoffeff, Opus 673 Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. M 566.

This new piece is quite different from anything of Prokofieff's heard before. It is called an orchestral fairy tale and the story is told by a narrator as the music proceeds. Individuals in the story are charcterized by instruments and instrumental groups in the orchestra and the whole is woven into a most delightful, witty and entertaining musical texture. The narration is done by the distinguished American actor, Richard Hale, and the extraordinary orchestra has a splendid opportunlty to display its unique talents. The music is full of melody, tricky rhythms and humorous effects. Children are completely fascinated by this work, but grown-ups are even more richly entertained. It is ostensibly a story for children, but Peter And The Wolf is probably really a very clever and subtle satire. Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will feature this work at the great Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge this month.

Serge Prokofieff, born in Ekaterinoslov, April 11, 1891, received his musical education at the St. Petersburg Conservatoire. His teachers of harmony and composition were Rimsky-Korsakoff, Liadov and Tcherepnin and he was a brilliant pupil in the piano class of Anna Essipova. His first piano concerto (Opus 10) won the Rubinstein Prize in 1910 and when he left the Conservatoire in 1914 he had the highest prize awarded for piano playing. From then on he has lived successively in London, Paris, Japan and the U. S. A. As a composer, Prokofieff in his early works has deliberately avoided all romantic and emotional factors in music and has endeavored to please solely by a kind of decorative pattern. However, in his later works he has seemed to return to an almost primitive simplicity and a certain amount of lyricism is evident.

Song of the Needy Pilgrim (Nekrassoff-Nevstrueff - Manikin) and Arise, Red Sun (Russian Folk Song)—Feodor Chaliapin, Basso, with the Afonsky Choir and Balalaika orchestra. 1983

Chaliapin's great voice as thrilling as ever in two characteristic Russian songs, done with choir and a typical Russian orchestra of balalaikas.

La Paloma (Yradier) and La Golondrina (Serradell)—Played by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, conductor. 4434

Here are two old favorites performed in the best "Pops" style—which means excellent entertainment.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE
AUG 5 - 1939

RCA-VICTOR R

Vienna Choir Boys Are Heard In Choral Versions of Waltzes

"Blue Danube" and "Emperor" Included—Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf"—Schumann Duets Sung by Lehmann and Melchior—Brahms Chamber Music Issued

By THOMAS ARCHER
(Gazette Drama and Music Critic)

At the moment Vienna is preparing to do honor to one of her greatest sons, Johann Strauss, waltz-master whose music has carried the fame of his native city as far and perhaps further than either Haydn, Mozart or Schubert. As a happy reminder of this festival the chief August release of R.C.A.—Victor is devoted to familiar Strauss music.

It is not, however, served up in the usual way, by an orchestra. Insteady Viktor Gomboz has arranged the items as vocal pieces for his Wiener Saengerknaben (Vienna Choir Boys), who, it will be remembered gave a concert in Montreal some years ago, during which they presented a taking performance of Mozart's "Bastien und Bastienne." The set (No. 561) comprises four ten-inch records.

We hear Strauss music played very frequently both on the air and in the concert hall, but not often like this. For you must really be Viennese to convey the rhythm of this music and the peculiar sweetness and tang of its melody. And that is what these boy singers are. Their tone-production cannot match that of the boy choirs in England, perhaps, but they are highly trained and they are here singing music which they heard before they could talk.

There is "The Blue Danube" on two sides, the "Emperor" Waltz, the Pizzicato Polka which Johann wrote in collaboration with his brother Joseph, that unhappy man who was kicked to death by Russian officers because he refused to play for them, "The Radetzky March" and three excerpts from Johann's famous operetta, "Die Fledermaus" or "The Bat."

The music sounds not at all strange in its choral garb. In fact, in some respects it is better. Johann Strauss's orchestration always seemed to belong more to the Prater than a concert hall. The lilt of the music is infectious and the fresh, inspired singing of the youngsters has abundant charm. The texts consist for the most part of those pleasant German words about love and wine and spring and so forth.

A release further off the beaten track is that of Serge Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf, an orchestral fairy-tale for children" (Set No. 566) which comes on three 12-inch records. Prokofieff composed this educational music, for that is what it is, for the benefit of children in the Soviet schools. The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is responsible for the practically faultless recording of the music. The piece, incidentally, is to be played at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival this week-end.

For musicians "Peter and the Wolf" will be a clever and amusing bit of tomfoolery. For children and those who are curious for instruction in orchestral matters it will be of great value. Prokofieff makes use of a narrator to tell the story of how Peter in the meadow saved all but one of his animal friends from the machinations of a wicked wolf. And each of the participants has his own theme and his own instrument. The bird is represented by the flute, the duck by the oboe, the cat by the clarinet. Peter's grandfather by the bassoon, the shouting of the hunters after the wolf by the kettle-drums and Peter himself by the string quartet.

The themes are exposed and developed in a kind of a rondo with frequent interruptions by the narrator telling the story and describing what is happening. Prokofieff's musical characterization is witty and apt, sometimes peculiarly appropriate as with the grandfather and the wolf. The piece is a little long for the substance it contains and, for concert-purposes, it poses the old problem that music and recitation are hardly compatible. They must always be something of a stunt. Richard Hale is a clear but somewhat oracular announcer. Probably the soft Russian of the original text made a great deal of difference.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AUG 5 - 1939

JUST OUT 7

PROKOFIEFF—"Peter and the Wolf", an orchestral fairy tale. Richard Hale, narrator; Serge Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Orchestra. As you ~~may suspect~~, this delicious bit of nonsense is not entirely for the young. For the composer has tempered, but hardly subdued, his gift for abrasive satire. Recording perfect. Buy it and chuckle. (Victor $6.50).

HAYDN—Symphony No. 98 in B flat (Salomon No. 4), Howard Barlow and the Columbia Broadcasting Orchestra. The first and only recording of this particular symphony, and a singularly happy one, both in sensitive, delicately tinted performance and admirable recording. (Columbia $5).

CHOPIN—Piano concerto No. 2 in F minor (Opus 21). Alfred Cortot, pianist; orchestra conducted by John Barbirolli. An uneven performance, by an unidentified orchestra ably administered by the conductor of the New York Philharmonic. Recording spotty. Mr. Cortot's work is not uniformly clear, and the tone of his piano often is muddy and without resonance. (Victor $8).

WAGNER—Overture to "Rienzi"; Festmarch from "Tannhaeuser". Boston "Pops" Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting. A performance and recording of superb depth and sonority. One of the very best examples of the Wagnerian excerpt. (Victor $3.50).

BRAHMS—"Wiegenlied" and waltz in A flat. Boston "Pops" Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting. Strictly for the pipe and slipper trade. Restful and sugary. But the Strauss "Perpetuum Mobile" on the other side offsets the placid ennui which will grip the normally alert mind. (Victor $1).

GRIFFES—"The White Peacock" (2 parts) Howard Barlow and the Columbia Broadcasting Orchestra. This music, originally written for piano, was orchestrated for Adolph Bohm, with whom Griffes was associated in various ballet enterprises. Mr. Barlow handles it tenderly, intuitively—with just the right touch of poetry and intimate understanding. A record to be segregated among the choicer items of your collection. (Columbia $1).

DEBUSSY—Prelude to "L'Apres Midi d'un Faune". Sir Thomas Beecham, London Philharmonic Orchestra. A notable addition to the numerous recordings of this masterpiece. (Columbia $1.50).

—JULIAN SEAMAN

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST
AUG 5 - 1939

Records: News and Reviews

Prokofieff's Big Bad Wolf Appears at the Head of Victor's List for August

"Peter and the Wolf," Prokofieff's fairy tale for narrator and orchestra, in this case Richard Hale and the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, leads the procession of Victor records for this month.

"Peter" made his first appearance at a children's concert in Moscow three yers ago and was introduced to New Yorkers on Mr. Koussevitzky's "Concert Extraordinaire" at Carnegie Hall last season.

Although the work is designed for youngsters, "Peter" has much in common with "Alice" in that the oldsters will derive from it as keen an enjoyment as the children. It is a skillfully constructed opus, orchestrated with artful simplicity, and is as tuney and clever as Prokofieff can be. One hearing is sufficient to set you whistling Peter's theme or the cat's theme for days.

Technically, the recording is excellent. A splendid balance has been achieved within the orchestra itself and between it and the narrator. A few brief spots where the woodwinds seem smothered by the strings deprive the orchestra of an absolutely clean slate.

* * *

A new recording of Chopin's F minor Concerto has been made for Victor by Alfred Cortot and an orchestra conducted by John Barbirolli, replacing two older recordings of the work, one of which, the album by Rubenstein, also enlisted the services of Mr. Barbirolli as conductor.

This release has more to its credit than just that it satisfies the need for the replacement of two aged recordings. Mr. Cortot is an ideal performer of Chopin, and the album, thanks to the expert assistance of Mr. Barbirolli and the recording engineers, is one that demands inclusion in the Chopin file of the select record library.

* * *

Recordings by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra are generally Grade B, but the lone two-record album they have made of the "Rienzi" Overture and the "Fest March" from "Tannhaeuser" moves them a step higher in the grading. The overture is the more impressive of the two, being performed in the manner which is generally termed "full-blown."

* * *

Victor's current issue of single records contains only ten-inchers. Two of them are recorded by Marian Anderson and Lucrezia Bori, the former offering two spirituals, "Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child" and "I Don't Feel No-Ways Tired," and the latter singing the second of Falla's "Siete Canciones Populares Espanolas" and the Jota Tortosina and Malaguena by Nin.

Miss Bori, as in her recent records, is accompanied by George Copeland.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

AUG 4 - 1939

Recorded Music

Prokofieff

VICTOR has released this month a performance by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf." It is one of those unique offerings that will appeal to every taste that is not lacking in either a sense of humor or else a sense of music.

The recording and the performance are of the first class, and the narrative which divertingly precedes and interrupts the score is read in the best manner, if somewhat breathily, by the actor Richard Hale.

The score is a children's story and describes—with appropriate motifs—how the bear swallowed the duck and how Peter, though warned by his grandfather, catches him. The denouement is like that of mystery plays, and must not be told. An even more ingratiating character than Peter, musically at least, is his friend and accomplice, the bird.

The music is an ideal suite for children, but its significance does not stop here. In it the peculiar attributes of Prokofieff are illustrated in their greatest refinement and subtlety. The satiric and the grotesque have always had a part, and sometimes a puzzling one, in his personality as a composer. In "Peter and the Wolf" they are free to act to everybody's complete understanding. But simple and catchy as the score is, those who will want to whistle it will in most cases find it too elusive for their purpose.

The orchestration is brilliant but simple, and as almost each instrument used is definitely labeled as belonging to a specific character—or vice versa—the recording will, in addition to its intrinsic merit, offer a clear and compact laboratory experiment for those wishing to familiarize themselves with the orchestral instruments and with the spotting of thematic material.

To some "Peter and the Wolf" will be sheer entertainment, to some it will be either delightful or sophisticated nonsense; to others it will be one of the newest masterpieces from one of the most original of present-day composers. For appeal to the whole phonographic public, of all tastes, this release probably excels all that have been made in the past.

* * *

ARTHUR FIEDLER and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra record for a Victor two-pocket album the overture to Wagner's "Rienzi" and the march from "Tannhaeuser." They also record two single discs: "La Paloma" and "La Golondrina" are paired on one; on the other are two Brahms numbers, the "Cradle Song" and the A flat waltz, Strauss's Perpetuum Mobile occupying the other surface.

The most significant single record of the month—ten-inch—is Victor's release of two spirituals sung by the incomparable Marian Anderson. "Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child" is one of the most beautiful and popular of all the spirituals and Miss Anderson sings it with spell-binding beauty; "I Don't Feel Noways Tired" is its equal.

Close after Miss Anderson's recording comes that of Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia orchestra, also ten-inch. Mr. Stokowski, with his remarkable ear for orchestral color, has transcribed the familiar C minor fugue of Bach and a beautiful gagliarda of Frescobaldi. They are both ideally suited to Mr. Stokowski's treatment and the performance is superb, of course.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DECATUR, ILL.
REVIEW

AUG 5 - 1939

Orchestral Fairy Tale With Narrator On New Recording

By W. ST. CLARE MINTURN
Director, Millikin Conservatory

Peter and the Wolf, an orchestral fairy tale by Prokofieff, Opus 673 Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. M 566.

This new piece is quite different from anything of Prokofieff's heard before. It is called an orchestral fairy tale and the story is told by a narrator as the music proceeds. Individuals in the story are charcterized by instruments and instrumental groups in the orchestra and the whole is woven into a most delightful, witty and entertaining musical texture. The narration is done by the distinguished American actor, Richard Hale, and the extraordinary orchestra has a splendid opportunity to display its unique talents. The music is full of melody, tricky rhythms and humorous effects. Children are completely fascinated by this work, but grown-ups are even more richly entertained. It is ostensibly a story for children, but Peter And The Wolf is probably really a very clever and subtle satire. Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will feature this work at the great Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge this month.

Serge Prokofieff, born in Ekaterinoslov, April 11, 1891, received his musical education at the St. Petersburg Conservatoire. His teachers of harmony and composition were Rimsky-Korsakoff, Liadov and Tcherepnin and he was a brilliant pupil in the piano class of Anna Essipova. His first piano concerto (Opus 10) won the Rubinstein Prize in 1910 and when he left the Conservatoire in 1914 he had the highest prize awarded for piano playing. From then on he has lived successively in London, Paris, Japan and the U. S. A. As a composer, Prokofieff in his early works has deliberately avoided all romantic and emotional factors in music and has endeavored to please solely by a kind of decorative pattern. However, in his later works he has seemed to return to an almost primitive simplicity and a certain amount of lyricism is evident.

Song of the Needy Pilgrim (Nekrassoff-Nevstrueff — Manikin) and Arise, Red Sun (Russian Folk Song)—Feodor Chaliapin, Basso, with the Afonsky Choir and Balalaika orchestra. 1983

Chaliapin's great voice as thrilling as ever in two characteristic Russian songs, done with choir and a typical Russian orchestra of balalaikas.

La Paloma (Yradier) and La Golondrina (Serradell)—Played by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, conductor. 4434

Here are two old favorites performed in the best "Pops" style—which means excellent entertainment.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

AUG 5 - 1939

RCA-VICTOR R

Vienna Choir Boys Are Heard In Choral Versions of Waltzes

"Blue Danube" and "Emperor" Included—Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf"—Schumann Duets Sung by Lehmann and Melchior—Brahms Chamber Music Issued

0

By THOMAS ARCHER
(Gazette Drama and Music Critic)

At the moment Vienna is preparing to do honor to one of her greatest sons, Johann Strauss, waltzmaster whose music has carried the fame of his native city as far and perhaps further than either Haydn, Mozart or Schubert. As a happy reminder of this festival the chief August release of R.C.A.—Victor is devoted to familiar Strauss music.

It is not, however, served up in the usual way, by an orchestra. Insteady Viktor Gomboz has arranged the items as vocal pieces for his Wiener Saengerknaben (Vienna Choir Boys), who, it will be remembered gave a concert in Montreal some years ago, during which they presented a taking performance of Mozart's "Bastien und Bastienne." The set (No. 561) comprises four ten-inch records.

We hear Strauss music played very frequently both on the air and in the concert hall, but not often like this. For you must really be Viennese to convey the rhythm of this music and the peculiar sweetness and tang of its melody. And that is what these boy singers are. Their tone-production cannot match that of the boy choirs in England, perhaps, but they are highly trained and they are here singing music which they heard before they could talk.

There is "The Blue Danube" on two sides, the "Emperor" Waltz, the Pizzicato Polka which Johann wrote in collaboration with his brother Joseph, that unhappy man who was kicked to death by Russian officers because he refused to play for them, "The Radetzky March" and three excerpts from Johann's famous operetta, "Die Fledermaus" or "The Bat."

The music sounds not at all strange in its choral garb. In fact, in some respects it is better. Johann Strauss's orchestration always seemed to belong more to the Prater than a concert hall. The lilt of the music is infectious and the fresh, inspired singing of the youngsters has abundant charm. The texts consist for the most part of those pleasant German words about love and wine and spring and so forth.

A release further off the beaten track is that of Serge Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf, an orchestral fairy-tale for children" (Set No. 566) which comes on three 12-inch records. Prokofieff composed this educational music, for that is what it is, for the benefit of children in the Soviet schools. The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky is responsible for the practically faultless recording of the music. The piece, incidentally, is to be played at the Berkshire Symphonic Festival this week-end.

For musicians "Peter and the Wolf" will be a clever and amusing bit of tomfoolery. For children and those who are curious for instruction in orchestral matters it will be of great value. Prokofieff makes use of a narrator to tell the story of how Peter in the meadow saved all but one of his animal friends from the machinations of a wicked wolf. And each of the participants has his own theme and his own instrument. The bird is represented by the flute, the duck by the oboe, the cat by the clarinet, Peter's grandfather by the bassoon, the shouting of the hunters after the wolf by the kettle-drums and Peter himself by the string quartet.

The themes are exposed and developed in a kind of a rondo with frequent interruptions by the narrator telling the story and describing what is happening. Prokofieff's musical characterization is witty and apt, sometimes peculiarly appropriate as with the grandfather and the wolf. The piece is a little long for the substance it contains and, for concert-purposes, it poses the old problem that music and recitation are hardly compatible. They must always be something of a stunt. Richard Hale is a clear but somewhat oracular announcer. Probably the soft Russian of the original text made a great deal of difference.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 5 - 1939

JUST OUT

PROKOFIEFF—"Peter and the Wolf", an orchestral fairy tale. Richard Hale, narrator; Serge Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Orchestra. As you [illegible] this delicious bit of nonsense is not entirely for the young. For the composer has tempered, but hardly subdued, his gift for abrasive satire. Recording perfect. Buy it and chuckle. (Victor $6.50).

HAYDN—Symphony No. 98 in B flat (Salomon No. 4), Howard Barlow and the Columbia Broadcasting Orchestra. The first and only recording of this particular symphony, and a singularly happy one, both in sensitive, delicately tinted performance and admirable recording. (Columbia $5).

CHOPIN—Piano concerto No. 2 in F minor (Opus 21). Alfred Cortot, pianist; orchestra conducted by John Barbirolli. An uneven performance, by an unidentified orchestra ably administered by the conductor of the New York Philharmonic. Recording spotty. Mr. Cortot's work is not uniformly clear, and the tone of his piano often is muddy and without resonance. (Victor $8).

WAGNER—Overture to "Rienzi"; Fest-march from "Tannhaeuser". Boston "Pops" Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting. A performance and recording of superb depth and sonority. One of the very best examples of the Wagnerian excerpt. (Victor $3.50).

BRAHMS—"Wiegenlied" and waltz in A flat. Boston "Pops" Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting. Strictly for the pipe and slipper trade. Restful and sugary. But the Strauss "Perpetuum Mobile" on the other side offsets the placid ennui which will grip the normally alert mind. (Victor $1).

GRIFFES—"The White Peacock" (2 parts) Howard Barlow and the Columbia Broadcasting Orchestra. This music, originally written for piano, was orchestrated for Adolph Bohm, with whom Griffes was associated in various ballet enterprises. Mr. Barlow handles it tenderly, intuitively—with just the right touch of poetry and intimate understanding. A record to be segregated among the choicer items of your collection. (Columbia $1).

DEBUSSY—Prelude to "L'Apres Midi d'un Faune". Sir Thomas Beecham, London Philharmonic Orchestra. A notable addition to the numerous recordings of this masterpiece. (Columbia $1.50).

10 —JULIAN SEAMAN

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

AUG 5 - 1939

Records: News and Reviews

Prokofieff's Big Bad Wolf Appears at the Head of Victor's List for August

"Peter and the Wolf," Prokofieff's fairy tale for narrator and orchestra, in this case Richard Hale and the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, leads the procession of Victor records for this month.

"Peter" made his first appearance at a children's concert in Moscow three yers ago and was introduced to New Yorkers on Mr. Koussevitzky's "Concert Extraordinaire" at Carnegie Hall last season.

Although the work is designed for youngsters, "Peter" has much in common with "Alice" in that the oldsters will derive from it as keen an enjoyment as the children. It is a skillfully constructed opus, orchestrated with artful simplicity, and is as tuney and clever as Prokofieff can be. One hearing is sufficient to set you whistling Peter's theme or the cat's theme for days.

Technically, the recording is excellent. A splendid balance has been achieved within the orchestra itself and between it and the narrator. A few brief spots where the woodwinds seem smothered by the strings deprive the orchestra of an absolutely clean slate.

* * *

A new recording of Chopin's F minor Concerto has been made for Victor by Alfred Cortot and an orchestra conducted by John Barbirolli, replacing two older recordings of the work, one of which, the album by Rubenstein, also enlisted the services of Mr. Barbirolli as conductor.

This release has more to its credit than just that it satisfies the need for the replacement of two aged recordings. Mr. Cortot is an ideal performer of Chopin, and the album, thanks to the expert assistance of Mr. Barbirolli and the recording engineers, is one that demands inclusion in the Chopin file of the select record library.

* * *

Recordings by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston "Pops" Orchestra are generally Grade B, but the lone two-record album they have made of the "Rienzi" Overture and the "Fest March" from "Tannhaeuser" moves them a step higher in the grading. The overture is the more impressive of the two, being performed in the manner which is generally termed "full-blown."

* * *

Victor's current issue of single records contains only ten-inchers. Two of them are recorded by Marian Anderson and Lucrezia Bori, the former offering two spirituals, "Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child" and "I Don't Feel No-Ways Tired," and the latter singing the second of Falla's "Siete Canciones Populares [illegible]" and the Jota Tortosina and [illegible] by Nin.

Miss Bori [illegible]

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
AUG 5 - 1939

155

The New Records

'Peter and the Wolf'—Barlow's Gluck—The Lighter Side.

By IRVING KOLODIN.

Those who complain that contemporary composers write too few masterpieces should turn their attentions to the performance by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf."

No doubt the quibblers will raise a disdainful eyebrow at the good humor and lightness of this satirical escapade, questioning at least its considerable content of entertainment. But even if one is suspicious of music which is also prime fun, the invention and craftsmanship which Prokofieff has lavished on this fantastic tale can hardly be denigrated.

It is, in the first place, a brilliant parody of the Wagnerian leitmotive system, with themes for the bird, the cat, the wolf, Peter, the duck and all the other characters in the legend. Particularly the wolf theme, and the later development of it, suggest that Prokofieff has listened well, if not too fondly, to "Walkuere" and "Siegfried."

Inasmuch as there is a flow of verbal narration through the whole work (excellently delivered by Richard Hale) this is one of the finest musical works for young listeners that has appeared in years. They will have a delightful time identifying the flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon and horns associated with the various characters, while the narrator engages their attention. However, this is only a subordinate purpose of the work, for its humor is no more exclusively for the young than that of Tchaikowsky's "Nutcracker" suite or Dukas's "L'Apprenti Sorcier." The performance by Koussevitzky and the orchestra is both expert and charming, the recording splendid.

Barlow's Gluck.

Apparently the affiliation of Columbia records and the Columbia Broadcasting System is going to mean more to Howard Barlow than to any other person. The release of his performance of Glück's "Iphigenia in Aulide" overture this month is the third in the brief period since the new order was established. As the varying quality of the two Haydn symphonies suggested, each Barlow must be considered for itself.

The playing of the Gluck overture, while precise and technically accurate, is lacking in tragic impact, breadth of feeling and the true refinement of the music. It is the kind of performance that would satisfy one for a single hearing on the radio, but I do not find in it the enduring truth, the crystallization of a score's qualities that are essential for a dependable phonograph version of so great a score. The Richard Strauss performance (which requires only two sides against the three used here) still remains the satisfying one for this work. On the fourth side Barlow plays a fine Corelli adagio transcribed by Filippi. In both the recording has spaciousness and clarity, though the string tone has not the suavity I would like in the Gluck.

Singles.

Four Spanish Dances (Sarasate). For those who cherish the bright tunes and fresh rhythms of Sarasate's pieces even more than their opportunities for virtuosity, these performances by Ossy Renardy, should be attractive. In addition to the hackneyed "Romanza Andaluza," "Zapateado" and "Jota Navarra" the two records contain the less known "Adios Montanas Mias." Renardy plays them all zestfully, and with accuracy. Walter Robert is the pianist. (Columbia, Nos. 69621 and 69622).

The Lighter Side.

After a six months' lapse since his last recordings with Benny Goodman, Teddy Wilson returns [illegible]cy this week on Brunswick No. 8438 with the first recording by his new band. This is an in-between-size group—bigger than a small band, and smaller than the usual big bands of the day—tailored to Wilson's particular kind of piano playing. The problem of a style has not been worked out yet, although it seems nearer to realization in Sampson's "Jumpin' for Joy" than it does in the ramble through Gershwin's "The Man I Love." There are nice details on each side, but forceful leadership is lacking.

Recommended: Jimmy Dorsey's treatment, on Decca 2522 of "Home in the Clouds" (a new way of saying "Penthouse Serenade"). Aside from some over-ambitious trumpet playing, the band plays well. With it is "My Love for You," in which Bob Eberly does a tasteful job of ballad singing.

What They're Selling.

Hippodrome Music—
"Moon Love"	BB
"Beer Barrel Polka"	D
Macy—
"Comes Love"	B
"Beer Barrel Polka"	V
Rabson—
"Stairway to the Stars"	B
"Lamp Is Low"	V
Vesey—
"Man With the Mandolin"	B
"Eighteenth Century Drawing Room"	B

Queries on records, needles, machines, &c., are invited.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
AUG 6 - 1939

Boston Orchestra Records Prokofieff Musical Fable

By CORBIN PATRICK.

SOME OF THE GREATEST satires ever penned were written ostensibly as fables for children. So the orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," composed by Prokofieff and recorded by the Boston Symphony for Victor release this month, is going to occasion no end of searching for hidden barbs in its seemingly innocent musical and verbal phrases.

These Russians, they say, never put down a word or a note without "social significance." But what child of 9 or 90 is wise enough to find it in this charming piece?

Prokofieff, the erstwhile bogey man of classicists, is a delightful fellow this time. His music is clever, melodic and entertaining, and through it runs a strain of narrative spoken like the fine actor he is by the distinguished Richard Hale. Mr. Hale's remarks are unobtrusively explanatory, for the characters in the story are represented by instruments and groups thereof and they speak for themselves. Perhaps the moral of the story is in the last line, after Peter has caught the wolf, when his grandfather grumbles—"This is all very well—but what if Peter had not caught the wolf—what then?" "Peter and the Wolf" is, in short, one of the season's outstanding novelties and the recording under Koussevitzky is superb. There are three records in the set (M-566).

Heifetz Plays Sonata.

Jascha Heifetz, who has been here in the Martens series two consecutive seasons and comes next season to play with the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, is on record this month for Victor with the Beethoven sonata in G major (opus 30, No. 3). This is a beautiful work, with a middle movement of unsurpassed loveliness. The Heifetz technique, the Heifetz refinement of expression give it a reading which becomes more enchanting with every hearing. There are three discs in this set, too (M-570).

It has been a long time, no doubt, since you have heard the Chopin piano concerto, Opus 21, and the recording for Victor (4 discs, M-567) by Alfred Cortot and an orchestra directed by John Barbirolli is a happy reminder. Chopin's genius in the smaller forms of piano music has rather obscured the fact that there is much of beauty in his larger works. The music is alternately dramatic and dreamy in mood and the playing of Cortot, generally recognized as the greatest of living French pianists, is fully effective. The orchestra, as you might expect of Chopin, is relegated to an accompanist role, which Barbirolli gives his best.

Victor remembers the American composer this month by recording Roy Harris's piano sonata and children's suite in a two-pocket album (M-568) with the composer's wife, Johanna Harris, presiding at the keyboard. Harris displays a great deal of skill, ingenuity and thought in this music. His wife, no doubt, his ideal interpreter. Another two-pocket album (M-569) contains the popular Wagner "Rienzi" overture and "March of the Guests" from "Tannhauser," played by the reliable Boston "pops" under Arthur Fiedler. This set is bound to be a favorite.

Attractive Single Discs.

Victor also offers an unusual number of attractive single disc recordings in the August release. There is, for instance, the exalted performance of the Bach Fugue in C minor (transcribed by Stokowski) by the Philadelphia orchestra under Stokowski, with the conductor's orchestration of Frescobaldi's "Gagliarda" on the reverse side. Marian Anderson gives us two more haunting Negro spirituals, "Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child" and "I Don't Feel Noways Tired" in that rich, dark voice of hers. The warmth and fervor of her expression make them unforgettable.

The magnificent voice of Chaliapin rises again in two stirring songs, "Song of the Needy Pilgrim" and "Arise, Red Sun," with accompaniment by the Afonsky choir and Balalaika orchestra. Lucrezia Bori and George Copeland, the pianist, add DeFalla's "Seguidilla" and Nin's "Jota Tortosina" and "Malaguena" to the growing Spanish repertoire on another charming single disc. Last but not least, the Boston "pops" contributes five light orchestral selections of universal popularity on two single discs to this month's collection. On one are "La Paloma" and "La Golondrina," on the other the Brahms "Cradle Song" and "Waltz in A Flat" and Johann Strauss "Perpetuum Mobile."

THIS CLIPPING FROM AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL
AUG 6 - 1939

Musical Fairy Tale, Liszt Concerto Given Recordings

AN orchestral fairy tale for grownups as well as children, Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" is amusingly and cleverly recorded by the Boston Symphony orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, with Richard Hale, American actor, as narrator. (Victor album M-566).

Many music lovers recall the success of this modern Russian composer's colorful "Lieutenant Kije" suite. The new recording, dealing with a simpler but entirely delightful theme, skillfully represents Peter and the other characters of the tale—the wolf, a bird, a duck, a cat and Peter's grandfather—as various instruments of the orchestra.

Liszt's Concerto No. 1 in E flat major, recorded by Emil Sauer, pianist, and the Orchestre de la Societe des Concerts du Conservatoire, Paris, conducted by Felix Weingartner, is more than a composition to be dismissed as something merely brilliant and showy. Sauer and the orchestra are completely at home with the music, bringing out its melodic beauty and power. (Columbia set M-371).

Walter Gieseking, who has been making some of the finest piano recordings to be heard today, goes back to the 18th century and the mighty Johann Sebastian Bach, interpreting the master's "Partita No. 6," in E minor. For pure tone quality, expression and technical skill this achievement of Gieseking ranks at the top. (Columbia set X-135).

There's an epidemic of Brahms recordings. For instance, there's the Boston "Pops" orchestra's delightful playing of the "Cradle Song" and "Waltz" in A flat," with Johann Strauss' "Perpetuum Mobile" on the reverse side, (Victor 4435); the "Cradle Song" and "Hungarian Dance No. 5" smoothly played by the Victor Salon orchestra, (Victor 26307), and a group of Brahms waltzes from opus 39 and Chopin's etude, "Grief," ditto by the Orchestre Raymonde, (Columbia 7353-M). Other recommended individual recordings: "I Love Life" and "My Homeland" by Baritone John Charles Thomas, (Victor 1986); "Choral Etude" and "The 67th Psalm" sung a cappella by the Madrigal Singers, (Columbia 17139-D), and "Play Gypsy Play" and "Speak to Me of Love," by Albert Sandler's orchestra, (Columbia 420-M).

POPULAR and novelty recordings include:

Decca—"Side Kick Joe," Mills Brothers; "Moonlight Serenade," Jan Savitt; "The Lamp Is Low" and "Oh, You Crazy Moon," Connie Boswell; "Lazy Rhapsody," Matty Malneck; "Confessin' That I Love You," Louis Armstrong; "The Jumpin' Jive," Jimmy Dorsey.

Bluebird—"Wanna Hat With Cherries," and "Sold American," Glenn Miller; "Let's Fall in Love," Ziggy Elman; "Start the Day Right," Johnny Messner; "Still the Bluebird Sings" and "Ebony Rhapsody," Charlie Barnet; "This Heart of Mine," Vincent Lopez; "Vas Vilst dou Gaily Star," Emery Deutsch; "Sam, the Vegetable Man," Eddie DeLange; "You Meet the Nicest People in Your Dreams," Fats Waller.

Vocalion—"I Must Have One More Kiss Kiss Kiss," Ray Herbeck; "Here on the Range," Roy Rogers; "The Little Man Who Wasn't There," Mildred Bailey; "Kansas City Blues," Roy Newman; "Gittin' Tired," the Rambling Rangers; "Shabby Old Cabby," Jan Garber; "My Love for You," Red Norvo.

Brunswick—"The Man With the Mandolin," Horace Heidt; "A Boy Named Lem," Eddy Duchin; "You're the Moment in My Life," Jack Teagarden; "Ol' Man River," Martha Raye.

Victor—"It Seems Like Old Times," Gray Gordon; "The Little Man Who Wasn't There," Larry Clinton; "Oh, You Crazy Moon," Bea Wain; "Go Fly a Kite," Tommy Dorsey; "Bach Bay Blues," New Friends of Rhythm; "The Man With the Mandolin," Wayne King; "Baby Me," Sammy Kaye.

—O. S.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PORTLAND, ORE.
OREGONIAN
AUG 6 - 1939

Comic Music Put on Discs

Victor Releases Russian Records

Among the Russian Soviet's leading composers, the most distinguished are Serge Prokofieff and Dmitri Shoztakovitch.

In this country the latter is known for a few performances of his symphonies (especially the first), and the opera, "Lady Macbeth of Mzensk."

Prokofieff, on the other hand, has been a frequent visitor to these shores, and his list of significant works increases the host of admirers with each new year. His third piano concerto and his second violin concerto have caught and held the interest of student and concert-goer alike.

But a quality which this composer appears to possess beyond that of his distinguished conferes is the ability to tell stories in tone. One of his best essays in this field was the incidental music for a Russian film entitled "Lieutenant Kije," which has been recorded for the Victor company by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony.

Victor Record Unique

Another, and even more enjoyable musical story comes to phonophiles this month in the release by Victor of "Peter and the Wolf." The story is as naive as its title. And what makes it even more obvious in its story is that the performance makes use of a narrator, who on these records is Richard Hale.

Mr. Hale is first heard in a "dear children" introduction. After explaining that the characters of this tale are each represented by a certain instrument or group of instruments, and setting forth the identifying theme, the music begins.

Prokofieff shows extraordinary ingenuity in narrating the events touching upon the life and character of Peter and his friends, and the eventual capture of the wolf by the combined strategy of Peter and the bird.

The entire album is good entertainment, excellent music, and a rare addition to the catalogue of discs. The orchestra is that of the Boston Symphony, with Koussevitzky conducting.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 124,459) (S 193,000)
This Clipping From 2
BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER-EXPRESS
MAY 4 - 1941

On The Records

In all choral literature there is no work of loftier inspiration or more sublime focus than Beethoven's Missa Solemnis. By the same token is there no more compelling church music on records than the Mass as performed by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky, the Harvard Glee Club, the Radcliffe Choral Society, and E. Power Biggs at the organ. Recorded during concert, the entire work is now made available by Victor in two large albums.

Throughout the performance one senses an air of significance, as if it were an artistic duty to set down permanently music of such strength and substance. It must be said that the singing of both chorus and soloists is next to flawless in spite of the score's technical difficulties, and the playing of orchestra and organist is of equal worth. Because of its scope the Mass taxes the resources of modern recording, but on the whole the present standard is reasonably high. At least the recording accents quality, rather than quantity, of sound. Victor Sets 758-759.

* * *

Perhaps the ablest inhabitant of that glorious "middle ground" be-music and dance
A tireless be

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (S 80,592)
This Clipping From 2
NEWARK, N. J.
CALL
MAY 11 1941

Latest Records

Key: Bl, Bluebird; B, Brunswick; C, Columbia; CRL, Columbia Red Label; D, Decca; R, Royale; O, Okeh (Vocalion); V, Victor; Va, Varsity.

Distinguished Albums

(V) The first recording of Sinfonia Concertante in E flat major, by Mozart, in a lush performance by the Philadelphia Orchestra, conducted by Leopold Stokowski, with Marcel Tabuteau, oboe; Bernard Portnoy, clarinet; Sol Schoenbach, bassoon, and Mason Jones, horn. It's difficult to understand why this charming music has waited so long to be recorded . . Another excellent job is that of the Boston Symphony, conducted by Koussevitzky, in devout mood, with the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society in Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" (two albums) . . In the same mood are a revitalized recording of Caruso singing Bizet's "Agnus Dei" and Granier's "Hosanna" and a wonderful job the engineers did, too, and Jussi's Bjoerling, Cujus Adiman from Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and Ingemisco Tanquam Reus from Verdi's "Requiem."

Worthwhile Singles

(V) Moussorgsky's "A Night on Bare Mountain," one of the "scares" of "Fantasia," by Leopold Stowkowski, is a musical satanic orgy, if the collection can stand that . . Gigli displays the lovely breadth of his tenor in two arias from Mozart's "Don Giovanni," Dalla Sua Pace and Il Mio Tesoro. Recorded in Europe . . Fetes Boheme from Massenet's "Scenes Pittoresques," London Palladium Orchestra, conducted by Richard Crean, and two Strauss waltzes, "Voices of Spring" and "Songs of the Danube," by the Philharmonic, conducted by ll, are satisfactory.

Count Basie ou haven't the as an album
ing with the ump." There als, and all
. . . Jimmy
"Minnie one in man, a
. . The very

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 432,732)
This Clipping From 3
CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
APR 25 1941

Recorded Music
Missa Solemnis

THERE is a tendency to rank Beethoven's Missa Solemnis on a level with the ninth symphony, though as a matter of fact it is a tenable theory that the former is even more homogeneous than the latter; as choral writing it is certainly an ampler and more important piece of work.

Vincent D'Indy, himself a Catholic, perceived in the Missa Solemnis an avowal of the Catholic faith and a hymn to the Trinity. Even granted that this is so, it is Beethoven's personal expression of devotion for all mankind.

Beethoven unquestionably knew that in composing a mass he was extending its musical scope to a point undreamed of in the past. The musical light in which he views the ritual is indeed dramatic and revealing, but in the case of great musicians who set texts, posterity is not more concerned with what the musician has revealed of the text than with what he has revealed of himself. And probably nothing that he set to music gives us so complete an estimate of the depths of Beethoven's soul as the mass.

The great and indomitable insistence which was part of Beethoven's nature leads him in the Gloria, after a prolix and exalted Amen, to return once more for an elaborate restatement of the opening exclamation. And nothing more intensely characteristic ever came from his notebooks than the firm, exalted and defiant inflection of his reiterated "Credo, Credo."

With un-Christianlike lack of humility, though with considerable of musical logic, Beethoven harps back to this minor third followed by a major triad, when he sets the supplication, "Dona nobis pacem." And certainly not even the music accompanying Florestan in the opening of the second act of "Fidelio" gives a clearer picture of Beethoven's soul than when in the passage following the agonizing pleas of the Angus Dei, the prayer for peace is uttered with a joyous piety.

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony have recorded the Missa Solemnis, the choral parts being sung by the Radcliffe Choral Society and the Harvard Glee Club. The soloists are Jeanette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, John Priebe and Norman Cordon. The recording was taken during an actual performance and the performance was obviously magnificent. Mr. Koussevitzky spares no energy or aggressiveness to set forth the full tale of Beethoven's giant score. It is a reading of tremendous power and penetration and quite worthy of being made permanent in the release now issued by Victor.

The recording was made under conditions of great difficulty and is not in all respects one of Victor's best jobs, but this does not matter. The gist, the flavor and the style are caught and the work stands forth as an unduplicated masterpiece, which it is an inestimable privilege to have available for repeated hearing. The true lover of music could not find a bigger $13 purchase, and this is particularly true in Chicago and in smaller cities, where the score is practically unknown. The performance is recorded in two volumes, 758 and 759, of 12 surfaces each; it is a release of historic importance.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 224,967)
This Clipping From CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS
MAY 2 - 1941

Classical

By MILTON WIDDER

TWO fine pianists are featured by Columbia Masterworks recordings currently, Sascha Gorodnitzki and Walter Gieseking. The former is a newcomer to the Columbia lists, while the latter has been a regular contributor.

The romantic and beautiful Sonata No. 2 in G minor by Robert Schumann is the vehicle for Mr. Gorodnitzki, who displays his technical brilliance and poetic feeling for the work in the recording.

Especially telling is his performance in the closing movement with its dramatic and exciting music. (Album X-186, $2.50.)

Mr. Gieseking plays the Chopin's Barcarolle in F sharp major on a single disc ($1) with all the lyrical expression at his command and imbues the work with song and emotion.

Also on Columbia's current list is the fine Budapest String Quartet's Beethoven Quartet No. 1 in the Opus 18 series. This is the first quartet the master wrote and it bears strong resemblance to Mozart and Haydn.

The Budapest players turn in a good finished performance, lacking, however, the inspiration they displayed in a previous Beethoven work, the C sharp minor. (M-444, $4.50.)

The second volume of Brahms songs with the great Metropolitan Opera basso, Alexander Kipnis, as the artist, is issued by Victor (Album M-751, $6.50) in the Connoisseur's Corner releases.

This is a worthy companion album to the initial volume and the great Kipnis voice is recorded to fine advantage. There are 18 songs in the release, including some of the finest from the Brahms list. Artistic Ernst Victor Wolff is the accompanist.

Three good singles from the Victor factory deserve mention for April: Hungarian Rhapsody No. 15 by Liszt, played by Reginald Stewart on the piano; the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, directed by Arthur Fiedler, playing Franck's Panis Angelicus and an arrangement of Schubert's Ave Maria on two sides of a large disc, and Kerstin Thorborg's "Gross Ist Jehova" by Schubert.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 223,091) (S 388,934)
This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
APR 27 1941

Right Off the Records

By Stewart Matter

SOME time ago the Boston Symphony under the direction of Koussevitzky performed the Beethoven "Missa Solemnis" in a manner which won the most enthusiastic reviews from critics everywhere, with Gilman in particular stating that he could conceive of no finer reading nor projection of this mighty score than that which he had heard.

Victor engineers were on hand to take it down on records and we are now much the richer for this inspired performance. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, Jeanette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Norman Cordon, bass, and E. Power Biggs at the organ collaborated most successfully with Koussevitzky and the Boston men.

Those who have read much about Beethoven know that he has been berated for his merciless use of the human voice. True enough, in the hands of an amateur, the human voice cannot cope with the difficulties of the score, but I have no fault to find in the masterly performance on these discs. We cannot insist too strongly that this is deeply religious music. It conforms in no way to accepted standards of church music, yet rises far above in nobility of soul and tenderness of mood. It is one of the most compelling testaments in all music.

While the performance is magnificent, the recording standard unfortunately is not what we should like to have it. The balance oftentimes is poor and the quality in heavy sections strained. When we consider the quality of combined choral and orchestral recordings we have recently had from Dresden, Rome and London we cannot help asking ourselves what is wrong with American engineers.

In spite of that, I shall treasure this inspired performance for the intensity of emotion and the dramatic grandeur of a score whose author surpassed all bounds in creating a universal creed. Victor Sets 758 and 789. $13.

A year ago Howard Barlow and the Columbia Broadcasting Co. Orchestra gave us an album of "Rediscovered Music" of Johann Strauss which proved very interesting. They have this month released a second volumn taken from scores recently acquired by the Library of Congress. Included are "Motqren Walzer," "Ballg 'schichten Waltzer," "Telegrafischer Depeschen," "Champagner Polka" and "Schnellpost Polka." Each item is a find and I reccommend the set from every angle. Columbia Set 445. $3.50.

Recommendations: Peter Warlock's "Serenade," composed in honor of Delius' 60th birthday. Played with finish by the Constant Lambert String Orchestra. Victor 13554. $1 . . . The Mozart "Concerto in E flat for two pianos" brilliantly played by Jose and Amparo Iturbi with the Rochester Philharmonic. Victor Set 732. $3.50 . . . A collection of "American Psalms and Fuguing Tunes" collected by William Billings and sung by the Madrigalists. Columbia Set 434. $2.75 . . . Wanda Singh and his Orchestra of native Indian musicians playing authentic "Echoes of India." Musicraft Set 47. $5.50.

Popular Records

Columbia has released another set in its series of hot jazz classics, this one called "Hot Trombones." Included are Jimmy Harrison, Miff Mole, Jack Teagarden, Floyd O'Brien, Jay C. Higginbotham and Benny Morton with their respective backings. Set C-82. $2.50.

One of the most clever boys in the popular field today is Joe Reichman. He has not been sensational and for that single reason I'll wager that he is in the business to stay. He copies no one and few bands today emphasize in the instrumental portions so strongly the actual lyrics as does Reichman. Listen to his "Toy Piano Minuet" and "Wise Old Owl" and see if you do not agree. Victor.

Cugat has waxed a version of the best-seller, "Amapola," and is it a honey. Has everything else on the market pushed aside. Backing is "Cancan Conga," deliciously warm. Columbia.

For a bit of intimate entertainment try Mildred Bailey's "Jenny" and "When That Man Is Dead and Gone." Decca.

Balance of the lists:

GOODMAN—"Oh, Look at Me Now" and "Lazy River."

BRADLEY—"It's Square but It Rocks" and "Prairieland Lullaby."

TUCKER—"Breakfast for Two" and "Keep an Eye on Your Heart."

TOMMY DORSEY—"Everything Happens to Me" and "Whatcha Know Joe."

WAYNE KING—"These Things You Left Me" and "We Could Make Such Beautiful Music."

PASTOR—"Maria, Mari" and "Wigwam Stomp."

MARTIN—"Breakfast for Two" and "Shadows in the Night."

HARRY'S TAVERN BAND—"Blamquita" and "Flower of Mexico."

SHAW—"I Cover the Waterfront" and "Marinela."

MADRIGUERA—"Cuba" and "Amor de Guajiro."

BARNET—"Haunted Town" and "Buffy Boy."

MILLER—"Perfidia" and "Spring Will Be So Sad."

INK SPOTS—"We'll Meet Again" and "You're Looking for Romance."

JIMMY DORSEY—"When the Sun Comes Out" and "Yours."

ANDY KIRK—"Cuban Boogie Woogie" and "Ring Dem Bells."

JOHNNY LONG—"Accidentally on Purpose" and "Walkin' by the River."

This Clipping From RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES DISPATCH 2
MAY 4 - 1941

Music on the Records

By Fredson Bowers

TWO important Beethoven works come to hand this week. Th first of these is the great "Missa Solemnis" recorded in two albums of six records each by the Boston Symphony with the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society under the direction of Sergei Koussevitsky (VM-758 and 759, $6.50 each). In each album "DM" breaks a section.

This huge mass was intended for the installation of Beethoven's friend the Archduke Rudolph as archbishop of Olmutz but the whole was not completed until two years after the event. Beethoven declared that his design "was to arouse religious emotion in singers and auditors alike, and to render this emotion lasting." Before commencing, he made prodigious studies in religious music; but the Mass is scarcely traditional. Beethoven was not an orthodox churchman, yet he was deeply and sincerely religious in a wholly unquestioning and profound way. Thus the religious atmosphere here in Beethoven's own concept and it is his personal faith which shines through, alternately struggling and joyous and peaceful but always dramatic and passionate. Written at the height of his powers and roughly contemporaneous with the Ninth Symphony, the Mass stands as the greatest possible religious music with only Bach's B. Minor Mass to compare with it. The melancholy Kyrie, the great tolling Gloria, the profound and original setting of the Credo, the whispering beauty of the Sanctus like one of his greatest slow movements, and the triumphant Agnus Dei form a magnificent choral symphony to the glory of God.

Koussevitsky conducts this work with the dramatic fire and passion and gives us a noble interpretation. The voices of the soloists and choirs are more than adequate, especially considering the cruel difficulties which Beethoven with his notorious indifference to the limitations of the human voice provided them. Recording is excellent taking into account the difficulties of the huge masses of sound involved and the number of performers. The orchestral parts are sometimes not so clear as one could ideally wish under the weight of the voices, and the tenor soloist is weakly recorded, but the whole is highly satisfactory. Since the records were made at a public performance, two recording machines were necessary and the breaks are sometimes rather abrupt. These have in general, however, been handled as well as possible, and they do not compare in roughness to the ineptitude of the recent Toscanini "Eroica." One needs to like religious music to appreciate this Mass, but those who do will welcome the opportunity now to hear this infrequently performed masterpiece at will.

Beethoven's fifth and last piano concerto, known familiarly as the "Emperor" is now rerecorded by Benno Moseivitch with the London Symphony Orchestra conducted by George Szell (VM-761, $5.50). "DM" O. K. Composed during the siege of Vienna when Beethoven in his house on the walls was exposed daily to the noise of cannon, its triumphal passages and its dramatic cast have caused critics to draw the inevitable parallels. The first movement is indeed majestic with the fire of battle and is one of the favorite movements of all Beethoven with audiences. The slow movement is a great one and only the rondo finale lowers the tone somewhat. Of all Beethoven's concertos this is the flashiest and the largest in scope. I myself rather prefer the Fourth Piano Concerto, but the "Emperor" is unquestionably the more popular and is certainly one that should be in every library.

Victor has on its list in a recording about eight or more years old perhaps the best performed version by Schnabel who was fully up to the majesty of the work (VM-155). Its recording, however, cannot be compared to present day achievements and it can be recommended only to those who are willing to sacrifice quality of sound and definition for Schnabel's really great performance which is unmatched.

Gieseking plays a well recorded and sensitively conceived performance for Columbia (CM-243) which has heretofore been the best-selling version. I prefer the present set with Moisevitch by a very slight margin, however, partly for its superior recording, although the sound becomes a little "meaty" on occasion, partly for the taut line which that fine Czech conductor Szell draws through the piece, and partly because I think Moiseivitch is more conscious of the emotional implications in the work and gives a "bigger" performance than Gieseking which the concerto requires. Owners of the Gieseking set will certainly not need to replace their records, and prospective purchasers might well compare the two, but I believe the present album will prove the best balanced performance.

Columbia issues a two-record set of the Polish composer, Szymanowski's Twelve Etudes (Op. 33) played on the piano by Jacob Gimpel (X-189, $2.50). Students of the piano will find these fascinating for the musical problems involved and for the clean, authoritative performance, but the average listener will be likely to find the actual musical content too low for interest.

(Mr. Bowers will gladly answer letters of inquiry about the selection of records.)

On the Popular Side

By Norman Rowe

DEAN HUDSON'S BAND, currently featured on an early-morning WRNL airshow and an old favorite with the dance set here and at Virginia Beach, made its bow on Okeh records last week.

It was a rather rhythmic affair as the boys ripped off "Red River Valley" in a snappy and definitely danceable arrangement and backed up the platter with an equally danceable version of the Benny Goodman-Fletcher Henderson tune that's likely to be a hit, "Can't You Tell?"

You're likely to like Jimmy Farr's powerhouse trumpet on "Red River," as well as Bob Hartsell's piano chorus—suggestive of the Teddy Wilson pianistics.

New girl vocalist with Dean Hudson is Ruthie Vale, who delivers with a punch the lyrics to "Can't You Tell" with fine support by Hartsell's piano.

Arrangements for both tunes bring out intelligent phraseing and feature a modern, fast vibratto sax section which won words of praise from Mr. Goodman, who attended the recording session and liked the way the reed boys "played with a bite." Also there's a nice rhythmic beat by Drummer Parker Lund.

(Hudson intelligence — former vocalist Frances Callwell left the band for a march up the church aisle . . . Ex-drummer and vocalist Sam Latimer now is at Camp Lee . . . Lieutenant Dean Hudson, U. S. A. Reserve, has been deferred for dependents—15 of them in the band.)

Impressions in Wax

TOMMY DORSEY (Victor)—"Everything Happens To Me" and "Whatcha Know, Joe." The Dorsey boys did this first tune here last Sunday and the customers were much impressed with the effortless ease in which Frank Sinatra delivered its mournful but clever lyrics. They haven't changed a thing for the recorded version. There's a change of mood and tempo on the flipover side which features the vocalshines of the Pied Piper.

"FATS" WALLER (Bluebird)—"Shortin' Bread" goes through the Waller mill and comes out a-shouting, swinging killer and the lyrics especially will bear close listening. Second side is notable in that it is without Mr. W.'s vocal assert and proves that his band has a pretty fancy downbeat when it comes to straight and danceable arrangements. The maestro handles the Hammond organ.

JIMMY LUNCEFORD (Columbia)—"Dinah" in two parts. We've heard so many swing, jam and jive arrangements of this old favorite that we are not overly impressed when the Lunceford label came in view. But after the tune gets the full benefit of the Lunceford kicks and licks on two sides, we're ready to admit that we've heard "Dinah" like it has never been played before!

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Circ. (D 34,932) (S 37,211)

This Clipping From
CHARLESTON, W. VA.
MAIL

MAY 4 - 1941

The Newest Recordings

* * * *

Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis"

OF ALL THE difficult recording jobs, none is quite so difficult as catching on discs the full, complex sound of a large chorus. That Victor's engineers have caught it, in general, remarkably well in a new pressing of Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" (M-758, M-759, 24 12-inch sides) is news almost as welcome as the fact that the performance as a whole is of a calibre to incite widespread enthusiasm.

There are, in fact, two choruses—the Harvard Glee club and the Radcliff Choral society —joined to make one, together with Boston Symphony, E. Power Biggs at the organ and a quartet of soloists, Jeannette Vreeland, soprano, Anna Kaskas, contralto, John Priebe, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass. Serge Koussevitsky is the conductor. He takes full command of the vast resources under him, and the result is a performance that is, if not perfect, about as close to perfection as one is likely to hear for a long time.

* * *

This is not to say that even the average listener will not notice some flaws here and there. The center of balance shifts too much, wandering too far at times from the soloists and getting too close at others to the orchestra. The recording remains in spite of that, however, one of the distinguished record achievements of the year. The recording, by the way, was made at two concert performances in Boston, and it discloses that the Boston audience is about the best behaved in the country. There's scarecly a cough in the carload.

Other Victor records:

"Symphony No. 1, 'The Santa Fe Trail,'" by Harl McDonald, played by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy, (M-754, six 12-inch sides). Mr. McDonald is, as they say, as American as rice pudding, and his first symphony, with its big tunes, its bright colors and forward drive, has about it something of the same character—never too subtle, but never too dull either with the dullness of a dozen of his contemporaries, who would rather die than be direct. "The Santa Fe" is not great music and hardly Mr. McDonald's best, but it wouldn't make a bad score for some DeMille movie on a pioneer theme. The performand the recording are good.

Volume II of Brahms' songs, sung by Alexander Kipnis with Ernest Victor Wolff at the piano (M-751, 12 12-inch sides). Collectors who found Volume I, released almost two years, one of the best collections of Brahms' songs available, will welcome this addition of 18 lieder in performances which are well nigh definitive. Mr. Kipnis' bass voice, in fact, any bass voice, is not the perfect medium for all of Brahms' songs, but it is surprising how effectively he uses it even when the odds are against him. And when they are in his favor as in "Am Sonntag Morgen," "Sandmannchen," "In Waldeseinsamkeit," all in the present collection, the result is something special.

* * *

"Largo al Factotum" from the "Barber" (yet again) and "Granada" by Agustin Lara, sung by Carlos Ramirez, baritone, with the Victor Concert Orchestra under Harold Levy (13594, two 12-inch sides). Mr. Ramirez is tthe young South American who sang here last fall in "The Barber of Seville." The recording catches him in good voice, but it is still not enough to make the most of the "Largo al Factotum." "Granada" comes off much better and, in fact, justifies some of the enthusiasm he stirred up at the auditorium.

"Homage" by Manuel de Falla and "Rafaga" ("A Gust of Wind" by Turina, both pieces for the guitar, played by Julio Martinez Oyanguren, a virtuoso on that instrument. Falla's piece, a memorial to Debussy, is an eloquent and moving tribute from a great composer to an even greater one. "Rafaga" is a show piece for the guitar. Oyanguren plays both well, and both are splendidly recorded.

—J. M.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 83,915) (S 218,431)
This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
MAY 4 - 1941

Both Sides Of the Record

By NORMAN C. HOUK

A VERY ingratiating surprise is the Brahms Serenade No. 2, in A Major, played by the Alumni orchestra of the National Orchestral association, conducted by Richard Korn. Victor album M-774, seven sides of four 12-inch records. This composition for small orchestra is remarkable for omission of violins from the scoring although the lower strings are used. Consequently the woodwinds and horns play a more conspicuous role. Typical Brahmsian tonal interweaving here has its lighter moments. The players are graduates of that organization devoted to training top-ranking symphony orchestra performers.

Columbia introduces a young pianist to recording as Sascha Gorodnitski plays Schumann's Sonata No. 2 in G Minor, album X-186. In the fervid, vigorous sections the young man acquits himself well at the key board. He does not have the advantage of completely perfect recording, but this first hearing suggests watching for his name on future record lists.

* * *

VICTOR has recorded the tremendous Beethoven Missa Solemnis (Op. 123) with the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, in two volumes, albums M-758 and M-759, each with six 12-inch records. The Harvard Glee club and Radcliffe Choral society are the chorus in this recording and soloists are Jeanette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass. E. Power Biggs is at the organ. These records were made at a public performance and while that places handicaps on the recording engineers the results achieved here are imposing. It is in the opportunity to re-play and study at leisure the details of such a vast work as this that the blessings of good records are emphasized.

A NEW version of "Ballad for Americans" is the a cappella arrangement made by Robinson, its composer, and sung by the Westminster choir in Columbia album C-49, two 10-inch records. John Gaius Baumgartner is baritone soloist. This set has a trace of hall reverberation which in some recordings would be objectionable but here heightens the effect notably.

"Stars and Stripes Forever" and "Semper Fidelis" are among the eight marches the Goldman band, Edwin Franko Goldman, conductor, plays in Columbia album C-48, four 10-inch records. Rousing, precision band playing. "The Music of Stephen Foster" is the subject of Columbia album M-442, three 12-inch records, played by Andre Kostelanetz and his orchestra. The glistening Kostelanetz string effects predominate in these arrangements.

* * *

THE Golden Gate Quartet has recorded for Victor a set of "Bible Tales," album P-61, three 10-inch records. These are in the Golden Gate group's modern Negro spiritual style which they have made familiar and popular on the radio. "Jonah in the Whale," "Preacher and the Bear," "Noah," "Job," "John the Revelator," and "Sampson" are included.

Victor has issued a small album of "Friml Melodies," three 10-inch records in album P-58. Margaret Daum, soprano; Frank Parker, tenor, and Stanley McClelland and Walter Preston, baritones, are the soloists, with a chorus and orchestra.

Will Bradley and his orchestra maintain their high boogie-woogie rating with "I Boogied When I Should Have Woogied," Columbia 36044 with the amusing "That's Her Mason-Dixon Line" on the reverse. Glenn Miller's "Perfidia," Bluebird B-11095, is praiseworthy, but coupled with "Spring Will Be So Sad." Kate Smith sings "I Do, Do You?" and "Two Hearts That Pass in the Night" on Columbia 36043 with Jack Miller's orchestra.

This Clipping From
MADISON, WIS. V
CAPITAL TIMES
APR 27 1941

Recorded Music

Doubling in Brahms

By Harry Sheer

CLASSICAL

BRAHMS: Symphony No. 4 in E Minor (Victor, nine 12 in. sides). Serge Koussevitzky conducting Boston Symphony orchestra. This last of the famed Brahms symphonies is probably the skyscraper of them all—reaching high into the realm of melody, solid as a steel beam in symphonic construction and a perpetual joy in tonal power. . . . The simile stops there. . . . Mr. Koussevitzky snaps it alive, breathes new life into it with what those in the "inner sanctum" call the Boston's greatest recording. . . . From the opening movement, where in the most familiar melodies are written, straight through the fourth—a colorful scoring which ultimately became the theme of a famous ballet—the work is superb in both form and performance. . . . Koussevitzky never was better with Brahms; the Boston never was more "in the groove." . . . Recording superior.

✣ ✣ ✣

BRAHMS: Symphony No. 3 Major (Columbia, eight 12 in Frederick Stock condu Symphony Third

---

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 83,915) (S 218,431)
This Clipping From
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE V
MAY 4 - 1941

Both Sides Of the Record

By NORMAN C. HOUK

A VERY ingratiating surprise is the Brahms Serenade No. 2, in A Major, played by the Alumni orchestra of the National Orchestral association, conducted by Richard Korn. Victor album M-774, seven sides of four 12-inch records. This composition for small orchestra is remarkable for omission of violins from the scoring although the lower strings are used. Consequently the woodwinds and horns play a more conspicuous role. Typical Brahmsian tonal interweaving here has its lighter moments. The players are graduates of that organization devoted to training top-ranking symphony orchestra performers.

Columbia introduces a young pianist to recording as Sascha Gorodnitski plays Schumann's Sonata No. 2 in G Minor, album X-186. In the fervid, vigorous sections the young man acquits himself well at the key board. He does not have the advantage of completely perfect recording, but this first hearing suggests watching for his name on future record lists.

* * *

VICTOR has recorded the tremendous Beethoven Missa Solemnis (Op. 123) with the Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, in two volumes, albums M-758 and M-759, each with six 12-inch records. The Harvard Glee club and Radcliffe Choral society are the chorus in this recording and soloists are Jeanette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass. E. Power Biggs is at the organ. These records were made at a public performance and while that places handicaps on the recording engineers the results achieved here are imposing. It is in the opportunity to re-play and study at leisure the details of such a vast work as this that the blessings of good records are emphasized.

A NEW version of "Ballad for Americans" is the a cappella arrangement made by Robinson, its composer, and sung by the Westminster choir in Columbia album C-49, two 10-inch records. John Gaius Baumgartner is baritone soloist. This set has a trace of hall reverberation which in some recordings would be objectionable but here heightens the effect notably.

"Stars and Stripes Forever" and "Semper Fidelis" are among the eight marches the Goldman band, Edwin Franko Goldman, conductor, plays in Columbia album C-48, four 10-inch records. Rousing, precision band playing. "The Music of Stephen Foster" is the subject of Columbia album M-442, three 12-inch records, played by Andre Kostelanetz and his orchestra. The glistening Kostelanetz string effects predominate in these arrangements.

* * *

THE Golden Gate Quartet has recorded for Victor a set of "Bible Tales," album P-61, three 10-inch records. These are in the Golden Gate group's modern Negro spiritual style which they have made familiar and popular on the radio. "Jonah in the Whale," "Preacher and the Bear," "Noah," "Job," "John the Revelator," and "Sampson" are included.

Victor has issued a small album of "Friml Melodies," three 10-inch records in album P-58. Margaret Daum, soprano; Frank Parker, tenor, and Stanley McClelland and Walter Preston, baritones, are the soloists, with a chorus and orchestra.

Will Bradley and his orchestra maintain their high boogie-woogie rating with "I Boogied When I Should Have Woogied," Columbia 36044 with the amusing "That's Her Mason-Dixon Line" on the reverse. Glenn Miller's "Perfidia," Bluebird B-11095, is praiseworthy, but coupled with "Spring Will Be So Sad." Kate Smith sings "I Do, Do You?" and "Two Hearts That Pass in the Night" on Columbia 36043 with Jack Miller's orchestra.

THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 155,710)
This Clipping From
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
NEWS
MAY 6 - 1941

A SNAPP of MUSIQUE

On the manuscript score of his "Missa Solemnis" Beethoven wrote: "From the heart—may it be received by the heart." Assuredly, any one who is not stirred by this noble music is emotionally dead. The music, one need scarcely say, is unlike the music of the usual Mass. There is little of the sheer beauty found in the vocal writing of Palestrina, although the Sanctus approaches that beauty. There is none of the supra-human quality found in Bachs B Minor Mass, an overwhelming declaration of religious devotion. Neither is there the purity of the Mozart "Requiem Mass," nor the warmth of Brahms's "German Requiem."

Instead, there is the sublimity of Beethoven, who used voices, as he used orchestral instruments, to translate into sound his profoundest convictions. Singing the "Missa Solemnis" is extraordinarily taxing for both soloists and chorus, but, if one forgets the technical difficulties of the song, and hears only the music, he will realize that Beethoven has expressed the great and fundamental aspirations of mankind as he expressed them in his symphonies.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Kousevitsky; the Harvard Glee Club; the Radcliffe Choral Society, and Jeanette Vreeland, Anna Kaskas, John Priebe and Norman Cordon, soloists, have recorded the Mass for Victor (album 758 and 759). It is a painstaking recording, mechanically imperfect only when both chorus and orchestra are singing and playing fortissimo, and mechanically gratifying when the volume of sound is not beyond the resources of the disc. You are, then, left without distraction to a full appreciation of Koussevitzky's consummate direction, of the orchestra's flawless playing, of the soloists' fine singing and of the chorus's expert realization of an arduous task. The performance, like the performance of Bach's St. Matthew Passion (largely made by the same group), is very nearly as glorious as the music.

Benno Moiseivitch, whose playing of the Rachmaninoff Second Piano Concerto was electrifying, now plays Beethoven's Fifth Concerto, in E-flat Major (the "Emperor"), with the London Symphony Orchestra, directed by Georg Szell (Victor album 761). Again he brings the technical measures to abundant fruition, and again senses the beauty of the purely lyric passages. This music, weightier than Rachmaninoff's, is given depth and scope and subtlety. The playing hasn't always the sweep of "the grand manner," perhaps, but it contains pretty much all that Beethoven wanted to say. You will be aroused to enthusiasm. W. W.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 346,783) (S 527,759)
This Clipping From
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
JUN 1 - 1941

RECENT RECORDS

By JEROME D. BOHM

VICTOR has published Frederick Austin's version of Gay's "The Beggar's Opera" performed by Audrey Mildmay, Bruce Flegg, Roy Henderson, Joseph Farrington, Ruby Gilchrist, Linda Bray, Michael Redgrave and Constance Willis, with an orchestra and chorus directed by Michael Mudie.

Austin's arrangement of Pepusch's adaptations of the familiar old English tunes which form the score of John Gay's famous satirical work is in excellent taste. He has kept his harmonization stylistically pure and made no attempt to "modernize" the music. Unfortunately, the recording is disappointing in several ways. No libretto accompanies the set and since the songs do not follow in their correct sequence, it is impossible to follow the action. The concluding paragraph in the notes written by A. Veinus suggests that "the interested reader" should furnish himself with a copy of "The Beggar's Opera" which is available in any compilation of Gay's collected works." That this airy suggestion is, to say the least, not quite so easy to carry out as Mr. Veinus would have us believe, is obvious. Even if every public or lending library kept a copy of Gay's works on its shelves, which is certainly not the case, it is certainly asking too much of the purchaser of these records to inconvenience himself to the extent of making the search every time he wishes to listen to them. And still fewer record buyers will be willing to go to the additional expense of purchasing the "The Beggar's Opera" in book form, even if it were available singly.

The music is sung agreeably, but not all of the singers concerned enunciate clearly. The men do better in this respect than the women, but a copy of the printed text is absolutely essential to complete enjoyment of Gay's text. The recording as such is good.

Other Victor Sets

The Prelude and Liebstod from Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" are set forth in highly expressive, convincing fashion by the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra under Wilhelm Furtwangler's direction. The same conductor and orchestra are responsible for equally satisfying accounts of the Prelude and Good Friday Spell from "Parsifal." Both sets are admirable from the mechanical aspect.

Mendelssohn's antiquated First Piano Concerto in G minor is set forth by Jesus Maria Sanroma, with the assistance of the Boston "Pops" Orchestra directed by Arthur Fiedler. Mr. Sanroma's digital facility enables him to dispose of the not very great difficulties of the work with unerring accuracy. But he is a better interpreter of modern music than of the products of the romantic school and his coolly objective interpretation only serves to confirm one's opinion that this music is past resuscitation. The orchestral accompaniment is all that could be asked for and the recording is satisfactory, aside from occasional blasting in percussive piano passages.

Bach's Sonatas Nos. 4 and 5 in E minor and C major, originally composed for clavcembalo with two manuals and a pedal board, are set forth on two pianos by Vitya Vronsky and Victor Babin, in the latter's effective arrangement. The performance is technically adroit, tonally persuasive and musically transparent. More warmth would have brought with it a fuller realization of Bach's intentions in the slow movements. The recording is excellent.

Excerpts from Mozart's "Nozze di Figaro" and "Don Giovanni" are sung by Elisabeth Rethberg and Ezio Pinza with accompaniments by the Victor Orchestra. Included are the duet of Susanna and Figaro, "Se a casa madama," Figaro's aria, "Non piu andrai," the Countess's cavatina, "Porgi amor" and aria, "Dove sono" and the duet of Susanna and the Count, "Crudel, perche finora," and the duet of Don Giovanni and Zerlina, "La ci darem la mano."

It would be a pleasure to write that the accomplishments of both singers concerned are of equal persuasiveness. But this would be beside the truth. Mme. Rethberg's soprano voice, not so many years ago one of the loveliest in existence, has lost most of its limpid quality and silvery sheen and is now projected in a breathy, unfocused and not always pitch-perfect manner. Her understanding of Mozart's style is indubitable; but stylistic excellence alone does not suffice to counterbalance the vocal defects present.

Mr. Pinza is, however, in full possession of his extraordinary vocal endowments and delivers his arias and his portions of the duets with richly resonant tones, tellingly conveying the composer's message in every instance.

Columbia Records

As her first recordings for Columbia, Lotte Lehmann contributes a bevy of Brahms lieder, including "Wie bist dumeine Königin," "Wir wandelten," "Sonntag," "Auf dem Kirchhofe," "Erlaube mir," "Da unten im Tale," "Feinsliebchen, du sollst mir nicht Barfuss gehn," "Mainacht," "An die Nachtigall" and "O liebliche Wangen."

Mme. Lehmann's art as a lieder singer needs no detailed description now. Her exceptional ability to suggest the moods of her songs and the individually lovely texture of her voice are again present in these disks as are the occasional audible intakings of breath and the sometimes questionable phrasing due to want of sufficient breath. But these shortcomings do not seriously disturb her otherwise arresting interpretations. Paul Ulanowski provides fine accompaniments and the recording is satisfactory.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 51,627) (S 58,890)
This Clipping From
TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE
APR 27 1941

ON THE RECORD

BRAHMS SONGS—(Volume II)—Sung by Alexander Kipnis, basso, with Ernst Victor Wolff at the piano—Victor M-751.

* * *

Alexander Kipnis, one of the finest singers in America today, is the record collector's delight, for his art seems particularly suited to reproduction on the phonograph.

Each of Kipnis' interpretations is a gem in itself, incisive and revealing, and yet he sings with such effortless ease there is no question of the pleasure he gets from his vocal gifts. The flexibility and color of his voice are rare, indeed, for a basso, and his phrasing and shading are extraordinary.

The singer carries along the work begun so admirably in the first album issued about a year and a half ago, presenting Brahms lieder that rank among the great songs of the ages. Mr. Wolff plays with fine understanding and mechanically the work is superb.

The six-record album contains the well known and popular "Lullaby," "In Silent Night," "My Lassie Has Rosy Lips," "Sandman," "By the Window," "Rest, My Love," "On the Way to My Sweetheart," "Dim-Lit Woods," "Your Blue Eyes," "My Love Is Green," "Secret," "On Sunday Morning," "In Lonely Forest," "We Wander," "Like Melodies," "In the Churchyard," "The Deserter" and "A Wanderer."

MISSA SOLEMNIS (Beethoven) Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky with Harvard glee club and Radcliffe Choral society—Victor M-758 and M-759.

* * *

Another monumental work has come from Victor to fill a gaping void in the library of recorded music, this time the 'Missa Solemnis" of Beethoven, a worthy product to place beside the company's modern recordings of the Mozart and Verdi Requiem Masses.

This is a prodigious project in many ways. It occupies two albums of six 12-inch records and calls into service the Boston Symphony orchestra, a chorus made up of the Harvard glee club and Radcliffe Choral society and, as solists, Jeannette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass, with E. Power Biggs as organist.

The recording was made during an actual performance, which makes for abrupt breaks in the music, and some uneveness in volume, but the splendid tone of the orchestra is reproduced faithfully for the most part. Norman Condon's work stands out among that of the soloists and the chorus responds creditably to the baton of Maestro Koussevitzky.

One does not know all of the problems confronted in recording a work of this magnitude, but it seems as if, inasmuch as it is a once-in-a-decade project, it would be better to assemble the finest artists available and place them in best surroundings possible for a consummate performance. In that way all obligations to the record buyer would be fulfilled.

BALLAD FOR

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 157,270)
This Clipping From
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS
MAY 24 1941

Dealing with Discs

Record

Beethoven's beloved "Fifth Symhony," probably the most popular ork in that style and certainly he most recorded of all symphoies, is offered in still another verion this month by Stokowski and he All-American Youth Orchestra, nder the Columbia seal. Despite nany appealing qualities, the latst release does not completely ill the need for a wholly satisfyng recording of this grand work. It may be doubted, in fact, whether we shall ever have a recording that will be universally accepted as definitive. This is one of the great masterpieces never heard interpreted twice in the same fashion. Each of its devotees, therefore, sets up in his mind as a criterion some particular performance which seemed to him the peak of perfection and no recorded version ever manages to match that memory on all points.

Evidence both of the perennial popularity of the C Minor and of the striving for perfection is to be noted in the constant issuance of new recorded versions. Victor alone has issued four in its Musical Masterpiece series (M-5, M-245, M-426 and M-640), while the latest release is Columbia's second important recording of the work.

Older Efforts

The two ~~earliest~~ Victor versions (by Koussevitsky and the London Philharmonic and Sir Landon Ronald and the Royal Albert Hall Orchestra) are badly outmoded in recording technique. Victor's third attempt (by Furtwaengler and the Berlin Philharmonic) is decidedly over-sentimentalized. The version made by Toscanini and the NBC Symphony probably would have come closer to perfection than any other, except that it bears all the deadening coldness of studio recording. Columbia's earlier version (by Weingartner and the London Philharmonic) is commendable up to a disappointingly weak finale.

The new Columbia version suffers from none of the above defects and is likely to have a very wide appeal. We would be willing to call it definitive were it not for a certain over-richness, giving the work almost a Wagnerian orchestral quality instead of the clean incisiveness of Beethoven. Strangely enough, the second movement, in which such lushness might seem most permissible, does not come off as satisfyingly as the rest of the work.

* * *

In lighter vein, perhaps better suited to the current weather, Columbia offers a new Gershwin album by Eddie Duchin and his orchestra (C-52). A four-record set, it contains "The Man I Love," "Some One to Watch Over Me," "Love Walked In," "Embracing You," "Summertime," "'s Wonderful" and "They Can't Take That Away from Me."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 115,985) (S 174,848)
This Clipping From
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE
APR 25 1941

RECORDED MUSIC

BEETHOVEN

Victor adds another monumental work to its list this month with a profoundly impressive performance of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis by the Boston Orchestra, the Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society and four soloists, directed by Dr. Koussevitzky (Album No. M-758 and 759). The soloists are Jeanette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; John Priebe, tenor, and Norman Cordon, bass.

Recorded at a concert performance, this new edition of Beethoven's mass is a triumph of engineering skill, far excelling Victor's great albums of Bach's St. Matthew Passion by the same groups in smoothness of continuity and in lack of audience noise. In fact, despite the colossal complexity of the task faced by Victor's engineers, these two sets are markedly superior to the Toscanini "Eroica," also "taken" at a concert, as regards mechanical detail and warmth and realism of recording.

The Beethoven Missa Solemnis has been called "the most intimately personal utterance in the great religious music of the world" and in his revelation of the music, Dr. Koussevitzky has captured the strength and vision of the great spirit who conceived it. The performance is clear in detail and outline and is imbued wth a deeply moving reverence and dignity.

The Harvard and Radcliffe choral groups again sing with admirable command of their tasks and the incomparable Boston Orchestra has been magnificently recorded. The soloists discharge their duties with more success than those of the St. Matthew Passion, with Mr. Cordou being most consistently successful, but they are not as intimately associated with the music as are their colleagues in the Bach. Dr. Koussevitzky, we believe, deserves the highest praise for planning and carrying to such superb completion so difficult a task. His new albums are among the truly great contributions to the phonographic repertoire.

So undoubtedly, would Mr.

Beethoven's

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
This Clipping From
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
NEWS
MAY 27 1941

★ Sounding Board

Music clubs convention features choruses

By BRUNO DAVID USSHER

NEARLY a score of the most widely known choral groups in the United States, coming from north, south, east and west will appear at the 22nd Biennial Convention of the National Federation of Music Clubs in Los Angeles June 18 to 25.

In the number will be two that have given request programs at the White House, the North Carolina Symphonic choir of 40 members, which sang last year at the annual reception given by Mrs. Roosevelt, and the Apollo Boys choir of Birmingham, Ala., composed of 21 members, which has concertized in 23 states and appeared privately for President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

Another featured group will be the Nordic Choral Ensemble of Duluth, Minn., consisting of men and women of Norse origin, which was organized to sing during the World's fair. This chorus will appear in authentic Norwegian costume.

PHILOMEL SINGERS of Seattle, who are sponsoring the new White Top Folk Song Series by Annabel Morris Buchanan, Virginia composer, will wear early American costumes for three unique offerings.

These selections are: "Greenwood Side," a traditional ballad of the Cumberlands; "At the Foot of Yonder Mountains," an Allegheny folk song, and "The Old Devil Flew Over the Mow," a ballad of Southwestern Virginia.

The junior chamber of commerce of Fort Smith, Ark., is presenting its glee club of 16 members, which won first place over 900 similar singing organizations at the national junior chamber of commerce in Washington in June 1940.

TWO male choruses from Salt Lake City, the Swanee Singers, with 64 members, and the Orpheus club with 42; the Oklahoma Symphonic choir of Oklahoma City, a mixed chorus of 45 voices; the Apollo Male Chorus of Great Falls, Mont.; the Columbia College Women's choir of Columbia, S. C.; the Capitol University choir of Columbia, Ohio; the women's chorus of the Dayton Music Appreciation club, numbering 36 members; a junior Gregorian choir of four from Seattle, and the Union Pacific Railroad chorus composed of 36 employees, whose theme song is "I've Been Working on the Railroad," are among the other important choral groups participating in the program.

* * *

IF INTERPRETATION is the spice of musical life, then Benno Moisseivitch's smooth and elastic performance of the E-flat major concerto No. 5 by Beethoven can be relished heartily. I do enjoy this new Victor album in which the London Philharmonic under George Szell, provides fine surroundings.

Eight years ago, the same recording company brought out a more heroic, emotionally larger performance by Arthur Schnabel. Technically, Moisseivitch is the smoother and more colorful performer. Schnabel reminds one that this is the socalled "Emperor" concerto. Moisseivitch, without violating the spirit of Beethoven, is sunnier, less contemplative, but no less musical. Recording quality is fair.

SINGLE records: "La Malinconia" for violoncello and piano by Sibelius. (Victor) Typical of the Finnish master, if not momentous, a likeable mood piece.

Benjamino Gigli sings two excerpts from "Don Giovanni." Better vocalism, than Mozart, but the Italian tenor is at his best in "Dalla sua pace" and "Il mio tesoro."

REPORTS from Boston intimate that the Boston Symphony, the only major ~~nonunion~~ orchestra in America, will join the AFL Musicians federation. The federation recently barred the Boston Symphony from making records.

Nonunion status of the Bostonians have caused increasing difficulties while on tour and in connection with broadcasts. Nonunion status of the orchestra had been maintained in deference to the late Col. O. Higginson, generous founder-patron of the symphony, who spared no money to make it "the best possible orchestra in the world."

Higginson, however, wished to be free of union rules so as to bring to Boston the finest players wherever they could be found. The Bostonians play a 28 week season to full houses.

ROY HARRIS, a leading figure among modern American composers, is spending a few days here. Harris lived in Los Angeles until the late 1920s when he went abroad for study, settling then in New York city.

RICHARD K. BIGGS, organist and music director at the Blessed Sacrament church in Hollywood, has been elected dean of the Southern California chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

Circ. (D 96,038) (S 129,940)

This Clipping From
FORT WORTH, TEX.
MORNING STAR-TELEGRAM

APR 27 1941

As the Turntable Turns

Review of New Phonographic Recordings

There is adventure in the investigations heralded in this week's column. Two works set at almost opposing points in the circle of musical evolution happened to present themselves for simultaneous appraisal. We say "almost opposing points;" yet there is one common impulse behind both works, the inward urge, not to be denied or diverted, to write music that would be significant, honest and revealing of its time and its author.

Of the two composers one is Beethoven and the other Roy Harris.

ROY HARRIS: "Quintet for Piano and Strings," played by Johana Harris and Coolidge String Quartet. Four Victor Red Seal records, $4.50.

We say at once, risking the possibility of a revision of opinion upon further acquaintance with the work, that here is one of the finest works written by an American.

Harris is a native of Oklahoma who very rapidly has lifted himself to the top rank of living American makers of music through an almost revolutionary technique of composition. Always the first impuse is to reject Harris as unbelievably and inexcusably dissonant, tuneless beyond reason and utterly formless and asymmetrical. There is an apparent gloating in the distorted and the ugly, a parody on life, such as at first seems to animate the pictures of Grant Wood and Thomas Benton. But there comes to the surface, as the reward of attentive study, a certain altruistic idealism, serving its purpose by exaggerating the ineptitudes and the blunderings of people.

In this quintet, written in 1939, the thematic material uses all the 12 tones of our music system in a tonal style, to quote the composer.

The first movement is a passacaglia based upon such an atonal theme, and yet evoking a strange sympathy and understanding in the hearer. The handling of this theme is masterly, with startling evocations in the piano part. The second movement is entirely taken up with cadenzas by the various instruments, alone and in combination, using them with a bold, oracular conviction.

The third movement is a fugue, surprisingly understandable and transparent. The characteristic of the entire work which may give courage to the curious investigator is that at any given moment the sound coming forth is not brutally harsh and dissonant, but strangely musical and lucid and often beautiful.

It remains to bolster the Harris position by two quotations. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, says of Harris' Third Symphony that it is the first truly great orchestral work to be produced in America. Lazare Saminsky says of the Passacaglia of this quintet, "In my opinion it is a work of genius and the best piece of American music that has been written during the 300 years of its history."

The mastery of materials and means which the work exhibits is astounding. The playing, barring certain stridencies in the strings, is admirable, and the piano playing is exceptional.

BEETHOVEN: "Symphony No. 3 in E-flat major," played by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Bruno Walter. Six Columbia Masterworks discs, $6.50.

The work itself needs no description, explanation or justification. It is the immortal "Eroica" symphony by the greatest symphonist who as yet has trod the concert platforms of this earth. Finished in 1804 as a tribute to Napoleon, the dedication was changed upon his assumption of the imperial throne by the furious Beethoven, at heart a staunch republican. But the music under whatever dedication remains one of the great works of all music.

This recording is a superb reading by a conductor who has his many partisans as the outstanding contemporary symphonic and operatic conductor, one who has won a host of followers in this land of his present residence. The tone quality, especially of strings, is thrillingly vital and appealing. Throughout the work there is a genial warmth of feeling, as from players roused to keen interest and eager response. There are constant niceties of dynamic effect, manifesting authority and congenial understanding. The entire reading shows a vitality, a balance, a classic continence and yet a warmth of tone and expression which make of the set one of the finest recordings of the year. It should be a library item on any one's shelf.

—E. C. W.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 66,235) (S 66,235)
This Clipping From
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
APR 27 1941

Music Lovers Given Facts About Records

Book by David Hall Helps in Making Intelligent Selection of Discs on Market—Other Music Notes

By H. E. JOHNSON

As phonograph recordings play an increasingly larger part in the library of the music lover there appears to be some need of sound counsel for the buyer. This need is even greater in the smaller communities than in the larger where local merchants carry only a small stock, and where the potential customer is more influenced by advertising than by the true merits of the recordings. He will want professional advice as to that which is best of a wide selection, the name of the company issuing it, the conductors and ensemble, and reasons why one is preferred over another.

To this end "The Record Book" is compiled by David Hall (Smith & Durrell) and succeeds more completely than any similar volume in appraising American recordings to date. For instance, which of the eight or ten renditions of Beethoven's Fifth shall one purchase? Is Stokowski's 'Tristan und Isolde' music better than Mengleberg's? Are recent recordings to be preferred over those made six years ago? Is there any recording of Schubert's "Who Is Sylvia", and are any arias by Lully available? These and many more questions add up to a most useful quiz program with all the answers to be found within the pages of this book. Mr. Hall's judgment is often arbitrary, and his use of the English language is inelegant at times, but his sound musicianship can be trusted while the frank advice is most welcome to the novice may not know of Gamut, Decca, Musicraft, or Polydor's issues in addition to those of Victor and Columbia.

Mr. Hall is broad-minded in guiding the reader into channels apart from the most popular ones; his recommendations cultivate the bypaths and little-known fields of chamber music, he discusses makes of machines, record-players, needles, care of records, and technical aspects of a problem about which the average listener knows nothing. Intending to scan the book briefly, I read it from cover to cover, stimulated and pleased throughout; the book should save the record-buyer hard cash and enable him to build up a fine library of music.

The Month Of Maying

That all the major orchestras of the country have concluded their regular seasons signifies little or nothing to the musical enthusiast who may continue his concert-going for several weeks yet. In New Haven many events are scheduled for May, several of them rich in promise, and all of them enlisting the skilled aid of our own resident musicians. Music Week is still celebrated here. Although it has little of the intensity characteristic of former years there is entertainment provided for shut-ins and other interested parties, and the public concerts are designed to reach wide public which attends such things rarely. No complete program is yet available, but several items are at hand.

The Business and Professional Men's Orchestra will repeat its concert intact at the Hamden High School on Monday, May 5th with Dr. Emerson Stone and Miss Anna Waylett assisting as soloists. On Saturday May 10 the Johnson Little Symphony brings its season to a close in Woolsey Hall with Harry Berman bringing forth young talents in a round of innocent amusement for all who care to attend. The concluding event in the New Haven Symphony Orchestra's season is a notable program of works by Handel, Brahms, and Strauss with chorus under the direction of David Stanley Smith. Thus, New Haven's three orchestras give public appearances. There are High School ensembles yet to be heard from; unless I am wrong, some excellent playing will be heard from them.

"Madame Butterfly" is to follow up the successful production of "Rigoletto" given a month ago under the direction of Maestro F. Riggio. The Manhattan Civic Opera Company is providing the cast which features Annunziato Garrotto in the title role of Puccini's work derived from a play by David Belasco and Luther Long. Ralph Errolle, formerly of The Metropolitan, will be the B. F. Pinkerton, Bernice Schalker, the nurse, with Guisseppe Interrante and Nino Ruisi as the Consul and Sharpless respectively. As formerly, the Schubert Theatre entertains the production which occurs on the evening of May 18th.

Many annual concerts by school and private teachers fill the calendar during the entire month, and overflow into June. One greatly-anticipated event occurs, on May 21st, when the Bach Cantata Club gives its annual concert at Dwight Chapel and environs. Richard Donovan conducts, and H. Frank Bosyan is organist.

Opera Briefs

The Metropolitan tailors its repertory to fit the singers at hand, and at times that is not an easy job. There was but one sensation during the present season, the debut of Salvatore Baccaloni, the Italian basso buffo who made such a hit in "Don Pasquale", "The Barber of Seville", and "The Daughter of the Regiment". The management is scanning the possibilities for revivals with fat parts for this fat man. Donizetti's "L'Elisir d' Amore" seems to be the most likely choice, although the singer has fifty roles in his repertory. Meanwhile Mr. Baccaloni will make a film in Hollywood.

Not involving the new bass-buffo, but almost certain of revival is Mozart's "The Magic Flute". The fine success of "Don Giovanni" and "The Marriage of Figaro" this season prompts the management to look with favor on this item, which has not been heard at the Broadway house since 1926-27. Some of the 'Met' singers will be singing these roles in South America this summer and may be primed for a revival. Let us hope the rather awful settings of the former revival will be forgotten, and new ones provided. Those of 'Figaro', for instance, are a joy!

One hears about the fabulous salaries paid to opera singers. To be sure, they are not as large as in the tuneful 'twenties when opera ran 22 weeks and toured for a month more. Those on a performance basis, (not on a weekly salary) could not have fared sumptuously, with few exceptions, whatever their stipend may be. Mme. Flagstad led all with 20 appearances, but the next highest was 10 for Jarmila Novotna and Marjorie Lawrence; Lily Pons and Elizabeth Rethberg had eight each. Among the men, Pinza led with 26, Baccaloni, 24, and Melchior one less. Tibbett only sang six times, Lehmann, five, Grace Moore, six, and Richard Crooks, once. Those in minor parts were on hand frequently, as Alessio De Paolis who came before an audience 42 times; seven singers on the roster did not appear at all, due in most instances to the fact that the operas in which they have parts were not produced. Eleanor Steber, American radio audition winner, and Stella Roman, Rumanian soprano, were successes among the new singers and are certain of re-engagement; probably Emery Darcy and Arthur Kent are among the fortunate ones. Some of the new members, however, have already bowed out.

Berkshire Programs

The Berkshire Festival reports a lively interest in the forthcoming programs to be offered there in August, and announces the works to be heard in the three week-ends of performance. A wide array of selections is provided, beginning with Haydn, Beethoven, Schubert, Mendelsson, Brahms, and Debussy for the Series "A", yet including contemporary works by Shostakovitch, Villa Lobos, Copland, and Hindemith. The Series "B" lists an all-Mozart program in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the composer's death, and including the "Requieum", Symphonies in C Major, and A Major. Otherwise Beethoven's Fifth, Berlioz' "Fantastic", Hanson's "Romantic" symphonies are added to Brahms Piano Concerto No. 2 and DeBussy's "La Mer".

For the concluding weekend Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" is featured, with Tchaikovsky's Fifth and Sibelius Sixth symphonies. Vaughan Williams "A London Symphony" is new to the Festival. Dr. Koussevitsky makes one of his rare excursions into Wagner for three numbers selected from "Tristan und Isolde" and "Die Meistersinger". Richard Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration", heard here last season, young Samuel Barber's new Violin Concerto and Walter Piston's "The Incredible Flutist" bring the Festival to a close. The Boston Symphony Orchestra and its leaders have chosen a magnificent array of works for this Festival.

While Mr. Hindemith was conducting his "Noblissime Visione" last evening before the audience of the New Haven Symphony Orchestra, Otto Klemperer was doing the same in Carnegie Hall. This is a rare fortune for the contemporary, although Mr. Hindemith fares very well indeed in having his works played [illegible]

New York reviewers, by the way, were more flattering than we were in New Haven, finding it to be one of the finest works from his pen in recent years. Mr. Hindemith proved himself to be a capable conductor, but Mr. Klemperer is an excelling one, and he may have offered the best performance of the two.

156

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

AUG 6 - 1939

Words on Music

From Symphony to Swing

Boston Symphony Provides Outstanding Work of Year, 'Peter and Wolfe.'

This column has, in the past, indicated that the Boston Symphony orchestra (and the "Pops", of course) is just about our favorite all-around symphonic group. Perhaps the reason is the fact that this New England group of musicians produces at least one outstanding work each year. Last year, you'll recall, it was Prokofieff's Lieutenant Kije Suite.

This year Prokofieff is again responsible for the sensation—"Peter and the Wolfe" (Opus 67) which has been featured on the Boston Symphony programs during the past season and which will be the feature of the Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge on today's program.

Thanks to the Victor Record people, the Boston Symphony performance of this orchestral fairy tale has just been issued in record form—an album of three 12-inch records. Serge Koussevitzky directs the performance and Richard Hale acts as narrator, telling the story as the music proceeds. Individuals in the tale are characterized by instruments and instrumental groups, and the whole is woven into a most delightful and witty musical texture.

Ostensibly a story for children, the work is a clever and subtle satire equally enjoyable for grown-ups. Your reporter's three-year-old daughter was fascinated as we first played the album of records at home. Since then, she has insisted upon hearing it at least once each day. It is the first symphonic work in which she has shown even the slightest interest. And thus we hasten to recommend this album as an important educational as well as entertainment item. The youngster finds it fun to distinguish between the flutes, which stand for the cat, the horns which stand for the wolf, and so on. Often, she prances about as the music plays, imitating the action that has been described by the narrator. When music can be made as enjoyable as this to children, we feel it is a far more palatable and effective way of teaching music appreciation than all the Walter Damrosch broadcasts in the world.

George Gershwin's Concerto in F, a signal achievement in the application of the so-called "jazz" idiom to the more stable forms of music, has been recorded for a Decca album (two 12-inch records) by Paul Whiteman and his orchestra, with Roy Bargy at the piano. The work is most effectively performed, as only Whiteman seems able to do it, and there is a foreword by Deems Taylor in the booklet that accompanies the album.

A Few More Records

Few works in the great piano literature possess such universal appeal as Liszt's Concerto No. 1, in E Flat Major, for piano and orchestra. Since the day it was first performed at Weimar in 1851, with Liszt himself at the keyboard and the great Berlioz conducting, this dynamic concerto has been a concert favorite of pianists and audiences alike.

Thus, it will be most welcome to record-collectors in the newly issued Columbia album performed by pianist Emil Sauer, one of the few living pupils of Liszt, and the Orchestra de la Societé Des Concerts du Conservatoire of Paris, conducted by Felix Weingartner. Weingartner can always be looked upon to produce a great performance, but in this case his talents are even overshadowed by the superb technique of Sauer in re-creating this epic score.

The new Columbia releases also contain another commendable performance by New Canaan's Howard Barlow and the Columbia Broadcasting Symphony. This time, in a small album, they devote three 12-inch sides to Gluck's "Iphigenie en Aulide, Overture", employing Wagner's 1847 arrangement of this work that was first performed in 1774. The fourth side in the album contains the less exciting Adagio for Violin and Bass Continuo from Corelli's Sonata (Op. 5. No. 5) as transcribed by the young American composer, Amadeo de Filippi.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MILWAUKEE, WIS.
Sunday News and Sentinel

AUG 6 - 1939

New Recorded Music

August Releases

Peter and the Wolf (An Orchestral Fairy Tale) (Serge Prokofieff, opus 67). Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, and Richard Hale, narrator. Here is a dish each one will have to taste for himself. Perhaps it is the long sought bridge between music and prose. In any event, it is program music of a startling simplicity, with the very program notes woven into the score. The tale is no more momentous than any of Walt Disney's. The music is as blandly simple and childlike in its characterizations as only a composer of Prokofieff's brilliance could make it. His phrases are pat — sometimes devilishly clever. And where is there a gayer, more gallant little theme than the one which accompanies Peter in his adventure and final triumph? The leaflet hints of political subtleties in the work. They are not needed to make it more enjoyable to the customers who like it, nor will they save it from the pfuis of the unimpressed. If you want a clue, the theme of the villainous wolf might have been carved right out of Wagner's Ring cycle. It was first performed in Moscow in 1936. At least one has the chance to hear the incomparable instrumentalists and choirs of the Boston Symphony while Mr. Hale is keeping him pop-eyed with excitement. (Three 12 inch discs in Victor set M-556.)

* * *

Eleven Sonatas: (Nos. 465, 22, 486, 449, 387, 413, 487, 411, 263, 463 and 395 in Longo Collection) (Domenico Scarlatti). Robert Casadesus, piano. In these superb little sonatas by Bach's great contemporary are not only all the classic graces, but a freshness and vitality which two centuries have not diminished. In them is the radiant glow of an age which was fairly bursting with life. They shimmer and sparkle and fairly leap with joy like ripples chased by a sometimes impish breeze. The exquisite "Tempo di ballo" sonata (no. 463) is one of the bright numbers of the "Good Humored Ladies," the ballet for which Tommasini orchestrated several of the Scarlatti pieces. But any one of the present set would have done almost as well for a ballet. A comparison with the recording of the "Good Humored Ladies" (Victor set M-512) shows how faithfully Tommasini has kept the spirit and form of the original. They were written for harpsichord, of course, but Casadesus' inspired performance—one of the most remarkable ever heard on records—keeps their incomparable flavor. (Three 12 inch discs on Columbia set no. 372.)

* * *

Danses Espagnoles (nos. 3, 4 and 6) and Danse Espagnole (opus 37) (Sarasate). Ossy Renardy, violin, with Walter Robert at the piano. The violin, with the piano as its duenna, slips away on a typical Spanish spree. Renardy's violin, sometimes a little strident, sometimes languorously warm, is technically adequate and has the fire that is needed. The "Jota Navarra" is lively, but a little harsh. The "Romanza Andaluza" would disarm the hardiest dowager. The "Zapateado" has a lot of tricks, but doesn't come off—through no fault of Renardy's. "Adios Montanas Mios" sounds like a medley of American parlor songs of a generation or two ago. (Two 12 inch discs in Columbia set X-134.)

La Paloma (Yradier) and La Golondrina (Serradell—transcribed by Francis Findlay). Boston "Pops" orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, conductor. These two old favorites of the socalled Spanish genre need no comment. Those who like these tunes will find both the dove and the swallow expanded to full orchestral proportions. It's all there and a little more besides. (One 10 inch disc, Victor 4434.)

1. Cradle Song (Opus 49, no. 4). 2. Waltz in A flat (Brahms (Opus 39, no. 15, arranged by G. H. Lovett Smith) and Perpetuum Mobile (Johann Strauss, opus 257). Boston "Pops" orchestra, Arthur Fiedler, conductor. The Strauss jocosity gets a lively performance from the Bostonians, and the two familiar and popular Brahms pieces are given their sentimental due. (One 10 inch disc, Victor 4435.)

THIS CLIPPING FROM KNOXVILLE, TENN.
JOURNAL

AUG 6 - 1939

Recorded Music

Recording companies often fail to distinguish between what is modern and what is merely contemporary in music. Prokofief is a modern; Griffes is not.

Ernst Dohnanyi's inheritance and training place him among the romantic composers of the turn of the century, even while his tastes color his manner of expression to the spirit of the times. And in recording his second quartette, the one in D flat, Columbia is to be charged with no misapprehensions of modernity. This is merely good music good to listen to, important as a major element of the career of a well-known and well-liked contemporary, but not greatly significant as a tremendously important stride forward in modern music.

The fact of its being an early work (1907) does not affect its relative importance, however. And in this instance its worth is enhanced by excellent recording and excellent performance by the Roth String Quartette (three Discs).

Music composed specifically for children is seldom worth the paper it is printed on. Think of the deadly stuff that most piano teachers force on their pupils, and then listen to the wholly delightful and charming things which Prokofief has done in his "Peter and the Wolf." Listen to what (in this instance at any rate) a very great composer does with his themes, and compare the incredible beauty and simplicity of the music with the heavier handed and empty, unimaginative music for recent Disney films.

This is a very great work, and it is played with delicacy and great understanding and relish by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Koussevitzky.

The tale is told on the whole well by Richard Hale, though such of his mannerisms as unwarranted tremblings of his voice are a little repellent. On the whole, children should like the narrative. He does not record especially well, but the marvelous things the orchestra does are reproduced superbly. This set (Victor, three Discs) should be a tremendous sensation and should create greater interest than his last recorded work, "Lieutenant Kije."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES

AUG 6 - 1939

CONDUCTOR—Artur Rodzinski, director of Cleveland Orchestra, to conduct at Bowl Thursday and Friday.

RECORDS OF THE WEEK

MOZART: Piano Sonata in F Major. Played by Jose Iturbi with the Marche Funebre from the Sonata Op. 15 by Felipe Lazar. Southern California has an affection for Iturbi that is combined admiration for his personality and his musical ability. Certainly, the latter is based on his superb performance of the 18th century classics. The comparison of Mozart with Raphael for delicacy, marvelous beauty and refinement and pure idealism has always seemed a right one for me. Iturbi has these qualities when playing Mozart and Scarlatti especially, and these recordings are exceptional, too.

In playing Mozart, it is not so much a matter of phenomenal technique, judged by modern standards, that is required. It is clarity, singing tone and, above all, taste in phrasing. The Victor company has taken pains to record all these with Iturbi's individual expression of love for this composer. Lazar has written the demands of modern Spain into the uncompromising, proud and noble piano sonata to which Iturbi does full justice.

GABRILOWITSCH AND BACH. Two songs sung by Richard Crooks before he set off for Australia last spring. The first is "Goodbye," a memory left by the beloved conductor of the Detroit Symphony which he wrote to a poem by Rosetti. The sentiment will be appreciated and the music is singable, at least when a Crooks sings it. Bach's "Du Bist Bei Mir" is a masculine love song, strong and tender.

K.P.E. BACH: Concerto for Orchestra in D Major. Boston Symphony conducted by Serge Koussevitzky. A scoring for small orchestra such as existed to the delight of the courts of Bach's time. This son of the greater Bach was introduced with ceremony to the United States when Darius Milhaud, French modernist, conducted it in Philadelphia in 1923. If an orchestra without outside commitments is necessary to have string playing such as Koussevitzky gets from his Boston players in this album, then, by all means, let Southern California take steps to subsidize such a body that has its own individuality and its own well-guarded esprit de corps. It is virtuosic, thrilling, inspiring Bach-playing. The majesty of the close is overpowering, transcendent, glorious.

BRAHMS, "Alto Rhapsody," "Thy Blue Eyes," "The Smithy" and "Immer Leiser Wird Mein Schlummer." Sung by Marian Anderson with the Philadelphia Orchestra conducted by Eugene Ormandy. The creative gift of Marian Anderson succeeds in breaking through when using the glorious medium of these Brahms songs. There is an overbalance of seriousness in his songs for alto but there is also most of that quality in Anderson's singing. The essential thing is that Brahms and Anderson are allied in an inspired performance for a large part of these records. The choir and orchestra add distinction to that mysteriousness which is so impressive in Anderson in the "Alto Rhapsody."

Anderson wins admiration for her readings of the other songs, too, but the voice is not always evenly recorded. There should have been retakes. Her interpretations are natural for her. The destiny of man, the problems of life and death and immortality occupied Brahms and are uppermost in the life of Anderson.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TAMPA, FLA.
TRIBUNE

AUG 6 - 1939

ON THE RECORD

—An Orchestral Fairy Tale.
—A Mozart at 14.
—Marian Anderson Sings.
—And Some Jammin'.

PETER AND THE WOLF — (Prokofieff)—Boston Symphony orchestra conducted by Serge Koussevitzky—Victor M-566—Victor has performed an interesting experiment in recording this novelty, an orchestral fairy tale, which shows an unusually human side of the composer, a leader in the Russian modernist school.

Like a Walt Disney cinematic fable, it relates in music the adventures of its marvelous characters. Peter, an inquisitive youngster, is the protagonist and other principals, all identified by musical motifs, are Peter's grumpy old grandpapa, a duck, a bird, a cat and a wolf.

The musical tale, which weaves together the identifying themes of the characters, is augmented by a narrative read by Richard Hale, distinguished actor. It reaches its denouement with the capture of the wolf by Peter and his bird friend.

There probably will be some debate as to the value of the music, but there will be none over the high quality of the presentation by Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

and the second a glory song.—Victor 1982.

CRADLE SONG and WALTZ IN A FLAT (Brahms) and PERPETUUM MOBILE (J. Strauss) — Boston "Pops" orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler — Two graceful and melodious Brahms compositions and the humorous "Perpetual Motion" of Strauss are presented with fine feeling by the capable orchestra.—Victor 4435.

157

THIS CLIPPING FROM
RADIO DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 7 - 1939

Vacation notes from KSAL, Salina, Kans.: Wendell Elliott, salesman, is visiting relatives near Topeka; Don Brice, special events man, is scheduled to leave shortly for an unannounced destination; Merle Tucker, manager, is making plans for an eastward journey to combine business and pleasure; Sidney Tremble, program director, is going to Chicago; Mary Louise Rodenberger of the sales staff, is planning a motor trip; chief engineer N. E. Vance has returned from two weeks in Iowa; and sports announcer Stuart Dunbar is loafing around town for his week off.

* * *

WHEB, Portsmouth, carried the entire program of the Squalus Benefit Concert in which 70 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler participated at Little Boars Head on the New Hampshire shore. Remote was fed to WLAW, Lawrence, and WMEX, Boston.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Time Mag
Chicago, Ill
Aug 7-39

MUSIC

August Records

Some phonograph records are musical events. Each month TIME notes the noteworthy.

SYMPHONIC, ETC.

Prokofieff: Peter and the Wolf (Boston Symphony, Serge Koussevitzky conducting; Richard Hale, narrator; Victor, 6 sides). An engaging "orchestral fairy tale," full of duck-quacks (oboe), bird-twitters (flute), wolf-growls (horns), jovially rendered by the Bostonians who gave it its first U. S. hearing last year. Album of the month.

Chopin: Concerto No. 2 in F Minor (Alfred Cortot, piano; orchestra conducted by John Barbirolli; Victor, 8 sides). Best recording to date of a romantic staple, by a prolific waxer of Chopiniana.

Scarlatti: Eleven Sonatas (Robert Casadesus, pianist; Columbia, 6 sides). Domenico Scarlatti's sonatas, some of them uncommonly modern for his time (1685–1757), were what the word originally meant, pieces "to be sounded," dances, preludes, fugues, etc. Casadesus plays them fastidiously.

POPULAR

China Boy and I've Found A New Baby (Bud Freeman and the Summa Cum Laude; Bluebird). First recordings of Manhattan's newest and most exciting hot band, a cooperative group consisting of Freeman (saxophone), Peewee Russell (clarinet), Eddie Condon (guitar) and five others who permanently dance-banded together after being assembled to play for the Class of 1929's reunion in Princeton last June. Sound as well as sassy, the Summa Cum Laudes are all musical veterans, and their China Boy—classic touchstone for rhythm bands—is fit to file alongside the historic Whiteman versions.

Frankie & Johnnie (Ethel Waters; Bluebird). Vocalist Waters and a gifted arrangement turn a ballad hitherto sung as funny fiddle-faddle into a tragic folk tale, with much the same quality found in Artist Thomas Benton's garish Frankie & Johnnie mural.

My Love for You (Red Norvo; Vocalion). Schmalz-of-the-month.

Moon Love, from the second movement of Tschaikowsky's 5th Symphony (Paul Whiteman; Decca) and Bach Bay Blues (New Friends of Rhythm; Victor). For swing fans who do not object to classical themes and classicists who do not object to hearing them swung.

THIS CLIPPING FROM RADIO DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

UG 7 - 1939

Miller Music has released two new Will Hudson arrangements. Hudson was signed recently by Jack Robbins, who is planning to use his well-known talents in his three firms, Robbins, Feist and Miller....Van Alexander Fitch "Bandwagon" shot a week or two back, sounded mighty good to these ears. Van is currently holding sway at Murray's in Tuckahoe, N. Y., and is slated to continue there through September....Willie Farmer's new band at the Park Central is a pleasant surprise. That "Farmer in the Dell" idea isn't half bad.

Tomorrow the BBC Symphony Orchestra will introduce for the first time on the air the new orchestral work of Alan Hovaness, "Monadnock." The broadcast will be relayed to this country by short wave. "Monadnock," an orchestra fantasy, is a tribute to the solitary grandeur of this mountain. It was performed by the Boston Symphony while still in manuscript form and was accepted for publication by Whitney Blake, New York publishing house, who will release the printed score after the international broadcast. Alan Hovaness is also a concert pianist and is now appearing with the Boston Symphonic Ensemble at Marshall House, York Harbor, Maine.

Andre Luatto, president of the Commercial Radio Service advertising agency, with Alfredo Antonini, has written a song entitled, "Temptation Tango," which was played by Bob Stanley and his orchestra on Saturday night's "Tropical Serenade" on WOR-Mutual at 8 p.m. Vocalist was Don Arres. Luatto heads the agency handling La Rosa Spaghetti, which will be heard in a new coast-to-coast series on Mutual beginning in the Fall. Antonini conducts the La Rosa orchestra.

KDYL, Salt Lake City, is picking up an intensive schedule of remotes from a local dance arena, where a nightly "Jitterbug Jamboree" is in progress. Shows include "blow-by-blow" descriptions of rug cutting, plus specialty acts and skits, aired in 15-minute stanzas nightly. Schedule is bolstered by 5-minute "Jitterbug Commentaries" twice daily from studios, with score on contestants, etc.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE

AUG 11 1939

Music on Records

One of the most completely delightful albums issued in many months is Victor's M-566, which contains Prokofieff's charming fairy tale set to music, "Peter and the Wolf," superbly played by the Boston under Dr. Kou[illegible] and recorded with astonishing brilliance. This work was introduced to Boston and New York audiences last season by Dr. Koussevitsky and proved a great success.

"Peter and the Wolf" is as witty as Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije," more immediately appealing, in fact, and will charm adults just as quickly as it will put children under its spell. The story of Peter and how he captured the wolf is told by Richard Hale, as narrator, the orchestra providing the musical background and obviously relishing its duties. The music is frequently reminiscent of the composer's "Classical Symphony" (Victor 7196-97) in its brittle rhythms, rich harmonies and compelling melody. The theme assigned to Peter is, indeed, one of the most captivating tunes we have ever heard. For something entirely new in gramophonic fare, something the whole family is sure to enjoy, we recommend this delightful album unreservedly.

The various sections of Mr. Harris' "Children's Suite" will probably prove more readily accessible to the average gramophile than will the sonata, although the latter work is an extremely interesting study in melody, chords and rhythms and should be heard by anyone more than superficially concerned with what is being done by American composers.

Victor is doing an extremely valuable service in providing the public at large with these examples of modern music. We sincerely hope the company continues to issue such works. Mrs. Harris, by the way, plays her husband's music with authority and is well recorded.

A word should be added in praise of the new type of leaflet Victor is now including in its more important albums. Complete with full notes and revealing quotations of themes, these booklets are a valuable addition to the gramophonic library.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 13 1939

RECENT RECORDS

By JEROME D. BOHM

VICTOR'S release of Roy Harris's Piano Sonata, coupled with his Children's Suite, both performed by the composer's wife, Johana Harris, will undoubtedly please those who see in Harris one of, if not the most important figure in contemporary American music. The Sonata, which was created in 1928 has been hailed in some quarters as the product of an incipient genius of Beethovenian potentialities. Obviously derivative in its sources, this music has been hailed for its autochthonous attributes. But aside from its easily traceable origin, which include such diverse minds as Hindemith and Scriabin, wholly understandable in a youthful composer searching for a personal idiom, this Sonata is essentially arid music, incapable of arousing even the most tepid emotional response in the listener.

The less pretentious "Children's Suite," penned last Christmas morning, is in three brief movements, the longest, "Bells," utilizes a well-worn imitative device; the remaining two, both only a few measures in duration, "Sad Children" and "Slumber," are self-conscious trifles. Mrs. Harris's performances of both Sonata and Suite are admirable and the recordings as such are excellent.

Other Victor Records

Although not one of his major contributions, Prokofieff's "Peter the Wolf," set forth by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, with the assistance of Richard Hale as narrator, reveals the Russian composer's gift for blending humor and satire cleverly so that the amalgam might deceive the unknowing into believing that Prokofieff is as naive as the children for whom this "symphonic fairy tale for children" was written.

Prokofieff has wisely avoided the obvious in his instrumental depictions of the Bird, the Duck, the Cat and the Wolf. There are no naturalistic imitations of animal or bird sounds, but the characterizations are none the less telling, and Peter's theme is delightfully insouciant and pert. The orchestral score is flawlessly unfolded, and Mr. Hale makes the most of his points in the recitation of the text. The recording, from the mechanical aspect, is first rate.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 13 1939

RECENT RECORDINGS

By COMPTON PAKENHAM

FOR those who found "Lieutenant Kije" to their taste, Victor produces another set of Prokofieff which, if not quite in the same satirical vein, is equally good fun and probably more lasting in its appeal. The orchestral fairy tale "Peter and the Wolf" is also played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, while Richard Hale as a narrator tells the story the music illustrates.

In tackling "Peter and the Wolf" Prokofieff deliberately set out on a path beset with a variety of traps too often fatal to composers, and emerged triumphant. To make an appeal to children without descending to that type of condescension which makes a work ridiculous requires exceptional understanding and, if successful, is generally rewarded by the approval of youngsters of all ages. Further, to be witty and clever in music are undertakings not to be shouldered lightly.

Prokofieff has undoubtedly met all these difficulties and, by no means an easy task, they have been convincingly reproduced. Hale tells the story in exactly the right vein and Koussevitzky illustrates it plainly enough to evoke demands for more from children. The clever use of motifs is easily followed and the use is clever enough to entertain the more sophisticated. The trouble with musical jokes is that they stale so soon. Repetition seldom increases their power. In this case—so far, at least—the whole thing has become more attractive with repeated playings.

In the spring of 1847 that thorn in the flesh of the Dresden operatic authorities, Richard Wagner, gave some proof of his abilities by reshaping Gluck's "Iphigenia in Aulis." The composer, he held, had been handicapped by the traditions of the eighteenth century French stage, and his emendations were made in the light of contemporary feeling. Seven years later, in exile at Zurich, he fashioned a concert close to the overture, which ran into the first act without a break, for presentation by the local orchestra. This is Howard Barlow's latest subject, with the Columbia Broadcasting Symphony. The filler is a transcribed adagio from a Corelli sonata for violin.

It seems peculiar that no one has recorded this overture in recent years. It is exciting and full. Its appeal to Wagner's dramatic sense is obvious. He labeled its various themes: Appeal, Power, Grace and Sorrow, and, when appending his Zurich coda, brought the struggle to a close with the triumph of Power. Perhaps the easiest key to Barlow's attitude is that, whereas Richard Strauss, Weissmann and Kleiber have each put the overture on two sides, the new version runs to three. Speed does not necessarily make for drama, but the impact here is not quite as decisive as it might be.

One hundred per cent Wagner comes from the Boston "Pops," Arthur Fiedler directing. In a two-pocket album are the "Rienzi" overture and the Fest March from "Tannhaeuser." The former has not been overdone on records and this particular version still leaves room for a good modern performance. The usual hearty spirit of the "Pops" is missing here and the Hall of Song march is also uncommonly rigid for Fiedler. Simultaneously released singles from the same orchestra are Yradier's familiar "La Paloma," Serradell's "La Golondrina" (No. 4434), Strauss's "Perpetuum Mobile" and an arrangement of Brahms's Wiegenlied and Waltz in A flat. These are more in the "Pops" manner.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
HERALD-EXAMINER

AUG 13 1939

Orchestral Fairy Tale for Children Recorded

• A match for Ferdinand the esthetic bull, is to be found in the latest RCA Victor record release, a delightful album designed to tempt children from the ages of 4 to 84.

It is Serge Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," recorded by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphonic Orchestra. (Musical Masterpiece series, M-566.) The humorously appealing little story is narrated in charming fashion by Richard Hale.

Oldsters will find that both music and story are pointed with satire, skilled and sure. Prokofieff, composer of the "Classical" Symphony and the satirical "Lieutenant Kije" suite, has a particularly able talent for expressions of this type.

Music Descriptive and Rhythmic

The music is simple—descriptive, rhythmic and, in brief snatches, highly melodic. The quarrel between the duck and the bird as to the merits of swimming without flying and flying without swimming, the lean wolf's entrance and the consequent disappearance of the duck, and Peter's gentle curiosity, are episodes that need no narrator other than the score itself. The work is truly unique.

THIS CLIPPING FROM RADIO DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 7 - 1939

Vacation notes from KSAL, Salina, Kans.: Wendell Elliott, salesman, is visiting relatives near Topeka; Don Brice, special events man, is scheduled to leave shortly for an unannounced destination; Merle Tucker, manager, is making plans for an eastward journey to combine business and pleasure; Sidney Tremble, program director, is going to Chicago; Mary Louise Rodenberger of the sales staff, is planning a motor trip; chief engineer N. E. Vance has returned from two weeks in Iowa; and sports announcer Stuart Dunbar is loafing around town for his week off.

* * *

WHEB, Portsmouth, carried the entire program of the Squalus Benefit Concert in which 70 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Arthur Fiedler participated at Little Boars Head on the New Hampshire shore. Remote was fed to WLAW, Lawrence, and WMEX, Boston.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Time Mag,
Chicago, Ill
Aug 7-39

MUSIC

August Records

Some phonograph records are musical events. Each month TIME notes the noteworthy.

SYMPHONIC, ETC.

Prokofieff: Peter and the Wolf (Boston Symphony, Serge Koussevitzky conducting; Richard Hale, narrator; Victor, 6 sides). An engaging "orchestral fairy tale," full of duck-quacks (oboe), bird-twitters (flute), wolf-growls (horns), jovially rendered by the Bostonians who gave it its first U. S. hearing last year. Album of the month.

Chopin: Concerto No. 2 in F Minor (Alfred Cortot, piano; orchestra conducted by John Barbirolli; Victor, 8 sides). Best recording to date of a romantic staple, by a prolific waxer of Chopiniana.

Scarlatti: Eleven Sonatas (Robert Casadesus, pianist; Columbia, 6 sides). Domenico Scarlatti's sonatas, some of them uncommonly modern for his time (1685-1757), were what the word originally meant, pieces "to be sounded," dances, preludes, fugues, etc. Casadesus plays them fastidiously.

POPULAR

China Boy and I've Found A New Baby (Bud Freeman and the Summa Cum Laude; Bluebird). First recordings of Manhattan's newest and most exciting hot band, a cooperative group consisting of Freeman (saxophone), Peewee Russell (clarinet), Eddie Condon (guitar) and five others who permanently dance-banded together after being assembled to play for the Class of 1929's reunion in Princeton last June. Sound as well as sassy, the Summa Cum Laudes are all musical veterans, and their China Boy—classic touchstone for rhythm bands—is fit to file alongside the historic Whiteman versions.

Frankie & Johnnie (Ethel Waters; Bluebird). Vocalist Waters and a gifted arrangement turn a ballad hitherto sung as funny fiddle-faddle into a tragic folk tale, with much the same quality found in Artist Thomas Benton's garish Frankie & Johnnie mural.

My Love for You (Red Norvo; Vocalion). Schmalz-of-the-month.

Moon Love, from the second movement of Tschaikowsky's 5th Symphony (Paul Whiteman; Decca) and Bach Bay Blues (New Friends of Rhythm; Victor). For swing fans who do not object to classical themes and classicists who do not object to hearing them swung.

157

THIS CLIPPING FROM
RADIO DAILY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 7 - 1939

Miller Music has released two new Will Hudson arrangements. Hudson was signed recently by Jack Robbins, who is planning to use his well-known talents in his three firms, Robbins, Feist and Miller....Van Alexander Fitch "Bandwagon" shot a week or two back, sounded mighty good to these ears. Van is currently holding sway at Murray's in Tuckahoe, N. Y., and is slated to continue there through September....Willie Farmer's new band at the Park Central is a pleasant surprise. That "Farmer in the Dell" idea isn't half bad.

Tomorrow the BBC Symphony Orchestra will introduce for the first time on the air the new orchestral work of Alan Hovaness, "Monadnock." The broadcast will be relayed to this country by short wave. "Monadnock," an orchestra fantasy, is a tribute to the solitary grandeur of this mountain. It was performed by the Boston Symphony while still in manuscript form and was accepted for publication by Whitney Blake, New York publishing house, who will release the printed score after the international broadcast. Alan Hovaness is also a concert pianist and is now appearing with the Boston Symphonic Ensemble at Marshall House, York Harbor, Maine.

Andre Luatto, president of the Commercial Radio Service advertising agency, with Alfredo Antonini, has written a song entitled, "Temptation Tango," which was played by Bob Stanley and his orchestra on Saturday night's "Tropical Serenade" on WOR-Mutual at 8 p.m. Vocalist was Don Arres. Luatto heads the agency handling La Rosa Spaghetti, which will be heard in a new coast-to-coast series on Mutual beginning in the Fall. Antonini conducts the La Rosa orchestra.

KDYL, Salt Lake City, is picking up an intensive schedule of remotes from a local dance arena, where a nightly "Jitterbug Jamboree" is in progress. Shows include "blow-by-blow" descriptions of rug cutting, plus specialty acts and skits, aired in 15-minute stanzas nightly. Schedule is bolstered by 5-minute "Jitterbug Commentaries" twice daily from studios, with score on contestants, etc.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE

AUG 11 1939

Music on Records

One of the most completely delightful albums issued in many months is Victor's M-566, which contains Prokofieff's charming fairy tale set to music, "Peter and the Wolf," superbly played by the Boston under Dr. Koussevitzky and recorded with astonishing brilliance. This work was introduced to Boston and New York audiences last season by Dr. Koussevitsky and proved a great success.

"Peter and the Wolf" is as witty as Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije," more immediately appealing, in fact, and will charm adults just as quickly as it will put children under its spell. The story of Peter and how he captured the wolf is told by Richard Hale, as narrator, the orchestra providing the musical background and obviously relishing its duties. The music is frequently reminiscent of the composer's "Classical Symphony" (Victor 7196-97) in its brittle rhythms, rich harmonies and compelling melody. The theme assigned to Peter is, indeed, one of the most captivating tunes we have ever heard. For something entirely new in gramophonic fare, something the whole family is sure to enjoy, we recommend this delightful album unreservedly.

The various sections of Mr. Harris' "Children's Suite" will probably prove more readily accessible to the average gramophile than will the sonata, although the latter work is an extremely interesting study in melody, chords and rhythms and should be heard by anyone more than superficially concerned with what is being done by American composers.

Victor is doing an extremely valuable service in providing the public at large with these examples of modern music. We sincerely hope the company continues to issue such works. Mrs. Harris, by the way, plays her husband's music with authority and is well recorded.

A word should be added in praise of the new type of leaflet Victor is now including in its more important albums. Complete with full notes and revealing quotations of themes, these booklets are a valuable addition to the gramophonic library.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

AUG 13 1939

RECENT RECORDS

By JEROME D. BOHM

VICTOR'S release of Roy Harris's Piano Sonata, coupled with his Children's Suite, both performed by the composer's wife, Johana Harris, will undoubtedly please those who see in Harris one of, if not the most important figure in contemporary American music. The Sonata, which was created in 1928 has been hailed in some quarters as the product of an incipient genius of Beethovenian potentialities. Obviously derivative in its sources, this music has been hailed for its autochthonous attributes. But aside from its easily traceable origin, which include such diverse minds as Hindemith and Scriabin, wholly understandable in a youthful composer searching for a personal idiom, this Sonata is essentially arid music, incapable of arousing even the most tepid emotional response in the listener.

The less pretentious "Children's Suite," penned last Christmas morning, is in three brief movements, the longest, "Bells," utilizes a well-worn imitative device; the remaining two, both only a few measures in duration, "Bad Children" and "Slumber," are self-conscious trifles. Mrs. Harris's performances of both Sonata and Suite are admirable and the recordings as such are excellent.

Other Victor Records

Although not one of his major contributions, Prokofieff's "Peter the Wolf," set forth by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky's direction, with the assistance of Richard Hale as narrator, reveals the Russian composer's gift for blending humor and satire cleverly so that the amalgam might deceive the unknowing into believing that Prokofieff is as naive as the children for whom this "symphonic fairy tale for children" was written.

Prokofieff has wisely avoided the obvious in his instrumental depictions of the Bird, the Duck, the Cat and the Wolf. There are no naturalistic imitations of animal or bird sounds, but the characterizations are none the less telling, and Peter's theme is delightfully insouciant and pert. The orchestral score is flawlessly unfolded, and Mr. Hale makes the most of his points in the recitation of the text. The recording, from the mechanical aspect, is first rate.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

AUG 13 1939

RECENT RECORDINGS

By COMPTON PAKENHAM

FOR those who found "Lieutenant Kije" to their taste, Victor produces another set of Prokofieff which, if not quite in the same satirical vein, is equally good fun and probably more lasting in its appeal. The orchestral fairy tale "Peter and the Wolf" is also played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, while Richard Hale as a narrator tells the story the music illustrates.

In tackling "Peter and the Wolf" Prokofieff deliberately set out on a path beset with a variety of traps too often fatal to composers, and emerged triumphant. To make an appeal to children without descending to that type of condescension which makes a work ridiculous requires exceptional understanding and, if successful, is generally rewarded by the approval of youngsters of all ages. Further, to be witty and clever in music are undertakings not to be shouldered lightly.

Prokofieff has undoubtedly met all these difficulties and, by no means an easy task, they have been convincingly reproduced. Hale tells the story in exactly the right vein and Koussevitzky illustrates it plainly enough to evoke demands for more from children. The clever use of motifs is easily followed and the use is clever enough to entertain the more sophisticated. The trouble with musical jokes is that they stale so soon. Repetition seldom increases their power. In this case—so far, at least—the whole thing has become more attractive with repeated playings.

In the spring of 1847 that thorn in the flesh of the Dresden operatic authorities, Richard Wagner, gave some proof of his abilities by reshaping Gluck's "Iphigenia in Aulis." The composer, he held, had been handicapped by the traditions of the eighteenth century French stage, and his emendations were made in the light of contemporary feeling. Seven years later, in exile at Zurich, he fashioned a concert close to the overture, which ran into the first act without a break, for presentation by the local orchestra. This is Howard Barlow's latest subject, with the Columbia Broadcasting Symphony. The filler is a transcribed adagio from a Corelli sonata for violin.

It seems peculiar that no one has recorded this overture in recent years. It is exciting and full. Its appeal to Wagner's dramatic sense is obvious. He labeled its various themes: Appeal, Power, Grace and Sorrow, and, when appending his Zurich coda, brought the struggle to a close with the triumph of Power. Perhaps the easiest key to Barlow's attitude is that, whereas Richard Strauss, Weissmann and Kleiber have each put the overture on two sides, the new version runs to three. Speed does not necessarily make for drama, but the impact here is not quite as decisive as it might be.

One hundred per cent Wagner comes from the Boston "Pops," Arthur Fiedler directing. In a two-pocket album are the "Rienzi" overture and the Fest March from "Tannhaeuser." The former has not been overdone on records and this particular version still leaves room for a good modern performance. The usual hearty spirit of the "Pops" is missing here and the Hall of Song march is also uncommonly rigid for Fiedler. Simultaneously released singles from the same orchestra are Yradier's familiar "La Paloma," Serradell's "La Golondrina" (No. 4434), Strauss's "Perpetuum Mobile" and an arrangement of Brahms's Wiegenlied and Waltz in A flat. These are more in the "Pops" manner.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
HERALD-EXAMINER

AUG 13 1939

Orchestral Fairy Tale for Children Recorded

• A match for Ferdinand the esthetic bull, is to be found in the latest RCA Victor record release, a delightful album designed to tempt children from the ages of 4 to 84.

It is Serge Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," recorded by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphonic Orchestra. (Musical Masterpiece series, M-566.) The humorously appealing little story is narrated in charming fashion by Richard Hale.

Oldsters will find that both music and story are pointed with satire, skilled and sure. Prokofieff, composer of the "Classical" Symphony and the satirical "Lieutenant Kije" suite, has a particularly able talent for expressions of this type.

Music Descriptive and Rhythmic

The music is simple—descriptive, rhythmic and, in brief snatches, highly melodic. The quarrel between the duck and the bird as to the merits of swimming without flying and flying without swimming, the lean wolf's entrance and the consequent disappearance of the duck, and Peter's gentle curiosity, are episodes that need no narrator other than the score itself. The score is truly unique.

THIS CLIPPING FROM YOUNGSTOWN, O.
VINDICATOR

AUG 13 1939

Boston Symphony Records Orchestral Fairy Tale

'Peter and the Wolf' Is Delightfully Witty and Entertaining Bit of Musical Nonsense

By L. R. Boals

Each season the Boston Symphony Orchestra seems to produce at least one new work which immediately becomes popular. Last year it was Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije Suite," and the Boston orchestra recorded it for Victor soon after its first performance. This past season it was another Prokofieff work, an orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf."

The orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, has recorded this new work in the Masterpiece set, M-566, on three disks. It is unlike anything we ever have heard. The fairy tale is told by a narrator as the music proceeds. Individuals in the story are characterized by instruments and instrumental groups in the orchestra, and the whole is woven into a delightful, witty and entertaining musical whole.

Richard Hale Narrator

The narration is done by the distinguished American actor, Richard Hale. The music is full of melody, tricky rhythm and humorous effects. Peter is represented by the string quartet, the wolf by three horns, the bird by a flute, the duck by an oboe, the cat by a clarinet staccato in a low register, the grandfather by a bassoon, and the shooting of the hunters by the drums. As the narrator explains this at the beginning, the various instruments and groups play their themes—before the performance of the piece starts.

Prokofieff left Russia in 1918, wandered about a good deal, coming first to America via Japan and then established headquarters in Paris. In 1934 he returned to his native land and since settling in Moscow his music has undergone a noticeable change. As Nicholas Slonimsky observes:

"In his works of the Soviet period there is a notable renascence of the lyrical quality, together with a decrease in the element of pure grotesque." This is exemplified in the melodiousness of "Peter and the Wolf," which was written in 1936. While ostensibly an orchestral fairy-tale written for children, this work can be more appreciated by the grown-ups.

Sword of Satire

The sword of satire, however, remains as sharp as ever, only Prokofieff has learned to wield it with great agility. It demolishes with a sure stroke the absurdities of the old Czarist bureaucracy in "Lieutenant Kije"; and is become mellow and more human, softened from a sneer to an indulgent smile in the grumpy nagging of the grandfather, in the ridiculous complacency of the duck in "Peter and the Wolf."

The music is magnificently played by the Bostonians, and the recording is on a par with the performance.

Another Masterpiece album recently released by Victor is a two-disk set, M-568, containing a piano sonata by Ray Harris, which occupies three sides, and the "Children's Suite," by the same composer, which is on the fourth side.

Composer's Wife Soloist

The soloist is Johana Harris, wife of the composer, who already has appeared as a Victor artist in her recording of the Bach Chaconne.

When the piano sonata was first performed in New York, in 1928, Harris was the object of much discussion. Paul Rosenfeld hailed him as "one of the chief potentialities in American music—perhaps in modern music all together." John Tasker Howard, in his book "Our American Music," named Harris "the White Hope of American music."

In the last 10 years Harris has written abundantly in all forms, and since writing this work, as Harris phrases it, he has "strengthened his musical life by marrying one of our most outstanding women pianists." He is now living in Princeton, N. J., where he holds the position of head of the department of composition in the Westminster Choir School.

Highly Original

Harris is a modernist, but this work is deeply interesting and highly original, not difficult of appreciation, and beautifully played by Johana Harris.

The short "Children's Suite" was written on Christmas morning of 1938 as a present to a young girl who is a piano student. It is in four brief movements, the first of which, entitled "Bells," is a study of Christmas chimes ringing out the traditional church tune "Joy to the World."

On a 10-inch Red Seal disk, Marian Anderson has recorded two Negro Spirituals, "Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child" and "I Don't Feel Noways Tired," with piano accompaniment by Kosti Vehanen. Miss Anderson sings the songs with lovely, somber vocal color and intelligent intensity of emotion.

The Popular List

In response to the increasing public demand for inexpensive recordings of standard classics, Victor has adopted a policy of introducing Black Label records on the regular popular release.

On the two sides of a 12-inch disk is an excellent performance of Sibelius's tone-poem, "Finlandia," played by the Victor Symphony Orchestra. The Victor Concert Orchestra plays Debussy's "Clair de Lune" and Sibelius's "Valse Triste" on another 12-inch record.

Two 10-inch Black Label disks contain four pieces played by the Victor Salon Orchestra, under the direction of Rosario Bourdon. On one are two Kreisler compositions: "Tambourin Chinois" and "Caprice Viennois." On the other are two familiar Brahms compositions: Hungarian Dance No. 5, and the famous "Lullaby."

Larry Clinton heads the dance list with "The Little Man Who Wasn't There" and "Parade of the Wooden Soldiers," both featuring Ford Leary, Clinton's star trombone player and male vocalist. Gray Gordon plays "It Seems Like Old Times," with Cliff Grass as vocalist, and a fast waltz, "Start the Day Right," presenting the Gordon Goons. And Duke Ellington's orchestra plays "Rockin' in Rhythm" and "No Papa No," one fast and the other slow.

The Bluebird Release

Emery Deutsch (the magic bow of radio) and his orchestra make their first Bluebird record consisting of "Vas Vilst Du Gaily Star" and a swing adaption of Brahms' Hungarian Dance No. 1. Mildred Craig, assisted by members of the orchestra, sings a vocal refrain.

"Ebony Rhapsody" and "Lament for a Lost Love" constitute a double by Charlie Barnet and his orchestra. Ziggy Elman's orchestra play "Let's Fall in Love" and "I'll Never Be the Same," featuring Ziggy's striking trumpet playing.

Johnny Messner and his Music Box Band record "Shabby Old Cabby," a waltz, and "Out of this World," a fox trot, with Johnny and Jeanne D'Arcy doing the singing. "Wanna Hat with Cherries" and "The Day We Meet Again" are the offerings of Glenn Miller and his orchestra, with Marian Hutton and Ray Eberle as vocalists.

Artie Shaw and his orchestra, with the voice of Helen Forrest, record "I'll Remember," from the picture "She Married a Cop," and "Easy to Say," which was written by Shaw. "Fats" Waller has returned from a European jaunt and presents a double consisting of "You Meet the Nicest People in Your Dreams" and "Honey Hush," both featuring "Fats" as pianist and vocalist.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CINCINNATI, O.
POST

AUG 15 1939

"Peter and the Wolf" Takes Place on Discs

Boston Symphony Records Novelty Heard Here in Last May Festival

The outstanding novelty of our last May Festival has become the outstanding recording on the August list of new classical records. It is Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," and it has been recorded by the Boston Symphony, which featured it at the Berkshire Festival at Stockbridge a week or so ago.

The balance between the new and the old is nicely preserved, for on the list with Prokofieff and Roy Harris are Wagner, Chopin, Mozart and Beethoven, each with a representative work interpreted by foremost artists and musical organizations.

PETER AND THE WOLF (Prokofieff, Opus 67) played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. (A Victor album of three 12-inch records.) As May Festival goers will remember, a narrator, in this case Richard Hale, tells the story of the fairy tale as the music proceeds. Individuals in the story are characterized by instruments and instrumental groups, and the whole is woven into a delightful witty and entertaining musical texture. The virtuoso orchestra has an exceptional opportunity to display its unique talents. Children will be fascinated and adults richly entertained.

SONATA IN G MAJOR (Beethoven, Opus 30, No. 3) played by Jascha Heintz, violin, and Emanuel Bay, piano. (A Victor album of three 12-inch rmecords, using 5 sides.) This is one of the great master's deathless works, virile in quality and exalted in character; and it receives incomparable performance at the hands of a violinist whose complete and absolute mastery of his instrument and his art is acknowledged without question by everyone.

QUARTET NO. 1 IN G MAJOR (Mozart, K. 80), played by the Kreiner Quartet, composed by Sylvan Shulman, first violin; Josef Gingold, second violin; Edward Kreiner, viola, and Alan Shulman, 'cello. (A Victor album of three 12-inch records.) To the many who regard Mozart's music as the last word, this charming, polished, graceful, melodious and dainty quartet will come as a great treat. It was Mozart's first effort in this field of music, written at the unbelievable age of 14, and has never before been recorded. All of the qualities that distinguish Mozart's chamber music are present, and the Kreiner Quartet plays it with full understanding and flawless style.

CONCERTO NO. 2 IN F MINOR (Chopin, Opus 21), played by Alfred Cortot, pianist, accompanied by orchettra conducted by John Barbirolli. (A Victor album of four 12-inch Victor records.) Sparkling Chopin piano music brilliantly played by the dean of French pianists, with a rich orchestral background. This is a needed modern recording of a notable work which devotees of the piano have had but few opportunities to hear.

RIENZI-OVERTURE, also the "Tannhauser-Fest Marsch" (Wagner) played by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler. (A Victor album of two 12-inch records.)The everpopular Rienzi Overture receives a stirring performance on three sides of these records, and the stately March of the Guests from Act 2 of Tannhauser occupies the fourth. The fact that the Boston "Pops" has played them guarantees plenty of pep, rich tone and lively expression.

Among the individual records released for August are these interesting ones:

FUGE IN C MINOR (No. 2 from Book 1 of Bach's "Well Tempered Clavichord") played by Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia Symphony Victor; 12-inch), with Frescobaldi's "Gagliarda" on the other side. The brilliance and movement of the Bach Fugue contrast beautifully with the stately rhythms and sonorities of the Frescobaldi.

LA PALOMA (The Dove) by Yradier, and "La Golondrina" (The Swallow) by Serradell, two great favorites with every music lover, played by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting. (Victor, 12-inch.)

SEGUIDILLA (De Falla) and "Jota Tortosina" (Joaquin Nin), sung by Lucrezia Bori, soprano, assisted by George Copeland, pianist. Songs from Miss Bori's extensive Spanish repertoire, sung in her inimitable style. (Victor, 10-inch.)

NAILA-INTERMEZZO (Delibes), and "Guitarrero" (Drdla), played by The Aeolians on violin, flute, 'cello and harp. (Victor, 12-inch). Perfect as salon or dinne music.—H. W. M.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER

AUG 13 1939

NOTES ON RECORDS

BY FREDERICK YEISER.

ONE swallow does not make a summer, so the proverb goes. But one swallow, or, perhaps I should say, one gulp, served to put a duck into the stomach of a wolf. That act formed one step in the plot of "Peter and the Wolf," a miniature drama with appropriate musical gestures by Serge Prokofiev.

"An orchestral fairy tale" the composer calls this fantasy, which pleased the children of Moscow a little more than three years ago. Dr. Koussevitsky introduced it to America in 1938 and played it again last winter at the Pension Fund concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. (Cincinnati heard it at the last May Festival.)

Quick to seize upon an amusing novelty, Victor has allowed Dr. Kaossevitsky to record it with his superb musicians and with Richard Hale as the narrator. Except for a slightly too "listen-my-children-and-you-shall-be-excited-to-pieces" tone of voice, the latter tells the story entertainingly.

The booklet of descriptive notes hints of the possibility of an "oblique political satire," but without elucidating. It does seem odd, I suppose, that the wolf should be trotted off to a zoo instead of being shot. But where do the politics come in?

In as ingenious a score as can be found in contemporary music, Prokofiev has used the leit-motiv system of the Wagnerian music drama, but reduced to its simplest terms. Long after the fate of Peter and the wolf ceases to become a matter of suspense and the fable has begun to pall, the listener will scent new subtleties in the music, (Three twelve-inch records in Victor Album M-586).

The Victor list for this month includes another recording of Beethoven's Sonata in G, Op. 30, No. 3—the fourth that I know of, Jascha Heifetz and Emanuel Bay are the performers. This version has the advantage over the earlier one by Kriesler and Rachmaninov of having modern reproduction, and the additional advantage over a later one by Kreisler and Franz Rupp in a "Society" edition by being available separately on two and one-half twelve-inch records in Album M-570. If it is of any interest, this sonata represents the Beethoven of his early middle period, where he sought to invigorate the duo sonata form without turning his back too abruptly on Haydn.

Between this and the recording on Columbia by Milsteinfard Balsom is of course a matter of taste.

In Mozart's first string quartet, which the Kreiner ensemble has put on records for the first time, you will find considerable of interest if you happen to be interested in his musical development. If not, you may derive more satisfaction from his more mature quartets, since Mozart was apparently incapable of writing really bad music, anything to which he put his hand, no matter how youthful, bears the mark of his genius. The odd side contains the Menuetto from the Quartet No. 13 in D minor. (Three twelve-inch records in Victor Album M-393.)

At last some one is doing something about Busoni—and I do not mean his transcriptions. The number of converts to the music of this enigmatic composer the pair of discs issued by the Friends of Recorded Music will make I do not profess to be able to estimate. They contain two of his sonatinas—"Ad usum infantis" and "In diem nativitas"—played by Michael Zadora, one of the most proficient of his pupils. Being on a miniature scale, these two pieces somewhat belie the popular conception of the composer's gigantism. Here Busoni, the thunderer (if there actually was such a person) lowered his voice to say his say with uncommon charm. (Two twelve-inch records—Friends of Recorded Music Nos. 23 and 24.)

The same society, on its disc No. 25, has also issued one of Jean Francaix's witticisms of 1934, also a Sonatina—but for violin and piano. Following a "chinesey" first movement, there is a folk-like slow movement and berceuse. The third, a set of variations, one of which is quite jazzy, by no means let you down. The final variation, by not ending on the tonic, leaves one hanging in midair, in fact. The performers are Josef Gingold, violin, and Liza Elman, piano. The former happens to be the second violinist of the Kreiner String Quartet, which recorded the Mozart quartet mentioned above.

Briefs—The Philadelphia Orchestra offers another pair of transcriptions by its former boss, Leopold Stokowski—the Fugue in C minor from Book I of the "Well-Tempered Clavichord, somewhat inflated, and Gagliarda of Frescobaldi. (Victor 1985) . . . And there is another pair of Chaliapin revivals in "Song of the Needy Pilgrim" and the folk song, "Arise, Red Sun," with the Afonsky Choir and a Balalaika Orchestra. All very Rusuian, of course, and very Chaliapin. (Victor 1983.) . . . The team of Lucrezia Bori and George Copeland presents the Sequidilla, which is the second of Falla's "Seven Popular Songs." and Nin's "Jota Tortosina" and "Malaguena." Very Spanish and very Copeland. It takes an artist like Bori to give these the authentic twang. (Victor 1984.)

159

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAILY WORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

AUG 14 1939

Excellent Prokofieff Recording

All Prokofieff records are welcome, but the Victor edition of the Soviet composer's folk-tale "Peter and the Wolf" is to be treasured as the most delightful disc of the year.

The recording opens with the narrator Richard Hale describing in breath-taking style the cast of characters: the bird, played by a flute; the duck, an oboe; the cat by a clarinet; grandfather by the bassoon; the wolf by thunderous borns; and Peter, youthful and sturdy, announced by a swaggering, gay string quartet.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitszky gives the sensation of successive gusts of laughter with the joy of playing this fantasy. It will be very discouraging to this reviewer if she finds her praise of no avail. "Peter and the Wolf" should be in every home that contains a phonograph.

From such, it is difficult to jump to the almost purely literary enjoyment of Mozart's Quartet No. 1 in G Major. Written by the precocious genius at the age of 14, it reveals a sure apprehension of musical form, but none of the later poignancy. The companion piece in the same Victor album, the Menuetto from Quartet No. 13 in D Minor as played by the Kreiner Quartet is an exquisite moment.

Records released this month are of a uniformly high standard. The Beethoven Sonata in G Major, opus 30 No. 1, played by Jascha Heifetz and Emanuel Bay, will undoubtedly please the connoisseur of fiddling, for Beethoven here is in a mood of joyous emotion.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
NEWS

AUG 16 1939

A SNAPP of MUSIQUE

Humor in music is far from unknown. Beethoven is full of fun. Strauss' "Till Eulenspiegel" is as droll as a comedy. Debussy had his sly jokes, too. Not often, however, is humor in music as forthright and engaging as it is in Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," a fairy tale told in sound, with some aid from a spoken text. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Koussevitzky conducting, has recorded it for Victor (album 566), with Richard Hale as the narrator.

Prokofieff's sense of the antic, as you know, if you have listened to his music for the Russian film, "Lieutenant Kije," is highly developed, subtle, sometimes hilarious. He has taken this fable of the small boy and the bird, who captures a wolf, and has turned it into as delightful a twenty minutes of melody as you will want to hear. Furthermore, the music is so expertly written, that even the young generation can enjoy it, although youthful ears will, in all probability, miss some of the extraordinarily clever tonal manipulations in the orchestra. The album is a necessity, for it is a joy.

Another necessity—this time a single disc (Victor 1962)—is Marian Anderson's singing of "Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child" and "I Don't Feel No-Ways Tired," two Negro spirituals sung with that intensity of feeling in which Miss Anderson is so thorough.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, O.
PRESS

AUG 18 1939

RECORDING THE RECORDS

By BILL DVORAK

Way back last February Larry Clinton recorded for Victor a record featuring "Over the Rainbow" and "The Jitterbug." Less than two weeks after copies were received by distributors, a "hold" order was sent out.

News of the withdrawal spread among record collectors and several copies were "bootlegged" as rare pieces. Vainly the purchasers listened for double meanings, forbidden words. In private auditions friends were given to understand that here was something rare.

The joke was on them, for copies of the record are now officially released. Reason for the "hold" order was that M. G. M. decided not to have the fine tunes from "The Wizard of Oz" played to death before showing of the picture—which is today in Cleveland.

Chatter: Bing Crosby and Connie Boswell blend voices again on a Decca disc of "An Apple for the Teacher" and "Still the Bluebird Sings" from "The Star Maker. . . . Tired of pop tunes? . . . Try Decca's new albums, "Cowboy Songs" and "Old Time Fiddlin' Pieces." . . . The former features the Ranch Boys of the Club Matinee radio program.

VICTOR

LARRY CLINTON: From "Wizard of Oz," "Over the Rainbow," beautiful melody, and "The Jitterbug," very catchy. Fine combination, Clinton puts them over in good dance style.

GRAY GORDON: Carries on with "Off to See the Wizard of Oz" and "If I Only Had a Brain." First is a gay show tune in march tempo, second boasts novel and amusing lyrics. Both presented in a bright musical comedy mood as performed in the picture. Highly recommended.

SAMMY KAYE: Pairs a new ballad, "For Tonight," and a novelty, "Stuttering in the Starlight." Vocals on both. Average pop stuff.

BRUNSWICK

HARRY JAMES: "Melancholy Mood" and "From the Bottom of My Heart." Sweet swing. . . . Ray Sinatra vocalizes nicely. . . . James solos on both.

KAY KYSER: More "Oz"—this time "If I Only Had a Brain" and "The Merry Old Land of Oz." Babbitt stars on the first, Simms and Mason join him for the second. Ear-catching material, dressed up with characteristic Kyser touches.

TEDDY WILSON: "The Man I Love," very slow rhythm, beautiful sax and piano work. "Jumpin' for Joy" is Wilson's brainchild, a rather fast rhythm number featuring hot solos.

EDDY DUCHIN: Does a smooth, sweet job on "And Still the Bluebird Sings," then deserts his usual style for the hotcha "Well All Right." Stanley Worth aids on the first, Johnny MacAfee is the whole show on the second.

VOCALION

BENNY CARTER: An instrumental two-some. . . Carter's "Melancholy Lullaby" is slow, a haunting, nostalgic melody. With it Phil Lang's "Plymouth Rock," good rhythm number. Both well done.

AL DONAHUE: Features Paula Kelly on a new ballad, "This Heart of Mine," and the faster "Oh! You Crazy Moon." They're somewhat above average.

JIMMY LUNCEFORD: "I Love You" and "Oh, Why, Oh Why." The old-timer beautifully done up. . . . Sax and trumpet solo. . . . Other has medium-slow rhythm that's highly danceable. Both sung.

HENRY RUSSELL: Rest your ears, calm your nerves with this sweet pairing of "And Still the Bluebird Sings" and "Cinderella, Stay in My Arms." Russell sings them nicely.

DECCA

COUNT BASIE: Typical Harlem stuff on two jam session favorites, "Oh Lady Be Good" and "You Can Depend On Me." Trumpet and tenor sax solo and there's plenty Basie piano work.

CONNIE BOSWELL: Gives the Boswell treatment to "Oh! You Crazy Moon," very effective. . . . Sosnik accompanies. . . . Tempo smooth and easy. The tearful "At Least You Could Say Hello" completes the record.

WOODY HERMAN: "The Band That Plays the Blues" obliges with two examples. "Dallas Blues" is fast, strongly rhythmic. . . . "River Bed Blues," by Herman, is very slow. . . . Real blues, both in tempo and in spirit.

LOUIS ARMSTRONG: "Confessin'," in a slow, swingy rhythm, with trombone and sax spots Armstrong coming in with one of his unique vocals and a trumpet ending. "Our Monday Date" is mediocre.

BLUEBIRD

ARTIE SHOW: Medium swing on "Out of Nowhere" and fast swing on "I'm Coming Virginia." Solid stuff on well-chosen revivals. Clarinet solos, saxes have nice spot.

OZZIE NELSON: A cute tune, "It's Me Again," from "Yokel Boy." Medium swing. "I Want the Waiter," a fast novelty, getting popular. Cheerful combination, both sung.

* * *

Classical

By MILTON WIDDER

SERGE PROKOFIEFF, Russia's foremost composer of today who often writes with his tongue in his cheek, is featured this month by the Victor list with the Boston Symphony Orchestra recording his "Peter and The Wolf" under the direction of the eminent conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. (Album M-566, $6.50).

Ingeniously the modernist weaves together the fairy tale which musically is witty and tremendously entertaining. Wagner-like, each character has its own theme and its own instrument. As the narrator (Richard Hale) proceeds with the story the orchestra follows with the instrumentation, telling the story in music.

Emil Sauer, one of the few remaining pupils of the master Franz Liszt, is the soloist with a Paris orchestra, directed by famed Felix Weingartner, in the performance of the fiery Concerto No. 1 for piano by Liszt.

Although Mr. Sauer may be aged in years, his performance of this tremendously popular and rousing concerto is youthful and masterful. Weingartner and Sauer combine forces to give this work a reading that is the "last word" in the recorded literature of music today. (Album M-371, $5).

Among the singles of the month is Columbia's recording of Charles Kullman, tenor, singing with operetta abandon two favorites of Victor Herbert, "I Am Falling in Love With Someone" from "Naughty Marietta" and "Thine Alone" from "Eileen." ($1).

Victor's outstanding Red Seal is recorded by Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra. The subjects are the popular and lilting Johann Strauss waltzes, both arranged for orchestra by Mr. Stokwoski. They are the "Blue Danube" and the "Tales from the Vienna Woods." ($2).

THIS CLIPPING FROM MADISON, WIS.
CAPITOL TIMES

AUG 20 1939

Recorded Music

+ + +

Children's Hour

By Harry Sheer

PROKOFIEFF: Peter and the Wolf (Victor, six 12 in. sides). Serge Koussevitzky conducting Boston Symphony; Richard Hale, narrator. Old or young, genial or gloomy, you musn't miss this extraordinary modern suite for children of all ages . . . Prokofieff is a master at subtlety, a creator of pictorial music and a generous humorist—all welding into this plain but brilliant story . . . Fundamentally, it s written for children—the bear, swallowing the naive duck, only to be captured by Peter . . . Of course, one can't describe what happens after that—the narrator, Mr. Hale, has the "exclusive rights" . . . The musical score is exceptionally good, based principally on instruments identifying the bear, duck, bird, Peter, the wolf and the grandfather . . . There is nothing like it in modern record libraries and it becomes more intriguing rather than boring with repetition . . . A must addition . . . Recording superior.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CLEVELAND, O.
PLAIN DEALER

AUG 20 1939

Right Off the Records

By Stewart Matter

COLUMBIA comes forward with another superb example of piano recording, one of the most vital reproductions of the piano we have on records today. It is a set of eleven "Sonatas" of Scarlatti played by that brilliant French sensation, Robert Casadesus.

Only six of the sonatas have been recorded before, but aside from that the selection has been intelligently made, for a finer cross-section of Scarlatti's music could not have been gathered together on three discs. No one may deny Scarlatti's rank among the foremost keyboard composers of all time, and surely no one will mind in the least that these are done on piano instead of harpsichord.

Casadesus' performance is remarkable for its sensitivity and at the same time for its virility; his technical accomplishments are amazing. A set to be highly recommended. Perfect surfaces. Columbia set 372. $5.

Brings Out Mozart Quartet

Victor has provided the first of Mozart's string quartets (K. 80) played by the Kreiner String Quartet. It must be pointed out that we should not look for the usual stamp of the Mozart we have come to know in the concert hall. Instead we marvel that a boy of 14 could have written material as this. Naturally, all the sections do not hang together too logically, nor does he make use of the viola and cello other than mere background; it leans heavily toward the Italian school then in vogue, and its freshness and youthful vitality will be found highly pleasing.

The Kreiner Quartet, to my mind, does not do an altogether too clean job of the work; the cello would profit by a bit more attention to ensemble. Apart from that, the set is welcome and is of great value from an historical viewpoint. Victor set 393. $5.

A set of five discs by the Boston Pops Orchestra under Fiedler brings a selection of lighter concert music which, as the booklet with the set tells us, is an informal concert at the "Pops." Really though, Fiedler builds better programs than this. Be that as it may, we get the best version to date of the rousing "Overture" to "Russlan and Ludmilla" of Glinka; the "Polonaise" from Tschaikowsky's "Eugen Onegin;" a lovely reading of the "Goyescas" intermezzo of Granados; the seldom-heard "Doctrinen" waltz and Eduard Strauss; the five "Miniature Sketches" of Paul White, clever bits of fun; and the two Negro spirituals, "Deep River" and "Nobody Knows de Trouble I've Seen," which can be disregarded. Discs of engaging concert music, finely played and recorded, at prices anyone can afford. Victor set 554. $6.50. (Discs available singly.)

The Boellmann "Toccata" and the Gigout "Toccata" are given excellent readings by Edouard Commette on the organ of the Cathedral Saint-Jean, Lyons. Columbia 69523D.

Popular Records

Two discs must share honors for top place, the stellar English band of Ambrose doing "I Miss You in the Morning" and "If Ever a Heart Was in the Right Place" and Glenn Miller's top-flight band in "Wanna Hat With Cherries" and "Day We Meet Again." You only have to hear them once to know their irresistable appeal.

Horace Heidt's new version of "Moon Love" just about rounds out a full dozen wax sides of this smash hit number. But when he says "move over, boys" he says it with authority and manages to get just about the biggest piece of pie from the pan.

The rage of polkas goes on and when we get such as "The Jolly Bass Player" by Peter Muller's hand we beg for more. A swell waltz, "Under the Moonlight," backs it.

The rest of the lists:

SHAW—"Easy to Say" and "I'll Remember."

CLINTON—"Parade of the Wooden Soldiers" and "Little Man Who Wasn't There."

KYSER—"On the Road to Mandalay" and "Girl I Left Behind Me."

ELLINGTON—"No Papa No" and "Rockin' in Rythym."

ELLA FITZGERALD—"Stairway to the Stars" and "Out of Nowhere."

GORDON—"It Seems Like Old Times" and "Start the Day Right."

FRANCES LANGFORD—"Echoes of Hawaii" and "Man with the Mandolin."

SAVITT—"Moonlight Serenade" and "Shabby Old Cabby."

MADRIGUERA—"Come to the Fair" and "This Is My Thrill."

MILDRED BAILEY—"Moon Love" and "It Seems Like Old Times."

CONNIE BOSWELL—"Is It Possible" and "Rendezvous Time in Paree."

THIS CLIPPING FROM LITTLE ROCK, ARK.
GAZETTE

AUG 20 1939

RECORD REVIEWS

Prokofieff: "Peter and the Wolf" op. 67. Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Serge Koussevitzky; narrator, Richard Hale. Album of three disks. Victor.

Let not the name Serge Prokofieff mislead you into believing that here is another radical outpouring of a modernist, for this is as delightful and whimsical a composition as the heart of any child, young or old, could wish for.

hTe Russian Fairy Tale of Peter and the Wolf has been employed by the composer as the basis and inspiration for this orchestral fantasy, and it contains some of the most successful and delicious passages of descriptive music we have ever listened to. For example, Mr. Prokofieff has essayed and succeeded in depicting in his music the catastrophe that befell the duck, the machinations of a cat, the feelings of a disappointed wolf, and a winsome musical portrait of Peter.

The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra played the work with a fine appreciation of its witty and satirical musical texture. The narration is by Richard Hale, who will be remembered for his artistic singing as soloist with the Little Rock Choral Society some years ago. It was, we believe, Abbe Dimne who said that genius manages to keep open a door to childhood to which occasionally to retire. Peter and the Wolf must have afforded its composer some light-hearted moments.

Wagner: "Siegfried Idyll." Felix Weingartner, conducting the London Philharmonic Orchestra. Album of two disks; Columbia.

Wagner took time out from work on his mighty music dramas to compose this lovely orchestral work as a serenade for his wife to celebrate the birth of their son, Siegfried. To hear the work conducted by Weingartner is to enter again a world of German romance which in these days seems rather remote.

The rapt intimate style of the piece is finely maintained, and the tenderness, simplicity, and refreshing beauty of this heartfelt outpouring attest to a warm, human trait in Wagner's character, which some of his biographies are prone to minimize or ignore.

Mozart: "Quartet No. 1 in G Major" and "Menuetto" from the quartet in D Minor No. 13 played by the Kreiner quartet. Album of three disks; Victor.

In this first string quartet, written at the age of 14 the young Mozart evidences an effortless essay into the domain of chamber music. The work is all lovely form and pellucid surface. There is much concern with patterns rather than moods. The alluring minuetta from the D Minor quartet (the thirteenth), written several years later, gives interesting evidences of maturer powers. The performance by the Kreiner Quartet is impeccable and charming.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS

AUG 20 1939

THE WAX LIBRARY:

Prokoviev's Jovial Novelty Now Recorded by Koussevitzky

PROKOVIEV.—Peter the Wolf, an orhestral fairy tale by Sergei Prokoviev.
Played by the Boston Symphony Orchesra under Serge Koussevitzky.
Victor Album M-566, three disks, six sides, welve-inch.

Just a year ago we had occasion to ail Prokoviev's jovial, folksy Lieuenant Kije suite, arranged from his ncidental music for a Soviet motion icture of the same name. This seaon's contribution is Peter the Wolf, n "orchestra fairy tale" of wit and nnuendo which was written for a hildren's concert in Moscow in the pring of 1936. Koussevitzky and the peerless Boston Symphony, of course, are the introducers. Koussevitzky used the work in his repertoire last season and has recently played it for the Berkshire Festival.

It is merely the story of Peter, a daring little Russian boy, who frolics in the meadow with the bird, the duck and the cat until along comes a big bad wolf. Peter eventually lassos the villain by the tail. When the hunters arrive prepared to kill, Peter cries, "Don't shoot. Let's just take him to the zoo." So to the zoo they march, in rich Wagnerian counterpoint, but Prokoviev must have his little joke in the midst of this splendid triomphale. "If you listen closely you can hear the duck quacking for the wolf, in his haste, swallowed him alive."

Now the cautious U.S.S.R. are not going to let the little Bolsheviks off with just a fairy tale. We must translate into Soviet ideology. Peter, the duck and the birds are happy little people who want only to work and play—chiefly play. The cat is just a nuisance. Grandpa, for he is represented by the bassoon, is an elderly kill-joy. The wolf, we imagine, is the wicked capitalist who would swallow ducks and birds alive. The hunters are the army. Since Peter the Wolf is without gore, times have changed [illegible] the U.S.S.R.

The composition is handled as an elaborate satire on program music in general. It is presented with a narrator who introduces the themes and instruments that symbolize the characters. He then proceeds to tell the story with some humor, pausing long enough for the orchestra to illustrate each chapter in brief, episodic passages.

Once you know the story you long for an uninterrupted performance of the music. If Peter and the Wolf is to endure it must establish its organic entity as a tonal narrative. From what we now hear, through, we hunch it that the work would collapse of sheer fragility without the support of the spoken text.

This, however, is not to gainsay the delightful tunes of Prokoviev, our most fecund melodist, the richness of his orchestration and the infectious spirit of this musical lark.

The narrator is Richard Hale, quondam baritone now actor. He conveys the text with the ham earnestness of a plug-hat Shakespearean actor.

Birthday Present

WAGNER.—Siegfried Idyll, by Richard Wagner.
Played by the London Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Felix Weingartner.
Columbia Album X-139, two disks, four sides, twelve inch.

This is the eighth known recording of Richard Wagner's tender tone poem, played for the first time outside Cosima's bedroom on her thirty-third birthday, Dec. 25, 1870. The composition honored the mother and the young son, Siegfried. Much of the music was culled by the composer from the rapturous love music of Act III in Siegfried, including an old German lullaby, Sleep, My Child.

Most performances of the Siegfried Idyll employ full orchestra with the conductor investing the music with the sublimated sensuality of Richard's operatic self. Weingartner, the purist, plays the Idyll on small orchestra, and with such restraint as Wagner, himself, probably felt at serenading his wife in the morning.

The Weingartner reading lacks oomph but it carries the wallop of authenticity plus a tender dignity.

Single Disks

Although retired from opera and concert Lucrezia Bori continues to record songs from her native Spain. With that well known Hispanic expert, George Copeland, at the piano, she sings De Falla's Seguidilla Marcianna and Nin's Malaguena (Victor disk No. 1984—ten-inch, two sides). The soprano is as shrill as ever and as artistic as ever with her phrasing and vocal coloration. . . . John Charles Thomas gives us Manna-Zucca's I Love Life and Oley Speaks' My Homeland on a ten-inch disk (Victor Disk No. 1986) both in his impeccable concert style. We dislike both songs intensely but that's our business. . . . Salon music for the month includes Delibes' Naila Waltz and Drdla's Guitarrero arranged by Minot Beale for his Aeolian ensemble (Victor Disk No. 12449) and making good music in the background of a wine supper under soft lights. . . . Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops aggregation offer arrangements of La Paloma and La Golondrina, two numbers which still signify all there is to Spanish music for many collectors (Victor Disc 4434—ten-inch—two sides). . . . A salon orchestra under Albert Sandler is to be heard in Kalman's Play Gypsy from Countess Maritza and Parlez-Mois d'Amour (Columbia Disk 420-M, ten-inch, two sides). . . . Saint-Saens' The Swan and Rendezvous by Aletter come on an ingratiating disk (Columbia No. 418-M, ten-inch, two sides) as harp and organ duos. —JOHN ROSENFIELD.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
AUG 26 1939

Prokofieff's Fairy Tale Now Excellent Record

By ROBERT C. BAGAR.

For the very good reason that no one can be certain what attitude Serge Prokefieff will assume next, it is best never to take him for granted.

He is at times a supreme satirist, as witness The Love of Three Oranges. Then, turning his talents full-tilt on the academic side of things and brings out a classical symphony. There has been propaganda music from his pen to warm the hearts of his sponsors. And various other matters. His latest is an "orchestrated fairy tale," Peter and the Wolf.

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra played it for the first time here last season there were those in the audience who saw in the offing a recording of the work. Here it is, at last, and the same organization, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, has done an excellent job of it for Victor. Richard Hale appears as the Narrator.

* * *

A Simple Program.

The program is simple, the cast composed of Peter, a bird, a cat, a duck and a wolf. They are represented by specific instruments or a group of them. The Narrator tells the elementary tale—bearing moral, you can be sure.

The music is rhythmic, colorful, zesty, whimsically descriptive. It holds together well, despite the Narrator's break-in sequences.

But, knowing Prokofieff, one is not taken in altogether by this simplicity. And the employment of a Narrator to relate a transcendentally obvious story smacks of lampooning. Yet the piece is an enjoyable one. Youngsters will find it definitely so. In-betweeners and oldsters will also react favorably to it, even should they discover it to be teeming with significance.

Jascha Heifetz has recorded the Beethoven Sonata No. 8 in G major for Victor, with the assistance of his regular accompanist, Emanuel Bay. There is no complaint to be made concerning the collaborative efforts of the two artists nor concerning their technics or phrasing or matters similar. Excellent performance but poorly recorded.

* * *

In Lighter Vein.

"The Ole Tom-Cat of the Keys," none other than Bob Zurke, makes his bow as a band leader with the Victor platter bearing Each Time You Say Goodby and Hobson Street Blues. The young pianist confines his contribution to conducting—and tossing rhymes around, no dobut—on the A side. But he teasr into the ivories for most of the other face. Not world-beating pianistics. As he plays here there are too many others who can equal him.

If you want to hear the real Zurke, however, you must get the Victor double of It's Me Again and Southern Exposure. In this latter item the piano fairly speaks under the urging.

Larry Clinton's bracketing of Hezekiah and Rocking Chair is recommended for its smoothly paced effectiveness. And Tommy Dorsey's fectiveness. And Tommy Dorsey's platter of Night in Sudan and Tea for Two is made to order for listeners as well as dancers. Both of these are Victor discs.

Eddie De Lange takes a header into mediocrity with his fluffing of WPA Polka and Broom Dance for Bluebird. Red Nichols does a creditable job with Hot Lips—his trumpet winning all the honors, really—and a poor one with The Parade of the Pennies Bluebird.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

AUG 27 1939

On the Records

Last year the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented a delighted music world with a recording of Prokofieff's satirical "Lieutenant Kije Suite." Now the Bostonians, under Koussevitzky, have created another popular favorite. Again it's Prokofieff. This time it's more whimsical; a charming orchestral fairy tale (with narrator) called "Peter and the Wolf," that no child under 80 should miss.

The music is witty, tuneful, rhythmic and of course skillfully scored. And the Bostonians' recording is excellent. Victor bills the album as the month's feature. ($6.50.)

THIS CLIPPING FROM BALTIMORE, MD.
AMERICAN
AUG 27 1939

On The Records

By JOHN PHILIPS CRANWELL

MUSICAL purists have a habit of frowning upon "program" music. But it would be difficult to conceive of anyone, purist or not, adopting that attitude to the latest of Serge Prokofieff's works to be placed on disks.

This musical fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," is released by Victor as set No. 566, and is played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. A narrator tells the story as the musical score unfolds.

It is quite probable that Prokofieff, who certainly follows the Soviet theory that art is great only so long as it has a political aspect, has written more than a mere fairy tale, and that people who enjoy reading deeper and esoteric meanings into otherwise simple entertainment will find plenty of political satire and good-natured ribbing of traditionalists in "Peter and the Wolf."

The musical fairy tale is both amusing and interesting. The instruments, each representing a character in the plot, are worked in and blended to form a most pleasing little symphonic poem with monologue.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHARLESTON, W. VA.
MAIL

AUG 27 1939

The Newest Recordings

★ ★ ★

Big, Bad Prokofieff and the Wolf

THAT BLITHE gossip, "The New Yorker," took official cognizance of Serge Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," sometime last spring in reporting the conversation of two Dear Ladies who heard the fable in a performance by the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky. "What I like about Prokofieff," said the First Dear Lady, "is the way he does things with his tongue in his cheek." "Really," replied the Second Dear Lady, "we couldn't see a thing from our seats."

The difficulty of "seeing" the tongue-in-cheek is even greater in a recent Victor recording "Peter and the Wolf" (M-566) by the same orchestra with the same conductor, but it seems evident that Prokofieff intended more than mere whimsy when he penned the engaging tale of the boy, Peter, who tricked the Wolf, the Duck, which perished in the Wolf's stomach, the Cat, who found himself an ally of the Bird he once besieged, and of Grandpapa, who remained pessimistic to the end. What he intended—whether a simple homily on the brain-versus-brawn theme or an elaborate parable on the complex of European political faiths—need not concern us greatly.

* * *

As advertised, as an orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf" is great fun and a lot of interesting music in a novel and successful setting. Employing a narrator, the composer develops a naive story, identifies its characters and describes their actions. Without imitating the birds and animals involved, Prokofieff manages to characterize them so skilfully that a child given the names of the protagonists, could easily match them to their musical names. There is a grand climax which weaves the themes into a dizzy contrapuntal pattern. There is even a pun, if one listens carefully when the narrator announces that the cat is represented in the orchestra by a clarinet staccato in a low register.

Richard Hale with a deep and resonant voice lends just the right touch of paternal pompousness and make-believe to the narrative. The Boston Symphony plays with the skill for which it is famous and with the spirit of a stage full of children. The recording is as good, even if the music is not, as the recording Victor afforded that other fable of Prokofieff, "Lieutenant Kije," which was one of the record successes of last season.

* * *

Also by Victor:

John Charles Thomas singing two of his great concert favorites—"I Love Life" and "My Homeland." Carroll Hollister is at the piano.

Two transcriptions by Stokowski for the Philadelphia Orchestra—this time the "Fugue in C Minor" (No. 2 from Book 1 of "The Well-Tempered Clavichord" by Bach and "Gagliarda" by Frescobaldi.

Five popular pieces in new recordings by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra, Arthur Fiedler conducting. Included are "La Paloma," "La Colondrina," Brahms "Cradle Song" and "Waltz in A Flat" and the "Perpetuum Mobile" by Johann Strauss.

"Tiger Rag" and "St. Louis Blues" done on two pianos by Reginald Forsythe and Arthur Young.

J. M.

THIS CLIPPING FROM KANSAS CITY, MO.
JOURNAL
SEP 1 - 1939

Musical Fairy Tale Recorded In Victor Album

By Bob Locke

Classical

Boston Symphony Orchestra—One [illegible] amazing works ever recorded is the symphonic tone poem, "Peter and the Wolf," an orchestral fairy tale by Prokofieff, which is to be found in the new Victor Album M-566. Characters in the story are represented by instrumental effects and the story is told by a narrator (Richard Hale) as the music proceeds. The result is a delightful musical story, which is at the same time a clever satire on life.

On Columbia's releases this month is a new album containing Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll," as interpreted by Felix Weingartner and the London Philharmonic Orchestra. One of the best versions yet to be waxed of this ever popular opera excerpt, it is well deserving of the music lover's attention.

Popular

Hal Kemp . . . Top-notch maestro, in the opinion of sweet music fans, is Hal Kemp, who has just waxed six great sides for a new Victor "Let's Dance" album. Nan Wynn's chirping of "Time on My Hands" is easily this year's classic. Other selections include "Let's Do It," "Lover," "La Copa del Olvido," "Quimbana," and "La Comparsa."

Lionel Hampton . . . Lionel's vibes highlight his latest Victor platter, on which is waxed the "Jim-Jam Jumpin' Jive." On the B side is the oldie, "Memories of You," dressed up in sweet swing.

Artie Shaw . . . Helen Forrest's give-you-a-lift vocals on the torch ditty, "I'll Remember," are the top attraction on the Clarinet King's new Bluebird disc. Paired with it is "Easy to Say."

Dick Todd . . . A new Bluebird Vocadance record has Dick crooning a couple of good pop tunes, "What Goes On Behind Your Eyes" and "A Table in a Corner." The Three Reasons also toss in a chorus.

Bing Crosby . . . Easy-going Bing croons a new hit, "What's New," patterned along the current torch style, for the Decca label. On the reverse is the ballad, "Girl of My Dreams," and Bing throws a big appeal into both numbers. John Scott Trotter's ork furnishes background.

Count Basie . . . Newest Decca platter by the count offers a neat bit of ivory pounding and fine reed and brass ensemble work. Gershwin's "Lady Be Good" is waxed on the top side and on the flipover, Jimmy Rushing vocalizes on "You Can Depend on Me."

Ella Fitzgerald . . . Two of the Fall's biggest smash hits were waxed on Decca this week, if you care to take yours truly's word for it. The ditties are "I Want the Waiter" and "That's All, Brother," sung by Ella and played by Chick Webb's old outfit.

Bob Crosby . . . William Shakespeare, the Avon lad himself, wrote the lyrics and Arthur Young the music to two great numbers waxed for Decca by the Bob Cats. The songs are "Oh, Mistress Mine" and "It Was a Lover and His Lass." Marion Mann chirps the tantalizing vocals.

Martha Raye . . . "If You Can't Sing It, You'll Simply Have to Swing It," says Martha on a new Brunswick disc. Pairing this "sweet and simple" ditty with "Old Man River," Martha has made a sure-fire record. Don't miss it.

Benny Carter . . . A real jam session is waxed on Vocalion, with Benny and his alto sax swinging out on "Plymouth Rock," backed up by Eddie Haywood's bluesy piano and Hayes Alvis' solid bass.

Kay Kyser . . . A new style of silky swing is heard from the Kyser band playing, "Oh, You Crazy Moon," on Brunswick. Ginny Simms' vocals sparkle. On the flipover is a sugary ballad, "It Must Have Been Two Other People."

THIS CLIPPING FROM MENASHA, WIS.
CRESSET
SEP - - 1939

Recent Recordings

SERGEI PROKOFIEFF. Peter and the Wolf: An Orchestral Fairy Tale, Opus 67. The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, with Richard Hale as narrator. —There may be subtle satire in the Russian composer's cunningly managed excursion into the land of musical make-believe; but children and adults alike will derive no end of enjoyment from the work. With the aid of a narrator, Prokofieff tells us how little Peter outwits and captures a mean-tempered wolf. A little bird helps him, a cat adds interest to the tale, and a duck is swallowed alive by the villainous beast. The orchestration is cleverly realistic, and the reading given by Dr. Koussevitzky is excellent. Victor Album M-566.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS
SEP 2 - 1939

Orchestral Fairy Tale Provides Fun And Tuneful Music

AS a universal cure for all ills, the doctor prescribes frequent playings of the RCA-Victor recording of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Children, both old and young, cannot fail to rally to sturdy mental health, if this prescription is faithfully applied. You have the various characters represented by the instruments of the orchestra: the Bird by a flute, the Duck by an oboe, the Cat by a clarinet staccato in a low register; Grandfather by unctuous bassoons; the Wolf by three horns and Peter by a rakish string quartet.

For the narrator, the quaint tale has Richard Hale, the distinguished actor-singer brought to Salt Lake City by the enterprising ~~Lucy~~ Gates Bowen and B. Cecil Gates to sing the part of "Rigoletto" in their company's production of the Verdi opera years ago. Mr. Hale's batting average is about 2,000 per cent.

By deft orchestration and suave melodic line, Prokofieff, the Soviet's pride and joy, proves that humor is not dead even in Russia. Hear the Duck and the Bird quarrel about the respective merits of swimming and flying; Grandfather's burbling admonitions; and the Cat's stealthy machinations to gain his ends. There is even tragedy when the Duck is swallowed by the Wolf.

All the time, one listens to brilliant music that weaves the themes into one witty, dramatic, and entertaining story. This will be a favorite in music appreciation classes since the performance by the admirable Koussevitzky and orchestra and the inimitable Hale misses no opportunities.

That gifted combination of Jascha Heifetz and Emanuel Bay give a noble interpretation of Beethoven's "Sonata in G Major, op. 30, No. 3". The composer's intense love of nature, as expressed in this work, his exalted melodies are eloquently voiced by a RCA-Victor recording, whose mechanical perfection matches the interpretation.

Alfred Cortot again demonstrates his power of making the music of Chopin fire the emotions. Assisted by John Barbirolli and an unnamed orchestra, the French pianist performs the Chopin "Concerto No. 2 in F Minor, Op. 21" with that aristocratic manner and fervent passion, which has made him a world-wide favorite.—G. M.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SEATTLE, WASH.
Post Intelligencer
SEP 3 - 1939

'Peter and Wolf' Put Out In Bright New Album

In common with stage and radio showmen who believe the summer months are meant for lighter entertainment, the recording companies tend to restrict the volume of their releases and save their heavy artillery for the autumn.

Recent weeks, however, saw issued one of the most delightful albums that has come our way in a long time. It is a six-disc Victor production of Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf." The orchestra is the Boston Symphony under the famed Serge Koussevitzky; the narrator, Richard Hale.

As recorded by Victor, with the story of the composition unctiously interpolated by Mr. Hale, it is an album for children and grownups alike. And not the least remarkable of its features is that if children find it rare good entertainment, so will their mothers and fathers.

For Prokofieff it is a musical tour de force. It is needless to say that the orchestration is magnificent. And it is recommended without reservation.

Other recent notable releases include:

Beethoven's Sonata in G Major played by Jascha Heifetz with the incredible brilliance that few other living violinists can equal. It is equally accurate to say that Heifetz, now a mature virtuoso, well displays in this famous composition the warmer tone that has marked his work in the past several years to the discomfiture of critics who had praised his technical perfection but found him without depth. (Five sides.)

Wagner's Rienzi Overture played by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra. This popular orchestra does a first class job of recording this frequently played and highly popular overture to one of Wagner's earliest operas. The "March of the Guests" from Tannhauser fills out this album of two discs.

Two small discs that deserve being brought to the attention of music lovers are a beautiful singing of the spiritual "Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child" by the incomparable Marian Anderson, and Frescobaldi's sprightly "Gagliarda" played by the Philadelphia orchestra under Leopold Stokowski.—R. H. P.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SACRAMENTO, CALIF.
UNION
SEP 3 - 1939

Prokofieff's Fairy Story Hit in Wax

Boston Symphony Plays 'Peter and the Wolf;' Orchestral Novelty

By PAUL TANNER

When the Boston symphony orchestra recently played Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale "Peter and the Wolf" in New Haven, the music critic for The New Yorker overheard two elderly ladies discussing the music in the lobby.

"What I like about Prokofieff is the way he does things with his tongue in his cheek," one of them said.

"Really?" said the other, "We couldn't see a thing from our seats."

Ostensibly a concoction for children, nevertheless "Peter and the Wolf" contains more than an occasional indication of clever and subtle satire.

The music is simple, but ingenious, brightly colored, decidedly "catchy," and matchless as a medium to acquaint juniors and elders—with the various voices of the orchestral instruments.

Instruments Are Characters

A narrator, Richard Hale, famed figure of the theater, introduces the characters in the tale, with the instruments that portray them: the Bird, flute; Duck, oboe; Cat, low register clarinet; Grandfather, bassoon; Wolf, three horns; Hunters, kettle and bass drums; Peter, string quartet.

With this vocabulary, Prokofieff tells a story of the duck who quarreled with the bird over the respective merits of swimming without flying and flying without swimming; the sneaking cat of excessively mean disposition; Granddaddy and his everlasting grumpiness; young Peter, ready to try anything once, even to lassoing the old "meanie" wolf, that has just gulped down the moron duck, still quacking away inside him.

Like Peasant Story Teller

Prokofieff, never bound by musical conservatism, composes in the fashion of a peasant teller-of-tales, dramatizing every character, sacrificing continuity for melodrama, and unctiously rolling each spicy detail under his gossipy musical tongue.

In the performance of such music which permits exceptional opportunity for the display of individual technics, the Boston symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussovitzky, are unsurpassed.— Victor Album No. M-566.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CLEVELAND, O.
PLAIN DEALER
SEP 3 - 1939

Right Off the Records

By Stewart Matter

ONE of last year's sensations in the concert world was the performance of Prokofieff's symphonic suite, "Lieutenant Kije," by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky. No less a sensation was created again this last season when the same organization undertook Prokofieff's orchestral fairytale, "Peter and the Wolf." Victor promptly recorded both sets and "Peter" should find as wide a following as "Kije."

Prokofieff is one of the illustrious names in the field of music today and certainly the most celebrated satirist and character writer. His command of the orchestral palette is amazing and his sense of structure completely logical. The story deals with the old fairytale of how Peter and his friends capture the wolf. Each character is represented by his own particular theme and musical color and the efect is superb. As the music unfolds, the story is deliciously narrated by Richard Hale with just the right amount of seriousness. The Boston Orchestra does a splendid job, and the recording is good. Victor set 566. $6.50.

Sauer, Weingartner Excel

Two great names have joined forces for the first time to bring us the beloved "Concerto No. 1" for piano and orchestra by Liszt: Emil Sauer, the piano virtuoso whose name has already been engraved in the legendary hall of fame, and Felix Weingartner, whose baton has earned for him a reputation equally as lasting. No detail need be made of the music and we can find only praise for the performance. The one thing that stands out is that the slow movements are played with a poetic repose that I have heard in no other pianist. Our only criticism of the set is in its recording standard; the tone and volume are there but as with most French recordings there is a muffled feeling about it. Columbia set 371. $5.

The Boston Pops Orchestra under Fiedler gives us a remarkably vital reading of the Wagner "Rienzi Overture" coupled with the "Fest March" from "Tannhauser." Recording superb. Victor set 560. $3.50 . . . The young Hungarian violinist who created such a stir in the east last season, Ossy Renardy, plays the colorful Sarasate "Danses Espagnoles," "Romanza Andaluza," "Jota Navarra" and "Zapateado," rounding out the set with the Sarasate "Adios Montanos." Walter Robert at the piano is a match for this talented young artist, and the recording is excellent. Columbia set X-134. $3.50 . . . Lucrezia Bori continues her admirable series of Spanish songs with the capable accompaniments of George Copeland. She sings Nin's "Malaguena" and the de Falla "Sequidilla Murciana," with rare interpretative skill. Victor 1984. $1.50 . . . Anatole Kitain plays the Rachmaninoff "Etude tableau in F minor" and "Prelude in G sharp minor" and the Scriabin "Etude, opus 2 no. 1" and "Prelude, opus 11 No. 2." Excellent in every way. Columbia disc 69569D. $1.50.

UM
CITY, MO.
JOURNAL
SEP 1 - 1939

16

Musical Fairy Tale Recorded In Victor Album

By Bob Locke

Classical

Boston Symphony Orchestra—One of the most amazing works ever recorded is the symphonic tone poem, "Peter and the Wolf," an orchestral fairy tale by Prokofieff, which is to be found in the new Victor Album M-566. Characters in the story are represented by instrumental effects and the story is told by a narrator (Richard Hale) as the music proceeds. The result is a delightful musical story, which is at the same time a clever satire on life.

On Columbia's releases this month is a new album containing Wagner's "Siegfried Idyll," as interpreted by Felix Weingartner and the London Philharmonic Orchestra. One of the best versions yet to be waxed of this ever popular opera excerpt, it is well deserving of the music lover's attention.

Popular

Hal Kemp . . . Top-notch maestro, in the opinion of sweet music fans, is Hal Kemp, who has just waxed six great sides for a new Victor "Let's Dance" album. Nan Wynn's chirping of "Time on My Hands" is easily this year's classic. Other selections include "Let's Do It," "Lover," "La Copa del Olvido," "Quimbana," and "La Comparsa."

Lionel Hampton . . . Lionel's vibes highlight his latest Victor platter, on which is waxed the "Jim-Jam Jumpin' Jive." On the B side is the oldie, "Memories of You," dressed up in sweet swing.

Artie Shaw . . . Helen Forrest's give-you-a-lift vocals on the torch ditty, "I'll Remember," are the top attraction on the Clarinet King's new Bluebird disc. Paired with it is "Easy to Say."

Dick Todd . . . A new Bluebird Vocadance record has Dick crooning a couple of good pop tunes, "What Goes On Behind Your Eyes" and "A Table in a Corner." The Three Reasons also toss in a chorus.

Bing Crosby . . . Easy-going Bing croons a new hit, "What's New," patterned along the current torch style, for the Decca label. On the reverse is the ballad, "Girl of My Dreams," and Bing throws a big appeal into both numbers. John Scott Trotter's ork furnishes background.

Count Basie . . . Newest Decca platter by the count offers a neat bit of ivory pounding and fine reed and brass ensemble work. Gershwin's "Lady Be Good" is waxed on the top side and on the flipover, Jimmy Rushing vocalizes on "You Can Depend on Me."

Ella Fitzgerald . . . Two of the Fall's biggest smash hits were waxed on Decca this week, if you care to take yours truly's word for it. The ditties are "I Want the Waiter" and "That's All, Brother," sung by Ella and played by Chick Webb's old outfit.

Bob Crosby . . . William Shakespeare, the Avon lad himself, wrote the lyrics and Arthur Young the music to two great numbers waxed for Decca by the Bob Cats. The songs are "Oh, Mistress Mine" and "It Was a Lover and His Lass." Marion Mann chirps the tantalizing vocals.

Martha Raye . . . "If You Can't Sing It, You'll Simply Have to Swing It," says Martha on a new Brunswick disc. Pairing this "sweet and simple" ditty with "Old Man River," Martha has made a sure-fire record. Don't miss it.

Benny Carter . . . A real jam session is waxed on Vocalion, with Benny and his alto sax swinging out on "Plymouth Rock," backed up by Eddie Haywood's bluesy piano and Hayes Alvis' solid bass.

Kay Kyser . . . A new style of silky swing is heard from the Kyser band playing, "Oh, You Crazy Moon," on Brunswick. Ginny Simms' vocals sparkle. On the flipover is a sugary ballad, "It Must Have Been Two Other People."

THIS CLIPPING FROM MENASHA, WIS.
CRESSET
SEP - - 1939

Recent Recordings

Sergei Prokofieff. Peter and the Wolf: An Orchestral Fairy Tale, Opus 67. The Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, with Richard Hale as narrator.—There may be subtle satire in the Russian composer's cunningly managed excursion into the land of musical make-believe; but children and adults alike will derive no end of enjoyment from the work. With the aid of a narrator, Prokofieff tells us how little Peter outwits and captures a mean-tempered wolf. A little bird helps him, a cat adds interest to the tale, and a duck is swallowed alive by the villainous beast. The orchestration is cleverly realistic, and the reading given by Dr. Koussevitzky is excellent. Victor Album M-566.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
DESERET NEWS
SEP 2 - 1939

Orchestral Fairy Tale Provides Fun And Tuneful Music

AS a universal cure for all ills, the doctor prescribes frequent playings of the RCA-Victor recording of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Children, both old and young, cannot fail to rally to sturdy mental health, if this prescription is faithfully applied. You have the various characters represented by the instruments of the orchestra: the Bird by a flute, the Duck by an oboe, the Cat by a clarinet staccato in a low register; Grandfather by unctuous bassoons; the Wolf by three horns and Peter by a rakish string quartet.

For the narrator, the quaint tale has Richard Hale, the distinguished actor-singer brought to Salt Lake City by the enterprising Lucy Gates Bowen and B. Cecil Gates to sing the part of "Rigoletto" in their company's production of the Verdi opera years ago. Mr. Hale's batting average is about 2,000 per cent.

By deft orchestration and suave melodic line, Prokofieff, the Soviet's pride and joy, proves that humor is not dead even in Russia. Hear the Duck and the Bird quarrel about the respective merits of swimming and flying; Grandfather's burbling admonitions; and the Cat's stealthy machinations to gain his ends. There is even tragedy when the Duck is swallowed by the Wolf.

All the time, one listens to brilliant music that weaves the themes into one witty, dramatic and entertaining story. This will be a favorite in music appreciation classes since the performance by the admirable Koussevitsky and orchestra and the inimitable Hale misses no opportunities.

That gifted combination of Jascha Heifetz and Emanuel Bay give a noble interpretation of Beethoven's "Sonata in G Major, op. 30, No. 3". The composer's intense love of nature, as expressed in this work, his exalted melodies are eloquently voiced by a RCA-Victor recording, whose mechanical perfection matches the interpretation.

Alfred Cortot again demonstrates his power of making the music of Chopin fire the emotions. Assisted by John Barbirolli and an unnamed orchestra, the French pianist performs the Chopin "Concerto No. 2 in F Minor, Op. 21" with that aristocratic manner and fervent passion, which has made him a world-wide favorite.—G. M.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SEATTLE, WASH.
Post Intelligencer
SEP 3 - 1939

'Peter and Wolf' Put Out In Bright New Album

In common with stage and radio showmen who believe the summer months are meant for lighter entertainment, the recording companies tend to restrict the volume of their releases and save their heavy artillery for the autumn.

Recent weeks, however, saw issued one of the most delightful albums that has come our way in a long time. It is a six-disc Victor production of Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf." The orchestra is the Boston Symphony under the famed Serge Koussevitzky; the narrator, Richard Hale.

As recorded by Victor, with the story of the composition unctuously interpolated by Mr. Hale, it is an album for children and grownups alike. And not the least remarkable of its features is that if children find it rare good entertainment, so will their mothers and fathers.

For Prokofieff it is a musical tour de force. It is needless to say that the orchestration is magnificent. And it is recommended without reservation.

Other recent notable releases include:

Beethoven's Sonata in G Major played by Jascha Heifetz with the incredible brilliance that few other living violinists can equal. It is equally accurate to say that Heifets, now a mature virtuoso, well displays in this famous composition the warmer tone that has marked his work in the past several years to the discomfiture of critics who had praised his technical perfection but found him without depth. (Five sides.)

Wagner's Rienzi Overture played by the Boston "Pops" Orchestra. This popular orchestra does a first class job of recording this frequently played and highly popular overture to one of Wagner's earliest operas. The "March of the Guests" from Tannhauser fills out this album of two discs.

Two small discs that deserve being brought to the attention of music lovers are a beautiful singing of the spiritual "Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child" by the incomparable Marian Anderson, and Frescobaldi's sprightly "Gagliarda" played by the Philadelphia orchestra under Leopold Stokowski.—R. R. B.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SACRAMENTO, CALIF.
UNION
SEP 3 - 1939

Prokofieff's Fairy Story Hit in Wax

Boston Symphony Plays 'Peter and the Wolf;' Orchestral Novelty

By PAUL TANNER

When the Boston symphony orchestra recently played Prokofieff's orchestral fairy tale "Peter and the Wolf" in New Haven, the music critic for The New Yorker overheard two elderly ladies discussing the music in the lobby.

"What I like about Prokofieff is the way he does things with his tongue in his cheek," one of them said.

"Really?" said the other, "We couldn't see a thing from our seats."

Ostensibly a concoction for children, nevertheless "Peter and the Wolf" contains more than an occasional indication of clever and subtle satire.

The music is simple, but ingenious, brightly colored, decidedly "catchy," and matchless as a medium to acquaint juniors and elders—with the various voices of the orchestral instruments.

Instruments Are Characters

A narrator, Richard Hale, famed figure of the theater, introduces the characters in the tale, with the instruments that portray them: the Bird, flute; Duck, oboe; Cat, low register clarinet; Grandfather, bassoon; Wolf, three horns; Hunters, kettle and bass drums; Peter, string quartet.

With this vocabulary, Prokofieff tells a story of the duck who quarreled with the bird over the respective merits of swimming without flying and flying without swimming; the sneaking cat of excessively mean disposition; Granddaddy and his everlasting grumpiness; young Peter, ready to try anything once, even to lassoing the old "meanie" wolf, that has just gulped down the moron duck, still quacking away inside him.

Like Peasant Story Teller

Prokofieff, never bound by musical conservatism, composes in the fashion of a peasant teller-of-tales, dramatizing every character, sacrificing continuity for melodrama, and unctiously rolling each spicy detail under his gossipy musical tongue.

In the performance of such music which permits exceptional opportunity for the display of individual technics, the Boston symphony orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussovitzky, are unsurpassed.— Victor Album No. M-566.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CLEVELAND, O.
PLAIN DEALER
SEP 3 - 1939

Right Off the Records

By Stewart Matter

ONE of last year's sensations in the concert world was the performance of Prokofieff's symphonic suite, "Lieutenant Kije," by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky. No less a sensation was created again this last season when the same organization undertook Prokofieff's orchestral fairytale, "Peter and the Wolf." Victor promptly recorded both sets and "Peter" should find as wide a following as "Kije."

Prokofieff is one of the illustrious names in the field of music today and certainly the most celebrated satirist and character writer. His command of the orchestral palette is amazing and his sense of structure completely logical. The story deals with the old fairytale of how Peter and his friends capture the wolf. Each character is represented by his own particular theme and musical color and the efect is superb. As the music unfolds, the story is deliciously narrated by Richard Hale with just the right amount of seriousness. The Boston Orchestra does a splendid job, and the recording is good. Victor set 566. $6.50.

Sauer, Weingartner Excel

Two great names have joined forces for the first time to bring us the beloved "Concerto No. 1" for piano and orchestra by Liszt: Emil Sauer, the piano virtuoso whose name has already been engraved in the legendary hall of fame, and Felix Weingartner, whose baton has earned for him a reputation equally as lasting. No detail need be made of the music and we can find only praise for the performance. The one thing that stands out is that the slow movements are played with a poetic repose that I have heard in no other pianist. Our only criticism of the set is in its recording standard; the tone and volume are there but as with most French recordings there is a muffled feeling about it. Columbia set 371. $5.

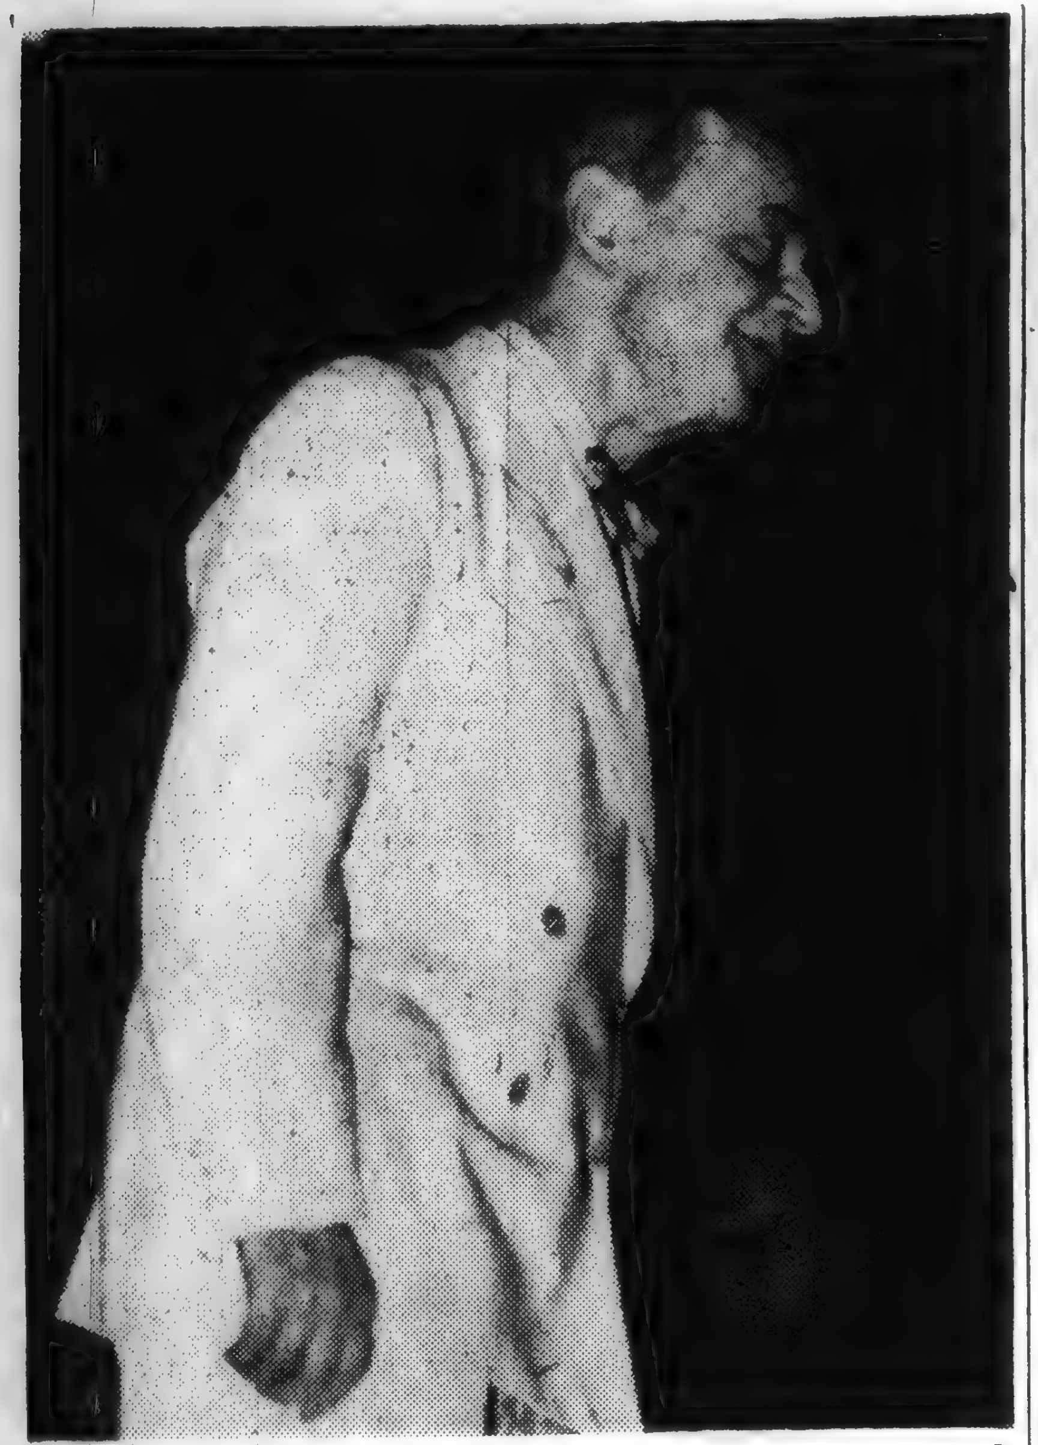
The Boston Pops Orchestra under Fiedler gives us a remarkably vital reading of the Wagner "Rienzi Overture" coupled with the "Fest March" from "Tannhauser." Recording superb. Victor set 560. $3.50 . . . The young Hungarian violinist who created such a stir in the east last season, Ossy Renardy, plays the colorful Sarasate "Danses Espagnoles," "Romanza Andaluza," "Jota Navarra" and "Zapateado," rounding out the set with the Sarasate "Adios Montanos." Walter Robert at the piano is a match for this talented young artist, and the recording is excellent. Columbia set X-134. $3.50 . . . Lucrezia Bori continues her admirable series of Spanish songs with the capable accompaniments of George Copeland. She sings Nin's "Malaguena" and the de Falla "Sequidilla Murciana," with rare interpretative skill. Victor 1984. $1.50 . . . Anatole Kitain plays the Rachmaninoff "Etude tableau in F minor" and "Prelude in G sharp minor" and the Scriabin "Etude, opus 2 no. 1" and "Prelude, opus 11 No. 2." Excellent in every way. Columbia disc 69569D. $1.50.

B50 Oct

Duplicates

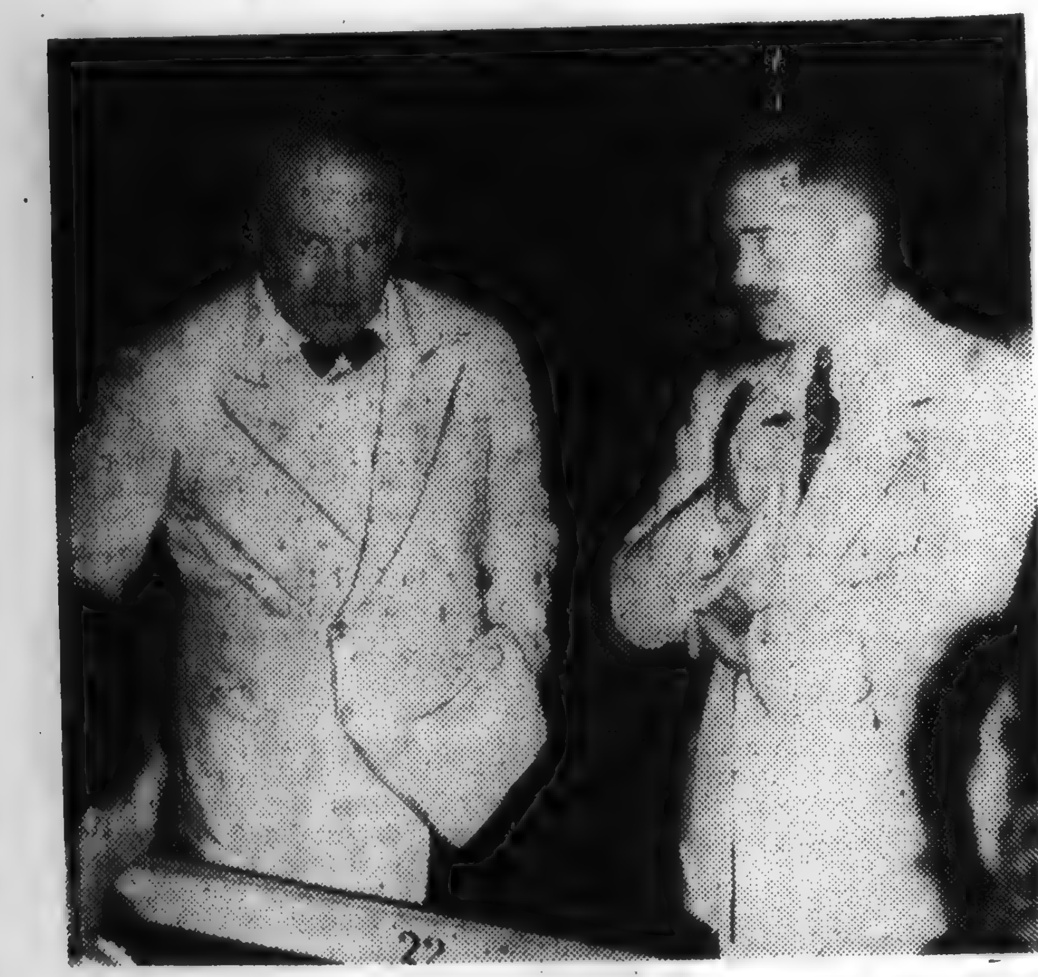
139

Koussevitzky Given Tremendous Ovation as Berkshire Symphonic Festival Ends



Dr. Koussevitzky, plainly showing signs of exhaustion, takes a final bow.

A. A. Berle Jr., Under Secretary of State, summer resident of Great Barrington, leaves the box office after buying a ticket for Saturday's concert.



Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times, and Kenneth M. Simpson, Republican National Committeeman of New York, discuss the Festival at intermission.

"How do you like it?" asks Mrs. Artur Rodzinski as Mrs. Edward Bok sips on a bottle of goat milk from the Rodzinski farm in Stockbridge.

The audience acclaims Koussevitzky and the orchestra following the final movement of Sibelius's Symphony No. 2 in D Major, concluding composition on yesterday afternoon's program ending the sixth Festival season.

All Classes Enthusiastic Over 1939 Festival Series

Program Pleased Large Majority Of Listeners—Some Suggestions For Physical Improvements Made

Thrilled enthusiasm was evident among all classes attending the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood but many had their own ideas of the now famous event.

Some were satisfied with the arrangement of programs for the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, while others, particularly those of the "Third Estate," had some ideas for improvement in the physical aspects and the arrangements for the Festival.

Mrs. Bok Thrilled

Mrs. Edward Bok of Philadelphia, Pa., president of the Curtis Institute of Music, who was the guest of Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky in her box yesterday afternoon, said she "was thrilled with the aristocracy of the building," and was particularly impressed with the number of young people who attended the concerts. "It only goes to prove that the young are becoming interested and are educating themselves in music," she added.

"If there is anyone under this shed who disapproves of today's program," said Mrs. Josephine Daskam Bacon, author of New York, "he should be shot." Mrs. Bacon was so enthused over Sunday afternoon's program that she said "If Dr. Koussevitzky asked me before the concert to make out the program I would have made it just as he did."

Another boxholder, speaking anonymously, who had attended every concert since the Festival was established six years ago, described the 1939 series as "wonderful," and expressed the desire to have more concerts. "It seems too bad," he said," to have such a beautiful building and use it for only two weeks of the year."

"Today's large attendance is just one of the evidences of America coming of age," commented Roy Harris, the composer, on the 1939 Festival. "Our people are beginning to want the best in culture along with their vacations," he added. "Combined, cultural events and vacations, are helping the growth of music in this country." The 1939 series has been "all very exciting to me," he continued, "and I am looking forward to even more thrilling concerts under the music shed here at Tanglewood."

Against Request Programs

Mrs. Cornelia Colton Hollister of Toledo Ohio, and Lenox, wants "to see 25,000 people at the Festival next year." She is not in favor of request programs. Mrs. Hollister praised Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the Festival, on "the success of the Festival far beyond her imagination the first year."

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Williams Steele of South Norwalk, Conn., who attended the Festival yesterday afternoon, expressed great enthusiasm for the whole idea. Mr. Steele, who is a choral director for several societies, including the Borden Glee Club, the Men's Choral Club of Norwalk, Conn., the New York Life Insurance Glee Club, and Savings Bank Glee Club, both of New York, and the St. Cecilia Society of Old Greenwich, Conn., and the Apollo Club of Stamford, Conn., was par-

Festival Series
Continued on 16th Page

Box Office Runs Out of Festival Tickets

Gordon Simpson, in charge of the ticket sales at the box office, ran out of tickets when he hit the 900 mark for admissions and had to use a Berkshire Symphonic Festival stamp on ticket envelopes to make some kind of an official looking pass that would be acceptable to the ticket takers. He issued about 100 of these.

Tanglewood Tales

J. Alcott Sandrews of Austin, Tex., hitch-hiked from that city to Lenox for the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the World's Fair in New York. He arrived Saturday night. Unable to get a room in Stockbridge or Lenox he went to the Festival grounds, enjoyed the concert and then was taken to Pittsfield by Manager Robert Tryon of the Western Union who obtained a room for him for the weekend. Sandrews is a former music critic at the University of Texas.

Robert K. Shattuck of Wilmington, Del., attended all of the concerts. Shattuck, who is 25, was registered at the Hotel Wendell during the series. He hitch-hiked to Tanglewood on the days of the concerts. He enjoyed the Festival, he said, hopes the series will be extended next year.

Adolf A. Berle Jr., Under Secretary of State, and Mrs. Berle, the former Beatrice Bend Bishop of Lenox, summer residents of Great Barrington were at the weekend concerts. They came late Saturday night, bought their tickets at the box office and took their seats in the front section after the first number was played.

Newbold Morris, president of the City Council of New York, attended Saturday night's concert with Kenneth, Simpson of New York well known member of the Republican National Committee. They sat in Section Three, Row Three. Mr. Morris said that Mayor La Guardia of New York had planned to attend Thursday's concert but was forced to change his plans because he was called unexpectedly to Chicago.

Mrs. William Francis Gibbs, daughter of Paul D. Cravatt of New York, motored from the Adirondacks for the final concert yesterday. She was the luncheon guest yesterday of Mr. and Mrs. Donald McPherson at Court Hill, this city.

Madame Koussevitzky's box was the center of activity at yesterday's final concert. With her were Mrs. Edward Bok of Philadelphia, Mrs. John Braun, Dr. James F. Herlihy, Carlton Smith of Esquire and Mrs. Artur Rodzinski, wife of the conductor of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra. Photographers grouped around the box making pictures of Madame Koussevitzky, Mrs. Bok and Mrs. Rodzinski when Dorothy Maynor was called to the box to meet Mrs. Bok.

Mrs. Allen Craig of Bangor, Me., formerly of Torrington, Conn., a member of the advisory board of the Festival, motored down from Maine yesterday for the final concert.

Candid camera fiends did everything but stand on their heads making "shots" of Koussevitzky at the conclusion of the Festival yesterday afternoon. Earlier in the afternoon some were in the trees, others on the roof of the Tanglewood house and one atop another's shoulders making pictures of the crowd on the spacious lawn at intermission.

More than 800 standing room tickets were sold at Saturday night's concert and about 1000 yesterday. People filled the lawn near the northwest side of the shed while the accoustics carried the music as far as the main house where several listened while viewing Lake Mahkeenac from the lawn.

The gardens at Tanglewood

Tanglewood Tales
Continued on 16th Page

Koussevitzkys Leave for Maine Vacation

Orchestra Leader To Return Here In September

Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, leaves Stockbridge today for a vacation at Seal Harbor, Me. He plans to return some time in September with some members of the Boston Symphony trustees and they will discuss details of the academy to be opened at Tanglewood next summer.

Before leaving, Dr. Koussevitsky expressed himself as tremendously pleased with the reception given him and the orchestra by the Festival audiences. Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitzky stayed at the summer home of Dr. and Mrs. Artus Rodzinski during the Festival period.

George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra and Mrs. Judd, who stayed at the Curtis Hotel, left this morning for their summer home in Norwell. Mr. and Mrs. Charles Spaulding who were at the Wendell Hotel in this city, returned to Boston today. Mr. Spaulding is the assistant manager. Gordon Simpson, in charge of the box office for the orchestra at Symphony Hall, who came on to help the Festival left this morning for Baltimore, Md., with Mrs. Simpson. They also stayed at the Wendell.

Hitchhikes to Tanglewood, Then Pushes Wheelchair

Among those who hitchhiked to Tanglewood for all six concerts was Paul De Porte of 331 West Avenue, Albany. Paul, a student at Rensselaer Polytechnical Institute in Troy, N. Y., earned his admission to the concerts as a member of the "wheelchair brigade" directed by E. M. Bliss. Paul thumbed his way to and from Tanglewood and while there had charge of one of the chairs used to take invalids to and from their cars to their seats in the music shed.

Miss Maynor Sings in Tuning Room

Gives Brief Concert for a Few Friends

The music shed at Tanglewood was deserted. Lightning occasionally flashed among the Hawthorne pines. Rumbles of thunder seemed to shake the firmament. Then came the rain and striking the roof of the shed, sounded like the tympani of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra whose concert had brought the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival to a climatic close less than a half hour before.

An occasional automobile horn sounded from some of the last members of the parking crew making their departure. The musicians' instruments were being packed on the stage and scores were being filed away near Serge Koussevitzky's exit.

All music at Tanglewood until another year seemed ended, but suddenly the mellow tones of a rich soprano voice came from the direction of the tuning room back of the stage. Inside as Miss Dorothy Maynor, talented Negro singer, performing for the benefit of a few friends, some who had heard her before, some who had missed her appearance at Dr. Koussevlitzky's picnic and at First Church in Pittsfield yesterday. She sang for 20 minutes to the delight of those fortunate enough to have lingered until the storm arrived.

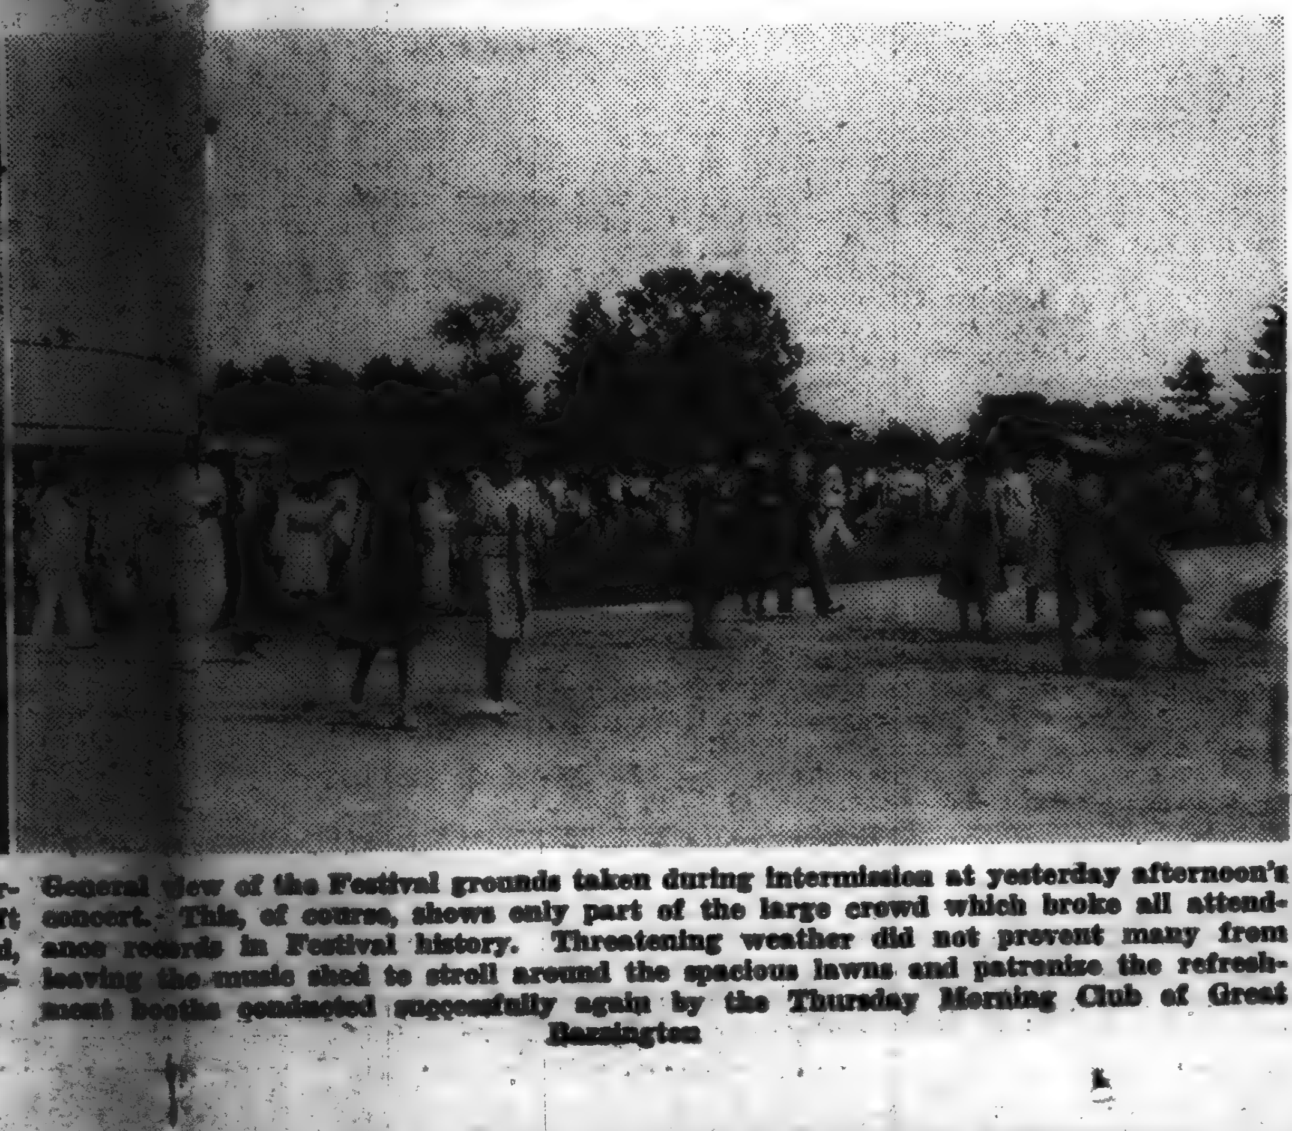
Every State but Idaho Represented at Festival

"There are people here from every part of the United States but Idaho," said one of the traffic men at intermission yesterday afternoon.

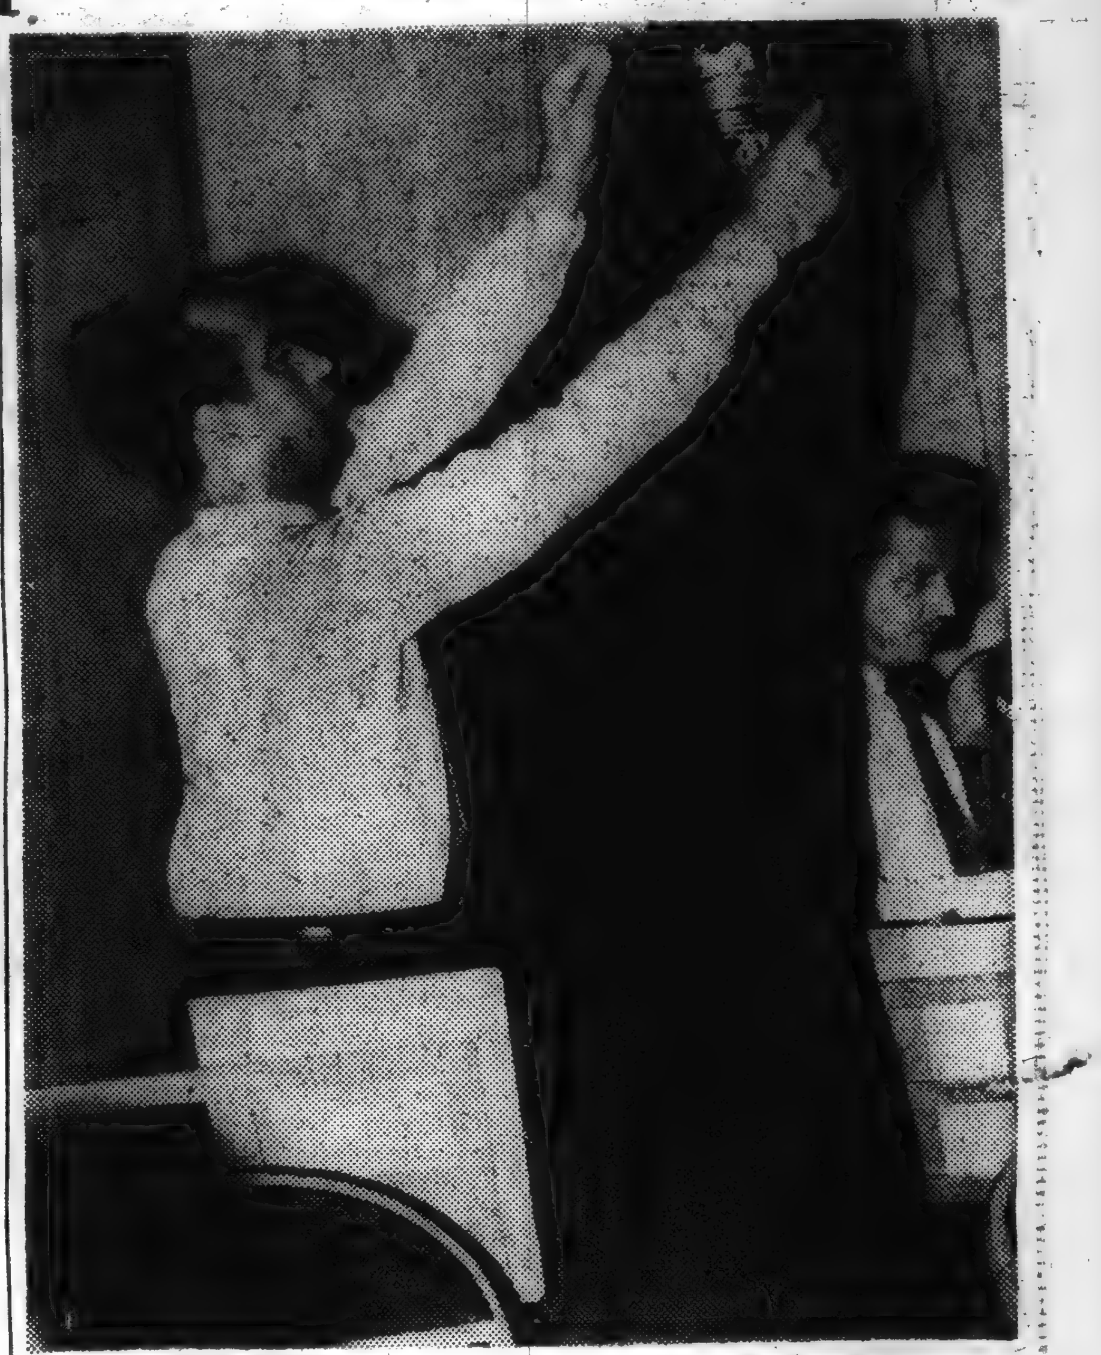
And it seemed that he was right for your inquiring reporter started walking through the parking area, taking a casual glance at number plates. He found about every state in the union was represented.

After he passed the 40 mark and was hunting for the other eight he decided he would give up and today stands unchallenged in his prediction that every state in the union was represented with the exception of Idaho — because he was compelled to take the word of the traffic man who watched them all pass by.

Representatives of the Montreal Symphonic Orchestra attending yesterday's concert included, left to right: Pierre Beique, treasurer; Jean Lallemand, president; Mrs. F. A. Beique, F. A. Beique, vice-president and Miss H. E. Grenier, librarian,



General view of the Festival grounds taken during intermission at yesterday afternoon's concert. This, of course, shows only part of the large crowd which broke all attendance records in Festival history. Threatening weather did not prevent many from leaving the music shed to stroll around the spacious lawns and patronize the refreshment booths conducted successfully again by the Thursday Morning Club of Great Barrington

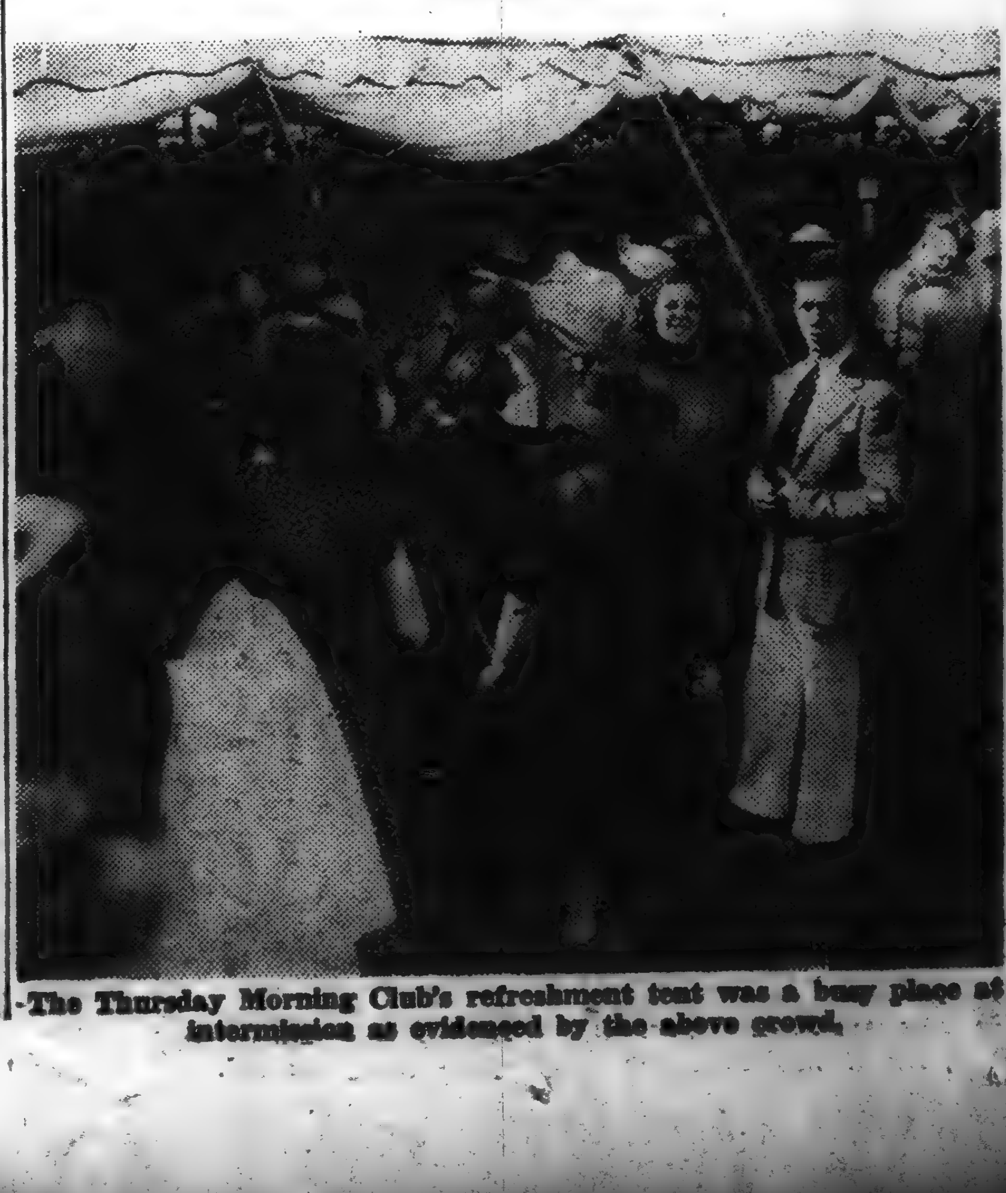


Bernard Zieghers, harpist, puts away his instrument, and it's not an easy job.

Joseph Franz, chairman of the Tanglewood committee, takes a well deserved rest after the final concert.

Willard M. Sistare, chief usher, chats for a minute with Ushers Kenneth D. Cuddeback and Neil F. Bridges.

Three cigaret girls, left to right, Maryann Giddings, Lorna Calder and Dorothy Giddings, all of Great Barrington, taking a rest after intermission.



The Thursday Morning Club's refreshment tent was a busy place at intermission as evidenced by the above crowd.

Aug 14 '39

BOSTON SYMPHONY HAS FINAL CONCERT

Festival Performance Is Given Under Baton of Koussevitzky Before Record Audience

SCHUMANN WORK PLAYED

Sibelius, Debussy and Ravel Compositions Are Presented in Program at Lenox

By NOEL STRAUS

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 13.—Before a record-breaking audience numbering more than 7,000 persons the Berkshire Symphonic Festival came to a close here this afternoon at Tanglewood. The crowd today brought the total attendance for the six concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, to 38,000, a gain of 2,000 above those present at last Summer's festival.

The final program, which was received with marked enthusiasm, began with Schumann's Fourth Symphony and closed with the Second Symphony by Sibelius. Between these were placed a brace of representative works of the modern French school—Debussy's L'Après-Midi d'un Faune" and Ravel's "La Valse."

A magesterial performance of the Sibelius symphony, and a poetically romantic account of the Schumann opus formed the backbone of the concert. But nowhere was the playing put forth more amazing in its virtuosity than in the Debussy prelude or Ravel's choreographic poem. Dr. Koussevitzky has a special sympathy for these Gallic compositions and an ability to express the uttermost that is in their pages not excelled by any leader of the time, as again was exemplified this afternoon.

Tempo of Debussy Prelude

Never is one likely to encounter a more atmospheric, voluptuous account of the Debussy prelude. Dr. Koussevitzky took all of it at a deliberate pace that increased the lassitude and sensuousness of the music to a striking degree. One might term his tempo the "absolute" one, and after it no other would seem correct, as for the Ravel selection it became the very apotheosis of the waltz. It went with a marvelous swing and grace that would be the despair of all dance orchestra leaders. Vivid contrasts kept the interest alive at all times throughout the lengthy contribution, the whole being carried to a climax at the end that for technical brilliance and glory of tone afforded the audience one of the major thrills of the entire series.

Last night's concert began with a sparkling and spirited performance of Haydn's splendid symphony in B flat major, the meticulous care expended on every detail of the presentation was immediately evidenced in the introductory largo, given with most clearly defined phrasing and strictest attention to phrasing and nuance.

All that followed in the [illegible] symphony revealed to the core the genial, carefree nature of this music, in which erudition hides itself behind a mask of simplicity. This simplicity of approach was finely caught by Dr. Koussevitsky and never abandoned, even in the most complicated parts of the score. The songful adagio possessed a nobility attainable only by this type of treatment. One of the most striking effects of this movement occurred a few measures from the end, where, after leading the chief theme to an intensely felt emotional height, there was a sudden change to a happier mood in the naive concluding bars. The minuet went with pomp and vigor, but the orchestra accomplished its smoothest ensemble in the finale, which could hardly have been propelled with more exuberance and animation.

Give Stravinsky Work

No sharper contrast was possible to this offering than was afforded by the ensuing number, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps." Each time one listens to this work it seems to make a different impression. More than most compositions, its values change for the hearer according to the particular interpretation granted it by its conductor.

"Le Sacre" was obviously a heroic attempt to attain a new strength of expression by a return to the barbaric and primitive. The composer was led to this goal by the same impulse that caused painters to study and ape the prehistoric depictions made by the cave-men, or that egged on sculptors to follow a similar course in regard to ancient African wood-carvings. It is the same impulse that led the Romans in an age of great sophistication to take a sudden violent interest in archaic Greek sculpture, a phenomenon considered by many to be a sure indication of decadence, not of progress.

The savage, almost static rhythms, the blazing color and the stunning use of oft-repeated scraps of folk-like melody in the tremendously difficult score were never more fully set forth than throughout the bravura reading heard last night. But Dr. Koussevitzky has on occasion endowed the composition as a whole with a more convincing general outline.

That he failed to do so on this occasion was probably the result of the long wait made between the two big divisions. At this point the sudden silence after the hecticly excited termination of the opening half can be supremely effective. But by laying down the baton and not beginning the second half for several minutes, the marvelous spell wrought in the superb performance of the first part was snapped and could not be revived, so that a feeling of anticlimax resulted as the music approached its close. Considering the magnificence of the rendition in all other respects, one wondered whether the real root of the matter did not lie in the music itself.

Wagner Group Presented

The program was completed by a Wagner group made up of the overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the prelude to "Lohengrin," the bacchanale from "Tannhaeuser" and prelude to "Die Meistersinger."

Of these the example from "Die Meistersinger" must be singled out for particular mention, since lack of space forbids comment on the others. No excerpt from the Wagnerian operas appears more frequently on concert programs, and yet Dr. Koussevitzky found it possible to give an entirely original and glowing account of the favorite number, entirely his own in many respects. Inner voices, unsuspected in other interpretations of the prelude, were brought prominently to the fore, especially in the brasses, and a ravishing, sensuous quality of tone prevailed in the more lyric episodes such as almost no other organization can provide when needed.

The festival came to its termination on a note of triumph for all concerned. Although the attendance has been the largest in the six-year history of the festival, all indications point to a still greater attendance next Summer. There is a possibility that the season henceforth will be at least a week longer than in the past to meet the growing demand for seats. That 100 persons have already made reservations for the next festival is a most encouraging sign for the festival authorities, since nothing of the kind happened during the previous seasons.

With Dr. Koussevitzky holding his new music academy here for six weeks next Summer, a completely new aspect will be given the festival activities. It will mean, for one thing, a far larger number of young music students at the concerts. The festival will reach its height with a performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor, when for the first time here a choral work will be presented. With promise of this sort in view, the present festival has proved even more of a success than was anticipated.

JOHN CARTER IS HEARD

139

Aug 13 Tribune

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

THE closing concert of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival will be held in the Music Shed on the Tanglewood estate at Lenox, Mass., this afternoon at 3:30, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Schumann's fourth symphony, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's "La Valse" and the second symphony of Sibelius.

Judging by its first three concerts, the 1939 Berkshire Festival has continued the notable record of success made by its recent predecessors, both in its artistic standards and in constantly increasing public interest, and, so far as anything can be predicted in an unpredictable age, can be regarded as an institution of assured permanence. It has developed to an extent which its founders might well have considered unduly optimistic to hope for in five years when they held their first three concerts in 1934. The first important step in converting a hopeful experiment into one of the major summer musical events of the northeastern United States was the engagement of the Boston Symphony under its regular conductor. The second was the donation of Tanglewood for these concerts by Mrs. Gorham Brooks, and the third was the construction of the Music Shed, which housed its first audiences last summer. A prudent but far-sighted economic policy has been an important factor in maintaining and expanding this festival during its formative years.

* * *

A Record Attendance

WITH crowds ranging between 5,700 and 6,500, the average attendance this summer has been the highest so far in the festival's history. This includes, as before, both permanent and summer residents in the neighborhood and visitors, many of these traveling for considerable distances, who have come especially for these concerts. The schedule was similar in extent and character to that of 1938, but this summer the Boston Symphony brought its full complement of 108 men, as compared with a contingent of ninety-three last summer. A valuable innovation was the opening of the two Saturday morning rehearsals not only to festival members, but also to public and parochial high school pupils of Berkshire County who had attended the Layman's Music Course presented in six Berkshire schools last spring by Miss Harriet Johnson and her assistant, Miss Katharine Philbrick.

Festival visitors profited substantially by marked improvement in the arrangements for arrival, parking and departure, which were no longer handicapped by the mud which proved a drawback last year. After the opening night, considering the large number of cars involved, these were accomplished with notable speed and smoothness. Getting away, indeed, still called for a certain amount of waiting, but, since both main exits open on Route 183, between Lenox and Stockbridge, a swift departure for all will probably be unfeasible until it proves possible to effect a connection with other roads.

* * *

The Music Shed and Improvement Program

FURTHER improvements in the parking fields and grounds are included in the general program for which the festival trustees are inviting contributions from their patrons and music lovers in general, to meet an estimated cost of slightly over $60,000. In the Music Shed the program calls for the provision of roll curtains to close in the building in the case of storms, such as the one which attended the opening concerts on Aug. 3; for new chairs, for further work upon the stage and orchestra shell, and for covering, paneling and painting the inside walls. Acoustic conditions in the Shed, in the two concerts heard by this reviewer, confirmed the excellent initial impression made last summer. The only time when the instrumental tone seemed to be imperfectly balanced was in Beethoven's seventh symphony, in which the sound of the brass instruments was slightly overemphasized and set apart from the general sonorous medium. But this was an exception in an impression of general satisfaction, and the advantageous acoustic conditions of the building also prevailed for a considerable radius outside it.

In regard to the planning and construction of the Music Shed, whose dimensions are hardly suggested by its unassuming title, the part played by Joseph Franz, engineer for the festival and a member of its board of trustees, has been inadvertently underrated in previous announcements and comments in these columns. Eliel Saarinen, who drew up preliminary plans for the Shed in 1937, resigned in November of that year. The work of designing the building within the limits of a budget considerably lower than the figure required for the original plans and of supervising its construction was then taken over by Mr. Franz, who, while he incorporated some of Mr. Saarinen's ideas in the new design, had to make substantial changes in the original scheme for the financial reasons cited above. The revised design increased the seating capacity from 4,300 to the present figure of 5,700. With the new seats called for by the improvement program, this figure can be raised to nearly 6,000, while probably at least one or two thousand more can be accommodated within effective earshot outside.

* * *

Academy Opens Next Summer

THE musical academy suggested by Dr. Koussevitzky last summer as the next step in a plan for the further development of Tanglewood as a significant artistic center is to begin its first session next July. This is to be six weeks long, culminating with the festival concerts next August. The general features have already been made public, including a school orchestra and a festival chorus which will prepare Bach's B minor Mass for one of the 1940 concerts, general sessions including choral singing and lectures dealing broadly with music through the study of its development, form and style and underlying esthetic principles, individual vocal and instrumental instruction with Boston Symphony musicians among the teachers, and a special class in conducting under Dr. Koussevitzky. What is projected, it has been announced, is neither a conservatory nor summer school in the accepted sense; a large student body is to have "the opportunity for a life in music."

The importance of the cultural contribution to be made by such an academy will depend particularly on what it can offer in atmosphere and inspiration, as well as in opportunity for musical participation, beyond what is possible in a first-class music school or conservatory, that is, as a complement to existing music schools rather than as an addition to their number. Meanwhile the 1940 festival itself is to consist of six concerts, as before, but it has been said that the addition of extra concerts to the regular subscription series is quite probable.

* * *

Conservative Programs

THUS far Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire programs have not been of what might be called an extracurricular character, but have usually constituted a cross-section of the standard classic, romantic and modern repertoire presented in Boston. In the fifteen concerts of the last four festivals, including this summer's, sixty-six works or excerpts have been presented by twenty-five composers. Wagner has been represented by thirteen works or excerpts, Beethoven by seven, Brahms by five, Sibelius by four and Bach, Haydn, Ravel and Tchaikovsky by three. The orchestra has played two works apiece by Debussy, Moussorgsky, Mozart, Prokofieff, Rimsky-Korsakoff, Schubert, Schumann and Stravinsky. The list of composers represented by single works includes four Americans: Henry Hadley, the first conductor of these festivals; Aaron Copland, Edward Burlingame Hill and Walter Piston, in addition to C. P. E. Bach, Franck, Handel, Mendelssohn and Richard Strauss.

Although works which most of us would consider modern in character rather than in actual date of composition form a very small proportion of these programs, which have included no absolute novelties or imported works new to this country, Dr. Koussevitzky has presented one or more American compositions in each festival. Eleven works, the sixth and seventh symphonies of Beethoven, the first two symphonies of Brahms, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's second Daphnis et Chloe" suite, Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Scheherazade," Sibelius's second symphony, Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony and Wagner's preludes to "Lohengrin" and "Die Meistersinger" have figured in two festivals since the beginning of the Boston Symphony's association with the Berkshires.

* * *

Possibilities for Expansion

THERE has been occasional criticism of the prevalence of familiar music in the programs, but no doubt many festival patrons, both those who hear much orchestral music in the winter and those who hear little of it outside of this series, would be pleased with a continuance of such a policy, which could be carried on for several further summers without the risk of undue repetition. Still, especially if the number of performances should be increased, expansion of their scope in regard to repertoire should be in order, both in the tactful and discreet inclusion of new or seldom-heard music and in ventures into fields beyond that of the strictly symphonic list.

One already announced step in this direction is the annual inclusion of a major choral work, beginning next summer. At some later date—probably a fairly late one, owing to physical requ
—we may hope for opera performances of a standard corre
to that which is associated with the festival symphony
Meanwhile Miss Robinson Smith, president of this festival, colleagues in its direction, along with the Boston Sympho ductor, management and trustees, merit congratulations on been accomplished in the festival's relatively short history.
reached a position in which it is regarded not as a subst one of the noted European summer festivals, but as an which is important on its own account.

MUSIC OF THE TIMES: NEWS AND

A FESTIVAL LOOKS TO 1940

Despite Uncertainties Caused by War, Berkshire Fete Makes Plans for Next Summer—Season Extension Discussed

By OLIN DOWNES

THE recently completed plans of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for the year 1940 have an importance to the world of music which could not have been anticipated at the time of the festival's beginning, under the musical leadership of Henry Hadley and the presidency, then as now, of Gertrude Robinson Smith, six seasons ago. This is due first of all to the unique artistic achievements of the festival and the reputation it already enjoys throughout the land, and secondly to the circumstances of a hemisphere disrupted by war, and a world which must look to America for leadership and the maintenance of the highest standards in art.

Since Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra (following the two last active years of Henry Hadley's career) accepted the festival's invitation to carry on its project, that institution has leaped to a position in the forefront of all the important music festivals given in America. It is the youngest of the festivals of this class, the least pretentious in its proportions and the most distinguished in the nature of its offerings. It has been sparing of promises and prodigal of accomplishments for the public. It has proved again that musical offerings of the finest character, properly developed and set forth, especially in surroundings of such outdoor beauty as those of Tanglewood, may reckon in this country upon generous support. From the status of an admirable local activity the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has become an artistic asset of the nation. Its rapidly won prestige, thanks to the distinguished leader and the unsurpassed orchestra that Dr. Koussevitzky has made the perfect instrument of his will, gives it a power for good and for the constant elevation of musical standards which must be infinitely rewarding to those who have brought these things to pass.

* * *

The festival now faces problems consequent upon its own growth and the catastrophic changes that are taking place in whole sections of the modern society of which, in common with all other great American institutions, it is a part.

When the war overseas with its myriad possibilities of national involvement became an established fact, it was faced with the question of continuance. Should there be a Berkshire Symphonic Festival next season? Should it be postponed to years more propitious for works of peace and less likely to bring with them distractions, disturbances and financial tensions that might have the most serious effect upon the festival's development and fortunes?

Miss Robinson Smith represented not only her own sentiments but those of the festival board and the business and artistic management when she said that it was, if anything, more necessary to continue the festival in a period of war than of peace, and that it was particularly America's mission and local responsibility of the backers of the organization to do this.

* * *

"This is something that America has produced," she said, "that was never more in demand and more imperatively needed than today. There was never such a demand for great art, I am convinced, by a great majority of the people as there is today. There was never such a creative opportunity, in times of stress, presented before. It is not only our wish but our duty to meet that need with every power that we can bring to bear.

"We did not plan the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for a day or a season. We have tried to build solidly, conservatively if you like, for a future greater than we can know. Up to the present time we have been wonderfully successful. It must be our concern to buttress the incomparable work of Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony with a practical policy that will give their work the enduring support and security that it requires. We must not be flattered and led to too sudden expansion by success, and we must not hesitate to go forward with a predetermined plan despite obstacles."

* * *

Each season—and each of the last four seasons of the festival has ended with a financial surplus above expenses—the festival has proceeded to solidify the ground won in the last advance. Each Summer the wonderful grounds for the festival which represent the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony Orchestra are further improved for the benefit of the musicians and their patrons. Next season, for example, comfortable seats will replace the serried rows of wooden benches which now stand back of the boxes. Storm shutters, of which the imperative need is self-evident, will be provided against inclement weather. These are details of a plan, very broad, which aspires to neglect neither detail nor grand lines of development. Extension of the orchestral repertory for next season is now discussed, with the question of the number of weeks that the Symphonic Festival will run a matter of most serious debate pro and con.

Thus, while it is evident that the festival is well out of its swaddling clothes, the question of the length of its season has been the subject of prolonged debate. Of the end of the two weeks' season of last August The Berkshire Eagle remarked editorially that "if the ovation accorded to Dr. Koussevitzky had been given the benefit of a decibel reading, there is little doubt that it would have rated in intensity and fervor with the great acclamations to music and musicians of all time. The record-breaking audience of 7,000 people which gathered, however, was more than acclaiming a superb leader and a great orchestra, although that was the immediate motivation. The audience was applauding and shouting its approval of the consummation of a great idea. It was the applause of confidence and joy of a nationally conscious audience which sensed that in six years' time there had been planted firmly on American soil a musical undertaking of world importance, not merely a community-sponsored and supported endeavor which coincidentally attracted music-lovers from outside the immediate region."

* * *

Then the question was asked: Did the acclaim of the last concert, and the attendance which had grown so rapidly from year to year, and brought out the festival, in each of four successive seasons, "in the black"—did this betoken unmistakably that the festival would "continue to gather the momentum of public appeal over a national musical radius?" If a season of three weeks and nine concerts in place of two weeks and six is determined upon, would the numbers of native music-lovers diminish in proportion to the number of additional concerts given? If so, the decrease in local attendance for the nine concerts must be made up by outside attendance to replace the home audience.

Then the question, Was it desirable, under whatever circumstances, that this home audience should be replaced? One of the charms of the concerts has been their atmosphere of something simple, unpretentious, local, if anything, in manner and flavor. And would it be better to have six sell-outs as against the possibility of nine houses but partially filled?

On a later occasion there will be opportunity to speak at length of the "academy," or Music Center, which opens next Summer for a term of six weeks under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction, the last weeks to be coincident with the weeks of the concerts by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. This school will give no marks or diplomas. It will deal less with practical technical accomplishment and routine wadings through textbooks than it will insist on actual experience and understanding, by professional and amateur alike, of music.

But of that more anon. Sufficient here to record the moment when the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which promises to remain one of the few institutions that have developed in a spirit of genuine idealism and worship of beauty, has become of institutional age and looks to a future of effort commensurate with its brief but glorious past.

ITALY'S OPERA GOES ON

MILAN.

FROM Rome is announced a meeting, under the chairmanship of the Minister for Popular Culture, of the superintendents of the State-subsidized opera houses of Rome, Milan, Venice, Trieste, Genoa, Florence, Naples and Palermo. The Italian Government's intention that the music activities of the country shall proceed as usual is seen in the official statement that the coming Winter seasons in all the large centers will not only continue their normal schedules but will assume "special artistic importance." The opera bills, now definitely settled, will be published in the near future. The policy of a judicious balance between novelties, cultural revivals and repertory works is again stressed.

The Royal Opera list, to start with, is already published as follows:

Inauguration—Dec. 8, with "Falstaff" under Serafin.

Absolute novelty—Lodovico Rocca's "Monte Ivnor."

Local novelties—"La Leggenda di Sakùntala" (Alfano), "L'Heure Espagnole" (Ravel), "Le Coq d'Or" (Rimsky), "Schwarzer Peter" (Norbert Schultze).

Repertory works—"Trovatore," "Ballo in Maschera," "Meistersinger," "Tell," "Don Pasquale," "Bohème," "Rondine," "Damnation de Faust," "Freischuetz," "Elektra," "Cavalleria," "Amica," "Conchita," "Il Re," "Rusteghi," "Adriana," "Loreley" and "Favorita," plus two more chosen from "Haensel und Gretel," "Traviata," "Marriage of Figaro" and "Butterfly."

Ballets—"Le Donne di Buon Umore" (Scarlatti-Tommasini), "La Giara" (Casella) and "Petruchka."

* * *

Word from San Remo informs that with the resumption of tourist traffic on the Italian Riviera, the Casino Theatre of San Remo has established its Autumn and Winter programs, containing the usual features of opera, concerts, drama and art. The opera bill follows:

Absolute novelty—Pietro Canonica's "Amore e Vita."

Local novelties—Attilio Perelli's "La Giornata di Marcellina," Felice Lattuada's "Le Preziose Ridicole," Edoardo Trentinaglia's "Rosmunda," Strauss's "Salomé."

Repertory works—Seven items.

In the concert field San Remo promises two oratorios of Licinio Refice.

* * *

Imperturbable under the menacing war clouds, the Milanese proletariat all Summer continued to flock to its outdoor opera at the Castello Sforzesco with a joyous abandon and a confident serenity that were something of a spectacle in themselves in these tense times. The completed Summer cycle was closed according to schedule on the evening of Sept. 3 (the day of the Anglo-French declaration of war) with a "Turandot" attended by over 20,000 spectators. The season's figures just published give a clear idea of the scope and success of this ambitious undertaking, under circumstances far from favorable.

In the seven weeks' run of the Milanese bill, no less than fifty-three performances were given, divided between the following fourteen operas and one ballet: "Sieba," ballet by Manzotti and Marenco (thirteen times), "Rigoletto" (seven times), "Turandot" (five), "Ballo in Maschera," "Traviata," "Otello," "Tosca," "Butterfly" and "Pagliacci" (four each), "Lescaut," "Gloria" (Cilea), "Cavalleria," "Amica" (Mascagni) and "Siberia" (Giordano) (three each), "Francesca" (Zandonai) (twice).

The total number of spectators for the season was 782,566, an average of 14,765 a performance. The gross receipts were 2,790,000 lire ($146,475), at an average price of less than 19 cents a ticket. The price scale ranged from a nickel to 63 cents. The salaries and wages paid aggregated 2,600,000 lire, against an even 2,000,000 last Summer. The artistic, technical and labor personnel amounted to 2,049, comprising twenty-two conductors, prompters, stage directors and choreographers; 112 singers, 226 players, 184 choristers and 104 dancers.

While the attendance in this stately Sforza courtyard has rarely reached the hoped-for maximum of 30,000 a night (in view of which it had been baptized "Il Teatro dei Trentamila"), the above results are duly eloquent of the growing success of the venture. R. H.

Three of the w Tuesday; (lowe r

A EU

By JAROMI

WHEN tion
the Tre
here in New he said: "I a new work wi
harmonic-Sym
Oct. 12 in Ca

For the luc
Western Hen
ing unusual
For a Euro
rived on th
new world, shelter. M myself sta would be Carnegie audience piece wou America.

What a aspects fo
ade of ins
1931 my op had its f nich. Two man Repu against all for politi Dvorak, m in any the

In Janu largest th new work opening
Richard T

cour written a few wee and confidenc

I am writing and there are hun over the country a my music. I am writi orchestra—and I know
4,000,000 children and y exercising with violin and trumpets—instead grenades, guns and ga am writing music for b band is playing for 1 people beneath the tre park, not accompan
stepping conquest of tions. Publishers, con

Erno Balogh makes an early appearance this season with a piano recital tomorrow night at Town Hall, and Helen Traubel, American soprano, will be heard tonight in Town Hall debut recital.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS
SEP 3 - 1939

Musical Events

THE WAX LIBRARY:

Petrouchka Complete In Stokowski Album

Ballet Score Instead of Familiar Concert Version Now in Record Set

BY JOHN ROSENFIELD.

STRAVINSKY.—Petrouchka, Ballet, by Igor Stravinsky. Played by the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra under Leopold Stokowski.
Victor Album M-574. Four disks, eight sides, twelve-inch.

STOKOWSKI's new recording of Stravinsky's Petrouchka is the ballet score in its entirety and not the concertized version prepared some years ago by Koussevitzky and Stravinsky and recorded orthophonically by the Boston Symphony.

The ~~several additional~~ Petrouchka recordings, one with Stravinsky badly conducting an anonymous orchestra and others by Pierne and Defosse in France all employ the concert hall version—excepting Albert Coats' album of some years ago which, like the current set, is the original score.

One might now start an argument. As long as a phonograph session is by way of being a concert presentation, would not the suite be preferable? Stravinsky, himself, thought so. Since most musical controversies leave us astride the fence, we take no sides.

The ballet score is much more representative of Stravinsky's operating genius—his feeling for theater, the scope and subtlety of the Petrouchka idea; in short, it is the composition itself and not just a gift-wrapped sample. The concert version omits, for example, the climactic dance of the Ballerina and the Moor, a precious example of Stravinsky's mordant wit. The rest is intelligible if one takes the trouble to read a synopsis of the ballet.

This and the rest we hear in Stokowski's performance and in what must be the best technical recording of them all. Reasons for the release are probably two. The Ballet Russe, we understand, is to perform Petrouchka extensively next season and the album anticipates an inevitable record market for the music. Then, this significant music is in dire need of up-to-date recording.

The growth of Petrouchka was unique. Stravinsky was supposedly at work on Le Sacre du Printemps for the Diaghilev Russian Ballet. Needing a busman's diversion, he tackled a short orchestra piece in which the piano was to play an important part. Stravinsky writes that he was obsessed by the distinct image of a puppet coming suddenly to life, "exasperating the orchestra with diabolical cascades of arpeggi."

The exacting Diaghilev, coming to inquire about Sacre, was introduced to Petrouchka and liked him immensely. A familiar Russian story was employed as a scenario and a ballet completed. Benois worked the decors and Nijinsky was given the title role. Since 1911 Petrouchka has been one of the masterpieces of Russian ballet.

◆

Before the Eroica

BEETHOVEN.—Symphony No. 2 in D Major, opus 36, by Ludwig van Beethoven.
Played by the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Felix Weingartner.
Columbia Album M-377. Four disks; eight sides, twelve-inch.

Another fixed academic notion is dispelled by Felix Weingartner's reading of Beethoven's Second Symphony. This is not a Haydnesque symphony and now we wonder why most critics have thought so. There are richness and drama in the first movement, a breadth to the slow movement that adds depth to its contemplative serenity, a boisterousness to the scherzo that ranks it with any third movement among the Beethoven symphonies and a complex ingenuity to the rondo movement that must have bewildered an audience of 1803.

At any rate this is what the veteran Weingartner finds in the Beethoven Second, a composition with depth and structure that is closer rather than farther from the next symphony to come, the incomparable Eroica.

This isn't a traditional reading by any means. For an evaluation of the Second as a blithe, light first-period work, we refer you to Sir Thomas Beecham's album of not so long ago with the same orchestra, the London Symphony.

Weingartner's scholarship is unimpeachable and we imagine that he is right. Beethoven did not change from an eighteenth to a nineteenth-century composer in the two years between the Second Symphony and the Eroica. The essence of Beethoven was in everything he wrote and only the glib categorical listings of eighteenth-century musical criticism would deny it. In many respects the Second stands beside the Pastoral and the Eighth for authority and instrumental resourcefulness. If it hasn't the emotional greatness of the Eroica, the Fifth and the Seventh, neither have the Pastoral or the Eighth.

As Weingartner plays it, you can hear the Second with deep satisfaction and not just condescend to a charming museum piece.

Weingartner is not a showy conductor nor is the London Symphony specifically interesting in any department. Just good music, good playing, good conducting. Good music.

◆

Orchestral Sensationalism

RESPIGHI.—The Fountains of Rome, by Ottorino Respighi.
Played by the New York Philharmonic-Symphony under John Barbirolli.
Victor Album M-576. Two disks, four sides, twelve-inch.

Of the three sensational tone poems dealing with Roman scenes, the Fountains of Rome is probably the most popular. The composer, the late Ottorino Respighi, was a pupil of Rimsky-Korsakov and brought a remarkable mastery of orchestration to bear on his more individual aspirations.

In The Pines of Rome, The Fountains of Rome and Roman Festivals the aim is orchestral sensationalism—crescendos and decrescendos of prodigious scope, pianissimos that expire in whispers and fortissimos that shake the walls, slow passages that seem to hang in midair and superhuman prestissimos. Despite the pointing up for effects, Respighi's musical ideas are copious and his thematic invention notable.

Toscanini usually makes a killing with any one of the three Roman pieces and other conductors fare well provided their orchestras are adequate.

The new Victor set employs the Philharmonic-Symphony at high fidelity and the sounds are glorious. Barbirolli, the conductor, sets the pace firmly enough but lacks dynamic range or a feeling for style.

If we wanted to acquire this composition on disks, we would take Victor's earlier pair of records conducted by Albert Coates.

BLANK PAGE

This Clipping From
YONKERS, N.Y.
RECORD
APR 15 1941

WORDS and MUSIC

By H. T. BARON

Beethoven's last years were spent in writing some of his greatest works: the Ninth Symphony, the last four quartets, the "Hammerklavier" Sonata, the "Missa Solemnis." It is the latter, a massive work which consumes an hour and a half in its playing, that is given its first modern recording by Victor this month, in a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, the Harvard Glee Club, and the Radcliffe Choral Society (Albums 758-759). Soloists include Jeanette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Norman Cordon, bass, with E. Power Biggs at the organ.

Because of the comparatively limited appeal of such a work even to most collectors of recorded classics, it would hardly have been practicable for the Victor Company to make this gigantic recording in a special studio. It had to be transcribed, therefore, during an actual concert performance. Considering the difficulties involved in making records this way, the two-volume set of 24 sides is remarkably free from unfortunate breaks between record sides, and from extraneous noise; particularly so in comparison with the Bach "St. Matthew Passion" which was performed by the same orchestra and choral groups, and recorded under similar circumstances.

The "Missa Solemnis" (Op. 123) maintains a curious position among Beethoven's creations. Acknowledged as an indubitable masterwork, it is nonetheless unfamiliar to many music-lovers who are acquainted with virtually every other important composition by Beethoven. It is, of course, a work that is performed only on rare occasions, and further, there were until now no domestic recordings by which collectors of Beethoveniana could familiarize themselves with it, save by consulting a score. Too, the size of the "Missa" is enough to keep all but the musical brave at a distance; only the opera "Fidelio," of all Beethoven's output, matches it in size. Indeed, this Mass is more characteristic of Johann Sebastian Bach, Beethoven's musical predecessor, than it is of Beethoven himself.

* * *

Regarding Beethoven's choral writing, some musical scholars have maintained that his ability in this field is not consistent with his supreme artistry in the symphonic realm. The requirements of the Mass, too, imposed rigid, unwelcome restrictions upon the composer who was accustomed to expressing hmself freely. But admitting that there are technicalities about Beethoven's choral writing that performers find it difficult to surmount, the fact remains that the sum impression of the Mass, as after the chorale of the Ninth Symphony, is of a glimpse into the sublime. Beethoven indeed communed with the gods in much of his music, but nowhere else more surely than here.

Work on the "Missa Solemnis" was begun in 1818, and was designed for the ceremony of the enthronement of the Archduke Rudolph, Beethoven's patron, as Archbishop of Olmutz. But though the enthronement took place in 1820, Beethoven would not be hurried into completing the Mass; it was not until two years later that the titanic work was finally finished. The composer himself heard it performed but once, shortly before his death—and then only three of the five portions into which the Mass is divided.

The present reading contains the original Latin text, and a booklet that accompanies the recording supplies a helpful translation. To undertake the performance of such a work in its entirety requires both patience and fortitude to an extraordinary degree, but the current group of atists, it is evident at every turn, demonstrate that painstaking attention to the many intricate details of this lengthy work that make for a first-class reading of the Mass. The set has been clearly recorded, and overlooking the minor annoyances that are inevitably found in transcribing music from an actual concert, can well be considered a definitive performance of the work on discs.

* * *

A SECOND BRAHMS RECITAL

Following the suc
bum of Brahms sian basso (Set second volume prising 18 add earlier acco
Moore, h
Wolff,
harps
Alth
choice
favo
in dr

This Clipping From
DAYTON, OHIO
SUNDAY JOURNAL HERALD
APR 13 1941

"Missa Solemnis" Splendidly Recorded

By Merab Eberle

Perhap's Victor's most striking release for April is Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis" recorded by the Boston Symphony orchestra, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, the Harvard Glee club and the Radcliffe Choral society. This triumphant and majestic work is given a clear-voiced recording, one remarkably free of mechanical deficiencies. Moreover the quality of the interpretation is of high order and inspiring to the extreme.

Alexander Kipnis' fine basso is heard in a large album of Brahm's songs. The record-producing companies are now bending strenuous effort toward filling the libraries of record enthusiasts with excellent interpretations of Brahms' compositions. This latest album is well worth place in these libraries.

Something of a musical curiosity is Mozart's "Sinfonia Concertante in E-flat Major." This is interpreted for Victor by Leopold Stokowski directing the Philadelphia orchestra. The work is in the nature of a concerto for four wind instruments — oboe, clarinet, bassoon and horn. In this composition are passages having a brooding lamenting quality unusual in Mozart. The work is read in a colorful manner.

Kirsten Flagstad and Lauritz Melchior who last year recorded the great love scene of Tristan and Isolde for Victor have completed the duet from act two in "Parsifal" that in which Kundry attempts to prevail against the chastity of Parsifal but fails. This is tremendous wailing music, one vast lament. Of course, there is nothing better in the way of operatic singing to be obtained at the moment.

Among single records of note is Kerstin Thorborg's "Die Allmacht" by Schubert. The Wagnerian contralto has a glorious voice and one worth hearing. Another pleasing single disc recording includes Rossini's "Stabat Mater—Cujas Animan" and Verdi's "Requiem—Inemisco Tanquam Reus" sung by the Metropolitan tenor, Jussi Bjoerling.

This Clipping From
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR NEWS
APR 19 1941

A Koussevitzky Performance

Whether or not Victor ever made a Toscanini recording of the "Missa Solemnis" I cannot tell. But I have listened to part of two Victor albums containing the work on 12 double-side disks, six each to an album, conducted by Koussevitzky.

I have not yet had time to hear it with a score, yet I am deeply impressed with the interpretation of the Boston Symphony which was joined by the Harvard Glee Club and the Radcliffe Choral Society. Chorally the "Missa" is notoriously difficult, yet the performance is excellent, to say the least. Whatever minor deficiencies exist, have not seemed detrimental to me. Chorus tone is good. What impressed me more yet, the singing, in fact the entire performance is permenated with a quality of reverence, of the mystically inspired.

Even highly critical record collectors, I am sure, must be gratified with the quality of a recording that called for exceptionally elaborate and sensitive sound-engineering in view of the size of the participating ensemble and its diversified tonal constituents. I am grateful also for Koussevitzky's treating the solo voices as Beethoven assuredly intended them, not as vocal concert virtuosi standing out, but as priestly leaders in prayer and thus coming from the very core of the whole musical undertaking.

This elimination of everything smacking of the vocal star was contingent upon harmonious disposition on the part of the soloists, Jeanette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, alto; John Priebe, tenor and Norman Cordon, bass. I think every one listening to these records will thank them for this attitude. This "Missa Solemnis" double-set of disks fills a great need, and I believe will be appreciated duly in choral minded Pasadena.

Van Loon in Leipsic

Hendrik Willem van Loon, author of "Rembrandt," of "The Arts" and a small shelf of other best-sellers, has gathered German travel impressions and his reading of music history into an appealing volume, entitled "The of Johann Sebastian Bach." Schuster and Loeffler, d a characteristic format, somewhat in the
. There are those curiously naive and or the other a bit odd of proportioned guitar or a with the largeness of Loon is in error with, it is sur-great Bach

Press)

This Clipping From
CLEVELAND, OHIO
PLAIN DEALER
APR 27 1941

Right Off the Records

By Stewart Matter

SOME time ago the Boston Symphony under the direction of Koussevitzky performed the Beethoven "Missa Solemnis" in a manner which won the most enthusiastic reviews from critics everywhere, with Gilman in particular stating that he could conceive of no finer reading nor projection of this mighty score than that which he had heard.

Victor engineers were on hand to take it down on records and we are now much the richer for this inspired performance. The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society, Jeanette Vreeland, soprano; Anna Kaskas, contralto; John Priebe, tenor; Norman Cordon, bass, and E. Power Biggs at the organ collaborated most successfully with Koussevitzky and the Boston men.

Those who have read much about Beethoven know that he has been berated for his merciless use of the human voice. True enough, in the hands of an amateur, the human voice cannot cope with the difficulties of the score, but I have no fault to find in the masterly performance on these discs. We cannot insist too strongly that this is deeply religious music. It conforms in no way to accepted standards of church music, yet rises far above in nobility of soul and tenderness of mood. It is one of the most compelling testaments in all music.

While the performance is magnificent, the recording standard unfortunately is not what we should like to have it. The balance oftentimes is poor and the quality in heavy sections strained. When we consider the quality of combined choral and orchestral recordings we have recently had from Dresden, Rome and London we cannot help asking ourselves what is wrong with American engineers.

In spite of that, I shall treasure this inspired performance for the intensity of emotion and the dramatic grandeur of a score whose author surpassed all bounds in creating a universal creed. Victor Sets 758 and 789. $13.

A year ago Howard Barlow and the Columbia Broadcasting Co. Orchestra gave us an album of "Rediscovered Music" of Johann Strauss which proved very interesting. They have this month released a second volumn taken from scores recently acquired by the Library of Congress. Included are "Motoren Walzer," "Ballg 'schichten Waltzer," "Telegrafischer Depeschen," "Champagner Polka" and "Schnellpost Polka." Each item is a find and I reccommend the set from every angle. Columbia Set 445. $3.50.

Recommendations: Peter Warlock's "Serenade," composed in honor of Delius' 60th birthday. Played with finish by the Constant Lambert String Orchestra. Victor 13554. $1 . . . The Mozart "Concerto in E flat for two pianos" brilliantly played by Jose and Amparo Iturbi with the Rochester Philharmonic. Victor Set 732. $3.50 . . . A collection of "American Psalms and Fuguing Tunes" collected by William Billings and sung by the Madrigalists. Columbia Set 434. $2.75 . . . Wanda Singh and his Orchestra of native Indian musicians playing authentic "Echoes of India." Musicraft Set 47. $5.50.

Popular Records

Columbia has released another set in its series of hot jazz classics, this one called "Hot Trombones." Included are Jimmy Harrison, Miff Mole, Jack Teagarden, Floyd O'Brien, Jay C. Higginbotham and Benny Morton with their respective backings. Set C-82. $2.50.

One of the most clever boys in the popular field today is Joe Reichman. He has not been sensational and for that single reason I'll wager that he is in the business to stay. He copies no one and few bands today emphasize in the instrumental portions so strongly the actual lyrics as does Reichman. Listen to his "Toy Piano Minuet" and "Wise Old Owl" and see if you do not agree. Victor.

Cugat has waxed a version of the best-seller, "Amapola," and is it a honey. Has everything else on the market pushed aside. Backing is "Cancan Conga," deliciously warm. Columbia.

For a bit of intimate entertainment try Mildred Bailey's "Jenny" and "When That Man Is Dead and Gone." Decca.

Balance of the lists:

GOODMAN—"Oh, Look at Me Now" and "Lazy River."
BRADLEY—"It's Square but It Rocks" and "Prairieland Lullaby."
TUCKER—"Breakfast for Two" and "Keep an Eye on Your Heart."
TOMMY DORSEY—"Everything Happens to Me" and "Whatcha Know Joe."
WAYNE KING—"These Things You Left Me" and "We Could Make Such Beautiful Music."
PASTOR—"Maria, Mari" and "Wigwam Stomp."
MARTIN—"Breakfast for Two" and "Shadows in the Night."
HARRY'S TAVERN BAND—"Blamquita" and "Flower of Mexico."
SHAW—"I Cover the Waterfront" and "Marinela."
MADRIGUERA—"Cuba" and "Amor de Guajiro."
BARNET—"Haunted Town" and "Buffy Boy."
MILLER—"Perfidia" and "Spring Will Be So Sad."
INK SPOTS—"We'll Meet Again" and "You're Looking for Romance."
JIMMY DORSEY—"When the Sun Comes Out" and "Yours."
ANDY KIRK—"Cuban Boogie Woogie" and "Ring Dem Bells."
JOHNNY LONG—"Accidentally on Purpose" and "Walkin' by the River."

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (D 53,842) (S 71,076)

This Clipping From
KNOXVILLE, TENN.
NEWS-SENTINEL
FEB 23 1941

Brahms' Fourth Made by Koussevitzky and His Boston Symphony

(By United Press)

NEW YORK.—Brahms' Symphony No. 4 in E Minor, recorded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, is the feature offering of Victor's February list. The tonal beauties are superbly brought out by Dr. Koussevitzky and his men, reaching an impressive climax in the powerful fourth movement. It is on five 12-inch records.

Other February Victor releases:

Mozart's Concerto in E Flat Major, for two pianos and orchestra, played by Jose Iturbi and his sister, Amparo, and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra. The versatile Iturbi conducts as well as plays the first piano. Iturbi is gaining distinction as a Mozartian. His characteristic vigor does not encroach on the delicate nuances of the music. Three 12-inch records.

Schumann's Quintet in E Flat Major, played by Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, and the Primrose Quintet. This is a well-balanced performance of a popular Schumann work. Sanroma displays feeling and understanding of the composer and the quartet is, as usual, excellent. Four 12-inch records.

Wagner's "Meistersinger" overture and the prelude to the third act of "Lohengrin" by Leopold Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra. Wagnerians will hail this one with delight. Two 12-inch records.

Chopin's "Polonaise Brillante," by Emanuel Feuermann, 'cellist, and Franz Rupp, pianist. Lovely Chopin skillfully played. The arrangement for 'cello and piano is by Feuermann.

THE ORIGINAL
ROMEIKE
PRESS CLIPPINGS
220 W. 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860
Circ. (S 69,066)

This Clipping From
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
SUNDAY HERALD
FEB 23 1941

PERMANENT 20 —

BRAHMS' FOURTH SYMPHONY, Serge Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony Orchestra — America's most eloquent symphony orchestra recorded Brahms' Fourth before the musicians union banned the organization from Victor activity. The casualty's significance becomes painfully clear on hearing the Koussevitzky-conducted Bostonians in this superbly-reproduced performance. At this time when a genuinely large public has been won by good music we cannot afford the silencing of such an orchestra.

We are more moved by Brahms' other symphonies than his sorrowful Fourth. Yet we shall again and again replay such beautiful passages as the andante and the last movement, with its unusual form. (Victor.) 51

CAMBRIDGE, MASS
HARVARD CRIMSON
4/11/41

THE MUSIC BOX

By Jonas Barish '42

Well, the much-heralded, long-awaited recording of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis is out at last, (Victor, two volumes, Albums M758 & M759), and it is with regret that I report it to be an enormous disappointment. Granted the extreme difficulties posed by a choral work, nothing can justify the arrogant carelessness of a recording which, for all intents and purposes, has been thrown together without the slightest pains taken either in actual recording or in subsequent manufacture. Nothing indicates that the engineers who made the recording attended any rehearsals or had done any experimenting beforehand. The result of bad placing of the microphone is that only the orchestra records well, while the vocal parts are always confused and unclear. The soloists sound as though coming out of a distant fog, and are often completely drowned out by the orchestra. The chorus similarly, when it sings softly, becomes only an indistinct blur; when it opens up the stops, it creates a great huge blaze of speaker-shattering noise. All this could have been avoided with a little preparation. But the sloppiness did not end here. The cut-offs at the ends of records are abominably handled, coming often in the middle of a phrase (the effect is as though the soundtrack has been chopped off with an axe), while on at least three sides there is an entire half-inch of waste space at the beginning, during which the needle scrape-scrapes around, and the listener forgets what was happening at the end of the last side. All this without ~~mentioning~~ defects in the performance, such as Koussevitzky's ponderous tempo in the "Credo," and ~~the~~ inadequacy of the solo tenor.

~~In contrast to the bungled recording of the~~ Missa is Victor's album of Mediaeval and Renaissance Choral Music (M739), sung by the Pius X School of Liturgical Music. This is a fascinating collection of early chants and cathedral liturgies, with selections from later masters like Obrecht, Taverner, and Palestrina, beautifully performed by the all-female chorus of the Pius X School.

Columbia has issued a new pressing of the Brahms Third Symphony by Stock and the Chicago Orchestra (Album M443). This comes on top of the excellent Weingartner recording put out only two years ago by Columbia, and the differences between the two performances are strikingly illustrative of a difference in Brahms interpretation. Weingartner breezes through the symphony lightly and lyrically; Stock lays on it a heavy German hand. Stock's way of playing it is in the real Brahms tradition. It is the way Brahms himself played his symphonies. But whether or not Brahms knew what was good for Brahms is another matter, and the lighter, more flexible style seems to me to have more life. . . . Another Columbia recording offers the Venusberg music from Tannhaueser, whipped up a bit too violently, and rather flatly recorded, but not too bad for all that.

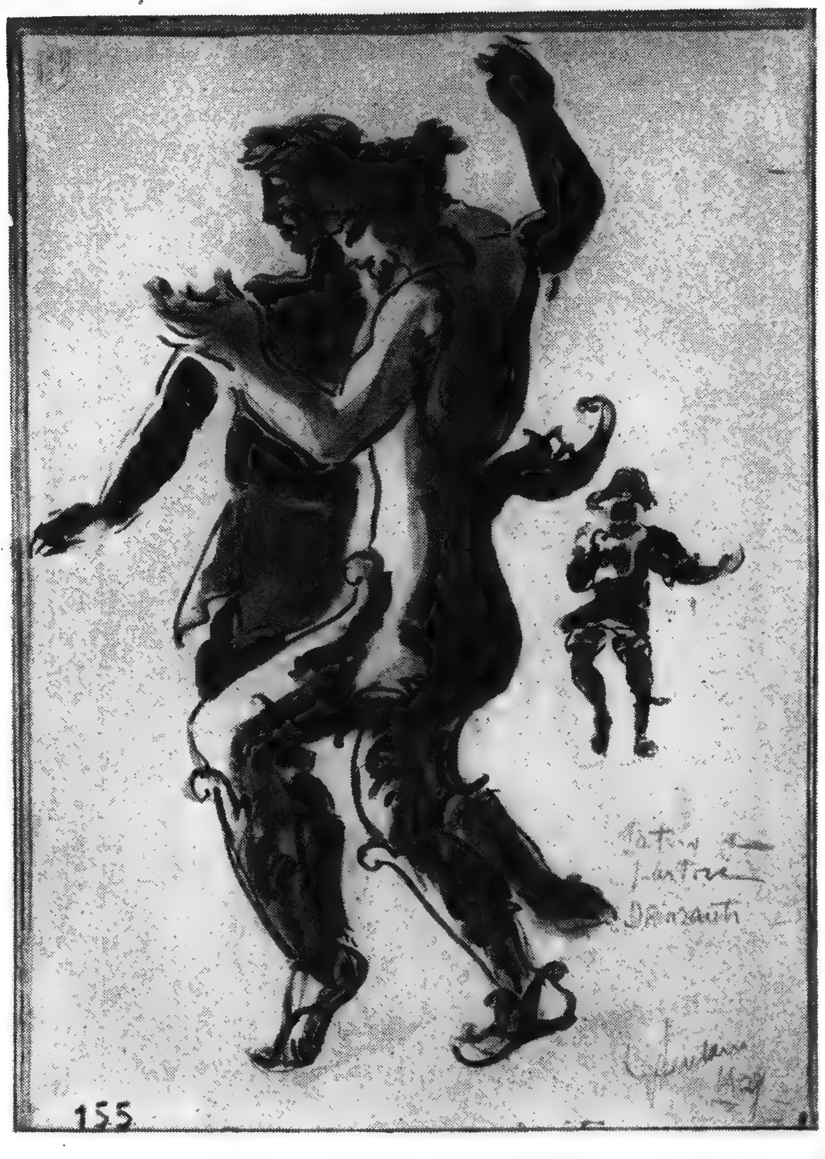
Florence Festival Provides Novelties Old and New

Re Lear, New Opera by Frazzi, Has Premiere — Bach, Cimarosa, Wagner, Rossini, Stravinsky on Programs

By DOROTHY NEVILE LEES

Photos by F. Barsotti, Florence

FINAL ACT FROM RE LEAR,
Vito Frazzi's new opera, performed for the first time at the Florence Maggio Musicale in the Teatro Comunale. When Lear brings in the body of Cordelia, it is the first time that she appears in the opera. (Scenic designs and costumes by C. E. Opp.) At right, Shepherd and Satyr, a costume design by Gino Carlo Sensani for Tasso's Aminta, represented in the Boboli Gardens.



FLORENCE.—The fifth Florentine May was rich in performances of rare artistic interest, with excellent artists and ensembles, and its success, which on the financial side was amazing, does honor to the courage and enterprise of Mario Labrocca (Florence Superintendent) and his collaborators. In spite of international tension and the fact that foreign visitors were few, full and enthusiastic audiences attended the various performances, which extended from April 27 to June 6.

The Festival opened with a fine performance of Verdi's Il Trovatore, honored by the presence of King Victor Emmanuel and the Princess of Piedmont, Royal Patroness of the Florentine May. Under Vittorio Gui, and with singers Lauri Volpi, Maria Caniglia, Ebe Stignani, Armando Borgioli, and Tancredi Pasero, the work received excellent treatment.

Frazzi's King Lear Premiered

The first world performance of Vito Frazzi's King Lear was warmly received. To an abbreviated libretto by Giovanni Papini (after Shakespeare) Frazzi wrote a score which, though lacking in definite arias, duets, or trios, disclosed the composer as a competent craftsman and profound musical personality. Vittorio Gui conducted, with Cloe Elmo, Adriana Perris, Stella Roman, Vincenzo Guicciardi, Antonio Melandri, Francesco Valentino, and Giovanni Voyer as principals. The highly effective costumes and scenery were by C. E. Oppo.

A delightful evening at the Pergola included a re-hearing of Orazio Vecchi's Amfiparnaso, enthusiastically premiered at last year's festival, and Ravel's charming L'Enfant et les Sortileges. Principal performers of the Vecchi work were Liana Cortini, soloist, and the Florentine May Musical Festival Chorus, under Andrea Morosini. For the Ravel opus principal roles were by Mmes. Bernadet, Blin, Braneze, Cernay, Lebon, Maldy, Micheau, Savoye, Mm. Giannetti, Laignez, Maquaire, Rousseau and Sceller.

Other Rarities

Rossini's masterpiece, William Tell, was given a fine restoral at the Teatro Comunale. At the initial, and following performances, Maria Benedetti, Gabriella Gatti, Alex von Sved, Todor Mazaroff, and Tancredi Pasero were the chief protagonists. Marinuzzi conducted. Gianni Vagnetti provided the scenery and costumes. A gala performance was given in the presence of the Prince and Princess of Piedmont and the Prince Regent of Yugo-Slavia and his Royal Consort during their state visit to Florence.

Other theatrical events included The Flying Dutchman of Wagner, conducted by Carl Elmendorff and artists from the Frankfort State Opera; Women's Wiles, by Domenico Cimarosa, transcribed by Ottorino Respighi, under Mario Rossi; and The Witch, comedy by Anton Francesco Grazzini (1503-1548) revised by Luigi Bonelli, with incidental music by Vito Frazzi.

Verdi's Requiem in Novel Setting

One of the most emotional and deeply impressive events of the festival was the performance under De Sabata, of Verdi's Requiem Mass, given in the Santa Croce Church, the Westminster Abbey of Italy. In the vast, dimly lighted setting, among tombs and memorials of Italy's great figures, and with a light focussed on the performers and a great Gothic cross, Verdi's masterpiece took on a new meaning, which heightened its religious character and in many respects, toned down the theatrical aspect which the Requiem usually assumes. Soloists were Maria Caniglia, Ebe Stignani, Giovanni Malipiero, and Tancredi Pasero.

The performance of Bach's St. Matthew Passion by the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra and Chorus under Wilhelm Furtwangler, was another memorable experience. Presented with the usual Germanic style and impeccable finish, this great music was deeply moving.

Two concerts were given by the excellent orchestra and chorus of the Rome Augusteo under Bernardino Molinari, the first program comprising Beethoven's Ninth, Petrassi's Ninth Psalm, the second Perosi's Resurrection of Christ and Salviucci's Alcesti. Serge Rachmaninoff, scheduled to appear as soloist under Rossi at the Vittorio Emanuele II Theatre, was prevented from appearing by illness.

Stravinsky Conducts

Outstanding in the various evening events was one at which Stravinsky conducted his Persephone, in oratorio form, with Mme. Ocampo and Frederic Anspach as soloists, and Petrouchka, made into a glowing picture of ancient Russian life by Leonide Massine and the Ballets Russes. A pair of performances by the Ballets Russes charmed the Florentines with The Love Test, Parisian Life, Beethoven's Seventh, The Lake of Swans, Blue Danube, and Hindemith's Nobilissima Visione, with Massine as St. Francis.

Tasso Pastoral Restored

The final event was an outdoor performance in the Royal Boboli Gardens, of Aminta, a pastoral poem by Torquato Tasso (1544-1595) in which nymphs and shepherds, fauns and other mythological figures, in delightful costumes by Sensini, moved about with sheep and milk-white oxen on the green slopes of the Meridiana (Green Theatre). Under the imaginative and able direction of Renato Simoni, the old sylvan poem, first performed 350 years ago on a little island in the Po in the presence of the Estense Court and the poet himself, was presented for the delight of modern eyes and ears, with music by Gluck exquisitely interwoven with the spoken dialogue. An immense moon rising behind the trees of the princely garden flooded the slopes and thickets, lent the final touch to the romantic vision.

Risé Stevens to Sing Carmen at Glyndebourne

LONDON. — Risé Stevens, Metropolitan Opera contralto, has been engaged for the title role in Carmen when it is restored next summer at the Glyndebourne Festival. Although she has not yet appeared in that part at the Metropolitan, Miss Stevens, who made her debut there last season, has sung it in Prague and South America. Carmen will be the first French opera in the Glyndebourne repertoire. John Brownlee, Metropolitan baritone, is expected to be Escamillo.

Miss Stevens this season at Glyndebourne sang Cherubino in Mozart's Marriage of Figaro.

W. T.

Toscanini to Fly to U. S.

Arturo Toscanini plans to leave Lucerne on September 14, according to the National Broadcasting Company. He will take the first trans-Atlantic air clipper on which he can receive accommodations after that date. He expects to resume his conducting of the N B C Orchestra in October, his third season in that capacity. The opening date of the series and plans for the tour of the orchestra will depend upon his decision on arriving.

Bayreuth Festival Opens

BAYREUTH. — The Wagner Festival opened here on July 25, with a large assemblage present. A feature of this year's series is a new production of The Flying Dutchman.

A review of the festival events will be published in an early issue of the Musical Courier.

Clevelanders Hail Informality of New Outdoor Concerts

Four-Week Series of 12 Programs Launched in "Garden," with Goldovsky as Soloist—Stephan Hero Applauded

By ROSA H. WIDDER

CLEVELAND, O.—The Summer Music Society under the presidency of Edgar A. Hahn feels gratified at the enthusiastic response of the public in supporting its new venture: the series of summer pop concerts, with seventy members of the Cleveland Orchestra in Public Hall.

Transforming the ground floor into a huge garden with 400 tables in spacious comfort, with cooling drinks served at intermissions, the four-week series of twelve concerts opened July 12 with an enjoyable program of the lighter classics, under the baton of associate conductor Rudolph Ringwall, who found obvious pleasure in greeting his faithful regular audience augmented to more than 6,000.

He gave informal program annotations and invited the sweltering male part of his listeners to be at ease and "remove your coats." Boris Goldovsky gave a sparkling performance of Liszt's E flat piano concerto, after which two encores were demanded. Visitors from Adelaide, South Australia, at our table, expressed delight and appreciation of the splendid orchestra.

Hero Applauded for Bruch Playing

At the second concert, Stephan Hero, violinist, was heard in a splendid performance of the Bruch G minor concerto. Hero responded to applause with the Meditation from Thais which he was forced to repeat.

An innovation took place at the third concert when Artur Rodzinski responded to an invitation from Mr. Ringwall to appear as guest conductor of his own centre, with Mrs. Etta Grainger and Sparre Olsen, Norwegian composer, beside the old carved Stabur, at Rauland, Norway.

(Continued on page 8)

PERCY GRAINGER,

PART OF THE THRONG AT AN ESPLANADE CONCERT IN BOSTON

Boston Throngs of 20,000 Attend Esplanade Programs Under Fiedler

BOSTON. — Boston's unusual summer musical entertainment, the Esplanade Concerts conducted by Arthur Fiedler, have again attracted thousands to the bank of the Charles River near the foot of Beacon Hill. An audience of 20,000, said to be the largest for an opening night in the ten years' history of these concerts, listened attentively and applauded Mr. Fiedler and his orchestra of sixty Boston Symphony men most cordially, at the first program on July 6.

The Esplanade Concerts, founded by Mr. Fiedler, have since been continuously popular. They are free and are given in the open air nightly except Saturdays. The present season will continue four weeks.

The season has two especial features: a cycle of the Beethoven symphonies (with the exception of the chorale finale of the Ninth) and three concerts for children, presented on Wednesday mornings. A decisive commentary on how much small children like good music is to be found in the numbers of children who have gathered for the first two programs, coming from all parts of Greater Boston and from the suburbs beyond.

Varied Programs Presented

In addition to standard classics, Mr. Fiedler shrewdly arranges his programs from largely familiar items of symphonic repertoire, not omitting lighter music such as Strauss waltzes and popular numbers currently in favor. The opening list had for highlights the Rakoczy March (Berlioz), the first movement of the Unfinished Symphony (Schubert), the Prelude to Die Meistersinger (Wagner), and the Second Hungarian Rhapsody (Liszt).

This season, as in the past, there have been talks on the programs by various lecturers, given in cooperation with the University Extension Division, Massachusetts State Department of Education.

FRANCIS FINDLAY,
conductor, member of the faculty of the New England Conservatory of Music, who directed the Esplanade concert on July 18. Mr. Findlay is giving a course in chrono-rhythmics, based on his recent book of the smae name, just published by Sprague-Coleman, at the summer session of Boston University.

Pops Season Concluded

Aside from the Esplanade Concerts, music in Boston is quiescent. The highly successful fifty-fourth season of Symphony Hall Pops ended at the beginning of July. Of a total of fifty-seven concerts, fifty-two were said to have been completely sold out, and few seats remained for the other five.

There was a special concert at Symphony Hall by Mr. Feidler and the Pops Orchestra, July 3, in honor of the visit to Boston of Crown Prince Olaf and Crown Princess Martha of Norway.

C. W. D.

Philadelphia Little Symphony, Under Barone, Being Formed

PHILADELPHIA.—Plans are under way for the organization of the Little Symphony Society of Philadelphia, a symphonic ensemble of twenty-two members of the Philadelphia Orchestra. The purpose is to create more opportunities for young American soloists, conductors and composers who desire to appear in a musical metropolis. Dr. Harl McDonald and Deems Taylor are honorary directors; Eugene Ormandy is honorary advisor, and Dr. Guy Marriner, Dr. James Francis Cook and Dr. Thaddeus Rich comprise the advisory commitee.

Musicians desirous of appearing with the ensemble may communicate with Joseph Barone, founder-conductor, at 700 Montgomery Avenue, Bryn Mawr.

B. J.

Margot Rebeil Sings 2 Roles At Cincinnati Opera

Margot Rebeil, soprano, sang Gretel in Hansel and Gretel and Nedda in Pagliacci with the Cincinnati Opera Company on July 26 and 29. Miss Rebeil made her opera debut in Dresden and has sung leading soprano roles with the Los Angeles Civic Opera Company.

Rocca Completes New Opera

ROME.—Lodovico Rocca, author of The Dibuk, has completed a new work entitled Monte Ivnor, libretto by Cesare Meano.

Shipman's Scrap Book
FOR DUPLICATE ORDER NUMBER
911
ASA L S SONS
Ward's
STATIONERY
FRANKLIN ST
BOSTON

END OF VOLUME

VOLUME 66

BSO

1939 - 1940

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

THIS CLIPPING FROM ESQUIRE
CHICAGO, ILL.
SEP - - 1939

Roulades and Cadenzas

Reminding late comers, coughers, whisperers and program rattlers: concerts are played to be heard

by CARLETON SMITH

• MUSIC •

I HAVEN'T been in a concert hall for six weeks, and I still live. Moreover, I can safely trust myself to speak about the subject.

Concerts, as we know them, are barbaric affairs, endured only because there seems to be no less painful way of participating in certain musical experiences. From the point of view of the really cultivated listener, the average concert is an absurdity. First of all, the notoriety that attaches to our top-flight warblers and thumpers, and their understandable desire to collect the maximum rent on their talents, forces us to hear them in the company of several thousand others, in barns four times a natural size . . . and under circumstances that successfully defeat their efforts.

Music that was written for an 18th century salon is now performed in settings that dwarf the Yankee Stadium. Not a half dozen cities in the land have a theatre suitable for a program of intimate French songs, or Schubert or Wolf lieder. And those that have, do not use them. Pianists are busy turning their fingers into steel hammers and experimenting with electric sounding boards. In the newest concert halls, the instruments of our forefathers can no longer be heard. Amplification, or "re-enforcement systems," as they are politely termed, are needed. Not only is there little possibility of intimate absorption with the music, but in six seats out of ten you get anything but a true reflection of what is being performed. Either you are in the lap of a performer who is gauging his effects for listeners a quarter of a mile away, or you hear only an etching. Distortion is inevitable.

The ease with which this escapes listeners puzzles me. They seem to assume that so long as they are within four walls they hear perfectly all that goes on. They complain now and then that they can't see, but never that they can't hear. Obviously, they listen with their eyes. Their actions prove it. If you are skeptical, be on hand and use your ears, whether at the Metropolitan Opera House or any other theater. Invariably, half the audience talks uninterruptedly through the entire orchestral introduction, settling down only when the curtain rises. And again, the moment the curtain falls, no matter how significant or touching the final chords, they start right up again. Never once at the Met have I been able to hear the end of the first act of Die Walküre.

The entire matter of applause needs regulating. It is tolerated, after all, because performers need it—in fact, wheedle it from the audience: observe a Kiepura "triumph." It does serve to relieve the tension, and apparently no less obtrusive way of showing appreciation exists. But the pounding of palms after a particularly expressive bit of music certainly carries us straight back to our monkey days.

The actions of most people at concerts are reminiscent of the jungle. They chatter, gabble, fill the air with small talk, bat their programs over their knees, and catapult from side to side in their seats. They come late and leave early. If they aren't thrashing through a score, they hum every familiar tune. If they have a paunch and a stiff shirt, they snore. In summer as in winter, they sneeze and cough and call to each other in every key but the right one. In short, they succeed in making concerts a cross between a nightmare and a morning in the chest and lung ward of an Arizona State Hospital.

The critics one overlooks. After all, it's their job. For them, music is a bore; and deadheads never properly appreciate anything. Like me, they doubtless have discovered that the best way to listen to music is horizontally. But, paying customers . . . ? No wonder my Viennese friend was sure we were lousy with money. "Yes, New York is the wealthiest city I know," he said. "Think of all the people who pay from three to eight dollars merely for the privilege of talking through Wagner." More astounding is the fact that they out-talk him. I know concert-goers —not lately arrived from Yonkers or the Antipodes, but residents of Park Avenue and Sixty-seventh Street—who can and do drown out the Philadelphia trombones and trumpets. Only the orchestra's entire battery offers them serious competition . . . and they are sure to have the last word.

QUIET
PLEASE!
WATSON

All this, plus the prize-fight atmosphere, the does-Koussevitzky-do-it-better-than-Toscanini approach that plagues public music making in New York City, causes thoughtful lovers of the art to seek consolation at home. There, at least, they can create their own milieu, and listen with an intensity unimagined by the boors, snobs, and ill-bred Babbitts who go to be seen. The human organism (fortunately) adjusts itself to many things. But when a 250-pound heifer bedecked in jewels, accompanied by a pork-packer, thuds down the aisle every Monday night in the middle of the second act and squeezes by me, stomping over my patent leathers, only to squeeze out again fifteen minutes before the end, I see the point of the guy who said music should not be performed at all; that having been conceived by the composer, it should remain in vacuo, "like some unexpressed dream of the Almighty."

* * *

Of course, we've improved. At least, a few Americans today dare to be direct and spontaneous in their response to music. And the notion of a silent audience exists. In the days when Charleston, S. C., was the musical capital of America and concerts of music were first given there by the St. Cecilia Society, "the noise and buzzing of conversation kept up the whole time, despite the fact that placards asking for silence hung on every door and wall." The first open-air concerts in New York, held in the Battery Gardens in 1765, were advertised as "a complete band of music plus genteel fireworks," and newspapers announced "Music Ministering Comfort to the Afflicted Heart" and "Orchestral Pieces with ice cream thrown in with the price of admission."

Nowadays, people buy tickets to hear an entire symphony. The first French conductors to visit us interspersed among overtures and single movements of symphonies the "Katydid" polka, the "prima donna" waltz, and the "Firemen's Quadrille" with actual squads of firemen from a nearby company. The playing of single movements of a symphony was de rigeur those days. In fact, symphonies were played piecemeal all during the last century. In Paris then, as now, the most cultured and sophisticated city on the Continent, Berlioz doled out the Beethoven Symphonies, one movement at a time . . . and played single sections from his own Symphonie Fantastique.

When Chopin gave his farewell concert in Warsaw 110 years ago, the principal item was his E-Minor Concerto, and he played it with the first and the last two movements separated by an aria. At that time, audiences were not yet prepared to swallow an entire concerto at one sitting, any more than the audiences of Handel's time were prepared to swallow the whole of Israel in Egypt without having its parts interspersed with lighter ballads.

Pondering the progress that's been made, we may hope that some thousand years hence, concert goers will find out that possessing ears is not a sufficient qualification for understanding music . . . that listening is more than a passive function . . . that a listener may make quite as fruitful a contri-

Continued at top of page 158

24X

Roulades and Cadenzas

Continued from page 83

bution to the musical experience as the composer and the interpreter. There is a sense in which music may be said not to exist until it is heard.

The immediate problem is to do something for those innocents who lack sufficient imagination to create their own atmosphere and must always be at the mercy of the insensitive horde . . . for those who cannot stomach the mechanical impediments of the gramophone and the radio . . . for those gregarious souls who feel lonesome at home.

The Legislature should act. Listening, as we know it, is a community enterprise, and rules for it should be laid down, exactly as for sewage disposal. Or, perhaps Vigilantes' Committees should be formed—they've worked for less worthy causes.

We've pussy-footed long enough. There's been too much coddling of these coughers and babblers, program rattlers and wigglers, whisperers, prancers, late comers, and other human pests. Doors should be shut and no one admitted (unless I happen to be late) before the interval. If the Metropolitan can get by with it in Cleveland, why not in New York?

When the audience is steeped in manifest ignorance and doesn't know the end of a movement from the end of a symphony, a red-and-green signal system can be installed, as a board member suggested to the Indianapolis Symphony. Programs should be printed, as they are at the Toscanini concerts, on cloth or blotting paper.

A chest and throat specialist in the foyer should dispense permits to enter the auditorium. For the benefit of those who get by him . . . and afterwards feel the urge, the conductor might be persuaded to hold up his handkerchief, as Frederick Stock did, before every fortissimo crash, so that they may relieve themselves.

Ushers at concerts in the World of Tomorrow will be big, strong, silent men. As Olin Downes suggested, they will yank every disturber "to his feet, choking him to keep him quiet as he is carried up the aisle. At the head of the aisle he will be gagged and slapped into a straight jacket. He will then be escorted to a stone courtyard back of the building, where the audience during the intermission may witness the execution."

Pending that Utopian day, you might discipline yourself. Not only silence but spiritual communion is necessary for the full appreciation of music. If, through an act of God or your own carelessness, you must disturb the calm, do it with care and proficiency. Remember von Bülow's dictum to the lady with the fan: "Madam, if you must fan, please do so in time with the music." ⧺

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

SEP 1 - 1939

Music Went Right on Without the Baton

What happens when an orchestra conductor loses his baton or conducting stick in the midst of his conducting?

Apparently nothing, at least so far as the audience is concerned.

While Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition" at the Berkshire Festival recently, the "magic wand" slipped from his hand landed in the viola section. Only those who sat in seats close to the orchestra witnessed the incident. The music went right on.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
HERALD-TIMES

SEP 2 - 1939

Squalus Relief Fund Has Reached $2772.76 Total

The Squalus relief fund for the benefit of the families of the victims, the result of the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the opera field on the Arthur L. Hobson estate at Little Boar's Head is $2772.76, the treasurer, George B. Lord, announced today.

The books will be kept open and any other contributions will be taken care of.

The fund is being turned over to Lieut. Oliver Naquin, U. S. N., commanding officer of the Squalus and in charge of the Squalus fund.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS

SEP 3 - 1939

Summer Music Fetes Convert Critic's Rest Into Busman's Holiday

Concerts and Festivals Are Features of Vacation Season at Many Major Resorts

By RALPH LEWANDO
Music Editor

Summer music events continue to spring up increasingly throughout the country. More than ever before music is taking hold of the public mind and arousing interest in the art. Myriads of music-minded persons are flocking to these concerts (mostly out-of-doors) and have shown a desire to support worthy undertakings to the limit.

From coast to coast and from Canada to the Gulf, summer concerts, festivals and what-have-you are making successful bids in much the same way as the summer theaters are doing. Cities large and small, towns and hamlets more or less in the news are coming even more to the fore through the attention they arouse through the sponsoring of various sorts.

Mr. Lewando

As for the music critic, holiday bent, it is becoming more and more difficult to take a vacation without it becoming something of a busman's holiday. Even so, music activities when thrust upon one during the summer has its advantages, and affords at least a modicum of satisfaction.

When this reviewer set out for the annual period of vagabonding, intent on summering on the scenic outskirts of the beautiful 231-year-old town of Ridgefield, Conn., instead of simmering otherwise in conventional manner, he vowed to simply live the simple life, wear old clothes, and very few of those, stop shaving, forget all about the various aspects of do-re-mi-fa-sol with its demands of concert-going, music making and teaching, etc., and launch into the contrasting interests of country life, battling Japanese beetles, outwitting moles if possible, thereby contributing a wee bit to making a portion of the land fit for democracy's well-being.

But lo! the call of the wild—or the clefs, if you will—sounded stentorianly to disturb the serenity of bucolic life. For the nonce, these resolves were sidetracked and your humble writer journeyed forth to heed the call.

* * *

First came a trip to Stockbridge, Mass., to attend the opening performances of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra led by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky which provided something worthwhile for the 85-mile trip there.

This festival is growing by leaps and bounds, not as a mere spectacle but as a definite contribution to the musical world. From far and wide come people of every walk of life to participate in the pleasure of listening to programs of a type that Dr. Koussevitzky is a past master in formulating.

The lists are distinguished in choice of compositions. The opening event brought to performance J. S. Bach's 3rd Brandenberg Concerto consisting of an allegro moderato and allegro between which the same composer's Sinfonia from his cantata, "Christ lag in Todesbanden," was inserted; Korsakoff's tonally irridescent "Scheherazade," and Brahms' 1st symphony.

The second event brought to the fore the Concerto for Orchestra by the gifted American composer, Walter Piston, of Harvard University; the Sibelius 5th symphony and the 7th of Beethoven. The third concert featured Carl Philip Emmanuel Bach's D major concerto for stringed instruments which has been further made impressive through the arrangement by Maximilian Steinberg who has added parts for flute, two oboes (the second replaced in the slow movement by the English horn) labeled "oboe alto" in the score, bassoon and horn; Prokofieff's delightful orchestral fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," with Richard Hale as narrator; and Tschaikowsky's 4th symphony in F-minor.

The second series of concerts, namely the fourth, fifth and sixth events, was given over to the playing of Beethoven's 2nd symphony, Richard Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra," the Ravel orchestration of Moussorgsky's colorful "Pictures at an Exhibition;" Haydn's B-flat symphony, No. 102, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," four Wagnerian items: overture to the "Flying Dutchman," prelude to "Lohengrin," Bacchanale from "Tannhauser" and prelude to "Die Meistersinger;" Schumann's 4th symphony in D-minor, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's "La Valse," and the Sibelius symphony No. 2.

Conductor

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two concerts to be given at Syria Mosque during the coming season under Pittsburgh Orchestra Ass'n. auspices.

* * *

Berkshire Festival ramblings: A number of Pittsburghers were spied in the audience, among these Mr. and Mrs. Paul Affelder and their mother, Mrs. Louis Affelder; Dr. Avinoff, of Carnegie Institute, and his niece, Mary Scanlon, of Carnegie Tech, were thoroughly interested auditors. Neals Wiebel, formerly music critic of the Post-Gazette and now residing in New York, hugely enjoyed the proceedings . . . Judge Brennan, of Wheeling, and his family, always on hand for these performances, coming over from their summer place at Haines Falls, N. Y., were most enthusiastic about the music. Judge Brennan is a member of the board of the Wheeling Symphony Orchestra which is now led by Antonio Modarelli, formerly conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Society . . . This year the full complement of the Boston Orchestra's 103 men was in evidence . . . Viewing in interest were the Saturday morning rehearsals of the orchestra which were open to an invited portion of picket holders.

More than 3000 took advantage of such a rare opportunity to watch and hear Dr. Koussevitzky in action as he molded each phrase and section of a score into an artistic entity. . . . Average attendance was more than 6500, a couple of performances attracting more than 7000 of paid admissions. . . . Quite a number of music critics came from various cities to report the proceedings. . . . All of these were duly entertained at the home of George Edman, of the Berkshire Eagle of Pittsfield, Mass., who is the very efficient and considerate publicity director of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

And so another great year of achievement has been chalked up by this festival which in large measure is due to the splendid leadership of its president, Gertrude Robinson Smith. . . . In a speech Miss Smith stated that the Festival Ass'n. would be glad to receive donations in any amount from $1 to $10,000. But she stressed the idea that "it is not our desire to have the festival subsidized by a few wealthy sponsors, but we want to keep it at all times a purely democratic undertaking, which the public might rightly consider its own."

At a picnic given for Boston Symphony members by Dr. Koussevitzky, Carleton Smith, noted writer-lecturer spoke about heretofore unknown Russian and Finnish music. The talk was illustrated by records brought back by Mr. Smith during his 40,000-mile air tour of Russia and Mongolia. . . . At the picnic a new Negro singer was introduced in the person of Dorothy Maynor who sang songs and arias accompanied at the piano by Bernard Zighera, the orchestra's principal harpist. . . . Dr. Hugo Leichtentritt, Harvard University musicologist, gave an informing lecture at Curtis Hotel, Pittsfield, Mass., on "The Orchestra Score and Its Use for the Music Lover." Using the score of Beethoven's 2nd symphony by way of illustration, Dr. Leichtentritt expressed opinion that "only from the work of art itself can much of real value and knowledge be acquired by students and listeners."

Roulades and Cadenzas

Continued from page 83

bution to the musical experience as the composer and the interpreter. There is a sense in which music may be said not to exist until it is heard.

The immediate problem is to do something for those innocents who lack sufficient imagination to create their own atmosphere and must always be at the mercy of the insensitive horde . . . for those who cannot stomach the mechanical impediments of the gramophone and the radio . . . for those gregarious souls who feel lonesome at home.

The Legislature should act. Listening, as we know it, is a community enterprise, and rules for it should be laid down, exactly as for sewage disposal. Or, perhaps Vigilantes' Committees should be formed—they've worked for less worthy causes.

We've pussy-footed long enough. There's been too much coddling of these coughers and babblers, program rattlers and wigglers, whisperers, prancers, late comers, and other human pests. Doors should be shut and no one admitted (unless I happen to be late) before the interval. If the Metropolitan can get by with it in Cleveland, why not in New York?

When the audience is steeped in manifest ignorance and doesn't know the end of a movement from the end of a symphony, a red-and-green signal system can be installed, as a board member suggested to the Indianapolis Symphony. Programs should be printed, as they are at the Toscanini concerts, on cloth or blotting paper.

A chest and throat specialist in the foyer should dispense permits to enter the auditorium. For the benefit of those who get by him . . . and afterwards feel the urge, the conductor might be persuaded to hold up his handkerchief, as Frederick Stock did, before every fortissimo crash, so that they may relieve themselves.

Ushers at concerts in the World of Tomorrow will be big, strong, silent men. As Olin Downes suggested, they will yank every disturber "to his feet, choking him to keep him quiet as he is carried up the aisle. At the head of the aisle he will be gagged and slapped into a straight jacket. He will then be escorted to a stone courtyard back of the building, where the audience during the intermission may witness the execution."

Pending that Utopian day, you might discipline yourself. Not only silence but spiritual communion is necessary for the full appreciation of music. If, through an act of God or your own carelessness, you must disturb the calm, do it with care and proficiency. Remember von Bülow's dictum to the lady with the fan: "Madam, if you must fan, please do so in time with the music." ⵌ

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
SEP 1 - 1939

Music Went Right on Without the Baton

What happens when an orchestra conductor loses his baton or conducting stick in the midst of his conducting?

Apparently nothing, at least so far as the audience is concerned.

While Dr. Serge Koussevitzky was conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," at the Berkshire Festival recently, the "magic wand" slipped from his hand landed in the viola section. Only those who sat in seats close to the orchestra witnessed the incident. The music went right on.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PORTSMOUTH, N. H.
HERALD-TIMES
SEP 2 - 1939

Squalus Relief Fund Has Reached $2772.76 Total

The Squalus relief fund for the benefit of the families of the victims, the result of the concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the opera field on the Arthur L. Robson estate at Little Boar's Head is $2772.76, the treasurer, George B. Lord, announced today.

The books will be kept open and any other contributions will be taken care of.

The fund is being turned over to Lieut. Oliver Naquin, U. S. N., commanding officer of the Squalus and in charge of the Squalus fund.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PITTSBURGH, PA.
PRESS
SEP 3 - 1939

Summer Music Fetes Convert Critic's Rest Into Busman's Holiday

Concerts and Festivals Are Features of Vacation Season at Many Major Resorts

By RALPH LEWANDO
Music Editor

Summer music events continue to spring up increasingly throughout the country. More than ever before music is taking hold of the public mind and arousing interest in the art. Myriads of music-minded persons are flocking to these concerts (mostly out-of-doors) and have shown a desire to support worthy undertakings to the limit.

From coast to coast and from Canada to the Gulf, summer concerts, festivals and what-have-you are making successful bids in much the same way as the summer theaters are doing. Cities large and small, towns and hamlets more or less in the news are coming even more to the fore through the attention they arouse through the sponsoring of various sorts.

As for the music critic, holiday bent, it is becoming more and more difficult to take a vacation without it becoming something of a busman's holiday. Even so, music activities when thrust upon one during the summer has its advantages, and affords at least a modicum of satisfaction.

Mr. Lewando

When this reviewer set out for the annual period of vagabonding, intent on summering on the scenic outskirts of the beautiful 231-year-old town of Ridgefield, Conn., instead of simmering otherwise in conventional manner, he vowed to simply live the simple life, wear old clothes, and very few of those, stop shaving, forget all about the various aspects of do-re-mi-fa-sol with its demands of concert-going, music making and teaching, etc., and launch into the contrasting interests of country life, battling Japanese beetles, outwitting moles if possible, thereby contributing a wee bit to making a portion of the land fit for democracy's well-being.

But lo! the call of the wild—or the clefs, if you will—sounded stentorianly to disturb the serenity of bucolic life. For the nonce, these resolves were sidetracked and your humble writer journeyed forth to heed the call.

* * *

First came a trip to Stockbridge, Mass., to attend the opening performances of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra led by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky which provided something worthwhile for the 85-mile trip there.

This festival is growing by leaps and bounds, not as a mere spectacle but as a definite contribution to the musical world. From far and wide come people of every walk of life to participate in the pleasure of listening to programs of a type that Dr. Koussevitzky is a past master in formulating.

The lists are distinguished in choice of compositions. The opening event brought to performance J. S. Bach's 3rd Brandenberg Concerto consisting of an allegro moderato and allegro between which the same composer's Sinfonia from his cantata, "Christ lag in Todesbanden," was inserted; Korsakoff's tonally irridescent "Scheherazade," and Brahms' 1st symphony.

The second event brought to the fore the Concerto for Orchestra by the gifted American composer, Walter Piston, of Harvard University; the Sibelius 5th symphony and the 7th of Beethoven. The third concert featured Carl Philip Emmanuel Bach's D major concerto for stringed instruments which has been further made impressive through the arrangement by Maximilian Steinberg who has added parts for flute, two oboes (the second replaced in the slow movement by the English horn) labeled "oboe alto" in the score, bassoon and horn; Prokofieff's de[illegible] orchestral fairy tale, "Peter [illegible] Richard Hale [illegible] Tschaikowsky's 4th [illegible] F-minor.

The second series of concerts, namely the fourth, fifth and sixth events, was given over to the playing of Beethoven's 2nd symphony, Richard Strauss' "Thus Spake Zarathustra," the Ravel orchestration of Moussorgsky's colorful "Pictures at an Exhibition;" Haydn's B-flat symphony, No. 102, Stravinsky's "Le Sacre du Printemps," four Wagnerian items: overture to the "Flying Dutchman," prelude to "Lohengrin," Bacchanale from "Tannhauser" and prelude to "Die Meistersinger;" Schumann's 4th symphony in D-minor, Debussy's "Afternoon of a Faun," Ravel's "La Valse," and the Sibelius symphony No. 2.

Conductor

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two concerts to be given at Syria Mosque during the coming season under Pittsburgh Orchestra Ass'n. auspices.

* * *

Berkshire Festival ramblings: A number of Pittsburghers were spied in the audience, among these Mr. and Mrs. Paul Affelder and their mother, Mrs. Louis Affelder; Dr. Avinoff, of Carnegie Institute, and his niece, Mary Scanlon, of Carnegie Tech, were thoroughly interested auditors. Neals Wiebel, formerly music critic of the Post-Gazette and now residing in New York, hugely enjoyed the proceedings. . . . Judge Brennan, of Wheeling, and his family, always on hand for these performances, coming over from their summer place at Haines Falls, N. Y., were most enthusiastic about the music. Judge Brennan is a member of the board of the Wheeling Symphony Orchestra which is now led by Antonio Modarelli, formerly conductor of the Pittsburgh Symphony Society . . . This year the full complement of the Boston Orchestra's 103 men was in evidence . . . Vieing in interest were the Saturday morning rehearsals of the orchestra which were open to an invited portion of ticket holders.

More than 3000 took advantage of such a rare opportunity to watch and hear Dr. Koussevitzky in action as he molded each phrase and section of a score into an artistic entity. . . . Average attendance was more than 6500, a couple of performances attracting more than 7000 of paid admissions. . . . Quite a number of music critics came from various cities to report the proceedings. . . . All of these were duly entertained at the home of George Edman, of the Berkshire Eagle of Pittsfield, Mass., who is the very efficient and considerate publicity director of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

And so another great year of achievement has been chalked up by this festival which in large measure is due to the splendid leadership of its president, Gertrude Robinson Smith. . . . In a speech Miss Smith stated that the Festival Ass'n. would be glad to receive donations in any amount from $1 to $10,000. But she stressed the idea that "it is not our desire to have the festival subsidised by a few wealthy sponsors, but we want to keep it at all times a purely democratic undertaking, which the public might rightly consider its own."

At a picnic given for Boston Symphony members by Dr. Koussevitzky, Carleton Smith, noted writer-lecturer spoke about heretofore unknown Russian and Finnish music. The talk was illustrated by records brought back by Mr. Smith during his 40,000-mile air tour of Russia and Mongolia. . . . At the picnic a new Negro singer was introduced in the person of Dorothy Maynor who sang songs and was accompanied at the piano by Bernard Zighera, the orchestra's principal harpist. . . . Dr. Hugo Leichtentritt, Harvard University musicologist, gave an informing lecture at Curtis Hotel, Pittsfield, Mass., on "The Orchestra Score and Its Use for the Music Lover." Using the score of Beethoven's 2nd symphony by way of illustration, Dr. Leichtentritt expressed opinion that "only from the work of art itself can much of real value and knowledge be acquired by students and listeners."

THIS CLIPPING FROM SACRAMENTO, CALIF.
UNION

2

SEP 3 - 1939

Summer Music Hailed Most Rapidly Growing American Cultural Activity

All But 13 States Now Boast Extended Series; Every New Major Venture in 1939 Successful

By JOHN SELBY
Associated Press Arts Editor

NEW YORK, Sept. 2.—It's probably your own fault if you didn't get your share of the good music offered all America in the summer just ending. Summer music is, perhaps, the most rapidly growing American cultural activity, just as it is one of the latest undertaken. Only 13 states have no extended series of summer concerts, and even these are littered with park bands, school festivals, civic festivals and summer theaters which employ music to some extent.

The other states have all this, and in addition at least 28 major enterprises one of which, the gargantuan nine-week series in Grant park, Chicago, plays to 3500 persons each summer.

The 28 most important summer concert series are scattered through all sections of the country, most numerous in the east, least so in the south.

All New Projects Successful

It is estimated that every American had some contact with music above the dance band grade this summer; the 28 major projects of which charge an admittance fee, entertained nearly 9,000,000 people.

The season's individually ranged in length from the 12-week season of the St. Louis municipal opera, which shows nightly in Forest park, to the two-week season, three concerts a week, of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Stockbridge, Mass.

There were five important new projects launched this summer, all successful. And of the 28 big ones, 18 are less than 10 years old.

It is also notable that no major summer series failed to open this season, although one, Robin Hood Dell in Philadelphia, almost passed out.

Free Concerts Draw Most

Probably the two largest things of their sort in the world are the Grant park series in Chicago, and the 22-year-old concert series of the Goldman band in New York.

The latter estimates its audience for the summer at 2,000,000, one and one-half million below the Chicago venture.

Both are free.

The unique Boston "Pops" are far and away the oldest summer venture, having paid their way in Symphony hall, Boston, for 54 years.

Boston's Symphony Unique

Boston also has the distinction of being the only symphony orchestra in America offering 11 months of employment to its men.

After the winter symphony season the "Pops" run two months, with Bostonians munching sandwiches and drinking beer to the music of 93 symphony men.

Then 60 of these adjourn to the Esplanade, where a month of free concerts draws 250,000 people.

In August, the entire orchestra goes to the Berkshires for the symphonic festival — the only summer venture in which any American symphony appears with complete winter personnel, under its regular conductor, in programs rehearsed as if for winter audiences.

This has been called the finest festival, musically speaking, in the world today.

Use of Soloists Increasing

Phenomena include greatly increased use of soloists, and more frequent changes of conductors.

New York's stadium concerts employed 28 soloists in 10 weeks, and half that many conductors. The Hollywood bowl likewise used 14 conductors and a good many soloists.

But summer opera, except of the light variety, is very sparse.

Cincinnati's zoo opera is the only major summer series wholly devoted to opera, approximately 40 performances in six and one-half weeks. But only five of the big 28 had any opera, and these had only dribbles.

Opera at Dog Track

Odd situations abound:

Light operas are being given nowadays in a dog track at Virginia Beach, Va., and in Fort Worth, Tex., Billy Rose's 1936 enterprise is carried on as a permanent venture—called Casa Manana, and rather more like Hollywood than Symphony hall.

California has gone in for bowls, there being three besides the parent bowl at Hollywood.

Colorado's cafe society revival at Central City, this year of "The Yeoman of the Guard," is still unique.

Lily Still Top Favorite

But most remarkable of all is probably Lily Pons' record as a crowd puller. In New York she brought 22,000 people to the stadium, largest audience in 22 years; in Chicago a quarter of a million, perhaps the largest audience ever to hear a singer in history.

Counting the free series, all this was done on an amazingly small income from tickets. A total of approximately $1,650,050 was paid in, though more than twice that was spent.

"Public spirit" made up the rest.

Even the weather gave everybody a break. Only two places had serious trouble and five reported no rain at all on any concert night.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
SEP 3 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle
SEP 3 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
SEP 3 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM TOLEDO, O.
TIMES
SEP 3 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST-DISPATCH
SEP 3 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR
SEP 3 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM
SEP 3 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM DETROIT, MICH.
NEWS
SEP 4 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MILWAUKEE, WIS.
Sunday News and Sentinel
SEP 17 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
SEP 3 - 1939

Dr. Hanson Guest Conductor Tonight; Grant Park Season Comes to an End

The first of two guest appearances as conductor of the NBC orchestra will be made tonight by Dr. Howard Hanson, American composer-conductor, and director of the Eastman School of Music.

The last of the season's broadcasts from Grant Park will be heard this week. Reginald Stewart's appearances as both conductor and piano soloist, with the Toronto Promenade Symphony Orchestra, is another bright item.

Handel, Mozart, Chopin and others less well known are on the list of composers for the Radio City Music Hall today (WBZ noon-1). Maurice Baron will conduct the string symphony. Viola Philo, soprano, and Henrietta Schumann, pianist, are soloists.

The NBC Orchestra, with Dr. Hanson conducting and Hendrik de Vries as flute soloist, will present the following program tonight (WEAN 8-9): Overture "Comes Autumn Time," Sowerby; dirge from "Indian Suite," MacDowell; scherzo from "Afro-American" sympathy, Still; "Night Soliloquy," for flute and string orchestra, Kennan; Symphony No. 2, Hanson.

"Goin' South," with Clyde Barrie, baritone, the "Deep River Boys" and Charles Paul, organist, will present spirituals on WPRO this afternoon from 2:30 to 3. A symphony orchestra conducted by Rosario Bourdan will be heard from 3 to 3:30, and the Summer Sunday Hour at 9.

Howard Barlow conducts a pop concert tomorrow (WPRO 5-5:30). The Voice Program (WJAR 8:30-9) features Alfred Wallenstein conducting the symphony orchestra, and Jose Echaniz, pianist.

Tuesday brings "Exploring Music," with Bernard Herrmann and a concert orchestra (WPRO 5-5:30). Wednesday, at 9:30 p. m., the CBS Orchestra will be heard.

The Toronto Promenade Symphony with Mr. Stewart as both conductor and pianist will play on Thursday night (WEAN 9-10). Beethoven's No. 5 is the chief work.

Make Mine Music, conducted by Percy Pasternak, with Pauline Rennie and Alexander Morgan as soloists, will be heard on Friday (WPRO 9-9:30 p. m.)

RECORD REVIEW

When the Boston Symphony Orchestra played Serge Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf" here for the first time last season there were those in the audience who saw in the offing a recording of the work. It has finally been issued, and the same organization, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, has done an excellent job of it. Richard Hale appears as the Narrator.

The program is simple, the cast comprising Peter, a bird, a cat, a duck and a wolf. They are represented by specific instruments or a group of them. The Narrator tells the elementary tale, The music is rhythmic, colorful, zesty, whimsically descriptive.

A hew album of Famous American Marches, played by the Edwin Franko Goldman Band, has just been issued and for folks who like such music, it is a worthwhile collection . . . The marches played are Lights Out, El Capitan, Semper Fidelis, Washington Post, American Patrol, On the Mall, Anchors Aweight and Our Director.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM
SEP 7 - 1939

-:- Music Notes -:-

Bach and Mozart will occupy prominent places in the repertory of the Boston Symphony Orchestra next season. Besides which, American composers are in line for encouragement via performance.

Music already selected for the forthcoming Boston Symphony program includes Debussy's Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian and Mahler's Song of the Earth. Nor is Stravinsky to be neglected, for his new symphony in C Major is slated for presentation, as well as Oedipus Rex, with the composer conducting the latter.

* * *

Ernest McChesney, American tenor, returns soon from abroad, where he fulfilled several concert engagements. While there Mr. McChesney studied and coached the role of Romeo, in which he will make his debut with the Chicago City Opera Co. in November.

* * *

The American Conservatory of Music, Drama and Dance, a non-profit organization for the discovery and development of deserving talent, will begin its fall term on Oct. 9. Head of the music department is Maurice Jacquet. And the staff also comprises Povla Frijsh, Charles Naegele, Marion Bauer, Baroness Errante and Mrs. W. Henry Zay.

Dance training will be under the supervision of Hanya Holm. The drama department will be under the direction of Robert Porterfield, with Donald Wetmore, Steward Chane, C. Edward Hale and Elena Balieff as assistants.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
SEP 9 - 1939

SYMPHONY TO GIVE 5 CONCERTS HERE

Will Open Season in Boston Oct. 13.—Continues to May 4.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 59th season, which will include five concerts in Metropolitan Theatre in this city, will open in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, Oct. 13, and continue to May 4.

There will be 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts and six pairs of Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall. The customary concerts in other New England cities and in New York and the West will be given.

On Oct. 5 and 7, two pre-season concerts will be given in Carnegie Hall, New York, the music to be American, as part of the festival of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. American music will be given more than usual prominence in the Boston season, it is announced.

Among the works planned for the season are Mahler's "Song of the Earth;" Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian;" a new symphony in C major by Stravinsky, and Bach's mass in B minor. Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" will be revived, under the direction of the composer.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will give "a fuller representation than is customary of the music of Bach and Mozart," it is announced. Orchestral works of Tchaikovsky and a concert performance of his opera, "Pique-Dame" will be presented in a Tchaikovsky Festival, marking the 100th anniversary of his birth.

Among the season's soloists will be Josef Hofmann, Rudolph Serkin, Walter Gieseking and Jan Smeterlin, pianists; Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, and Emanuel Feuermann, 'cellist.

The season will be Dr. Koussevitzky's 16th consecutive one as conductor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST
SEP 9 - 1939

Boston Symphony to Start Season Oct. 5

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its fifty-ninth season, contrary to all precedent, in Carnegie Hall, New York. Two concerts will be given here on Thursday and Saturday evenings, October 5 and 7, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct two programs of American music, past and present, as a part of the festival to be given by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. The season proper will open in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Friday, October 13, and will extend through May 4. This will be the sixteenth successive season under the leadership of Serge Koussevitzky.

The conductor announces a few of the works to be included in the season's repertory. There will be a larger representation than usual of the music of Bach and Mozart. A number of American works will also be played through the season. Music to be included will be Debussy's "Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian," and Mahler's "Song of the Earth." Stravinsky's new Symphony in C major is to be played, and his "Oedipus Rex" is to be revived, the composer conducting his own score.

The last two pairs of concerts of the season will be devoted to the music of Tchaikowsky, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of his birth. In addition to his orchestral works there will be a concert performance of the opera, "Pique Dame."

Bach's Mass in B minor will be performed at a special concert in April.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

SEP 7 - 1939

RUTH PEACOCK OBOE SOLOIST JOINS CONSERVATORY STAFF

Miss Ruth Peacock of West Roxbury, who has been teaching oboe in the Boston public school system has joined the staff of the Springfield Conservatory of Music and will teach oboe here this season. Miss Peacock is a pupil of Fernand Gillet of the Boston Symphony orchestra. She has registration of pupils from Mount Holyoke college and from other surrounding places.

Miss Peacock is a former member of the People's Symphony orchestra of Boston and has played with the Providence Symphony, the Women's Symphony of Boston and the Smith college orchestra as oboe soloist.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

SEP 9 - 1939

Hub Symphony Orchestra Oct. 13

Reminder that musical activities hereabouts will soon be resumed is the announcement that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 59th season in Symphony hall on Friday afternoon, Oct. 13. Continuing until May 4, there will be the usual series of 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts. Commuters will be glad to hear that the six pairs of Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts will be offered. In the past few seasons these have been increasingly popular, helping to make the superb orchestra a New England institution. And the standard of the programs bears comparison with the longer established series. There will be the usual New York series and concerts in New England cities and the West.

Dr. Koussevitzky, by report, plans this season to give fuller representation than usual to the music of Bach and Mozart. And at a special concert in April the Bach B minor mass will be presented. Works of a later period which he expects to present this season are Mahler's "Song of the Earth" and Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian." Novelty will be a new Symphony by Stravinsky, and his "Oedipus Rex" will be revived under the baton of the composer. The last two pairs of concerts in the season will commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Tschaikowsky and will be devoted to the playing of his compositions, including a concert performance of his seldom-heard opera "Pique-Dame."

Before the opening of the Boston season Dr. Koussevitzky will present on Oct. 5 and 7 in Carnegie hall, New York, two programs of American music, past and present, in conjunction with the festival sponsored by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. More American music will figure in the Boston season.

The soloists engaged to appear in the Friday and Saturday series include Josef Hofmann, who has not played with the orchestra for a number of years, and three other pianists more recently heard—Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking and Jan Smeterlin (these pianists are to play in concertos of Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin and Szymanowski). The violinists Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti are announced, and the violoncellist Emanuel Feuermann, who is to make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Singers are to be heard in the works by Mahler, Debussy and Bach mentioned above; also in Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" and Tschaikowsky's "Pique-Dame."

S. R. F.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM

SEP 9 - 1939

Boston Symphony To Open Season Here

Contrary to all precedent, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 59th season in Carnegie Hall. Two concerts will be given there on Oct. 5 and 7, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct programs devoted to American music past and present, as part of a festival to be sponsored by the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers.

The season proper will begin in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Oct. 13. This will be the orchestra's sixteenth successive season under the leadership of Mr. Koussevitzky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

SEP 9 - 1939

Brooklyn Institute Concert Series Opens October 11

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences announces that the number of concerts, recitals and lectures on music and the dance will be greatly increased in its program for 1939-1940 at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. In all, fifty-three events have already been planned and others will be announced during the season. This program will open Wednesday evening, October 11, with a special concert, which will include performances by a symphony orchestra, a large chorus and a ballet group.

Heading the musical organizations appearing under the auspices of the Institute at the Academy of Music is the Boston Symphony Orchestra and its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The orchestra will give five concerts in the Opera House of the Academy of Music on the following evenings: Friday, November 24; Friday, January 12; Thursday, February 15; Friday, March 15, and Friday, April 5.

Subscription sale for the orchestra's Brooklyn series is now open and will continue until the remaining seats are sold.

The Institute's largest subscription series, "Music and the Dance," consists of the following eight concerts and four ballet programs by internationally famous artists:

Josef and Rosina Lhevine, Wednesday, October 18; Bali Dancers, with Devi Dja, Wednesday, November 1; Lotte Lehman, Tuesday, November 14; Emanuel Feuermann, Monday, December 4; New Friends of Music Orchestra, Fritz Stiedry conducting, Wednesday, December 20; Jascha Heiftez, Wednesday, January 3; Jooss Ballet, Tuesday, January 16; Lauritz Melchior, Monday, January 29; Mozart Boys' Choir, Wednesday, February 21; Ted Shawn and his Men Dancers, Monday, March 4; Vladimir Horowitz, Monday, April 18, and a Negro Festival, featuring the Eva Jessys Choir, Wednesday, April 10. All of these concerts will be held in the Opera House of the Academy of Music at 8:30 P. M.

The institute will also present a number of chamber music and ensemble programs in the Academy's Music Hall. Among the groups to participate in this series are the Trapp Family Choir, the Budapest String Quartet, Webster Aitken and Frances Blaisdell, pianist and flautist, accompanied by chamber orchestra; the Tollefsen Trio and the newly formed Chamber Music Guild of New York, under the direction of Dr. Felix Guenther, which will give three Sunday afternoon programs of rarely performed masterworks for larger ensembles.

An innovation in the Institute's work during the coming season will be provided by a special series of recitals by young artists from the metropolitan area. These recitals will be held on Sunday afternoon throughout the season.

Outstanding among the numerous lecture and lecture recitals to be given at the Institute is a special series of twelve lectures, "The Background of Contemporary Music," conducted by Jonathan Schiller.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

SEP 9 - 1939

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 59th season in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Friday afternoon, Oct. 13.

The season will continue until May 4 with the usual series of 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts, and six pairs of Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall. There are to be concerts as usual in other cities of New England, New York and the West.

Much music of special interest, both new and old, will be heard in the course, as well as a larger representation from the standard symphonic repertory. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has drawn up a plan of certain works to be heard in this, his 16th successive year as the orchestra's conductor. Mahler's "Song of the Earth," and Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian" will be played at the Friday and Saturday series; also a new Symphony of Stravinsky, in C major, and his "Oedipus Rex," which is to be revived under the direction of the composer. The conductor will give a fuller representation than is customary of the music of Bach and Mozart. Bach's Mass in B minor will be performed at a special concert in April.

Tchaikovsky Festival

The last two pairs of concerts of the season will be devoted to music of Tchaikovsky, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of his birth. In addition to his orchestral works, there will be a concert performance of the opera "Pique-Dame."

Two pre-season concerts are announced to be given in Carnegie Hall, New York. Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct on Oct. 5 and 7, programs of American music, past and present, as part of the festival to be given by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. American music will figure more prominently than usual in the Boston season.

The Soloists

The soloists engaged to appear in the Friday and Saturday series include Josef Hofmann, who has not played with the orchestra for a number of years, and three other pianists more recently heard—Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking and Jan Smeterlin.

These pianists are to play in concertos of Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin and Szymanowski.

The violinists, Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti are announced and the cellist, Emanuel Feuermann, who is to make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Singers are to be heard in the works by Mahler, Debussy and Bach mentioned above; also in Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," and Tchaikovsky's "Pique-Dame."

LOWELL COURIER-CITIZEN.
SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1939

Hub Symphony Orchestra to Play Oct. 13

Will Open 59th Season with Usual Series of 24 Pairs of Concerts—New York Program Oct. 5.

Reminder that musical activities hereabouts will soon be resumed is the announcement that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 59th season in Symphony hall on Friday afternoon, Oct. 13. Continuing until May 4, there will be the usual series of 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts. Commuters will be glad to hear that the six pairs of Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts will be offered. In the past few seasons these have been increasingly popular, helping to make the superb orchestra a New England institution. And the standard of the programs bears comparison with the longer established series. There will be the usual New York series and concerts in New England cities and the West.

Music in Prospect.

Dr. Koussevitzky, by report, plans this season to give fuller representation than usual to the music of Bach and Mozart. And at a special concert in April the Bach B minor mass will be presented. Works of a later period which he expects to present this season are Mahler's "Song of the Earth" and Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian." Novelty will be a new Symphony by Stravinsky, and his "Oedipus Rex" will be revived under the baton of the composer. The last two pairs of concerts in the season will commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Tschaikowsky and will be devoted to the playing of his compositions, including a concert performance of his seldom-heard opera "Pique-Dame."

American Music.

Before the opening of the Boston season Dr. Koussevitzky will present on Oct. 5 and 7 in Carnegie hall, New York, two programs of American music, past and present, in conjunction with the festival sponsored by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. More American music will figure in the Boston season.

The Soloists.

The soloists engaged to appear in the Friday and Saturday series include Josef Hofmann, who has not played with the orchestra for a number of years, and three other pianists more recently heard—Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking and Jan Smeterlin (these pianists are to play in concertos of Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin and Szymanowski). The violinists Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti are announced, and the violoncellist Emanuel Feuermann, who is to make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Singers are to be heard in the works by Mahler, Debussy and Bach mentioned above; also in Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" and Tschaikowsky's "Pique-Dame."

S. R. F.

TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1939

MUSIC

Symphony Season To Begin Oct. 13

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its 59th season Friday afternoon, Oct. 13, at Symphony Hall, in the first of the Friday afternoon concerts. The season will continue until May 4, with the usual series of 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts and six pairs of Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall.

As in the past, there will be concerts in other cities of New England and the West as well as the regular evenings in New York city. There will be two pre-season concerts in Carnegie Hall, to be given as part of the festival sponsored by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. At the last two pairs of concerts of the season, the programs will be devoted to the music of Tchaikovsky, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of his birth. In addition to orchestral works by the Russian composer, there will be a concert performance of his opera, "Pique Dame."

Serge Koussevitzky, beginning his 16th season as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has announced that among other new and seldom heard compositions, there will be Mahler's "Song of the Earth," "Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian," Stravinsky's new symphony in G major and "Oedipus Res," the latter to be revived under the direction of the composer; Bach's B minor Mass, to be played at a special concert in April, and a fuller representation of the music of Bach and Mozart than has been customary in past years.

Soloist who will appear in the Friday-Saturday series include Josef Hofman, Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking, Jan Smeterlin, pianist, who will play in Concertos by Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin and Szymanowski; Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, and Emanuel Feuerman, 'cellist.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

SEP 9 - 1939

Music and Musicians

Prelude to the New Season — Barbirolli Announces Novelties — Other News.

By WILLIAM G. KING.

Unless conditions here change very radically in the next few weeks, there appears to be little likelihood that Europe's war will curtail very seriously the 1939-40 music season in the United States.

It is, of course, too early to speculate upon the number of recitals already booked for the local auditoria, which may have to be canceled because the artists scheduled to give them cannot come to this country, but present information indicates that this number will be comparatively small, and it seems certain that the great orchestras and opera-companies will be able to carry on as usual. It is reassuring to recall that so many of the world's outstanding musicians now are Americans, or are in process of becoming Americans, and that, whatever the outcome of the catastrophe across the waters, they will be concentrating their activities in the United States more than ever before.

The New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society, as an example, is going forward with plans for one of the most ambitious seasons in its long history. The return earlier this week of its orchestra's conductor, the British-born John Barbirolli, removed any uncertainty which may have existed concerning the effect of the war upon its leadership. Mr. Barbirolli, a veteran of the first world war, applied for American citizenship in April of 1938.

He spent his vacation from the Carnegie Hall podium in England and France, largely in preparation of the works on an imposing list of "novelties" which will add unusual interest to the new season's programs. The list includes well over a score of important first performances and revivals.

New Weinberger Work.

The opening group of concerts on October 12, 13 and 15 will bring the first hearings anywhere of Jaromir Weinberger's Variations and Fugue on "Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree," which is dedicated to the Society and its conductor. Also on the program for these concerts is a Mozart Suite for Strings in a new arrangement by Mr. Barbirolli.

On October 19 and 20, the first complete performance by the Society of Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe" Suites Nos. 1 and 2 will be given. Mr. Barbirolli has bridged the two suites with other music from the ballet and the work, in its new arrangement, requires some thirty-five minutes to play.

On October 26 and 27, William Walton's Overture, "Portsmouth Point," will be played for the first time by the Society. A feature of the October 29 program will be a performance of Henry F. B. Gilbert's Comedy Overture on Negro Themes.

On November 2 and 3, Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco's Second Piano Concerto will have its first performance in America, and the same composer's "Twelfth Night" Overture will be played by the Society for the first time.

On November 11 and 12 the saxophonist Sigurd Rascher will be the soloist in the first American performances of the Debussy Rhapsody for Saxophone and Orchestra in the revised version by Ernest Ansermet, and in the first New York performances of the Ibert Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra.

November 16 and 17 will bring the first New York performances of "The Wonderful Mandarin," by Bela Bartok, and on November 18 and 19, Arthur Foot's E Major Suite for Strings is listed for the first time on a program of the Philharmonic-Symphony.

Other 'Firsts.'

On April 11, the world premiere of "Moby Dick," dramatic cantata based on Melville's novel by the young American composer, Bernard Hermann, will be given. Other events on the list,, for some of which definite dates have not yet been set, include the first performance of a new arrangement of the Tchaikowsky Violin Concerto by Fritz Kreisler, with the arranger as soloist; the first New York performance of a suite arranged by Gordon Jacob from the works of William Byrd; a revised version of John Powell's suite, "A Set of Three"; the first New York performance of Karl Holler's Hymn for Orchestra on Gregorian Choral Melodies, and the world premiere of the "Cortachy Symphony," by the American composer, Antonio Lora.

Other works by prominent contemporary composers, which, as far as available records indicate, will be having their first New York performances when Mr. Barbirolli and his men play them this season, include Ernst von Dohnanyi's "Symphonisches Minuten"; a suite from the ballet "L'Age d'Or," by Dmitri Shostakovitch; a suite from Arthur Bliss's ballet "Checkmate"; Germaine Tailleferre's Concerto for Two Pianos and Female Voices, in which the duo-pianists, Ethel Bartlett and Rae Robertson, will be soloists; Nicolas Miaskowski's Symphony No. 15 in D Minor; the same composer's Violin Concerto, completed only last year; a Rumba by the South American composer, Caturla; and a Suite of Dances by Arthur Benjamin.

Infrequently heard works dating from another day which Mr. Barbirolli has scheduled, include the prelude to "The Dream of Gerontius," by Elgar; Bruckner's Symphony No. 7 in E Major; and Hermann Goetz's Symphony in F.

The latter composition, Mr. Barbirolli tells me, holds a particular place in his affections for another reason besides its musical worth. It was on the program of the first concert he played as a member of an orchestra, when he was a ten-year-old student of the 'cello.

The young conductor was married in England last July 5 to Evelyn Rothwell, distinguished English oboist. She is to join him here early next month, and they will make their permanent home in New York.

Boston Symphony.

The Boston Symphony will break a precedent of fifty-nine years' standing by opening its 1939-1940 season in New York instead of Boston. On October 5 and 7, it will give concerts of American music, past and present, in Carnegie Hall, as part of a music festival sponsored by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. It will play its first Boston concert on October 13, in Symphony Hall.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, its conductor, has announced that "there will be a larger representation than usual" of the music of Bach and Mozart in this season's programs, and that works of a number of American composers also will be heard. A new Stravinsky symphony will be introduced, and the same composer's "Oedipus Rex" will be revived. Other events of outstanding interest will be performances of Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian" and Mahler's "Song of the Earth"; and two pairs of concerts devoted to the music of Tchaikowsky, given in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of his birth. A feature of these will be a concert version of his opera "Pique-Dame." The Bach B-Minor Mass will be performed at a special concert in April.

The New Friends of Music today announced the complete programs for the sixteen Sunday afternoon concerts to be given at Town Hall this season, the first of which takes place on October 29. This year, the fourth in which the organization has presented its noteworthy series of chamber-music concerts, all of the quintets and piano trios of Mozart, Beethoven and Brahms are included in the programs.

Among the soloists and chamber-music groups who will participate are the Serkin-Busch Trio; Myra Hess, pianist; Elisabeth Schumann, soprano; the Pro Arte Quartet; William Primrose, violist; Hortense Monath, pianist; the Budapest Quartet; Enid Szantho, contralto; the Gordon Quartet; the Kolisch Quartet, and the Philharmonic-Symphony Quartet.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWOOD, MASS.
MESSENGER

SEP 9 - 1939

Sharon Authoress Has Story in the Post

SHARON—The first appearance of the work of a new fiction writer in the pages of the internationally known publication, The Saturday Evening Post, is always of interest to that great army of American readers, who enjoy creative writing of the short story type.

When the writer is a local person, particularly a well-known woman, admired for her charm and respected for her ability and intelligence, that interest is intensified to an unusual extent for the residents of the community in which the writer makes her home and mingles with them in the work-a-day tasks of earning a living.

Miss Margaret Lee Runbeck of this town would appear to have attained the secret ambition of every writer of fiction by the publication in last week's edition of the Post, of her latest story, "Reply requested."

In common with many of Miss Runbeck's stories, which are tales about children and homey folks, is the delightful story of a child who saw only what interested him, a Dad that wanted to forego a wanderer's restlessness, to come home to a hard won peace, and the reply that went across the sea in answer to a radio form, "Reply Requested."

Miss Runbeck takes quite casually the acclaim that has come to her through the so-called "making" of the well-known publication. For several years she has written serial stories published by the American Magazine, Good Housekeeping, McCall's and Woman's Home Companion, has written and saw published two books and contributed countless short stories for magazines and newspapers.

"Perhaps it is because my stories have in the past been published in periodicals read for the most part by women," she says, "that may account for their not having been brought to the attention of male readers. I do know that my father in Washington seemed first aware that I was able to earn a living as a writer, when he was informed of my having a story published in the Post."

Miss Runbeck lives in an English brick manor house that she designed herself, a house that clings to a hillside and has rooms on five different levels. She lives there quietly with her sister and four-year-old niece, a curly-headed tot who wants to start attending school at once.

She started writing campus news for a school publication while attending high school. An article on Girls' Camps attracted the attention of C. M. Gunther, founder of the Campfire Girls' organization. Upon her graduation from Chicago University, she was employed by him in this work among young women. From there she went to the Christian Science Monitor, where she pursued elusive facts throughout Boston and its suburbs.

She followed women's activities, did art criticism, straight news, and made herself generally indispensible to that paper. An assignment from the editor of the Monitor to write a story on the Sharon Bird Sanctuary first brought her to Sharon, and because she liked the sound of its name, the songs of its birds and the friendly hospitality of its residents, she decided forthwith to make it her home.

She has no hobby other than to enjoy good music, and looks forward to the open season when she is a regular attendant at the Boston and New York Symphony concerts.

Miss Runbeck's home includes a beautiful finished studio with a large fireplace, but she accomplishes little there in the way of real work. Life is too full of gay temptations at home to apply one's self to serious work, she says. So she commutes to Boston each day to a business-like office, believing writers should keep regular working hours. There she dictates to an efficient secretary the beautiful stories so reminiscent of American life, that have been read by people at all ends of the earth.

It was in that business-like office that she wrote, "For Today Only." The novel of a department store sale, of the men and women who were part of it, how it affected their lives and what it did to love. The novel has already gone into two printings.

Explaining how she came to write a novel with a department store background, Miss Runbeck says, "I was always interested in department stores, which seems to me a still-life of desire and necessity. I wrote fashion copy for a large store some years ago and of course spent much time in the various departments. Since then, although I buy much less than the ordinary customer, I still spend a great deal of time in stores plagued by this particular fascination."

It was the publication of Miss Runbeck's first novel, "People Will Talk," the tale of gossip in a small town and its far reaching effect that gave her courage to give up newspaper work. This book ran into a dozen printings, is found in practically every public library in this country and had a wide sale abroad.

"With the proceeds of the sale of that novel I decided to make fiction writing my life work, and with that aim I have worked hard ever since toward that end," she says. In addition to her work she has became a popular speaker at women's clubs, takes time out to work in a beautiful garden at her Maskwonicut st. home, enjoys bicycle riding, and takes an active interest in church work.

Modestly enough, this capable young woman, whose stories are so widely read, quoted from and commented on even by the European press, holds forth a distinct word of encouragement to that vast array of people who aspire to be writers. She says, anyone who is intelligent, observant, and diligent may train themselves to write for most people lack the "stick to it attitude" that will, if pursued long enough, invariably bring success. I have worked as hard at learning my profession, as any individual studying law or medicine or in fact any of the professions. As one goes on he naturally improves, and I feel that each year I obtain a wider and broader scope that has shown in my work."

During the past summer, Miss Runbeck spent her vacation "ancestor hunting" in Sweden. Flying from London to Stockholm, she met a relative who teaches in one of the universities there. Together they visited the town of Runbeck, spelled as her own name is today, since her ancestors founded it in the 12th century. She spent several pleasant weeks interviewing the inhabitants of the little hamlet and gathering material for her work.

Miss Runbeck is plump, lively and witty, with a refreshing personality to a public weary of synthetic sex literature. By creating typical characters of the hustle-bustle, struggle-clamor, fight and fume existence of American life, she has today become one of the country's outstanding successful novelists and magazine short story writers.

Hub Symphony To Play in N. Y.

adv Sept 10

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky directing, has been chosen to present the two final concerts in the Festival of American Music in New York, October 1 to 7, it was announced yesterday.

Boston's orchestra will present the symphonic section of the program. Other sections will include musical comedy, swing, brass band, Negro and popular songs.

The two New York concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will precede the regular opening of the orchestra's 59th season.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN

SEP 10 1939

CLOUDS OF WAR HOVERING OVER HUB SYMPHONY

String Players Abroad In Europe May Be With French Army

Boston, Sept. 9 — (AP) — War clouds are hovering over one of the world's greatest music-making organizations—the Boston Symphony orchestra.

Three French-born string players are abroad somewhere in war-troubled Europe—and the orchestra, which today announced it would open its 59th season in New York Oct. 5 and 7, would like the men back.

Presumably, the men—none of whom are first desk players—have either joined the military services or are attempting to obtain passage to the United States, but until word has been received orchestra officials are keeping their fingers crossed.

The orchestra is somewhat less concerned over the future of several of its key woodwind and brass players, who also are French-born, and who, admittedly, it would be difficult to replace. All of the latter, however, are in this country, and it is believed their ages would preclude any military activity.

"In any event," one official said, "the orchestra is unlikely to be embarrassed by the war."

Back in 1917 . . .

War currents have played an important part in Boston Symphony history. Back in October, 1917, audiences became quite upset over the fact a German, Dr. Karl Muck, was conductor. Indeed, before one scheduled concert in Providence, R. I., a demand was made that Dr. Muck conduct the "Star-Spangled Banner" to "prove his loyalty." The conductor declined on grounds he had not been given time for rehearsal, and, although he subsequently played the national anthem at other concerts in the East, the resultant furore led to his resignation.

Ironically, the prospectus for Conductor Serge Koussevitzky's 16th consecutive season as musical director here announces that the emphasis for 1939-40 will be upon the works of Bach, a German, and Mozart, an Austrian.

Also, the last two pairs of the 24 Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts will commemorate the 100th birthday anniversary of Tchaikowsky.

Russians Invited.

Two Russians—Igor Stravinsky, who is scheduled to lecture on poetry at Harvard university this winter, and Nicolai Malko, have been invited to appear as guest conductors, but whether they will do so depends upon their ability to leave war-stricken Europe.

Dr. Koussevitzky promises the usual number of new compositions, among them a recent symphony by Stravinsky, as yet unheard. That composer, if he arrives, also is expected to revive and conduct his "Oedipus Rex."

Soloists engaged include Pianists Josef Hofmann, Rudolph Serkin, Walter Gieseking and Jan Smeterlin; Violinists Jascha Heifetz, and 'cellist Emanuel Feuermann.

For the first time in its history, the orchestra will open away from its Symphony hall home, two New York concerts being listed as part of the music festival to be given by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. The Boston opening has been set for Oct. 13.

(6)

LOBE—SEPTEMBER 10, 1939

MUSIC AND MUSIC

Koussevitzky to Begin Symphony Season Oct. 13

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will begin the 59th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with concerts at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon, Oct. 13, and Saturday evening, Oct. 14. He will then enter his 16th consecutive year as conductor of the great orchestra which is Boston's musical glory.

What should prove an event will be concert performance of Tchaikovsky's opera "Pique-Dame" during a two weeks' Tchaikovsky Festival at the end of the season. May 7, 1940, will be the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth.

Dr. Koussevitzky plans to concentrate more than usual on Bach and Mozart. Some of the outstanding scores due for performance are Bach's B minor Mass, to be given at a special concert in April; Mahler's "Song of the Earth" and Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian." A new Symphony in C major by the contemporary Russian, Igor Stravinsky, will be introduced, and the same composer's choral score, "'Oedipus Rex," is to be revived. Stravinsky himself will conduct "Oedipus Rex." It will be remembered that the noted Russian is to spend the season as occupant of the Charles Eliot Norton chair of poetry at Harvard.

It is understood that two new American scores—a symphony by Howard Hanson, and an overture by William Shuman—may be performed. Nicolai Malko, a Russian, has been invited to conduct as guest later in the season.

Soloists engaged for the Friday-Saturday series are pianists Josef Hofmann—who has not appeared with this orchestra for several years—Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking and Jan Smeterlin; violinists Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti, and Emanuel Feuermann, cellist, who will be heard with the Boston Symphony for the first time. Piano concertos by Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin and the late Polish composer, Karol Szymanowski, are scheduled, but which artist will play which concerto is not specified. Nor have the singers for the previously mentioned scores by Mahler, Debussy and Bach, and for Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" and Tchaikovsky's "Pique-Dame" been announced.

The Boston season will, as usual, bring 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts, and six pairs on Monday evenings and Tuesday afternoons. The orchestra will also visit New York and other cities. Season tickets are available for all the Symphony Hall series. Two special pre-season concerts are to be given in Carnegie Hall, New York, Oct. 5 and 7, in connection with the festival of the Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. American music will be heard exclusively at each, and Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
Brooklyn
SEP 10 1939

INSTITUTE OF ARTS TO BEGIN SCHEDULE

Varied Program of Brooklyn Society Opens Wednesday With Concert Festival

53 EVENTS ARE ON LIST

Boston Symphony to Present Series of Five Concerts Under Koussevitzky

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences will offer this season an extensive program of concerts, recitals and lectures on music and the dance, including fifty-three events, at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, it was announced yesterday.

The program will open Wednesday night, Oct. 11, with a concert festival to include performances by a symphony orchestra, a large chorus and a ballet group.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will give five concerts on the nights of Friday, Nov. 24; Friday, Jan. 12; Thursday, Feb. 15; Friday, March 15, and Friday, April 5. Subscription sale for the series is now open and will continue until the remaining seats are sold.

The institute's largest subscription series, "Music and the Dance," is enjoying a popular response, it was said. Eight concerts and four ballet programs will be offered.

Schedule of Programs

The schedule follows:

Joseph and Rosina Lhevinne	Oct. 18
Bali and Java Dancers, with Devi Dja	Nov. 1
Lotte Lehmann	Nov. 14
Emanuel Feuermann	Dec. 4
New Friends of Music	Dec. 20
Jascha Heifetz	Jan. 3
Jooss Ballet	Jan. 16
Lauritz Melchior	Jan. 29
Mozart Boys Choir	Feb. 21
Ted Shawn and His Men Dancers	Mar. 4
Vladimir Horowitz	Mar. 18
Negro Folk Festival	Apr. 10

The institute will also present a number of chamber music and other ensemble programs. Among the participants will be the Trapp Family Choir, the Budapest String Quartette, Webster Aitken and Frances Blaisdell, pianist and flutist, accompanied by chamber orchestra, the Tollefsen Trio, and the newly formed Chamber Music Guild of New York, directed by Dr. Felix Guenther.

A special series of recitals by young artists from the metropolitan area also will be offered. Lectures and lecture recitals will include a series of twelve lectures, "The Background of Contemporary Music," by Jonathan Schiller, director of the RCA Victor lecture bureau.

Other lecturers will be Aaron Copland, the composer; Dr. Guenther of Queens College, and Grant H. Code, associate editor of the "Dance Observer."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
SEP 10 1939

Bostonians Announce Two Special Events

American Compositions To Be Performed in Carnegie Hall in October

Contrary to its customary procedure of beginning its season in Boston, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its next season in New York in Carnegie Hall with two concerts on Thursday and Saturday evenings, Oct. 5 and 7. The programs, which will be directed by Serge Koussevitzky, will be devoted to American music of the past and present, and will constitute part of the festival to be given by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. The regular season will commence in Boston in Symphony Hall on Oct. 13 and will continue through May 4. This will be the sixteenth successive season under Mr. Koussevitzky's direction.

Mozart and Bach will figure more extensively in the programs than usual. Works by American composers will be performed during the course of the season. Among the compositions scheduled for performance are Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian" and Mahler's "Lied von der Erde." Stravinsky's new Symphony in C major will be played, and his "Oedipus Rex" will be revived, with the composer conducting.

The final two pairs of concerts of the season will be given over to the works of Tchaikovsky in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of his birth. In addition to purely orchestral works, a concert version of his opera "Pique Dame" will be presented. Bach's B minor mass will be performed at a special concert in April.

The subscription series in Carnegie Hall will include five evening concerts on Nov. 23, Jan. 11, Feb. 16, March 14 and April 4, and five matinees on Nov. 25, Jan. 13, Feb. 17, March 16 and April 6. The series at the Brooklyn Academy of Music will take place on Nov. 24, Jan. 12, Feb. 15, March 15 and April 5.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
SEP 10 1939

CHEMISTS TO HEAR GAINS IN RESEARCH

Leaders in 18 Major Fields Will Report to Convention of 5,000 in Boston This Week

DEFENSE FACTORS TO FORE

Advances in Rubber, Petroleum and New Germicides Will Be Described and Discussed

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BOSTON, Mass., Sept. 9.—The national meeting of the American Chemical Society, in which 5,000 chemists and industrialists from all over the United States will participate, will open here Monday morning for five days of sessions.

Hundreds of papers and addresses reporting new developments in eighteen major fields of chemistry will be presented by leaders in these branches.

Notable advances in the chemistry of rubber, petroleum, gas and fuel, vital cogs in national defense plans, will be discussed. Other subjects will include nutrition, vitamins, synthetics, public health, water pollution and conservation of natural resources.

The centenary of the discovery of vulcanization of rubber by Charles Goodyear will be celebrated on Wednesday. Papers describing the progress of rubber research and manufacture in the United States will be read at a general meeting in the afternoon and at a dinner meeting in the evening.

Progress in petroleum research covering the broad fields of lubricants, fuels, by-products from petroleum and the physical properties of petroleum fractions and pure hydrocarbons will be reported Monday and Tuesday before the petroleum division.

Research on vitamin A and its relation to night blindness, on the anti-gray hair vitamin factor and on the effect of the vitamin B complex on body fat will be among the topics discussed Tuesday before a symposium on vitamins and nutrition.

New potent germicides of relatively low toxicity will be described Tuesday before the division of medicinal chemistry. A symposium on sterols and related compounds on Monday will hear reports on recent progress in the sterols, to which belong several of the life-essential hormones.

A series of twenty demonstrations will be included in an exhibition of crystalline proteins at the Harvard Medical School. Dr. W. M. Stanley and Dr. John H. Northrop of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research will demonstrate their technique with tobacco mosaic virus and crystalline protein-digesting enzymes. Professor Edwin J. Cohn of the Harvard Medical School will demonstrate work with radioactive zinc insulin.

A simplified synthesis of vitamin B6 will be announced by Dr. Stanton A. Harris and Dr. Karl Folkers of Merck & Co., Rahway, N. J., on Monday. Dr. Louis F. Fieser of the Harvard Medical School will disclose the synthesis of quinones related to the hemorrhage-preventing vitamin K.

Dr. Charles A. Kraus of Brown University, president of the American Chemical Society, will deliver his presidential address Thursday afternoon.

President James Bryant Conant of Harvard University, himself an eminent chemist, is honorary chairman of the convention, expected to be one of the largest in the society's history. At the invitation of Dr. Conant, the chemists will gather in the Harvard yard for a garden party Tuesday afternoon.

The Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Wellesley College will hold open house for the visitors on Thursday afternoon. A concert by eighty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been arranged for Thursday evening in Symphony Hall.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
AMERICAN
SEP 10 1939

Solomon to Conduct Opening of Jubilee

by HERMAN DEVRIES

● A meteoric career such as Izler Solomon can claim to have achieved is rare indeed in one who has not as yet reached the maturity that is usually associated with long experience and many a struggle, even in very talented persons. Born in Kansas City of Russian parents, Solomon drew attention in early youth as a coming violinist.

Only a few years ago, he slipped into Chicago's musical life practically unknown, and to Albert L. Goldberg and the Federal Music Project, Mr. Solomon owes much of his present success, for it was the state director of the FMP who recognized the ability of the newcomer and who subsequently brought out this young genius, until finally the leadership of the Illinois Symphony Orchestra was intrusted to his care.

Named guest conductor of the Woman's Symphony last season, Mr. Solomon has been selected to lead this unique institution in all its concerts at Orchestra Hall this coming season, opening Monday evening, Oct. 16, when the soloists will be Edith Mason, soprano, and Mario Chamlee, tenor.

Following on the heels of his recent success directing the Toscanini NBC Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Solomon imediately signed a contract for the coming season for guest appearances from coast to coast and Canada, under NBC management.

This work will in no way interfere with his other assignements. On Wednesday evening, Sept. 13, Mr. Solomon conducts the concert opening the Golden Jubilee festivities, celebrating the fiftieth year of Hyde Park's annexation to Chicago.

Mr. Solomon has chosen as soloist Rosalinda Morini, soprano of the San Carlo Opera Company.

* * *

ANNUALLY THE HELLENIC Orthodox Church of Chicago, St. Basil's, gives a benefi affair. Last season the Hellenic Orthodox Community of Chicago and suburbs presented the Greek opera "Marco Bozzaris" at the Chicago Civic Opera House, and the artistic and financial results induced St. Basil's to produce the new Greek opera "Peruze" under the direction of Jean Fardulli, at the same theater on Sunday, Oct. 15, for its benefit.

The entire cast will be composed of persons who are American born and of Greek extraction.

* * *

THE UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of Northwestern University has announced its fifth History and Enjoyment of Music concert series of 1939-40 to take place in the Auditorium Theater from October 31 to February 18. The Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra, Eugene Ormandy, conductor, opens the course on October 31. The concert of November 19 brings the Litlefield Ballet in a new program. This American ballet organization is to appear again with the City Opera Company throughout its 1939 season. Jascha Hei- concert of December 3, and the fetz, violinist, is scheduled for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, on December 13. Subscribers to the course will have opportunity to hear Sergei Rachmaninoff in a full length recital on January 14, 1940.

* * *

THE SAN CARLO OPERA comes back for a fortnight's stay at the Auditorium Theater on October 9. Many old favorites among standard operas will be performed with singers who have popularized themselves throughout the country. At the close of this opera season the Chicago Symphony will resume its regular series of concerts in Orchestra Hall, and during the month of October concerts and recitals more numerous than in the past few years are scheduled by Managers Berha Ott, Harry Zelzer, Henry Voegeli, Donna Parker and Mathilde Ernestine. The Adult Education Council will bring many notable pianistic personalities during its course, and later the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo will offer an assortment of ballets that should prove a joy to the devotees of this unexcelled institution.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
SEP 10 1939

New England Conservatory Adds 6 Members to Faculty

Six new appointments to the faculty of the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston for the coming academic year, beginning Sept. 14, have been announced by the director, Wallace Goodrich. Isabel French, soprano, noted in Boston as teacher and recitalist, will join the vocal faculty. She has also given two New York recitals. Richard Howland will have charge of the course in fine arts. Raymond Allard, first bassoonist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will teach the playing of this instrument, and Everett Titcomb, organist, will teach choir training and the history of church music. Courses in psychology will be conducted by Dr. Charles K. Trueblood.

Cecil Arden, former mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, has been invited by Senator George L. Radcliffe, to sing the "Star Spangled Banner" at the hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the writing of the national anthem, which will be held at Fort McHenry next Thursday.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
SEP 10 1939

Pianist Sails

Owing to the war, Webster Aitken, American pianist, has canceled his British fall tour and will sail from England today. He will give a New York recital early in January, and will make his Boston debut as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on March and 5.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
SEP 10 1939

NOTES OF MUSICIANS

As the high point of a nationwide Sibelius week to be held Sept. 24 to Oct. 1, in this country, the Republic of Finland, through its committee for Finland's participation in the New York World's Fair, announces an all-Sibelius concert to be given Thursday, Sept. 28, at Carnegie Hall by the NBC Symphony Orchestra under Georg Schneevoigt, Finnish conductor. Schneevoigt, a close friend of Sibelius, is at present a conductor of the Finnish National Orchestra. He is well known in the United States, having directed the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra throughout the season of 1927 in Los Angeles, Calif. He has also appeared as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

7

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

SEP 10 1939

BROOKLYN INSTITUTE

THhe Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences has announced that the number of concerts, recitals and lectures on music and the dance will be considerably increased in its programs for 1939-'40 at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Fifty-three events have already been scheduled and others will be added during the season. The series will be opened on Wednesday evening, Oct. 11, with a special concert by a symphony orchestra, a large chorus and a ballet group. Further details of this concert will be made public early next month.

The schedule for the institute's largest subscription series, "Music and the Dance," follows:

Josef and Rosina Lhevinne, pianists, Oct. 18.
Bali and Javanese Dancers, with Devi Dja, Nov. 1.
Lotte Lehmann, soprano, Nov. 14.
Emanuel Feuermann, cellist, Dec. 4.
New Friends of Music, Dec. 20.
Jascha Heifetz, violinist, Jan. 3.
Jooss Ballet, Jan. 16.
Lauritz Melchior, tenor, Jan. 29.
Mozart Boy's Choir, Feb. 21.
Ted Shawn and his Men Dancers, March 4.
Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, March 18.
Negro Folk Festival, April 10.

All of the above events will take place in the Opera House of the Academy of Music at 8:30 in the evening.

The dates for the five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are Nov. 24, Jan. 12, Feb. 15, March 15 and April 5. All of these are Friday evenings with the exception of Feb. 15, which is on Thursday.

The institute will also present a number of chamber music and other ensemble programs in the academy's music hall. Among the groups to participate in this series are the Trapp Family Choir, the Budapest String Quartet, Webster Aitken and Frances Blaisdell, pianist and flautist, accompanied by chamber orchestra; the Tollefsen Trio and the newly formed Chamber Music Guild of New York under the direction of Dr. Felix Guenther, which will give three Sunday afternoon programs of rarely performed masterworks for larger ensembles.

An innovation in the institute's work during the coming season will be provided by a special series of recitals by young artists from the metropolitan area. The series has been undertaken at the request of concert-goers who feel that it is one of the prime functions of a layman's music center to introduce each year artists who are on their way to prominence in the concert world. These recitals will be held on Sunday afternoons throughout the season.

Among the numerous lectures and lecture recitals to be given at the institute is a special series of twelve lectures, "The Background of Contemporary Music," conducted by Jonathan Schiller, former lecturer in music at Amherst College and at present director of the RCA Victor Lecture Bureau. Guest speakers and artists will appear at frequent intervals in this series. Mr. Schiller will also give five additional lectures devoted to the programs to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music. These lectures will precede each concert by four days. Additional lectures will be given at the institute by Aaron Copland, noted American composer; Dr. Felix Guenther, of Queens College; Grant H. Code, associate editor of the "Dance Observer," and others to be announced.

The institute's activities in music and the dance differ from similar presentations in that they are organized under a general, informal educational plan for the public. The work is maintained by the institute's thousands of members and is made available to the public on a non-commercial basis. Membership in the institute is open to all and offers attendance privileges, not only in the institute's musical program, but in the still larger lecture series presented each year at the Academy of Music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

SEP 10 1939

Free Music Festival Oct. 1 to 7 Planned to Lift City War Gloom

Mayor Says A. S. C. A. P. Concerts, Running Gamut From Opera and Symphony to Swing, Will Prevent 'Profiteering on Sorrow and Anxiety'

Plans for a music festival to be held in New York from Oct. 1 to 7 by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers were announced yesterday by Mayor F. H. LaGuardia at Summer City Hall near the World's Fair grounds. The concerts will be free to the public and will be the work of America's outstanding conductors, singers and musicians—popular as well as classic.

"There's going to be no profiteering on sorrow and anxiety," the Mayor said. "I know of no better way to get this message across than through music. Having this in mind, I consulted with Gene Buck (president of the A. S. C. A. P.) and by a happy coincidence I found that the society was considering a celebration of its twenty-fifth anniversary. Through the board of directors of the society, plans have been perfected, and we are going to have this whole week of music as a marvelous contribution to the people of the City of New York. We'll have everything from ballads to opera, from symphony to swing, and the program will be a monument dedicated to art and to peace."

Mr. Buck said leading stars of opera, musical comedy, radio, screen and the concert stage would participate. Among the events, he said, would be two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky. An orchestra under [redacted] will offer a program of light-opera music.

An evening will be devoted to modern American music, with "name" bands playing programs of symphonic jazz, melody and swing, and an entire performance will be given over to the works of band-music composers, including Sousa. An evening also will be dedicated to popular songs of past and present.

The Mayor said the place for the concerts and the manner of distributing tickets, would be told soon.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

SEP 10 1939

War Clouds Hang Over Symphony

By BERNARD FREEMAN

Boston, Sept. 9.—(AP)—War clouds again are hovering over one of the world's great music-making organizations—the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A group of French-born players, believed to number five, is abroad somewhere in war-troubled Europe—and the orchestra, which today announced it would open its 59th season in New York Oct. 5 and 7, would like the men back.

Presumably, the five—none of whom is a first desk player—have either joined the military services or are attempting to obtain passage to the United States, but until word has been received orchestra officials are keeping their fingers crossed.

The orchestra is somewhat less concerned over the future of several of its key woodwind and brass players, who also are French-born, and who, admittedly, it would be difficult to replace. All of the latter, however, are in this country, and it is believed their ages would preclude any military activity.

"In any event," one official said, "the orchestra is unlikely to be embarrassed by the war."

War currents have played an important part in Boston Symphony history. Back in October, 1917, audiences became quite upset over the fact a German, Dr. Karl Muck, was conductor. Indeed, before one scheduled concert in Providence, R. I., a demand was made that Dr. Muck conduct the "Star Spangled Banner" to "prove his loyalty." The conductor declined on grounds he had not been given time for rehearsal, and, although he subsequently played the National Anthem at other concerts in the East, the resultant furore led to his resignation.

Ironically, the prospectus for conductor Serge Koussevitzky's sixteenth consecutive reason as musical director here announces that the emphasis for 1939-40 will be upon the works of Bach, German, and Mozart, an Austrian.

Also the last of two pairs of the 24 Friday afternoon and Saturday evenings concerts will commemorate the 100th birthday anniversary of Tchaikowsky.

Two Russians—Igor Stravinsky, who is scheduled to lecture on poetry at Harvard University this winter, and Nicolai Malko, have been invited to appear as guest conductors, but whether they will do so depends upon their ability to leave war-stricken Europe.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

SEP 10 1939

CONCERT AND OPERA ASIDES

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra is going against all the precedents of its history during the coming season, but only with respect to the opening. The first concerts will take place, not in Boston, but in New York at Carnegie Hall. These programs will be presented on Thursday and Saturday evenings, Oct. 5 and 7, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct two programs of American music past and present, as part of a festival of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

The fifty-ninth season proper will open in Boston on Friday, Oct. 13, and will extend through May 4. It will be Mr. Koussevitzky's sixteenth at the head of the orchestra. Among the works in the season's repertory will be a larger representation than usual of Bach and Mozart, a number of American scores, Debussy's "Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian," Mahler's "Song of the Earth," Stravinsky's new symphony in C and a revival of his "Oedipus Rex," with the composer conducting; special programs devoted to the commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth, including a concert performance of the opera "Pique Dame." There will be a special performance of Bach's B minor Mass in April.

From a correspondent who went to the country to do some fishing and found an exciting manifestation of musical interest comes this story:

"Several years ago Franz Lorenz, a former 'cellist of the New York Symphony Orchestra, settled in Bennington, Vt., and started teaching music to children in the rural communities of Bennington County and in the town itself. Few of the children could afford much for lessons, and soon the enterprise received backing from the Federal Music Project of the WPA. In the Summer of 1937 he had formed his forty students into a senior and junior orchestra and, christening his school the 'Bennington County Musical Society,' he gave a concert climaxed by Haydn's 'Kindersymphonie' in which various leading citizens joined with their cuckoos, nightingales and toy trumpets. The concert was a great success and had to be repeated. Dorothy Canfield, who played first water-bird, made an appeal for funds which brought in $800 for the school.

"Last year, in thinking of another concert that might call in the participation of the townspeople, it was decided to include a few choral pieces on the program. Paul Boepple, who was resting in Bennington from his duties as conductor of the Dessoff Choirs, volunteered to lead the chorus and postcards were sent to all the citizens of Bennington who had ever been overheard whistling in tune. The first rehearsal drew out forty curious and somewhat skeptical souls; the second, fifty excited and enthusiastic ones. The chorus was christened the 'Roaring Branch Choral Society' after a local stream, and with six industrious rehearsals they contributed two a cappella pieces to Mr. Lorenz's program and also performed Mozart's 'Ave Verum' with his orchestra. The concert was such a success that the chorus decided to establish itself permanently, and Henry Johnson of the Bennington College music faculty became its regular conductor, leading several concerts at Christmas.

"Early this Summer the Bennington County Musical Society gave its own concert, and the chorus, working again under Mr. Boepple in Mr. Johnson's absence, prepared Schubert's Mass in C major. Mr. Lorenz's students, with but three years' instrumental training behind them, will play the orchestra parts, aided by members of the Bennington College music faculty. Already two performances are booked, one at the Bennington High School for the benefit of the Girls Club and one at Bennington College. On Sunday, Sept. 17, the chorus and orchestra will participate in a candlelight service at the Old First Church. They have also been asked to repeat the performance in Hoosick, N. Y., at the founding day celebration of the Hoosac School."

An annual series of Summer "pop" concerts by the Cleveland Summer Orchestra, composed of members of the Cleveland Orchestra, is now being planned, according to an announcement made by Edgar A. Hahn, president of the Cleveland Summer Music Society. The concerts will be directed by Rudolph Ringwall, associate conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, and will be given in the new garden setting of the Cleveland Public Auditorium. The orchestra will consist of from seventy to eighty pieces and probably will offer three concerts weekly, as was done successfully this Summer when twelve such concerts were presented in the Ohio city that attracted a total attendance of more than 72,000 persons.

Nikolai Lopatnikoff informs us that he has finished his second symphony and expects to have it performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

N.Y. Times 9-10-39

Gala Week of Free Music in City To Be Held to Allay Gloom of War

Boston Orchestra, Jazz Favorites and Noted Singers to Be Heard in Unprecedented Fete Beginning on Oct. 1

A week of free music on an unprecedented scale, designed to allay the public sorrow and anxiety occasioned by the conflict in Europe, will be presented in New York by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, Mayor La Guardia announced yesterday. The music festival, in which music appealing to all tastes will be given by noted bands, orchestras and singers, will be held on seven consecutive evenings starting Oct. 1.

Paul Whiteman, Benny Goodman and Fred Waring and their orchestras will present a session of symphonic jazz and swing music. The popular marches of John Philip Sousa and other notable seelctions from the American band reperatory will be played by Edwin Franko Goldman and his band and other organizations.

The glittering program, as announced by the Mayor and Gene Buck, president of the A. S. C. A. P., will also include a concert devoted to the works of Negro composers as played and sung by outstanding Negro singers, performers and organizations. Light operatic and musical comedy works will be presented by an orchestra conducted by Frank Black.

The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, is scheduled to give two concerts of symphonic works by American composers.

One evening will be devoted to famous popular songs of the past and present written by members of the society, with Rudy Valle leading his orchestra and some of the composers appearing in person, such as Irving Berlin, George M. Cohan, Vincent Youmans, Harry T. Burleigh, Cole Porter and J. Fred Coots. Singers from the stage radio and screen will take part.

The festival was described by the Mayor as "the most unusual of its kind ever given in this country." In an announcement made public at the World's Fair City Hall, the Mayor said the festival would coincide with the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the foundation of the A. S. C. A. P.

Plans for a festival that would help to counteract in the city the current world tension came to fruition Friday afternoon as Mayor La Guardia and Mr. Buck met on the lawn of the Sheep Meadow in Central Park where a children's circus was being given.

"There's going to be no profiteer-

Continued on Page Forty-eight

1

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
SEP 10 1939

BROOKLYN INSTITUTE

THhe Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences has announced that the number of concerts, recitals and lectures on music and the dance will be considerably increased in its programs for 1939-'40 at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Fifty-three events have already been scheduled and others will be added during the season. The series will be opened on Wednesday evening, Oct. 11, with a special concert by a symphony orchestra, a large chorus and a ballet group. Further details of this concert will be made public early next month.

The schedule for the institute's largest subscription series, "Music and the Dance," follows:

Josef and Rosina Lhevinne, pianists, Oct. 18.
Bali and Javanese Dancers, with Devi Dja, Nov. 1.
Lotte Lehmann, soprano, Nov. 14.
Emanuel Feuermann, cellist, Dec. 4.
New Friends of Music, Dec. 20.
Jascha Heifetz, violinist, Jan. 3.
Jooss Ballet, Jan. 16.
Lauritz Melchior, tenor, Jan. 29.
Mozart Boy's Choir, Feb. 21.
Ted Shawn and his Men Dancers, March 4.
Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, March 18.
Negro Folk Festival, April 10.

All of the above events will take place in the Opera House of the Academy of Music at 8:30 in the evening.

The dates for the five concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are Nov. 24, Jan. 12, Feb. 15, March 15 and April 5. All of these are Friday evenings with the exception of Feb. 15, which is on Thursday.

The institute will also present a number of chamber music and other ensemble programs in the academy's music hall. Among the groups to participate in this series are the Trapp Family Choir, the Budapest String Quartet, Webster Aitken and Frances Blaisdell, pianist and flautist, accompanied by chamber orchestra, the Tollefsen Trio and the newly formed Chamber Music Guild of New York under the direction of Dr. Felix Guenther, which will give three Sunday afternoon programs of rarely performed masterworks for larger ensembles.

An innovation in the institute's work during the coming season will be provided by a special series of recitals by young artists from the metropolitan area. The series has been undertaken at the request of concert-goers who feel that it is one of the prime functions of a layman's music center to introduce each year artists who are on their way to prominence in the concert world. These recitals will be held on Sunday afternoons throughout the season.

Among the numerous lectures and lecture recitals to be given at the institute is a special series of twelve lectures, "The Background of Contemporary Music," conducted by Jonathan Schiller, former lecturer in music at Amherst College and at present director of the RCA Victor Lecture Bureau. Guest speakers and artists will appear at frequent intervals in this series. Mr. Schiller will also give five additional lectures devoted to the programs to be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music. These lectures will precede each concert by four days. Additional lectures will be given at the institute by Aaron Copland, noted American composer; Dr. Felix Guenther, of Queens College; Grant H. Code, associate editor of the "Dance Observer," and others to be announced.

The institute's activities in music and the dance differ from similar presentations in that they are organized under a general, informal educational plan for the public. The work is maintained by the institute's thousands of members and is made available to the public on a non-commercial basis. Membership in the institute is open to all and offers attendance privileges, not only in the institute's musical program, but in the still larger lecture series presented each year at the Academy of Music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
SEP 10 1939

Free Music Festival Oct. 1 to 7 Planned to Lift City War Gloom

Mayor Says A. S. C. A. P. Concerts, Running Gamut From Opera and Symphony to Swing, Will Prevent 'Profiteering on Sorrow and Anxiety'

Plans for a music festival to be held in New York from Oct. 1 to 7 by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers were announced yesterday by Mayor F. H. LaGuardia at Summer City Hall near the World's Fair grounds. The concerts will be free to the public and will be the work of America's outstanding conductors, singers and musicians—popular as well as classic.

"There's going to be no profiteering on sorrow and anxiety," the Mayor said. "I know of no better way to get this message across than through music. Having this in mind, I consulted with Gene Buck (president of the A. S. C. A. P.) and by a happy coincidence I found that the society was considering a celebration of its twenty-fifth anniversary. Through the board of directors of the society, plans have been perfected, and we are going to have this whole week of music as a marvelous contribution to the people of the City of New York. We'll have everything from ballads to opera, from symphony to swing, and the program will be a monument dedicated to art and to peace."

Mr. Buck said leading stars of opera, musical comedy, radio, screen and the concert stage would participate. Among the events, he said, would be two concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky. An orchestra under [redacted] will offer a program of light-opera music.

An evening will be devoted to modern American music, with "name" bands playing programs of symphonic jazz, melody and swing, and an entire performance will be given over to the works of band-music composers, including Sousa. An evening also will be dedicated to popular songs of past and present.

The Mayor said the place for the concerts and the manner of distributing tickets, would be told soon.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
SEP 10 1939

War Clouds Hang Over Symphony

By BERNARD FREEMAN

Boston, Sept. 9.—(AP)—War clouds again are hovering over one of the world's great music-making organizations—the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A group of French-born players, believed to number five, is abroad somewhere in war-troubled Europe—and the orchestra, which today announced it would open its 59th season in New York Oct. 5 and 7, would like the men back.

Presumably, the five—none of whom is a first desk player—have either joined the military services or are attempting to obtain passage to the United States, but until word has been received orchestra officials are keeping their fingers crossed.

The orchestra is somewhat less concerned over the future of several of its key woodwind and brass players, who also are French-born, and who, admittedly, it would be difficult to replace. All of the latter, however, are in this country, and it is believed their ages would preclude any military activity.

"In any event," one official said, "the orchestra is unlikely to be embarrassed by the war."

War currents have played an important part in Boston Symphony history. Back in October, 1917, audiences became quite upset over the fact a German, Dr. Karl Muck, was conductor. Indeed, before one scheduled concert in Providence, R. I., a demand was made that Dr. Muck conduct the "Star Spangled Banner" to "prove his loyalty." The conductor declined on grounds he had not been given time for rehearsal, and, although he subsequently played the National Anthem at other concerts in the East, the resultant furore led to his resignation.

Ironically, the prospectus for conductor Serge Koussevitzky's sixteenth consecutive reason as musical director here announces that the emphasis for 1939-40 will be upon the works of Bach, German, and Mozart, an Austrian.

Also the last of two pairs of the 24 Friday afternoon and Saturday evenings concerts will commemorate the 100th birthday anniversary of Tchaikowsky.

Two Russians—Igor Stravinsky, who is scheduled to lecture on poetry at Harvard University this winter, and Nicolai Malko, have been invited to appear as guest conductors, but whether they will do so depends upon their ability to leave war-stricken Europe.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
SEP 10 1939

CONCERT AND OPERA ASIDES

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra is going against all the precedents of its history during the coming season, but only with respect to the opening. The first concerts will take place, not in Boston, but in New York at Carnegie Hall. These programs will be presented on Thursday and Saturday evenings, Oct. 5 and 7, when Serge Koussevitzky will conduct two programs of American music past and present, as part of a festival of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

The fifty-ninth season proper will open in Boston on Friday, Oct. 13, and will extend through May 4. It will be Mr. Koussevitzky's sixteenth at the head of the orchestra. Among the works in the season's repertory will be a larger representation than usual of Bach and Mozart, a number of American scores, Debussy's "Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian," Mahler's "Song of the Earth," Stravinsky's new symphony in C and a revival of his "Oedipus Rex," with the composer conducting; special programs devoted to the commemoration of the 100th anniversary of Tchaikovsky's birth, including a concert performance of the opera "Pique Dame." There will be a special performance of Bach's B minor Mass in April.

From a correspondent who went to the country to do some fishing and found an exciting manifestation of musical interest comes this story:

"Several years ago Franz Lorenz, a former 'cellist of the New York Symphony Orchestra, settled in Bennington, Vt., and started teaching music to children in the rural communities of Bennington County and in the town itself. Few of the children could afford much for lessons, and soon the enterprise received backing from the Federal Music Project of the WPA. In the Summer of 1937 he had formed his forty students into a senior and junior orchestra and, christening his school the 'Bennington County Musical Society,' he gave a concert climaxed by Haydn's 'Kindersymphonie' in which various leading citizens joined with their cuckoos, nightingales and toy trumpets. The concert was a great success and had to be repeated. Dorothy Canfield, who played first water-bird, made an appeal for funds which brought in $800 for the school.

"Last year, in thinking of another concert that might call in the participation of the townspeople, it was decided to include a few choral pieces on the program. Paul Boepple, who was resting in Bennington from his duties as conductor of the Dessoff Choirs, volunteered to lead the chorus and postcards were sent to all the citizens of Bennington who had ever been overheard whistling in tune. The first rehearsal drew out forty curious and somewhat skeptical souls; the second, fifty excited and enthusiastic ones. The chorus was christened the 'Roaring Branch Choral Society' after a local stream, and with six industrious rehearsals they contributed two a cappella pieces to Mr. Lorenz's program and also performed Mozart's 'Ave Verum' with his orchestra. The concert was such a success that the chorus decided to establish itself permanently, and Henry Johnson of the Bennington College music faculty became its regular conductor, leading several concerts at Christmas.

"Early this Summer the Bennington County Musical Society gave its own concert, and the chorus, working again under Mr. Boepple in Mr. Johnson's absence, prepared Schubert's Mass in C major. Mr. Lorenz's students, with but three years' instrumental training behind them, will play the orchestra parts, aided by members of the Bennington College music faculty. Already two performances are booked, one at the Bennington High School for the benefit of the Girls Club and one at Bennington College. On Sunday, Sept. 17, the chorus and orchestra will participate in a candlelight service at the Old First Church. They have also been asked to repeat the performance in Hoosick, N. Y., at the founding day celebration of the Hoosac School."

An annual series of Summer "pop" concerts by the Cleveland Summer Orchestra, composed of members of the Cleveland Orchestra, is now being planned, according to an announcement made by Edgar A. Hahn, president of the Cleveland Summer Music Society. The concerts will be directed by Rudolph Ringwall, associate conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, and will be given in the new garden setting of the Cleveland Public Auditorium. The orchestra will consist of from seventy to eighty pieces and probably will offer three concerts weekly, as was done successfully this Summer when twelve such concerts were presented in the Ohio city that attracted a total attendance of more than 72,000 persons.

Nikolai Lopatnikoff informs us that he has finished his second symphony and expects to have it performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

V N.Y. Times 9-10-39

Gala Week of Free Music in City To Be Held to Allay Gloom of War

Boston Orchestra, Jazz Favorites and Noted Singers to Be Heard in Unprecedented Fete Beginning on Oct. 1

A week of free music on an unprecedented scale, designed to allay the public sorrow and anxiety occasioned by the conflict in Europe, will be presented in New York by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, Mayor La Guardia announced yesterday. The music festival, in which music appealing to all tastes will be given by noted bands, orchestras and singers, will be held on seven consecutive evenings starting Oct. 1.

Paul Whiteman, Benny Goodman and Fred Waring and their orchestras will present a session of symphonic jazz and swing music. The popular marches of John Philip Sousa and other notable selections from the American band reperatory will be played by Edwin Franko Goldman and his band and other organizations.

The glittering program, as announced by the Mayor and Gene Buck, president of the A. S. C. A. P., will also include a concert devoted to the works of Negro composers as played and sung by outstanding Negro singers, performers and organizations. Light operatic and musical comedy works will be presented by an orchestra conducted by Frank Black.

The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, is scheduled to giv two concerts of symphonic work by American composers.

One evening will be devoted to famous popular songs of the past an present written by members of th society, with Rudy Valle leadin his orchestra and some of the composers appearing in person, suc as Irving Berlin, George M. Cohan Vincent Youmans, Harry T. Burleigh, Cole Porter and J. Fre Coots. Singers from the stage radio and screen will take part.

The festival was described by the Mayor as "the most unusual of its kind ever given in this country." In an announcement made public at the World's Fair City Hall, the Mayor said the festival would coincide with the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the foundation of the A. S. C. A. P.

Plans for a festival that would help to counteract in the city the current world tension came to fruition Friday afternoon as Mayor La Guardia and Mr. Buck met on the lawn of the Sheep Meadow in Central Park where a children's circus was being given.

"There's going to be no profiteer-

Continued on Page Forty-eight

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
SEP 10 1939

Lawrence Gilman, Music Critic Of Herald Tribune, Dead at 61

Self-Educated Musician and Successor to Krehbiel Is Victim of Heart Attack at Summer Home; Wagner and Toscanini His Great Enthusiasms

Special to the Herald Tribune

FRANCONIA, N. H., Sept. 9.—Lawrence Gilman, music critic of the New York Herald Tribune and one of the world's outstanding authorities in his field, died last night after a heart attack at his summer home here. He was sixty-one years old.

With him at the end were his wife, the former Elizabeth Wright Walter, and their daughter, Elizabeth, the wife of Malcolm E. Anderson, of New York. Surviving, besides Mrs. Gilman and Mrs. Anderson, is a brother, Joseph Gilman, of Wardsboro, Vt.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilman had been passing the summer in their cottage on the grounds of Peckett's, on Sugar Hill, a hotel located in a region in which Mr. Gilman had passed many vacations during the last forty years.

He had suffered a severe heart attack last February and, his daughter said today, never really recovered from that. Within the last month he had suffered four more attacks. The last came at 11 o'clock last night. He died at 11:15. Mrs. Anderson said that private funeral services would be held at 2:30 p. m. Monday in the Gilman cottage. Burial will be in the Franconia cemetery.

Was Self-Educated in Music

Without any formal schooling in music, Lawrence Gilman educated himself in that field and became the foremost music critic in the United States. One of his contemporary critics once remarked, "Gilman is the only critic in town. The rest of us are just music reviewers."

As a boy having no particular talent in music, he was so wrapped up in it that he once saved his nickels and dimes for many weeks to accumulate $18 to purchase a conductor's score of Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde." This score, which must have seemed at first as strange as ancient runes, he studied nightly in his bedroom until he had figured out the whole thing.

The love for music reflected in that achievement steered him into a career of magazine and newspaper work which at times involved doubling as drama and literary critic, but after 1923, when he joined the staff

(Continued on page 38, column 4)

Lawrence Gilman, Music Critic Of Herald Tribune, Dead at 61

Lawrence Gilman — Harold Stein

(Continued from page one)

of the New York Tribune, he devoted himself entirely to music.

To a certain extent his attitude toward music was uncompromising. As a close associate and adviser of the late Adolph Lewisohn, who established the popular-priced summer concerts in Lewisohn Stadium, Mr. Gilman insisted that the standards of the selections offered be as high as those found in more exclusive and expensive concert halls. From the outset he was the author of the stadium concert program notes and after a tour of Europe, made at Mr. Lewisohn's suggestion, to study open-air concerts there, he returned and said that none of them held the standard of quality found in Lewisohn Stadium. All had compromised, in one way or another, with more popular tastes.

Wanted Public to Like the Best

In almost an idealistic manner, Mr. Gilman wanted to see the average person appreciate music that was accepted as the best. In the preface to his book, "Toscanini and Great Music," published in 1938, he wrote: "Great beauty, supreme excellence, have become factors in our contemporary living that are no longer wisely to be ignored. They have become, in many instances, the most profitable things in music, theater and moving pictures.

"It is being demonstrated by and to innumerable listeners (to the Arturo Toscanini radio concerts) that the bravest idealism and the loftiest faith are not only the most exciting and absorbing things in this disintegratng world, but the most substantial and secure—that nothing else is comparatively rewarding and dependable.

"Our terrestrial habitation is not, at present, the happiest of places: yet there is a spirit abroad today, among those who remain potentially or actually civilized, that is full of a new intensity and eagerness, that hungers and thirsts after the beauty and greatness of imponderable things."

These comments were made in connection with his joy at noting the nation wide favorable reception accorded by the public to the radio concerts conducted by Toscanini, whom Mr. Gilman called "the most fanatically uncompromising of musical idealists."

The conducting of Toscanini and the music of Wagner were Mr. Gilman's greatest enthusiasms. Only slightly less was his admiration for Feodor Chaliapin. In the preface to "Wagner's Operas," written in 1937, he observed: "I might have used as a text for this book two sentences that Newman wrote many years ago [Ernest Newman, London music critic]: 'The more I know my Wagner the more convinced I am that this is the most wonderful artist-mind that the world has ever seen. . . . From liking of Wagner as a musician I have gone to adoration.' Though for me that latter declaration is a little on the cautious side: for I began not with liking but with adoration of the artist who had written 'Tristan.'"

In the same book he noted with great satisfaction that "the intelligent young" in America, lately accused with some truth of regarding the opera as "an enforced and penitential bore," had changed its tastes, at least as far as the annual Wagnerian cycle in New York's Metropolitan was concerned.

Letter From Wagner's Kin

Mr. Gilman's reverence of Wagner and his works was known and appreciated by Wagner's son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Siegfried Wagner. In 1929, a year before her husband died, Mrs. Wagner learned at Bayreuth that a German grand opera company appearing in New York claimed affiliation with Bayreuth. She addressed a personal letter to Mr. Gilman asking that he spread the word that the company "has nothing whatever to do with Bayreuth," and concluding:

"We will feel very much obliged to you for doing so. With the best compliments of the season and kindest regards from both of us,

"Sincerely yours,

"WINIFRED WAGNER."

The New York Herald Tribune published the letter, together with Mr. Gilman's notation that he had already viewed two of the company's operas and had condemned the promoters who "had the effrontery to commend the company to us by trading upon the proud name and the great traditions of Richard Wagner's Bayreuth."

The words Mr. Gilman found to praise Wagner were only equaled by those he used for Toscanini, whom he thanked for "untarnishable memories."

"Those moments are of inestimable price" he wrote, "for it is then that the content of life seems fullest and most rich—as when we meet 'the friend of friends,' or pause suddenly, face to face with beauty, and know that life, for all its frustration and treachery, is full of wonder, beneficence and grace."

Mr. Gilman was born in Flushing, Queens, on July 5, 1878, the son of Arthur C. and Bessie Lawrence Gilman. He attended public schools in New York and the Collins Street Classical School in Hartford, Conn., and for a time studied painting under William M. Chase, and illustration at the Art Students' League.

He was self-taught in musical theory, composition, orchestration, organ and piano.

The incident of the Wagnerian score occurred when Mr. Gilman was in his early 'teens. He was taken to the opera to hear "Tristan und Isolde" and was so swept away by the music that nothing would do but that he acquire the full score. At a music publishing house he was gently laughed at and told that the price was $18.

Score Not for Little Boys

For some weeks the boy saved his money and finally, with the full price of a conductor's score in his pocket, went back to the publishing house. Surprised to see a small boy with so much money and a desire to buy the full score of "Tristan und Isolde," the clerks told him such scores were not made for little boys—that they were rare and needed for operatic orchestras.

The boy persisted, however, and was finally allowed to buy the score. Mr. Gilman continued with his own studies of music and from 1896 to 1898 worked on the editorial staff of "The New York Herald." From 1901 to 1913 he was music critic for "Harper's Weekly," and, in addition, served as assistant editor from 1903 to 1911, and as managing editor from 1911 to 1913. From 1913 to 1915 he was on the editorial staff of "Harper's Magazine."

In 1915 Mr. Gilman switched to "The North American Review," a magazine wrich he served for eight years as music, drama and literary critic. He joined the New York Tribune in April, 1923, after the death of Henry Edward Krehbiel, the Tribune's music critic.

He was the author of the program notes for concerts by the New York Philharmonic Society and the Philadelphia Symphony orchestras, and from 1933 to 1935 was the radio commentator on the Sunday afternoon broadcasts of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Toscanini.

Wrote Thirteen Books

Mr. Gilman was a frequent contributor to magazines and was the author of thirteen books. These are: "Phases of Modern Music," 1904; "Edward MacDowell," in the "Living Masters of Music Series," 1905; "The Music of Tomorrow," 1906; "A Guide to Strauss's 'Salome,'" "Stories of Symphonic Music" and "A Guide to Debussy's 'Pelleas et Melisande,'" 1907; "Aspects of Modern Opera," 1908; "Edward MacDowell—a Study" (revised), 1909; "Nature in Music," 1914; "A Christmas Meditation," 1916; "Music and the Cultivated Man," 1929; "Wagner's Operas," 1937, and "Toscanini and Great Music," 1938.

He was the composer of three settings for voice and piano for poems by the late William Butler Yeats. These were: "Dream of Death" and "The Heart of Woman," 1903, and "The Curlew," 1904.

Writing of the concept of a true music lover, Mr. Gilman said that it was often observed that so-and-so was "passionately" fond of music. After such a remark, he said, the following "fair" and "searching" questions might be asked: "Will he forgo leisure, forget to eat, face poverty? Will the blood leave his face as he listens to the third 'Lenore' overture or the finale of Schubert's C major symphony?"

It was Mr. Gilman's contention that the surest way to the enjoyment of music was for amateurs to sing and play themselves. "Who, indeed, is better fitted than the amateur of sensitive taste and sincerity and enthusiasm to become the ideal listener, the ideal music lover?" he wrote. "For let us remember that the greatest interpreters are essentially amateurs in the purest and noblest sense of the word, serving music principally because they love it, displaying that blend of humility and devotion which is inseparable from the act of re-creation in any art."

Last February, thanks to a clew provided by Mr. Gilman, a hitherto unknown prelude written by Wagner for the third act of his "Tannhaeuser" was unearthed and was broadcast, for the first time in this country and possibly for the first time anywhere, by the National Broadcasting Company Symphony Orchestra under Toscanini.

Mr. Gilman discovered a brief reference to this prelude in an old volume on Wagner's music. He immediately notified Toscanini, who had been unaware of the existence of this work, but Carl Engel, president of G. Schirmer, Inc., and former music librarian in the Library of Congress, remembered that he had bought the manuscript many years before for the library. The manuscript was found and a photostatic copy was made for Toscanini's use.

Mr. Gilman was a member of the National Institute of Arts and Letters, the Century Club, in New York, and the Critics' Circle, in London. He had few hobbies outside of music. He did much of his writing at his summer home in New Hampshire.

He married Miss Walter on Aug. 1, 1904. Their daughter is editor of books for girls and boys for the publishing firm of Farrar & Rinehart.

Symphony Season Under Way in October

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 59th season in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, Oct. 13. The season will continue until May 4 with the usual series of 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts, and six pairs of Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall. There are to be concerts as usual in other cities of New England, New York and the West. Season tickets are now available at the subscription office for each series in Symphony Hall.

The soloists engaged to appear in the Friday and Saturday series include Josef Hofmann, who has not played with the orchestra for a number of years, and three other pianists more recently heard—Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking and Jan Smeterlin—who will play in concertos of Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin and Szymanowski. The violinists, Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti, are announced, and the violoncellist, Emanuel Feuermann, who is to make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Singers are to be heard in works by Mahler, Debussy and Bach; also in Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" and Tchaikowsky's "Pique-Dame."

Much music of special interest, both new and old, will be heard in the course of the season, as well as a larger representation from the standard symphonic repertory. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who returned to America for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at the beginning of August, has drawn up a plan of certain works to be heard in this, his 16th successive year as the orchestra's conductor. Mahler's "Song of the Earth" and Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian" will be played at the Friday and Saturday series; also a new symphony of Stravinsky, in C major, and his "Oedipus Rex" which is to be revived under the direction of the composer. The conductor will give a fuller representation than is customary of the music of Bach and Mozart. Bach's Mass in B minor will be performed at a special concert in April.

The last two pairs of concerts of the season will be devoted to music of Tchaikovsky, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of his birth. In addition to his orchestral works, there will be a concert performance of the opera "Pique-Dame." Meanwhile two pre-season concerts are announced to be given in Carnegie Hall, New York. Serge Koussevitzky will then conduct on the evenings of Oct. 5 and 7 programs of American music, past and present, as part of the festival to be given by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. American music will figure more prominently than usual in the Boston season.

(9)

Warm Tributes Paid Gilman as Man and Critic

'Artist in Words,' Barbirolli Says; 'Deep Understanding' Praised by Damrosch

The following expressions of appreciation of Lawrence Gilman's life and work were received yesterday:

ROYAL CORTISSOZ, art critic of the New York Herald Tribune: I loved Lawrence Gilman and I shall never cease to regret his death. He was not only my colleague but my friend, full of sympathy and all that makes friendship worth while. I have known intimately the outstanding musical critics of New York, Krehbiel, Henderson, Aldrich and Huneker. He wielded authority like theirs and superbly maintained their tradition, adding to it his own accent. He was a man of high accomplishment, yet he had a wonderful modesty. Everything about him was endearing. He was all goodness and sweetness. I cannot bear to think of our having lost him.

JOHN BARBIROLLI, conductor of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra: No conventional expression of regret can in any way convey what I feel about the passing of that great critic and artist in words, Lawrence Gilman. It had never been my pleasure to meet him personally, but we corresponded occasionally about notes for the Philharmonic program, and particularly do I treasure the memory of the notes he wrote for my arrangement of the prelude and entr'acte of Debussy's "Pelleas." The exquisite beauty and sensitiveness of his mind were never more lovingly revealed, and perhaps it was fitting it should be so, for surely in this music there was something of his own remote yet fragrant spirit.

MRS. AUGUST BELMONT, chairman of the Metropolitan Opera Guild: Mr. Gilman's death is a terrific loss to music and to lovers of music who read him and admired both his learning and his long devotion to everything pertaining to good music. He was a poet—a poet musician. It strikes one as an irreparable loss. I'm so stunned I don't believe there is anything more that I can say, but from those few words you'll know how I feel.

ARTUR BODANZKY, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Association: The shocking news of the death of Mr. Gilman just reached me. Please accept my deeply felt sympathy upon the loss of so eminent and valuable a member of your staff.

DR. WALTER DAMROSCH, conductor and composer: The passing of Lawrence Gilman will be a great loss to the entire musical world of America. He combined a great passion for music with a deep understanding of its mysteries. His analysis of the great composers were reverent and revealing, and to the performing artists his criticisms were always fair and encouraging. In him we musicians lose a great critic and a gentle and beautiful soul.

MARSHALL FIELD, president and chairman of the Philharmonic Symphony Society: I admired everything Mr. Gilman wrote and always found him charming personally. He meant a great deal to the Philharmonic-Symphony Society, writing the program notes, and meant a great deal to the many people attending the concerts who read the program notes.

ARTHUR JUDSON, business manager of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra: May I express my deep regret and personal sympathy as well as that of the directors of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society in the loss of Lawrence Gilman? We have been associated with him for a number of years and have always found him an honest colleague and a great gentleman. Music in America will feel greatly the loss of his illuminating comments.

OSCAR THOMPSON, music critic of "The Sun," and editor of "Musical America": His fellow music critics will remember Lawrence Gilman with whole-hearted admiration and abiding affection. He was the poet and the seer of his profession. His daily reviews and his Sunday articles were distinguished by unusual literary worth and by poetic, imaginative and spiritual qualities rare in the columns of our newspapers today. Often his critiques were essays which reflected his profound scholarship. But they were none the less tranchant and penetrating as criticism. He had vital things to say and he said them beautifully. He kept abreast of the times. Great as was his attachment to the music of the past, he was endlessly alert for the possibilities of important new contributions from composers of today. His program annotations for the New York Philharmonic Symphony and the Philadelphia Orchestra will remain classics of their kind. His books will have many readers through years to come. To few men has it been given to contribute so much to America's ever-widening musical culture. He, himself, was a remarkably cultivated man. Modest to a fault, but genial and generous behind his protection of shyness, he was dearly loved by those who called him friend. For them, as for the greater number who knew him only by his very individual and stimulating writings, his loss is an irreparable one.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, conductor: The news of the passing of Lawrence Gilman is a great shock to me. At this time when musical forces in America are reaching extraordinary growth and self expression, the absence of Mr. Gilman's brilliant pen and constructive criticisms will be acutely felt.

EDWARD ZIEGLER, assistant general manager of the Metropolitan Opera Association: An inestimable loss to the cause of the appreciation of great music and personally even a greater one.

OLIN DOWNES, music critic of "The New York Times." The death of Lawrence Gilman is a shocking loss. A most sensitive artist, he was a modest and wonderful companion and loyal friend. By his departure music criticism suffers incalculably. For Gilman, primarily a musician, was also scholar and poet in one. He had no prejudices. He was avid of ideas and recognized beauty in a thousand forms. His richness of background was companioned by his intuition, imagination, and taste and it may be said that, when he pleased, no colleague on either side of the water could rival the music of his prose. He will be sorely needed, and the battle line be hard pressed in the years immediately before us for such a champion of art and the ideal. Lawrence Gilman leaves imperishable memories for those who were near him, and his stamp will remain upon the musical culture of his country and period. But there are those who will not be consoled by these thoughts for his loss.

LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI, conductor: Lawrence Gilman was one of America's great men. An ideal critic with real understanding of the inner nature of music. A poet in his use of language, with genuine unforced humor. He cannot be replaced, because he was unique.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
TIMES

SEP 12 1939

MISS HICKOX TELLS CLUB OF CONCERTS

Woman's Press Group Hears of Music Festivals Held in New York, New England

When a rainstorm drowned the sound of the orchestra, the audience turned and watched the water cascade off the roof, a natural display rivaling the publicized fountains at the New York World's fair, said Miss Zillah K. Hickok in describing to the Chattanooga Woman's Press club a concert which she attended during her recent trip. Miss Hickox spoke at the club's luncheon yesterday at the Y. W. C. A.

The concert was one given at the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Spotlights from the outside, shining through the water as it poured from the music shed roof made a brilliant spectacle, Miss Hickox said.

S.T. 9-10-39

SYMPHONY TO LAUNCH NEW SEASON

Orchestra Will Play New Works and Older Favorites

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, again under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will launch a new season on Friday afternoon, Oct. 13, with plans to offer music lovers a good deal of music that is new, some that is standard and not a little that is extraordinary before the year is out.

Preliminary announcement from Symphony Hall is to the effect that Dr. Koussevitzky has already named a good many works which the orchestra will play and has set down definitely the names of composers whose music will be favored more than in past seasons. Bach and Mozart are listed among the latter. These will be accorded, according to an official communique, "fuller representation" than is customary.

* * * *

Mahler's "Song of the Earth" and Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian" are among the works of special interest due to be done in the course of the series of Friday and Saturday concerts, of which there will be 24 pairs.

A new symphony of Stravinsky, in C major, will be one of the imposing prospects of the year. The date for this is not named, but it, too, is also understood to be scheduled for one of the Friday-Saturday series, along with the same composer's "Oedipus Rex." a revival.

* * * *

There is to be a Tchaikovsky festival late in the season, with two pairs of concerts—the last of the year—given over to works of that composer, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of his birth.

By way of something unusual, there will also be a concert performance of Tchaikovsky's opera, "Pique-Dame."

* * * *

Soloists engaged to appear in the series of Friday-Saturday concerts will include the veteran pianist, Josef Hofmann, making his first appearance with the orchestra in several seasons.

Rudolf Serkin, Jan Smeterlin and Walter Gieseking are other prominent pianists who have engaged to play at some of the concerts.

Singers of ability will appear with the orchestra in some of the concerts, notably in the Tchaikovsky opera, "Pique-Dame." Jascha Heifetz, Joseph Szigeti and Emanuel Feuerman are other instrumental soloists already named.

The war will not affect the destiny of the orchestra as the World war did in the years between 1914 and 1918.

Only five members of the organization are in Europe at this time. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, said yesterday: "The absence of a few players would not affect the quality of the orchestra. We are prepared to meet contingencies of this nature."

Mr. Judd said that other foreign-born players are either past the European military age or are American citizens. Dr. Koussevitzky has taken out first papers in the United States. As Mr. Judd sees it, there will not be any "unfortunate incidents" to mar the serenity of the Boston orchestra's season such as occurred during the World war when Dr. Karl Muck, the great German conductor, was accused of declining to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" when he was asked to do so in order to "prove his loyalty." The conductor refused, gave as his reason that he had not time to rehearse the orchestra. Later, he did conduct the patriotic piece, but the rising anti-German hysteria eventually resulted in his resignation.

THIS CLIPPING FROM VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP 13 1939

Buck's Delay in Forming Licensing Committee Puzzles ASCAP Directors; May Be Retaliation to NAB Attack

Members of the board of directors of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers during the past week expressed themselves as puzzled over the failure of Gene Buck, president, to appoint a committee to study the basis for a new licensing agreement with the broadcasting industry. The board meeting which authorized Buck to form this committee was held July 13. The next gathering of the board is set for Sept. 28.

Impression current among board members is that Buck has been loath to appoint this committee because of his resentment at the personal attack made upon him last month by Neville Miller, president of the National Association of Broadcasters. Miller accused Buck of giving the NAB the runaround by going out to San Francisco instead of keeping an alleged appointment with an NAB copyright committee in New York. Buck, it is also thought, may be waiting to see what the NAB does at its special convention in Chicago this Friday (15).

Although the Society has been working on the idea for months, ASCAP's plan to stage a series of concerts, starting Oct. 1, for New Yorkers is looked upon by the music publishing industry as an effective piece of goodwill strategy which will come in good use during the current controversy between broadcasting and ASCAP. The music festival, completely bankrolled by ASCAP, will present the orchestras of Paul Whiteman, Fred Waring and Benny Goodman in modern dance idioms, an American band repertoire by Edwin Franko Goldman's band, light operatic and musical comedy number by an orchestra bantoned by Frank Black, and a separate session highlighting the works of Negro composers. The classical field will be represented by the Boston symphony orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky conducting.

Stage, radio and screen vocalists will participate, while many of the writers in the ASCAP membership will make personal appearances. Question as to whether the networks will be offered these concerts, and whether they will carry them, is still open.

Purpose of the series is to celebrate the 25th anniversary of ASCAP's inception and also pay tribute to one of its founders, Victor Herbert.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Hollywood Reporter
HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.

SEP 11 1939

Occasion To Honor ASCAP's 25th Year

New York.—The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers will stage a huge musical festival here for seven nights starting Oct. 1, with the most pretentious music ever to be played and sung on any similar occasion. This in honor of the Society's 25th birthday.

The festival will be free to the citizens of New York and those from every part of the world who may be there during that week.

The idea was announced yesterday jointly by Mayor LaGuardia and Gene Buck. LaGuardia stated: "I know of no better way to get the message of a dedication to art and peace designed to allay the public sorrow and anxiety occasioned by the conflict in Europe, than through music."

The program will include sessions of symphonic jazz and swing music by Paul Whiteman, Benny Goodman, Fred Waring and their orchestras. Symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, who will present two concerts of symphonic works by American composers. An evening will be devoted to famous popular songs written by Irving Berlin, George M. Cohan, Vincent Youmans, Cole Porter, J. Fred Coots and others with the composers to direct the rendition of their compositions. One concert will be devoted to negro composers and their compositions. There will also be a band night with several renowned bands playing American selections from the popular band repertory.

Gene Buck stated: "We believe this musical cavalcade of the works of the members of ASCAP will be one of the outstanding events in the history of music. Numerous distinguished stars of opera, musical comedy, radio, screen and concert will appear on each evening's program."

It has not been decided where the festival will be held, but it looks like the mall in Central Park.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

SEP 12 1939

Tanglewood Plans To Be Discussed

Koussevitzky, Downes, Woodworth To Confer

Plans for the academy at Tanglewood projected by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to open next July will be discussed at a meeting this week. Already Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and prime mover in the academy has arrived at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox. With him is Mrs. Koussevitzky.

Also in the group will be Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard University, who will be in charge of the choral work at the academy; Olin Downes, music editor of the New York Times and George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra.

The group will remain in the Berkshires for several days

9

[illegible] Tributes Paid Gilman as Man and Critic

'Artist in Words,' Barbirolli Says; 'Deep Understanding' Praised by Damrosch

The following expressions of appreciation of Lawrence Gilman's life and work were received yesterday:

ROYAL CORTISSOZ, art critic of the New York Herald Tribune: I loved Lawrence Gilman and I shall never cease to regret his death. He was not only my colleague but my friend, full of sympathy and all that makes friendship worth while. I have known intimately the outstanding musical critics of New York, Krehbiel, Henderson, Aldrich and Huneker. He wielded authority like theirs and admirably maintained their tradition, adding to it his own accent. He was a man of high accomplishment, yet he had a wonderful modesty. Everything about him was endearing. He was all goodness and [illegible]. I cannot bear to think of our having lost him.

JOHN BARBIROLLI, conductor of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra: No conventional expression of regret can in any way convey what I feel about the passing of that great critic and artist in words, Lawrence Gilman. It had never been my pleasure to meet him personally, but we corresponded occasionally about notes for the Philharmonic program, and particularly do I treasure the memory of the notes he wrote for my arrangement of the prelude and entr'acte of Debussy's "Pelleas." The exquisite beauty and sensitiveness of his mind were never more [illegible] revealed, and perhaps it was fitting it should be so, for surely in this music there was something of his own remote yet fragrant spirit.

MRS. AUGUST BELMONT, chairman of the Metropolitan Opera Guild: Mr. Gilman's death is a [illegible] loss to music and to lovers of music who read him and admired both his learning and his long devotion to everything pertaining to good music. He was a poet—a poet musician. It strikes one as an irreparable loss. I'm so stunned I can't believe there is anything more that I can say, but from those few words you'll know how I feel.

ARTUR BODANZKY, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Association: The shocking news of the death of Mr. Gilman just reached me. Please accept my deeply felt sympathy upon the loss of so eminent and valuable a member of your staff.

DR. WALTER DAMROSCH, conductor and composer: The passing of Lawrence Gilman will be a great loss to the entire musical world of America. He combined a great passion for music with a deep understanding of its mysteries. His analyses of the great composers were [illegible] and revealing, and to the performing artists his criticisms were always fair and encouraging. In him we musicians lose a great [illegible] and a gentle and beautiful [illegible].

MARSHALL FIELD, president and chairman of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society: I admired everything Mr. Gilman wrote and always found him charming personally. He meant a great deal to the Philharmonic-Symphony Society, writing the program notes, and meant a great deal to the many people attending the concerts who read the program notes.

ARTHUR JUDSON, business manager of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra: May I express my deep regret and personal sympathy as well as that of the directors of the Philharmonic-Symphony Society in the loss of Lawrence Gilman? We have been associated with him for a number of years and have always found him an honest colleague and a great gentleman. Music in America will feel greatly the loss of his illuminating comments.

OSCAR THOMPSON, music critic of "The Sun," and editor of "Musical America": His fellow music critics will remember Lawrence Gilman with whole-hearted admiration and [illegible] affection. He was the poet [illegible] of his profession. His daily reviews and his Sunday articles were distinguished by unusual literary [illegible] and by poetic, imaginative [illegible] qualities rare in the columns of newspapers today. Often [illegible] were essays which reflected his profound scholarship. [illegible] they were none the less trenchant and penetrating as criticism. He [illegible] to say and he said [illegible]. He kept abreast [illegible]. Great as was his attention to the music of the past, he [illegible] alert for the possibilities [illegible] new contributions [illegible] of today. His program [illegible] for the New York Philharmonic Symphony and the [illegible] will remain [illegible] years to come. To few men has it been given to contribute so much to America's ever-widening musical culture. He, himself, was a remarkably cultivated man. Modest to a fault, but genial and generous behind his protection of shyness, he was dearly loved by those who called him friend. For them, as for the greater number who knew him only by his very individual and stimulating writings, his loss is an irreparable one.

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY, conductor: The news of the passing of Lawrence Gilman is a great shock to me. At this time when musical forces in America are reaching extraordinary growth and self expression, the absence of Mr. Gilman's brilliant pen and constructive criticisms will be acutely felt.

EDWARD ZIEGLER, assistant general manager of the Metropolitan Opera Association: An inestimable loss to the cause of the appreciation of great music and personally even a greater one.

OLIN DOWNES, music critic of "The New York Times." The death of Lawrence Gilman is a shocking loss. A most sensitive artist, he was a modest and wonderful companion and loyal friend. By his departure music criticism suffers incalculably. For Gilman, primarily a musician, was also scholar and poet in one. He had no prejudices. He was avid of ideas and recognized beauty in a thousand forms. His richness of background was companioned by his intuition, imagination, and taste and it may be said that, when he pleased, no colleague on either side of the water could rival the music of his prose. He will be sorely needed, and the battle line be hard pressed in the years immediately before us for such a champion of art and the ideal. Lawrence Gilman leaves imperishable memories for those who were near him, and his stamp will remain upon the musical culture of his country and period. But there are those who will not be consoled by these thoughts for his loss.

LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI, conductor: Lawrence Gilman was one of America's great men. An ideal critic with real understanding of the inner nature of music. A poet in his use of language, with genuine unforced humor. He cannot be replaced, because he was unique.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHATTANOOGA, TENN.
TIMES

SEP 12 1939

MISS HICKOX TELLS CLUB OF CONCERTS

Woman's Press Group Hears of Music Festivals Held in New York, New England

When a rainstorm drowned the sound of the orchestra, the audience turned and watched the water cascade off the roof, a natural display rivaling the publicized fountains at the New York World's fair, said Miss Zillah K. Hickok in describing to the Chattanooga Woman's Press club a concert which she attended during her recent trip. Miss Hickox spoke at the club's luncheon yesterday at the Y. W. C. A.

The concert was one given at the Berkshire Symphonic festival at Tanglewood, near Stockbridge, Mass., by the Boston Symphony orchestra, under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Spotlights from the outside, shining through the water as it poured from the music shed roof made a brilliant spectacle, Miss Hickox said.

SYMPHONY TO LAUNCH NEW SEASON

Orchestra Will Play New Works and Older Favorites

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, again under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will launch a new season on Friday afternoon, Oct. 18, with plans to offer music lovers a good deal of music that is new, some that is standard and not a little that is extraordinary before the year is out.

Preliminary announcement from Symphony Hall is to the effect that Dr. Koussevitzky has already named a good many works which the orchestra will play and has set down definitely the names of composers whose music will be favored more than in past seasons. Bach and Mozart are listed among the latter. These will be accorded, according to an official communique, "fuller representation" than is customary.

* * * *

Mahler's "Song of the Earth" and Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian" are among the works of special interest due to be done in the course of the series of Friday and Saturday concerts, of which there will be 24 pairs.

A new symphony of Stravinsky, in C major, will be one of the imposing prospects of the year. The date for this is not named, but it, too, is also understood to be scheduled for one of the Friday-Saturday series, along with the same composer's "Oedipus Rex," a revival.

* * * *

There is to be a Tchaikovsky festival late in the season, with two pairs of concerts—the last of the year—given over to works of that composer, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of his birth.

By way of something unusual, there will also be a concert performance of Tchaikovsky's opera, "Pique-Dame."

* * * *

Soloists engaged to appear in the series of Friday-Saturday concerts will include the veteran pianist, Josef Hofmann, making his first appearance with the orchestra in several seasons.

Rudolf Serkin, Jan Smeterlin and Walter Gieseking are other prominent pianists who have engaged to play at some of the concerts.

Singers of ability will appear with the orchestra in some of the concerts, notably in the Tchaikovsky opera, "Pique-Dame." Jascha Heifetz, Joseph Szigeti and Emanuel Feuermann are other instrumental soloists already named.

The war will not affect the destiny of the orchestra as the World war did in the years between 1914 and 1918.

Only five members of the organization are in Europe at this time. George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, said yesterday: "The absence of a few players would not affect the quality of the orchestra. We are prepared to meet contingencies of this nature."

Mr. Judd said that other foreign-born players are either past the European military age or are American citizens. Dr. Koussevitzky has taken out first papers in the United States. As Mr. Judd sees it, there will not be any "unfortunate incidents" to mar the serenity of the Boston orchestra's season such as occurred during the World war when Dr. Karl Muck, the great German conductor, was accused of declining to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" when he was asked to do so in order to "prove his loyalty." The conductor refused, gave as his reason that he had not time to rehearse the orchestra. Later, he did conduct the patriotic piece, but the rising anti-German hysteria eventually resulted in his resignation.

THIS CLIPPING FROM VARIETY
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP 13 1939

Buck's Delay in Forming Licensing Committee Puzzles ASCAP Directors; May Be Retaliation to NAB Attack

Members of the board of directors of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers during the past week expressed themselves as puzzled over the failure of Gene Buck, president, to appoint a committee to study the basis for a new licensing agreement with the broadcasting industry. The board meeting which authorized Buck to form this committee was held July 13. The next gathering of the board is set for Sept. 28.

Impression current among board members is that Buck has been loath to appoint this committee because of his resentment at the personal attack made upon him last month by Neville Miller, president of the National Association of Broadcasters. Miller accused Buck of giving the NAB the runaround by going out to San Francisco instead of keeping an alleged appointment with an NAB copyright committee in New York. Buck, it is also thought, may be waiting to see what the NAB does at its special convention in Chicago this Friday (15).

Although the Society has been working on the idea for months, ASCAP's plan to stage a series of concerts, starting Oct. 1, for New Yorkers is looked upon by the music publishing industry as an effective piece of goodwill strategy which will come in good use during the current controversy between broadcasting and ASCAP. The music festival, completely bankrolled by ASCAP, will present the orchestras of Paul Whiteman, Fred Waring and Benny Goodman in modern dance idioms, an American band repertoire by Edwin Franko Goldman's band, light operatic and musical comedy number by an orchestra bantoned by Frank Black, and a separate session highlighting the works of Negro composers. The classical field will be represented by the Boston symphony orchestra with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

Stage, radio and screen vocalists will participate, while many of the writers in the ASCAP membership will make personal appearances. Question as to whether the networks will be offered these concerts, and whether they will carry them, is still open.

Purpose of the series is to celebrate the 25th anniversary of ASCAP's inception and also pay tribute to one of its founders, Victor Herbert.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Hollywood Reporter
HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.

SEP 11 1939

Occasion To Honor ASCAP's 25th Year

New York.—The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers will stage a huge musical festival here for seven nights starting Oct. 1, with the most pretentious music ever to be played and sung on any similar occasion. This in honor of the Society's 25th birthday.

The festival will be free to the citizens of New York and those from every part of the world who may be there during that week.

The idea was announced yesterday jointly by Mayor LaGuardia and Gene Buck. LaGuardia stated: "I know of no better way to get the message of a dedication to art and peace designed to allay the public sorrow and anxiety occasioned by the conflict in Europe, than through music."

The program will include sessions of symphonic jazz and swing music by Paul Whiteman, Benny Goodman, Fred Waring and their orchestras. Symphony by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky, who will present two concerts of symphonic works by American composers. An evening will be devoted to famous popular songs written by Irving Berlin, George M. Cohan, Vincent Youmans, Cole Porter, J. Fred Coots and others with the composers to direct the rendition of their compositions. One concert will be devoted to negro composers and their compositions. There will also be a band night with several renowned bands playing American selections from the popular band repertory.

Gene Buck stated: "We believe this musical cavalcade of the works of the members of ASCAP will be one of the outstanding events in the history of music. Numerous distinguished stars of opera, musical comedy, radio, screen and concert will appear on each evening's program."

It has not been decided where the festival will be held, but it looks like the mall in Central Park.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

SEP 12 1939

Tanglewood Plans To Be Discussed

Koussevitzky, Downes, Woodworth To Confer

Plans for the academy at Tanglewood projected by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to open next July will be discussed at a meeting this week. Already Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra and prime mover in the academy has arrived at the Curtis Hotel in Lenox. With him is Mrs. Koussevitzky.

Also in the group will be Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, head of the music department of Harvard University, who [illegible] charge of the [illegible] of the academy; Olin [illegible] of the New [illegible] George E. Judd [illegible].

[illegible]

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

SEP 13 1939

World of Lively Arts

By T. H. PARKER

Music In Athens.

With the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as the local ranking favorites, I am sure you will all stop the cup halfway to the lip this morning, to read their plans for their fifty-ninth season.

The season will open at Symphony Hall, Boston, on Friday afternoon, October 13, and will continue through May 4 with the usual series of 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts and six pairs of Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon performances.

Much music of special interest, both new and old, will be heard as well as a larger representation from the standard symphonic repertory. Mahler's "Song Of The Earth" and Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian" will be played at the Friday and Saturday series; also a new symphony by Stravinsky, in C Major, and his "Oedipus Rex" which is to be revived under direction of the composer. Dr. Koussevitzky, now in his sixteenth season, will give fuller representation than usual, to Bach and Mozart.

Bach's Mass in B Minor will be performed at a special concert in April.

The last two pairs of concerts will be devoted to music of Tchaikowsky, in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of his birth. In addition to his orchestral works, there will be a concert performance of the Tschaikowsky opera "Pique-Dame."

American music will also feature more prominently than in the past. In addition to those American works played in Boston, Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct two programs of American music in New York on October 6 and 7, when the orchestra will appear under the sponsorship of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

Soloists engaged to appear at the Friday and Saturday concerts include Josef Hofmann, who has not played with the orchestra for a number of years, and three other pianists recently heard, Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking and Jan Smeterlin. These pianists will play concertos by Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin and Szymanowski. Violinists scheduled include Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti. Emanuel Feuermann, 'cellist, will make his first appearance with the Boston orchestra. Singers will be heard in the aforementioned Mahler, Bach and Debussy, Stravinsky's "Oedipus" and Tschaikowsky's "Pique-Dame."

Music Mountain.

The press bureau of the Gordon String Quartet continues to announce that Albert Spalding will appear with the instrumentalists on Saturday September 23, at 4 o'clock, but does not yet say what the program will be. Traditional patrons of Music Mountain will tell you, however, that it never matters what Mr. Spaldings plays. They eat it with a spoon in any event.

Mrs. Howard Helps.

Variety reports that Mrs. Sidney Howard, whose husband's post humous play, "Madame, Will You Walk?", will be presented by the Playwrights Company, will participate in production conferences with other members of the firm. The author discussed his plans for the show at great length with his wife, and it is figured that her advice will be invaluable in staging the production.

It has not yet been settled, however, who will direct. Mr. Howard was to have done so himself, but with his death in Tyringham, Mass., two weeks ago, another director is being sought. Robert E. Sherwood, due back from the Coast next week, has talked with candidates there.

Meanwhile, other members of the Playwrights Company have been prospecting in New York, but to no special avail. George Kaufman has been mentioned, but it is expected he may be too busy with his own work, and Elmer Rice is in the same fix.

The play goes into rehearsal on September 25 or October 2.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR

SEP 13 1939

This Show Business

by GROVERMAN BLAKE

About Red-Headed Musicians

THE extra-curricular activities of symphony orchestra managers are even more astonishing than I had supposed, according to the following correspondence between Acting Manager Edgar Friedlander of the Cincinnati Orchestra and Richard Grey of Boston:

Manager Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra,
Cincinnati, O.

Dear Sir:

In and around Boston there is a decided lack of red-headed musicians. In fact in the 110 musicians in the Boston Symphony Orchestra there is only one. The New England Conservatory had only two last year. I am interested in finding if this condition is general and shall be grateful for any help you can offer on the question below.

How large is the Cincinnati Orchestra? How many red heads? What instruments do they play? Is the orchestra predominately of any particular nationality? Is there a quality of temperament necessary to musicians which most red-haired persons seem to lack? As musicians are they above or below average? How are they in co-operation and amiability? How would you account for the scarcity?

Apparently the question of red-haired musicians has not troubled anyone in Boston before. People who know musicians are at loss to suggest an answer. So any advice or theories on the subject will be more appreciated.

Thank you for your anticipated co-operation.

RICHARD GRAY,
104 Belvedere Street, Boston, Mass.

Mr. Richard Gray,
104 Belvedere Street,
Boston, Mass.

My Dear Mr. Gray:

Your communication of the twenty-second ultimo relative to the color of the hirsute adornment of the members of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra has remained unanswered until today due to my absence from the city.

Your various inquiries have certainly given me deep food for thought, but unfortunately I am at a loss instanter to give you an answer to the main question at issue. To come to the point very quickly, there are no red headed men in the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, although we do boast of several who are quite bald. One of the latter wears a toupee.

It is indeed difficult to explain the queer phenomena of non-red-headed musical artists and at the moment I have no satisfactory answer. Perhaps because red is at the end of the spectrum farthest removed from violet, and violet is more in keeping with the dulcet tones of a symphony orchestra, may be the answer. Please be assured, however, that I have every intention of giving the matter further thought, study and serious reflection. Should anything truly worthy be developed from these musings and investigations, I shall be glad to advise you the result of my findings.

Sincerely yours,
EDGAR FRIEDLANDER,
Acting Manager.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR

SEP 14 1939

Overtones

By HOWARD W. HESS

The fundamental principles of music are rhythm, melody, harmony, form, color and expression. Rhythm is first in importance, for it is an essential part of all others. In its broadest application rhythm embraces the entire mathematics of music; time, tempo, accent, movement and meter.

The finite human mind demands that time be divided into separate units. Among the early attempts to form a logical system of time subdivisions in music was one that made use of the figure "three," taken from the Holy Trinity, but multiples of "three" gave the incomprehensible units of measure as 9, 27, 81, 243, 729 and 2187. This was abandoned for the more simple multiples of "two:" 4, 8, 16, etc. Present-day notation divides the whole note into halves, quarters, eighths, sixteenths, thirty-seconds, sixty-fourths and one hundred twenty eighths.

Groups of three notes used in the time of two are called "triplets." A good illustration of all of these notes occurs in Beethoven's introduction to the Sonata Pathetic Op. 13.

Measured music contains fundamental beats of two or of three to the measure. Compound times and mixed times are but combinations of these. Each fundamental beat may be subdivided into any units and multiples of "two" or of "three."

Patience and persistence are needed to master time in music; many composers and performers seem never to understand it thoroughly. Walt Whitman's sincere and frank tribute to mathematicians applies to musical mathematicians as well, "Gentlemen, to you the first honors always! Your facts are useful, and yet they are not my dwelling. I but enter by them to an area of my dwelling."

The tempo (speed) of music varies widely according to the mood expressed and to the temperment of the performer.

Many devices have been invented to measure uniform speed in music. The metronome of Maelzel (1772-1838) is the one most approved.

The metronome divides the minute into 100 parts. Beethoven set the pendulum at 80 for the eighth note beat, as an indication of the tempo of the slow movement of the Eroica Symphony; at this pace it lasts for 12½ minutes. Koussevitsky usually takes 13½ minutes to play this movement, Beecham 16 minutes, and Toscanini 19. Brahms says, "As far as my experience goes, every composer who has given metronome marks, sooner or later withdraws them." Metronome marks are a help to some less talented musicians but the understanding performer feels the proper speed after he has completely mastered the notes, the technique and the time.

Mechanically minded conductors afteh follow a machine-like tempo, but the real charm of music is best felt by varying the speed, not by arbitrary computations but because of an inward sense. This "rubato" style is fascinating when it is natural but is disturbing when studied.

Rubato playing is never twice alike, but expresses the momentary feelings of the performer and is only artistic when founded upon a perfect understanding of time.

The most important and least understood part of rhythm is accented. In good music it is susceptible of as many shades as one hears in animated conversation. The musicians who lack artistic accent have not got beyond the mechanical technic problems of equalizing tonal volumes, a practice of doubtful value.

The division of music into measures gives but a suggestion as to the proper accents, which are regular when placed on the first and third count of a four-note phrase, such as one would use in setting the word "un'der stand'ing" to music. Syncopation displaces this normal accent.

Either of these means is purely mechanical. The subtle accents used by the superior artists are so numerous and so varied that they can not be printed. The great musical artist moves his listeners in just the same manner that a great orator by impassioned and subtly accented speech stirs his audience.

Inability to feel proper accent in each small group of notes and to blend them together into complete musical sentences, at once stamps a performer as being inferior, no matter how many other fine qualities he may possess.

Music can express every known emotion and rhythm must be well ordered and at the same time very flexible, just as the deep, rich feelings of a well-endowed human being must be controlled but thoroughly exercised.

Meter is a term borrowed from poetry and music can be played in a sing-song manner like the scanning of poetry, but when rhythm in music is perfect it flows smoothly and creates a charm of movement that is graceful, curved, delightful, not angular, jerky or displeasing.

(This is the second in a series of articles of musical appreciation by Mr. Hess.)

THIS CLIPPING FROM ANN ARBOR, MICH.
NEWS

SEP 14 1939

European War Not Expected To Endanger Choral Union Program

Fears that the European war might endanger artists who are to appear in Ann Arbor in the 1939-40 Choral Union concerts were partially allayed this morning by receipt by Dr. Charles A. Sink, president of the School of Music, of word that most of them are shortly expected to be in the United States.

Three of them, Sergei Rachmaninoff, pianist, Robert Virovai, violinist, and Alexander Kipnis, bass singer, are now in the United States.

Fritz Kreisler, Austrian-born violinist who now is an American citizen, is reported to be en route to the states on an American ship.

Jussi Bjoerling, Swedish-born tenor, now is in Sweden, but is said to be planning to leave very soon on an American boat.

Now in her native Norway is Kirsten Flagstad, soprano. She is to come here on a Norwegian boat and is expected to arrive early in October.

Arthur Rubenstein, pianist who was born in Russia, is in France and is to sail here soon.

Two English artists, Mr. and Mrs. Rae Robertson, pianists, who appear as "Bartlett and Robertson," are reported to be in the British Isles. Mr. Robertson is said to be above the present age limit for those subject to military call. Their exact sailing plans are not known, but they are not to appear here until Feb. 14.

Members of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony orchestra and the Boston Symphony orchestra are all in the United States now.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
Journal of Commerce

(10)

SEP 13 1939

ON THE AISLE

Notes on MacDonald's Chicago Concert, Chatterton's Harris Opening Oct. 9, Other Things

By Claudia Cassidy

HAVING mopped up at the box-office by booking Nelson Eddy into annual stampede sell-outs at the Civic Opera House, Harry Zelzer quietly sends out this season's concert list, which not only reminds us of Mr. Eddy's return on March 3, but admits that Mr. Eddy's co-star, Jeannette MacDonald, will make her Chicago recital debut on March 29. This will mark her return to the Chicago stage after more than ten years' absence. She played at the Apollo in the Shubert musical, "Boom Boom," in the Spring of 1929, with Frank McIntyre and a then obscure English juvenile named Archie Leach. Mr. Leach is better known nowadays as Cary Grant, of Hollywood.

Mr. Zelzer's list is not yet complete, but it is extremely interesting and it reads like this: Oct. 1, Alfred Lustgarten, American violinist; Oct. 15, Don Cossack Russian Male Chorus, Serge Jaroff, conducting; Oct. 29, American Caravan Ballet; Nov. 12, Maria Kurenko, soprano; Nov. 18-19, Devi Dja and her Bali and Java dancers, in three performances on first American tour; Dec. 5, Simon Barer, Russian pianist; Jan. 20, Mischa Elman, violinist; Jan. 21, Juissi Bjoerling, tenor; Jan. 25, Jeannette Albert, pianist; Jan. 27, Tito Schipa, tenor; Feb. 4, Harald Kreutzberg, dancer; Feb. 11, Jooss Ballet; Feb. 18, San Francisco Opera Ballet; March 3, Nelson Eddy, baritone; March 10, Martha Graham and dance group; March 29, Jeannette MacDonald, soprano.

* * *

"TONIGHT We Dance" is the new name of the Ruth Chatterton play, which will open at the Harris Oct. 9. As previously announced, Miss Chatterton's company holds Barry Thomson, Charita Bauer and others.

* * *

"THE American Way" will close its New York engagement Sept. 23 and will not tour. This decision is considered final by the management, which gives an unwieldly production and prohibitive costs as decisive factors. Touring "The Great Waltz" is still remembered as a kind of nightmare by those who had to fit it into improbable places.

* * *

"LEAVE IT TO ME," on the other hand, will tour, and at once. The musical closes in New York Saturday after slightly less than two weeks' return engagement there. It had a full New York season before reopening as a kind of tune-up for the tour. No Chicago date has been announced.

* * *

HELEN HAYES and Philip Merivale will be co-starred in "Ladies and Gentlemen," which is due in New York Oct. 17, after engagements in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Washington.

* * *

PERHAPS New York listened to too many Grant Park broadcasts with their bland assumption that Chicago is the music center of the universe. Beginning Oct. 1 New York will have a stupendous week of free music, the idea being to take people's minds off the war. Sponsored by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, with Mayor La Guardia's aid, the carnival of melody will employ everything from the Boston Orchestra with Koussevitzky to Whiteman, Goodman, Vallee, Cohan, Berlin, Porter and about everybody else you can name who has that sort of name. Where the concerts are to be held is still a mystery, and how tickets will be distributed is a story yet untold. Its title should be grief to somebody.

* * *

"MY DEAR JOHN BARRYMORE" is the name of a topnotch piece by Lloyd Lewis in the theater section of the New York Times. It doesn't miss a trick on the fabulous fellow whose newest incarnation is to be observed in "My Dear Children."

* * *

"THUNDER IN THE HILLS," described as a Stephen Foster American Folk Ballet created and directed by Walter Camryn, will be danced at Mandel Hall tomorrow night, starting at 9 o'clock, as a part of the Hyde Park Jubilee. Among the twenty dancers are Mr. Camryn, Bettina Rosay, Betsy Ross, Sean Marino, Anne Devine, Parker Kachler and Ida Galler. Muriel Davenport, soprano, will sing songs of the sixties.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

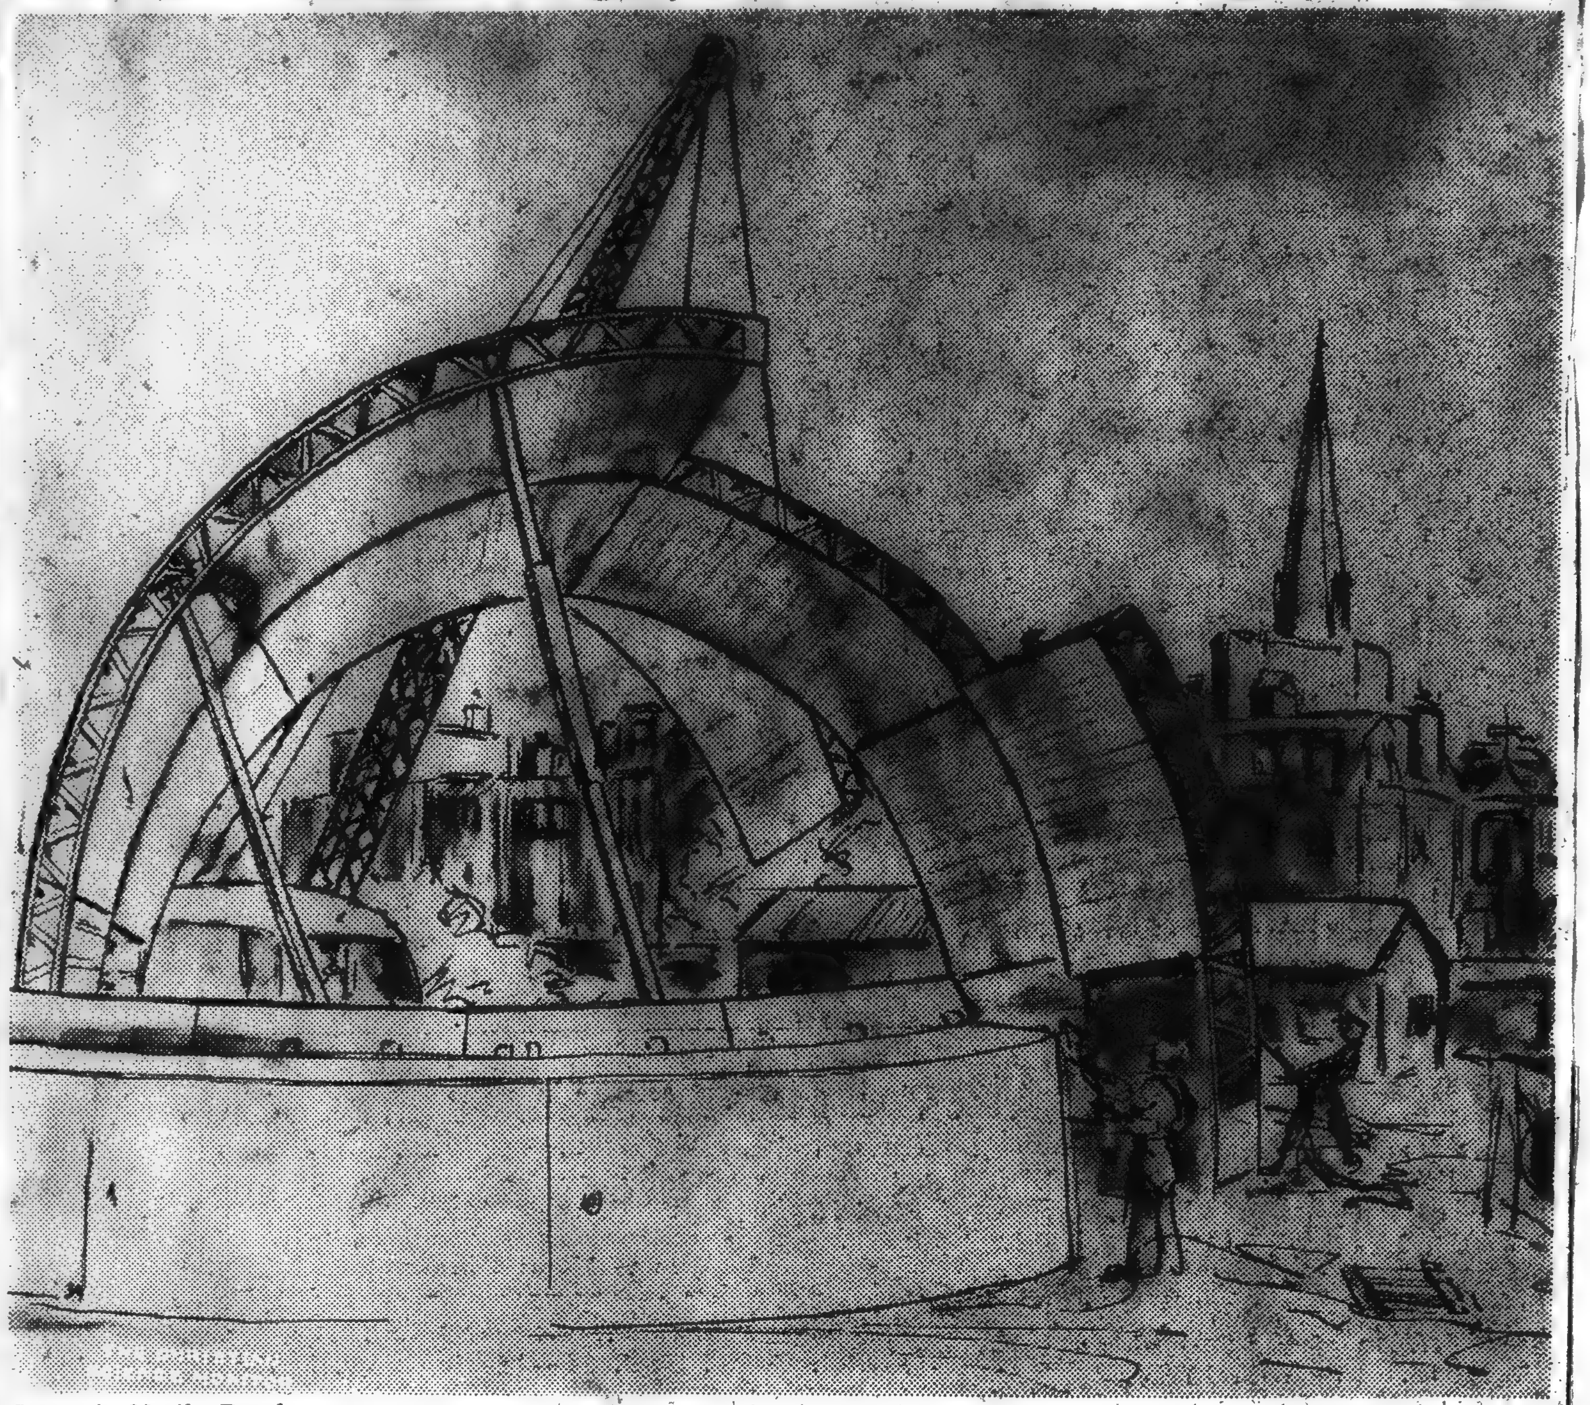
BOSTON, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1939

Construction Work on New Esplanade Shell Progressing

By David Nilsson

Arthur Fiedler

Conductor of the Pops and Esplanade concerts.



Drawn by Martha Burnham

Drawing of Old Shell as It Is Being Taken Down

New $270,000 Hatch Memorial is expected to be largest concert shell of permanent masonry construction in the United States.

Fiedler Shins Up Lamppost To View Shell Building Work

Back from Valparaiso, Chile, Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Pops and Esplanade concerts and, he admits, a confirmed spare-time "construction overseer," went down to the Esplanade yesterday to look over some excavating and building operations in which he has a personal interest.

He found, however, that work on the new $270,000 Hatch Memorial Shell was hidden from view by a high fence. After a futile search for a convenient knot hole, the maestro shinned up a lamppost and looked over.

Had he been a day earlier he would have seen the old steel shell, which has housed his summer orchestra for the past six years, coming down in sections. It is to be erected in Wood Island Park, East Boston, and originally it was planned to move the structure there in one piece on a barge—but difficulties developed. As it was, though, Mr. Fiedler looked out over 40,000 square feet of ground on which a steam shovel was hard at work in one place, while in others steel and concrete piles were being driven far down into the filled-in soil.

Presently, learning the post-hanger's identity, the foreman, John Fortuna, invited him to enter the enclosure and to sit in the cab of the steam shovel, handling the controls.

"I can't tell you what a thrill this is," the conductor remarked. "I used to come down here before 1929 (when the Esplanade concerts were begun) and look around at the land and the view over the river, and say to myself, 'What a wonderful place this would be to have some concerts.'"

It is believed that the New Hatch Memorial Shell will be the only large concert shell of permanent masonry construction anywhere in the United States.

The erection of such an expensive home for the summer orchestra seems to have led many contributors to the cost of the Esplanade concerts to think that their subscriptions are not needed, orchestra officials point out, however. Emphasizing the fact that there is no connection between the concert fund and the bequest providing for the shell, they reported this morning that although the usual 250,000 people enjoyed the outdoor concerts this year, the fund supporting the series is still $1,400 in the red, contributions have fallen to the lowest figure in six years.

It is hoped that music lovers of Greater Boston will not be faced with the problem of inability to continue to pay for an orchestra to play in the country's finest shell, now that it has been provided.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 13 1939

MUSIC

SYMPHONY ANNOUNCEMENT

The Boston Symphony orchestra will open its [illegible] season in Symphony hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, Oct. 13. The season will continue until May 4, with the usual series of 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts and six pairs of Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts in Symphony hall. There are to be concerts as usual in other New England cities, New York and the West.

Much music of special interest, both new and old, will be heard in the course of the season, as well as a larger representation from the standard symphonic repertory.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, in his 16th consecutive year as the orchestra's conductor, has arranged what should prove an unusual event, the performance of Tschaikovski's opera, "Pique-Dame," during a two weeks' Tchaikovsky festival at the end of the season. May 7, 1940 will be the 100th anniversary of Tschaikovsky's birth. at the end of the eason. May 7, 1940, will be the 100th annivesary of Tschaikovsky's birth.

Mahler's "Song of Earth" and Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian" will be played at the Friday and Saturday series, also a new symphony of Stravinsky in C major and his "Oedipus Rex," which is to be revived under the direction of the composer.

Dr. Koussevitsk ywill give a fuller representation than is customary of the music of Bach and Mozart. Bach's Mass in B minor will be performed at a special concert in April. American music will figure more prominently than usual in the Boston season.

Soloists who will appear at the Friday and Saturday series include Josef Hofmann, who has not played with the orchestra for a number of years. Three pianists more recently heard who will play in concertos by Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin and Szymanowski, are Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking and Jan Smeterlin.

Solo violinists who will be heard with the orchestra are Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti. Emanuel Fuermann, cellist, will make his first appearance with the orchestra. Singers will be heard in works by Mahler, Debusy, Bach, Stravinsky and Tschaikovsky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

SEP 15 1939

NOTED MUSICIANS AT CURTIS HOTEL

Mrs Samuel Reber Entertains at Tyringham—President and Mrs Baxter Return From San Francisco

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Sept. 14—A number of distinguished musicians are at Curtis hotel, Lenox, including Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mrs Koussevitzky, George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra; Richard Burgin of Jamaicaway, concertmeister; J. N. Burk, publicity director; C. W. Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard; Herbert Graf, stage and costume director of the Metropolitan Opera company.

Mrs Samuel Reber, the former Miss Cecilia S. Miles, daughter of late Maj-Gen Nelson A. Miles, was a luncheon hostess today at her cottage at Tyringham in compliment to Mrs Charles Hewitt Wright of Pittsfield, Mrs W. Rockwood Gibbs of Richmond, and Mrs James P. Robinson of South Egremont, wife of Col Robinson, retired.

Back in Williamstown

Dr James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams college, and Mrs Baxter, are back at President's house, Williamstown, from San Francisco.

The Rev and Mrs William Merriam Crane have returned to Morningface, Richmond, from their camp at Lake Winnipesaukee, New Hampshire.

Leaving Rosemary cottage, Stockbridge, for New York were Mr and Mrs Henry Fairfield Osborn. Mrs Osborn's parents, Mr and Mrs Felix Lamond of Rome, Italy, are at Harrod inn, Stockbridge.

Prof Livingston Hall of Harvard law school, and Mrs Hall, have closed their bungalow at Great Pine farm, Great Barrington, and are at Weston.

Mr and Mrs William Ellery Sedgwick of the Sedgwick mansion, Stockbridge, are visiting Mrs Sedgwick's mother, Mrs Charles Mills Cabot at Ipswich.

Mrs William Norton Bullard is returning tomorrow to Highwood, Lenox, from her summer camp at North Haven, Me.

Kimball Salisbury has returned to Lake Forest, Ill., from Tor court, Pittsfield, where he spent several weeks with his mother, Mrs Warren M. Salisbury.

Mr and Mrs Wait Talcott of Rockford, Ill., are back at Rollaway hill, North Egremont, from Provincetown, Cape Cod.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Motion Picture Daily
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP 15 1939

BANNER RADIO LINES

By JACK BANNER

THE DIVIDED TWAIN, Ascap and the networks, are standing proudly aloof from each other on the subject of a network broadcasting schedule for the music association's Music Festival, which is to be held Oct. 1-6, inclusive. Despite the enormity of the Festival (it will cost Ascap a third of a millon dollars to produce it) neither side has approached the other about the matter of a network schedule for the events. It is almost inconceivable that the networks will not broadcast the Music Festival events, but if both sides persist in their present uncompromising attitude it might very well develop that way.

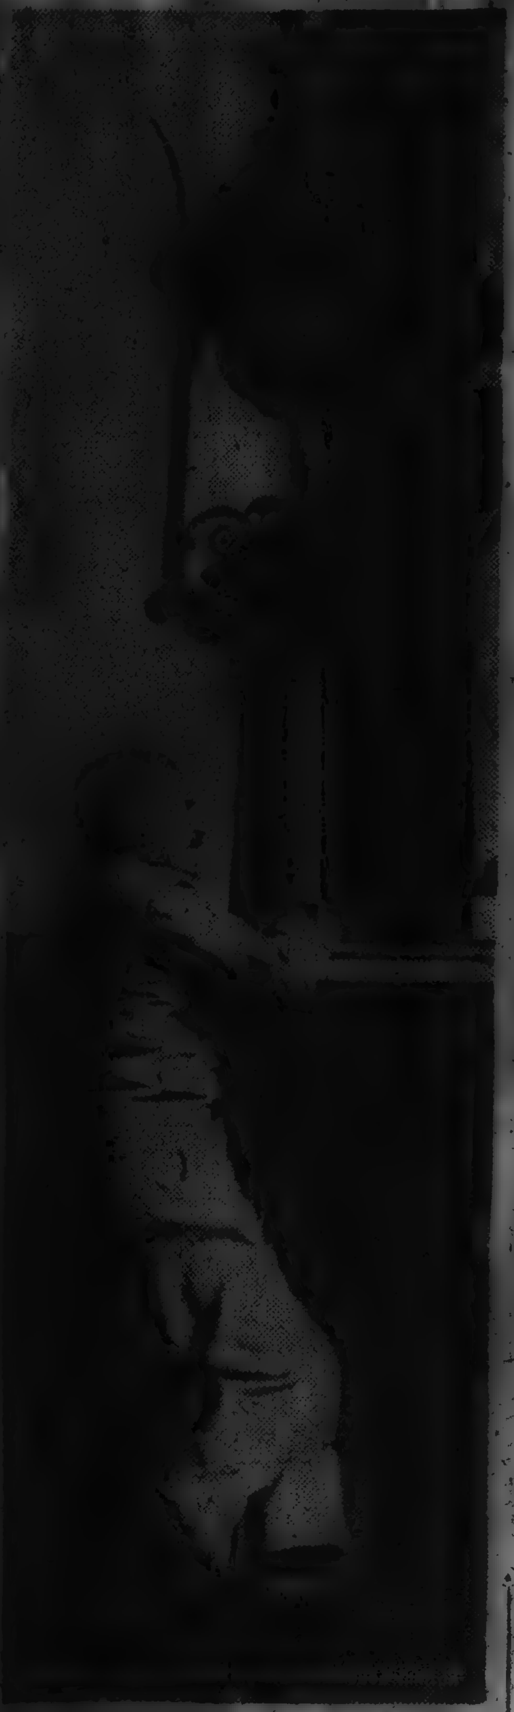
If that is how it works out we will have a ridiculous situation in which a national event will be carried no farther than the walls of Carnegie Hall, from whence the concerts will originate. Ascap will be the loser in that its festival will be confined to a local program; the networks will be the losers in that a superfine schedule will go begging for lack of radio accommodation. Certainly the public will be a loser too, for the Festival includes concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky; a presentation of light operas by Frank Black; an evening devoted to the creative works of Negro musicians; an evening devoted to Symphonic Jazz, Melody and Swing, with Paul Whiteman and his orchestra, Benny Goodman and band and Fred Waring's orchestra and choir; an evening devoted to band music presented by Edwin Franko Goldman's band and other bands; and an evening devoted to popular songs written by composers of the Society in which composers like Irving Berlin, Richard Rodgers, Cole Porter, and others, will sing and play their own works.

There is still time for Ascap and the networks to temporarily forget their differences and get together in the good cause of the Festival. Their ill-will for each other will be insignificant to the ill-will that the public will hold for both sides if they persist in their present attitude until it is too late to arrange a network broadcast schedule.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

BOSTON, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1939

Construction Work on New Esplanade Shell Progressing



By David Nilsson

Arthur Fiedler

Conductor of the Pops and Esplanade concerts.

Drawn by Martha Burnham

Drawing of Old Shell as It Is Being Taken Down

New $270,000 Hatch Memorial is expected to be largest concert shell of permanent masonry construction in the United States.

Fiedler Shins Up Lamppost To View Shell Building Work

Back from Valparaiso, Chile, Arthur Fiedler, conductor of the Pops and Esplanade concerts and, he admits, a confirmed spare-time "construction overseer," went down to the Esplanade yesterday to look over some excavating and building operations in which he has a personal interest.

He found, however, that work on the new $270,000 Hatch Memorial Shell was hidden from view by a high fence. After a futile search for a convenient knot hole, the maestro shinned up a lamppost and looked over.

Had he been a day earlier he would have seen the old steel shell, which has housed his summer orchestra for the past six years, coming down in sections. It is to be erected in Wood Island Park, East Boston, and originally it was planned to move the structure there in one piece on a barge—but difficulties developed. As it was, though, Mr. Fiedler looked out over 40,000 square feet of ground on which a steam shovel was hard at work in one place, while in others steel and concrete piles were being driven far down into the filled-in soil.

Presently, learning the post-hanger's identity, the foreman, John Fortuna, invited him to enter the enclosure and to sit in the cab of the steam shovel, handling the controls.

"I can't tell you what a thrill this is," the conductor remarked. "I used to come down here before 1929 (when the Esplanade concerts were begun) and look around at the land and the view over the river, and say to myself, 'What a wonderful place this would be to have some concerts.'"

It is believed that the New Hatch Memorial Shell will be the only large concert shell of permanent masonry construction anywhere in the United States.

The erection of such an expensive home for the summer orchestra seems to have led many contributors to the cost of the Esplanade concerts to think that their subscriptions are not needed, orchestra officials point out, however. Emphasizing the fact that there is no connection between the concert fund and the bequest providing for the shell, they reported this morning that although the usual 250,000 people enjoyed the outdoor concerts this year, the fund supporting the series is still $1,400 in the red, contributions have fallen to the lowest figure in six years.

It is hoped that music lovers of Greater Boston will not be faced with the problem of inability to continue to pay for an orchestra to play in the country's finest shell, now that it has been provided.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HAVERHILL, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 13 1939

MUSIC

SYMPHONY ANNOUNCEMENT

The Boston Symphony orchestra will open its [illegible] season in Symphony hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, Oct. 13. The season will continue until May 4, with the usual series of 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts and six pairs of Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts in Symphony hall. There are to be concerts as usual in other New England cities, New York and the West.

Much music of special interest, both new and old, will be heard in the course of the season, as well as a larger representation from the standard symphonic repertory.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, in his 16th consecutive year as the orchestra's conductor, has arranged what should prove an unusual event, the performance of Tschaikovski's opera, "Pique-Dame," during a two weeks' Tchaikovsky festival at the end of the season. May 7, 1940 will be the 100th anniversary of Tschaikovsky's birth. at the end of the season. May 7 1940, will be the 100th anniversary of Tschaikovsky's birth.

Mahler's "Song of Earth" and Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian" will be played at the Friday and Saturday series, also a new symphony of Stravinsky in C major and his "Oedipus Rex," which is to be revived under the direction of the composer.

Dr. Koussevitsky will give a fuller representation than is customary of the music of Bach and Mozart. Bach's Mass in B minor will be performed at a special concert in April. American music will figure more prominently than usual in the Boston season.

Soloists who will appear at the Friday and Saturday series include Josef Hofmann, who has not played with the orchestra for a number of years. Three pianists more recently heard who will play in concertos by Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin and Szymanowski are Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking and Jan Smeterlin.

[illegible] violinists who will be heard with the orchestra are Jascha Heifetz [illegible] Emanuel Feuermann [illegible]

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

SEP 15 1939

NOTED MUSICIANS AT CURTIS HOTEL

Mrs Samuel Reber Entertains at Tyringham—President and Mrs Baxter Return From San Francisco

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Sept. 14—A number of distinguished musicians are at Curtis hotel, Lenox, including Dr Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Mrs Koussevitzky, George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra; Richard Burgin of Jamaicaway, concertmeister; J. N. Burk, publicity director; C. W. Woodworth, head of the music department at Harvard; Herbert Graf, stage and costume director of the Metropolitan Opera company.

Mrs Samuel Reber, the former Miss Cecilia S. Miles, daughter of late Maj-Gen Nelson A. Miles, was a luncheon hostess today at her cottage at Tyringham in compliment to Mrs Charles Hewitt Wright of Pittsfield, Mrs W. Rockwood Gibbs of Richmond, and Mrs James P. Robinson of South Egremont, wife of Col Robinson, retired.

Back in Williamstown

Dr James Phinney Baxter, 3d, president of Williams college, and Mrs Baxter, are back at President's house, Williamstown, from San Francisco.

The Rev and Mrs William Merriam Crane have returned to Morningface, Richmond, from their camp at Lake Winnipesaukee, New Hampshire.

Leaving Rosemary cottage, Stockbridge, for New York were Mr and Mrs Henry Fairfield Osborn. Mrs Osborn's parents, Mr and Mrs Felix Lamond of Rome, Italy, are at Harrod inn, Stockbridge.

Prof Livingston Hall of Harvard law school, and Mrs Hall, have closed their bungalow at Great Pine farm, Great Barrington, and are at Weston.

Mr and Mrs William Ellery Sedgwick of the Sedgwick mansion, Stockbridge, are visiting Mrs Sedgwick's mother, Mrs Charles Mills Cabot at Ipswich.

Mrs William Norton Bullard is returning tomorrow to Highwood, Lenox, from her summer camp at North Haven, Me.

Kimball Salisbury has returned to Lake Forest, Ill., from Tor court, Pittsfield, where he spent several weeks with his mother, Mrs Warren M. Salisbury.

Mr and Mrs Wait Talcott of Rockford, Ill., are back at Rollaway hill, North Egremont, from Provincetown, Cape Cod.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
Motion Picture Daily
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP 15 1939

BANNER RADIO LINES

By JACK BANNER

THE DIVIDED TWAIN, Ascap and the networks, are standing proudly aloof from each other on the subject of a network broadcasting schedule for the music association's Music Festival, which is to be held Oct. 1-6, inclusive. Despite the enormity of the Festival (it will cost Ascap a third of a millon dollars to produce it) neither side has approached the other about the matter of a network schedule for the events. It is almost inconceivable that the networks will not broadcast the Music Festival events, but if both sides persist in their present uncompromising attitude it might very well develop that way.

If that is how it works out we will have a ridiculous situation in which a national event will be carried no farther than the walls of Carnegie Hall, from whence the concerts will originate. Ascap will be the loser in that its festival will be confined to a local program; the networks will be the losers in that a superfine schedule will go begging for lack of radio accommodation. Certainly the public will be a loser too, for the Festival includes concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky; a presentation of light operas by Frank Black; an evening devoted to the creative works of Negro musicians; an evening devoted to Symphonic Jazz, Melody and Swing, with Paul Whiteman and his orchestra, Benny Goodman and band and Fred Waring's orchestra and choir; an evening devoted to band music presented by Edwin Franko Goldman's band and other bands; and an evening devoted to popular songs written by composers of the Society in which composers like Irving Berlin, Richard Rodgers, Cole Porter, and others, will sing and play their own works.

There is still time for Ascap and the networks to temporarily forget their differences and get together in the good cause of the Festival. Their ill-will for each other will be insignificant to the ill-will that the public will hold for both sides if they persist in their present attitude until it is too late to arrange a network broadcast schedule.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

SEP 14 1939

Whiting's Boston Letter

By E. E. WHITING

Boston, Sept. 13—Some important visitors, an outlook for winter entertainment, faint echoes of the war, reopening of the schools, a light dash of politics—a normal week in town.

The most interesting of the visitors are the chemists. The American Chemical society has been holding its 98th session here, and the day-by-day reports of members display a wonderland of possibilities. In the temper of the times many of us have come to think of chemistry as particularly if not principally applicable to the ways of war; but that is far from the fact. In the sessions this week there was, to be sure, some mention of a less expensive method for making mustard gas, but more interesting and in the long run more significant are the promises of incalculable benefit to mankind through the discoveries and developments in chemistry.

Among all the sciences and arts perhaps none offers so magic-like a vista down the future as is opened up by the chemists—they seek and approach a distant horizon where a better world may be found by their efforts. It is a pursuit without end, because the objectives are unnumbered and the achievements and attainments are continuous. In industry, medicine, indeed in all the range of human activities, the work of the chemist is vital. He is a dreamer who makes his dreams come true. He is a pioneer and a discoverer who sails uncharted seas—and charts them as he goes. Each victory won is the stepping stone to another.

Vastly important are the suggestions offered in the papers and addresses of these assembled chemists. We cannot undertake to set them down here. Interesting would be a condensed summary, at the end of this session, of the important papers read, for popular consumption.

Let us, however, before taking leave of the chemists, take note of one of the lighter items: The seedless watermelon. We do not understand that this marvel has yet been created, at least not on a commercial scale. You cannot, we understand, go to your greengrocer or fruit dealer and order one. But we are told that some day this may be so. It is a great thought—to be able to dip into a melon and wallow through its juices unhampered and undeterred by the slippery seeds. Yet we shall miss those seeds. They made childhood happy, for there is nothing pleasanter in years of innocence than to propel a damp watermelon seed across the dining table from between the thumb and finger.

Nor are the seeds an insuperable hindrance to speed-eating, for the winner of a recent watermelon eating contest won by the simple device, as he explained in the subsequent success story, of swallowing the seeds. We think his case ought to be followed up to find out if he has sprouted.

Seriously, however, if a seedless watermelon could be developed without sacrifice of flavor or juiciness, that would not be trivial, but would be important. The watermelon is a marvel among edibles. We listened one summer day lately, as we sat on a hotel piazza in Kennebunkport, to a friend's account of his journey, 10 or a dozen years ago, through the Holy Land and desert tracts in the regions of the old world; and he told us that on one of their trips they carried an abundant supply of melons in place of drinking water.

And when the experts have finally won the seedless melon let them tackle the pomegranate.

Another interesting discovery reported by science—this time at the third International Congress for Microbiology, in New York, is that the earth's topsoil contains a powerful germicide. They are still groping for further information about it; but meantime anyone who likes to believe there is something in it can dig in the soil of his flower bed or garden, pulling up the weeds that thrived through the hot summer when there was no happiness in gardening. This is quite unscientific, but it is the fact that whenever we spend a Saturday afternoon on our hands and knees, grubbing in the garden, we feel better for it. There is a definite and delicious fragrance in the soil.

Chemists have a good deal to say about the beneficent or otherwise qualities of foods, and their researches and experiments are constantly guiding us along the pathways of health and safety. Was it a chemist who started the spinach culture? May we thank him, or otherwise, for thrusting upon us the belief that raw carrots are food for humans? We were told this week by these assembled chemists that spinach, cauliflower, kale and one or two other foods in the diet build up that vitamin which aids the blood to clot easily, thus averting peril.

But we have scanned the daily reports of these sessions in vain to find any proof that persistent consumption of corn on the cob will do anything helpful. Does gnawing corn from cobs sharpen or blunt the teeth? Should one, for best results, grip the corn with the lower teeth and then force the uppers down to strip the kernels, slightly inclining the head forward in a nodding motion, to get the maximum? Or does one preferably insert the upper teeth deep into the cob, and then strip upward? Is it better technic to play the cob like an accordion, beginning at the center, and running leftwards for the bass and then rapidly to the right for the treble? Is the proper span two rows of kernels, or three, or four? All this, however, is a problem rather of physics than of chemistry.

Boston has always been addicted to oysters, and so greets the reopening of the season with gusto. Also, the annual debate as to what to do to an oyster on the half shell, before swallowing it, is begun. There is one group who rise in horror at the thought of doing anything to the recumbent oyster except to swallow it straight. The hotel serves an assortment of condiments—lemon, tabasco, chopped pickle, horse-radish, salt and pepper, and tomato sauce. We have watched the oyster rites of diners over many years, and have partaken in them, and we find that the usual custom is to put everything available on the oyster.

The schools are open (like the oysters) and another crop of citizens is under training—for something or other. The suggestion that the school year start a week later, so as to extend the children's summer vacation, was not adopted; but it is a thought that will be brought up again. That there would be some gain in putting Labor day—the accepted signal for the end of summer—into the middle of the month, many believe. Would the stores object to that? They might; for they count on the start of fall buying after Labor day.

One important item of the week's news is the breaking of ground for a South-end Boys' club building, at Washington and East Canton streets. This is made possible by the Charles Hayden foundation; and the new club will have a gymnasium, bowling alleys, shower baths, library and study, recreation rooms, etc. The architect's drawing of the house as it will look on completion shows a structure which might serve as a millionaire's clubhouse.

Looking into the near future, we note arrangements are being made for the reception to that amazing New York Negro leader, Father Divine, who comes here early in October for one of a series of 50 gatherings of his supporters, in large cities throughout the country. Probably 25,000 will be present at the Boston Garden meeting, some in fervent sympathy and some coming from curiosity. Father Divine is one of the wonders of this unsettled period.

Looking farther ahead, it is interesting to learn that Roger Babson of statistical fame has definitely identified himself with the Prohibition party, as reported by the party's state chairman, George L. Thompson. Now the party will try to persuade him to be its candidate for President in 1940. We do not know whether Mr Babson has made this decision just to get comfortable in his mind, or to undertake missionary work for the cause; and we do not know whether he proposes to initiate a crusade for repeal of repeal of prohibition, or just to effect some reforms in the present social system in its relation to alcohol. He is far from home now, traveling in distant parts; when he returns he may have something to say—and it may prove to be of some importance.

Always a significant date is the opening of the Boston Symphony season, which starts th[illegible]year on Friday afternoon, October 13, with the usual series of concerts in prospect. One notable item in the season's program will be the performance of the concert version of Tchaikovsky's opera, "Pique Dame," toward the close of the season. This should be delightful; for "Pique Dame" is not open to the criticism made by an eminent musical critic (whose name we have forgotten) who said of Saint-Saens's "Samson and Delilah" that when he heard it as an opera he thought it was a splendid oratorio, but when he heard it sung on the concert platform he was convinced it was an interesting opera.

Something a bit unusual in opera is due next week, when the New York Grand Opera company will start, on the 14th, a 4½-weeks' season of opera at reasonably popular prices, at the Boston Opera house. This, of course, is not New York's Metropolitan, and is far less pretentious. Four and one-half weeks is a deal of opera for Boston. Will the public support so long a series? We hope so. Many persons are firmly of the opinion that opera is hardly worth notice unless it presents great stars for their entertainment; yet we have seen some admirable performances, musically well worth-while, by modest organizations. The San Carlo troupe has demonstrated the possibilities. We hope that this coming company will be as good as we hope it is!

Also in the entertainment chronicles may be set down the novelty of a street parade starting the season of a local motion picture theater. There's an old custom revived. How many remember the street parade of minstrel shows in the days of Thatcher, Primrose & West?

Also: The esplanade concert shell that has done good service for these past years has been presented by the Metropolitan district commission to the city of Boston, and will be removed and set up in East Boston, where it will be used by WPA or other musical organizations for free concerts—a grand thing. The esplanade is to have, as announced many weeks ago, a magnificent $200,000 permanent shell, the gift of Mrs Edward Hatch in memory of her husband.

A notable visitor lately in town was the veteran publisher, Mr McClure, attending the wedding of his grandson. An account of his visit credited him with discovering among others, through his admirable magazine, Jack London. But wasn't Jack London's first story published by the old Black Cat magazine—a Boston miniature fiction magazine that did great work in its day?

BOSTON SUNDAY ADVERTISER

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1939

WHILE on the subject of music, sacred or profane, it is time to think again of the formal concert season. On October 15 the Boston Symphony Orchestra begins, in Symphony Hall, its 56th season, the 16th under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky.

Besides the customary performance of regular works of symphonic literature, the Boston orchestra announces a series of what has come to be known as special works.

This year we may expect: Mahler's "Song of the Earth," Debussy's "Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian," Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" and also a new symphony of the famous Russian composer's Too, more Bach and Mozart than is customary—and the Bach B minor Mass in the Lenten season.

Two pairs of concerts at the end of the term will be devoted to Tchaikovsky in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of his birth.

Expect, moreover, more and more American music all during the season.

Soloists with the Symphony are: Josef Hofmann, Rudolph Serkin, Walter Gieseking and Jan Smeterlin for pianists; Heifetz and Szigeti for violinists, and Emannuel Feuermann, 'cellist. Singers not yet announced.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
AMSTERDAM NEWS
9/16/39

LaGuardia Makes Music Week Oct. 1

To offset public sorrow and anxiety occasioned by the present European war, the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers will treat New York to a week of free music on an unprecedented scale beginning October 1.

Public announcement of this plan was made last Saturday by Mayor LaGuardia. The festival will also mark the celebration of the society's twenty-fifth anniversary.

The programs, to be given on seven consecutive nights, will have "everything from ballads to opera, from symphony to swing—all dedicated to art and peace", according to Gene Buck, president of the A. S. C. A. P.

The famous Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, is scheduled to give two concerts of symphonic works by American composers. One night's concert will be devoted to works of Negro composers as played and sung by outstanding Negro singers, performers and organizations.

In the list of composers whose works will be presented during the festival are William Marion Cook, Shelton Brooks, Harry T. Burleigh, J. Rosamond Johnson, the late James Weldon Johnson, R. Nathaniel Dett, C. Luckey Roberts, W. C. Handy, Christ Smith, William Grant Still, Thomas "Fats" Waller, Clarence Cameron White. Some of those composers will also appear in person.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

SEP 17 1939

CONTRARY TO ITS . . . usual custom of beginning its season in its home city, the Boston Symphony orchestra will open the season at Carnegie Hall in New York on October 5 and 7. The first concert in Boston will be on October 13 and the season will conclude on May 4, 1940. This is the 16th consecutive season under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky. Mozart and Bach will figure extensively in the programs of the Boston Symphony this year and many works by American composers will be played. Many novelties are on the schedule, Stravinsky's new Symphony in C Major and his "Oepipus Rex" with the composer conducting; Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian"; and Mahler's "Lied von der Erde." The last two concerts of the season will be devoted to music by Tschaikowsky in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of his birth. His "Pique Dame" will be given in addition to the orchestral works. Bach's B Minor Mass will be performed at a special concert in April.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TUCSON, ARIZ.
STAR

SEP 17 1939

The Boston Symphony orchestra will begin [illegible]'s work not in Boston but in New York, when it takes part in the festival of the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers by giving concerts in Carnegie hall October 5 and 7. The two programs will be devoted exclusively to American music past and present. The orchestra will open its Boston season October 13 and end it May 4. Serge Koussevitzky will, as usual, conduct.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

SEP 16 1939

FREE MUSIC FETE WILL RUN 7 DAYS

A free festival of American music will be given in Carnegie Hall, New York, from Oct. 1 to 7, by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, to celebrate the organization's 25th anniversary.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky; a symphony orchestra conducted by Dr. Frank Black, the popular orchestras of Benny Goodman, Paul Whiteman and Fred Waring, the Goldman Band and noted Negro musicians will take part. All kinds of American music will be played and sung, and many composers will perform their own works.

Requests for seats should be sent to the American Society of Composers, 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York. Applications will be filled in order of receipt, it is announced.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MILWAUKEE, WIS.
JOURNAL

SEP 17 1939

Free Concerts in N. Y. Will Cheer the Public

New York, N. Y.—A week of free music on an unprecedented scale, designed to allay the public sorrow and anxiety occasioned by the conflict in Europe, will be presented in New York by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, Mayor La Guardia has announced. The music festival, in which music appealing to all tastes will be given by noted bands, orchestras and singers, will be held on seven consecutive evenings starting Oct. 1.

Paul Whiteman, Benny Goodman and [illegible]Waring and [illegible]estras will present a session of jazz and swing music. The popular marches of John Philip Sousa and other notable selections from the American band repertory will be played by Edwin Franko Goldman and his band and other organizations.

The glittering program will also include a concert devoted to the works of Negro composers as played and sung by outstanding Negro singers, performers and organizations. Light operatic and musical comedy works will be presented by an orchestra conducted by Frank Black.

The famous Boston symphony orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Serge Koussevitzky, is scheduled to give two concerts of symphonic works by American composers.

One evening will be devoted to famous popular songs of the past and present written by members of the society, with Rudy Vallee leading his orchestra and some of the composers appearing in person.

13

KOUSSEVITZKY

A Biographical Note and Critical Analysis of the World-Famous Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Advocate Music Editor here tells the story of the man who was the greatest double-bass virtuoso of his time and who is acclaimed as one of the greatest conductors of all time.

By JULES WOLFFERS

The final bell rings. A hush falls over the audience. The musicians on the platform sit more erect,—seem to come to attention—wait expectantly. A few late-comers scuttle through the doors which close emphatically behind them. The lights dim, throwing the tiered stage into pictorial relief. Then a slight, faultlessly-tailored figure is seen emerging from a side door. As his short quick steps bring him to closer view, we discern his sensitive face, his greying hair, his almost military bearing. He walks to the center of the stage accompanied by a growing burst of applause, mounts the podium, and faces the audience. His face lights up in a half-smile. He bows gracefully. His whole demeanor indicates dignity, courtesy, confidence. The applause dies down as he faces the orchestra. Slowly he looks at his men, turning his head in a full semi-circle from right to left then back again. The smile leaves his face. His left hand clenches and is brought to his chest in a characteristic gesture. He seems to say, "You and I are here to interpret great music. Let us all give every bit of our talent and skill. I ask it of you and I insist on it." Slowly he raises his arms. There is an instant of breathless pause and . . . the Boston Symphony Orchestra has begun another concert under the direction of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky.

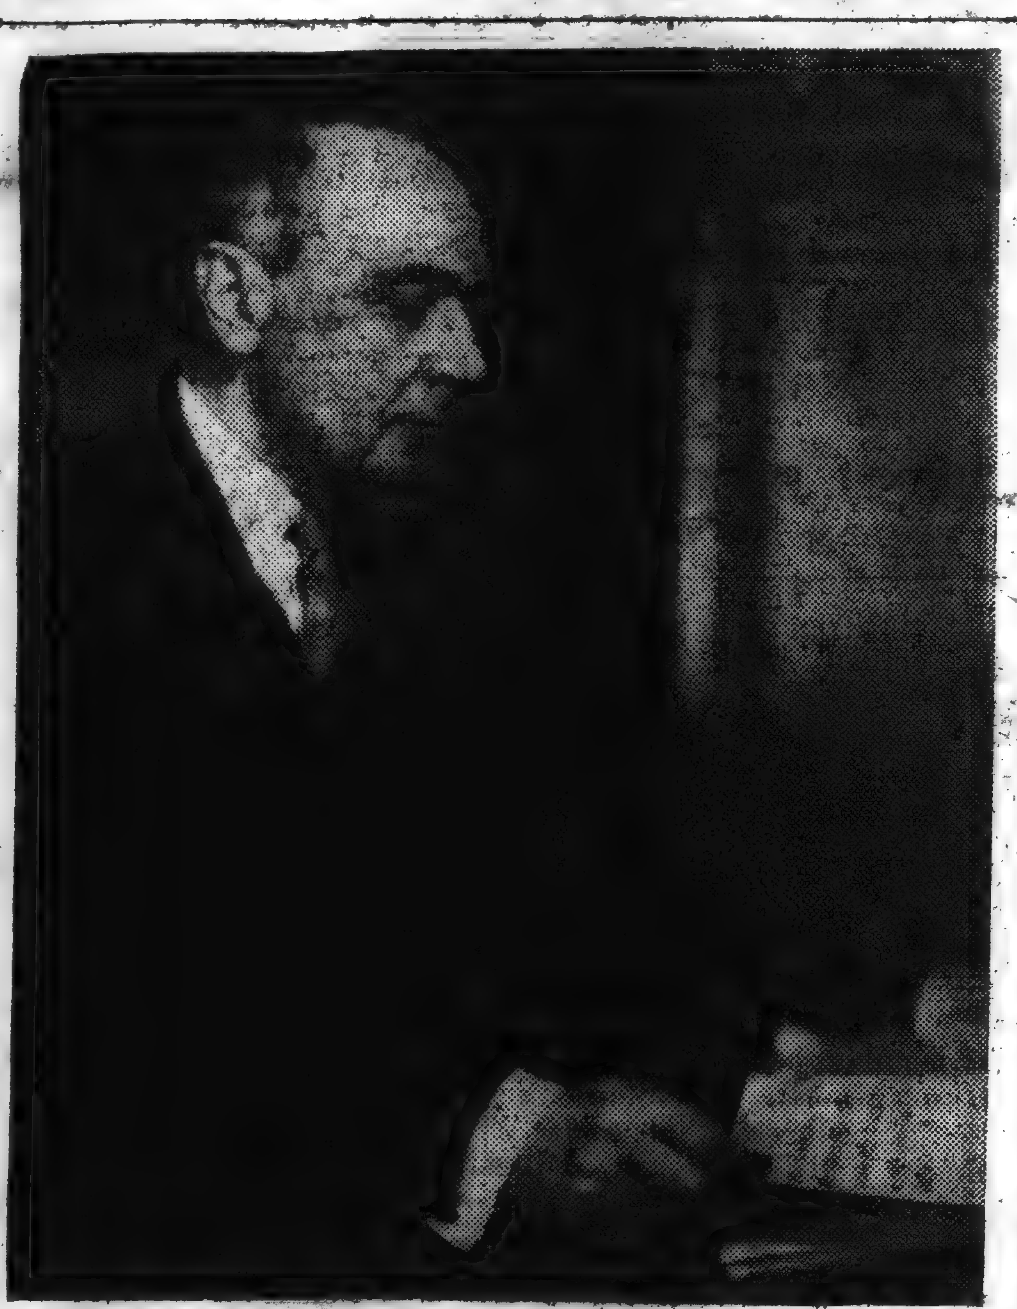
"The Boston Symphony and Koussevitzky" is a famous combination, one about which legends have been woven. Many informed critics rank this combination as the greatest in the world. Certainly, Boston's orchestra and its inspired conductor hold a unique place in the world of music.

It was Strauss who said, "There are no orchestras—there are only conductors." To a certain extent this is true. Serge Koussevitzky is the Boston Symphony Orchestra as it now stands. It is a beautiful, a perfect instrument, but an instrument upon which the conductor plays to express his talent, his genius. That the musicians are able to respond in full measure to their conducter's rhapsodic, superlative interpretations is sufficient commentary on their abilities. The Boston Symphony is an orchestra of virtuosos welded together into a perfectly formed musical organism.

The Boston Audience

Three factors are essential in the creating of music: the composer, the interpreter, and the audience. The audience that attends the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts is probably the most select and discriminating audience in America. True, it is inclined somewhat to conservatism in taste. But it will always give a courteous, if somewhat frigid, hearing to even the most modern of moderns. The majority of the audience comes from that strata of society sometimes called "Back Bay Brahmins," famous for its support of music. From this class have come the founders of the Orchestra. In this class are still to be found the Orchestra's chief supporters. To these music-conscious "Brahmins," add a sprinkling of musicians, a lacing of intellectuals, a handful of students, some general music-lovers, and one has an audience that is at once a challenge and a spur to accomplishment. Serge Koussevitzky has been able to satisfy this audience for over 15 years, in itself a remarkable accomplishment.

Altogether, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, its conductor, and its audience is a fascinating topic. But the man and musician, Koussevitzky, alone offers a unique challenge to the reviewer and the public. A few brief facts from a romantic and stirring life of musical and personal experience will interest the music-lover who knows this man only from a distance.



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Record as a Student

Sergei Alexandrovitch Koussevitzky, to give him his full name, was born of poor Jewish parents in Vishny Volotchk, Russia, on June 30, 1874. His passionate love of music became overt at a very early age and eventually his evident talent obtained for him a scholarship at the Music School of the Philharmonic Society in Moscow. His record as a student and his transcendent virtuousity of the double bass caused him to be appointed professor upon his graduation in 1900.

As a performer on the double bass, Koussevitzky had no rival. His concerts were sensational in the enthusiasm they evoked. He was engaged for a series of concerts in Germany in 1903 and again in 1906. It is almost impossible to describe his reception at the hands of audiences and critics without seeming to exaggerate. One has to go to a Paderewski, a Joachim, an Isaye to find a parallel response. Not since the days of the famous double bass virtuoso, Dragonetti, had anything been heard to approach Koussevitzky's mastery of his instrument. His phenomenal technique, his interpretive powers, made his performances on what is usually considered to be an ungainly and rather clumsy instrument something almost beyond belief.

But the life of a virtuoso, fascinating and exciting as it was, could not satisfy Koussevitzky. Already in 1904 he had been appointed to the Imperial Orchestra. In 1907, he established his own orchestra of 75 performers with which he gave regular symphony concerts in, what was then, Petrograd and also in Moscow. He proved himself to be a conductor of outstanding abilities. The public and critics alike received his efforts with enthusiastic praise.

In Russia, at this time, music was more or less confined to the larger cities. The country's vastness and lack of cultural and economic development (pre-Soviet), precluded the probability of any extensive musical life in many areas. In fact most of the smaller cities had never heard a symphony orchestra. This gave Koussevitzky an idea. He determined, as far as he was able, to use his fine musical organization to bring first class symphonic music to as many cities and as many people as needed and wanted it.

With the aid of Madame Koussevitzky, one of the richest heiresses in Russia and a lady of much culture and discrimination, he chartered a steamer and organized a symphonic "show-boat" which was to tour the cities along the Volga. The first four-month tour achieved such gratifying artistic results that similar tours were arranged annually until the outbreak of the war. All of these concerts were decided artistic successes. But their chief value lay in the educational and social significance of their contribution to the cultural development of the masses of the people. For this and other major musical achievements, Koussevitzky was decorated and publicly commended by the Czar. In 1908 the young conductor was invited as guest-conductor of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra in his first appearance on the podium abroad. His success there was instantaneous and considerable.

The average conductor, with his usually limited viewpoint, seldom exerts any vital influence on musical progress. This was not true of the developing genius of Koussevitzky. For at this point in his career he decided upon a step which was to shape his future musical career. He established a music-publishing house capitalized at 1,250,000 French francs. This house published works by Russian composers with particular emphasis on contemporaries. The aid and encouragement that Koussevitzky has given since that time to living composers is immeasurable. As a result of these efforts, he became a decisive force in the development of modern music.

And the Critic Blushed

Koussevitzky's enthusiasm for programming new compositions once led to an amusing incident. In 1916 he arranged for a first performance of Prokofief's "Scythian Suite" to take place at one of the Koussevitzky concerts in Moscow. Leonid Sabonieiv, music critic for the Moscow paper, "News of the Season," wrote a devastating review of the Suite. He said among other things, " . . . If one says it is bad, that it's cacophony . . . , they will reply, 'But this is a barbaric suite.' So I will not criticise this suite; quite to the contrary I shall say that it is magnificent barbaric music. But if I am asked whether this music gives me pleasure or an artistic sensation . . . I must categorically say, 'No!' The composer himself conducted with a barbaric abandon."

This cleverly written criticism appeared in the newspaper the next day, and needless to say created a furore. For the scheduled performance of the work in question had not taken place the night before, and the only extant copy of the score was in the composer's possession. The critic had neither been at the concert nor seen the score.

In the period from 1907-1917, Koussevitzky's reputation as a conductor and force in music caused the Provisional Government of Russia to offer him the directorship of the former Court Orchestra in Petrograd, which appointment he accepted. The change in regimes a little later, caused him to leave the country of his birth and settle in Paris. There, in 1921, he inaugurated a series of annual "Koussevitzky Concerts." As in Russia, he was a decided success. In 1924, he was invited to Boston as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Reception By Boston

The first concert, on October 10, occasioned the following headlines for the late H. T. Parker's review in the "Transcript": "Fourfold Comes New Conductor to Boston Stage—The Quality and Rank of Mr. Koussevitzky—Master of Line, Color, Tone, and Characterization in Music." Parker really outdid himself in poetic, almost rhapsodic praise, in the article following.

Since 1924 Koussevitzky's career is too well-known to Bostonians to need much telling. His reputation has increased steadily, his influence in music extended, his interpretations enriched and deepened. No other conductor has served Boston uninterruptedly as long as has Koussevitzky. In addition to the regular Boston and Cambridge season, he has conducted yearly concerts in New York, Worcester, Providence, and other cities. The Berkshire summer festival is, from an artistic view-point, perhaps the most successful summer series in America. This Berkshire festival may be said to be Koussevitzky's creation from beginning to end. Dr. Koussevitzky has also instituted a summer school for talented conductors which can not fail to have the best effects on American standards of conducting.

Naturally, the political and racial events of the past few seasons have disturbed Dr. Koussevitzky profoundly. In 1933 he was one of the signers of a cablegram to Hitler urging him, in most respectful terms, to free German art and music from the pressure of racial shackles. Hitler's reply was to order all works, music, recordings, etc., of all signers of the petition to be banned in Germany.

One cannot help dwelling on the profound influence Koussevitzky has had in modern music. Against much opposition he has consistently championed the cause of the modern composer. A partial list of composers whose works have received first performances by Dr. Koussevitzky, or whose works have been published by him, or who have been aided in other ways, include: Stravinsky, Rhespigi, Scriabin, Debussy, Ravel, Sibelius, Prokofief, Honegger, Krenek, Tansman, Copland, Lazar, Roussel, Converse, Hill, Sessions, Piston, Hanson, Schmitt, Hindemith, Gershwin, Gruenberg, Harris.

It will be noticed that the above list, incomplete as it is, contains a large number of American names. Koussevitzky's efforts on behalf of the American composer are well-known.

No biographical note on Koussevitzky would be complete without at least a few words of critical valuation of his conducting.

His Interpretations

One could say, "Superb," and simply let it go at that. But no Koussevitzky admirer will "simply let it go at that." While he is eclectic to the highest degree, his special talents manifest themselves in works requiring the utmost in passionate statement. To hear Koussevitzky interpret Tchaikowsky is really to hear that much-misunderstood composer for the first time. The intensity of Sibelius, that Titan of the North, whose music breathes a passion at once aloof and personal, is expressed most profoundly by Koussevitzky. Yet the conductor will give you a Haydn minuet with as much good-natured grace as you would wish. Mozartian delicacy will not find him wanting. His Beethoven is tremendous, his Bach a marvel of line.

He evokes from the orchestra a tone and depth which no other can call forth. He inspires his men to an intensity of performance which tries the very limits of musical responsiveness. A Koussevitzky concert leaves one spent, shaken, disturbed. His pianissimo seems to hover on the dividing-line between silence and sound. His fortissimo has perspective and profundity which go far beyond mere loudness. In all the graduations of tone one feels a surging dynamic quality as evident to the ear as is the surge and wash of waves to the eye. He is a disciplinarian and an indefatigable worker. He demands and receives the utmost in musical integrity from the men he directs.

With all these gifts and accomplishments, it is not surprising that Dr. Koussevitzky has been the recipient of numerous honors and decorations from many lands and institutions of learning. But his noblest decoration, his greatest honor, is the respect and love with which the whole musical world regards him.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Sunday Jour. & American

SEP 17 1939

Free Music Festival Due Oct. 1

By GRENA BENNETT.

● A free festival of music, devised as a solace in these days of war gloom, will be inaugurated Oct. 1 in this city, sponsored by Mayor LaGuardia and to be presented under the auspices of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. The festival, which is modelled on ambitious lines and will reflect every branch of municipal endeaver, will continue for seven consecutive evenings in an auditorium to be selected within a short time.

The plan and purpose of the movement is to turn the thoughts of the people of this community, from the disasters of the European conflict to the benign influence of musical art, according to an agreement between the Mayor and Gene Buck, president of the Society.

170 Composers

About 170 composers will be represented in the series of programs to be offered. Their contributions will range from the purely classical to the modern language of jazz and swing, and will include excerpts from popular operettas and musical comedies of this and other days.

The initial announcement of the festival states that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Koussevitzky, will be heard in two programs of symphonic works by American composers. Benny Goodman, Paul Whiteman and Fred Waring will guide their orchestras in swing music and symphonic jazz. Rhythmic marches by Sousa and others will be played by Edwin Franko Goldman and his band. Rudy Vallee will be in charge of a concert featuring popular songs of the past and present

* * *

The names included in next season's activities of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences at the Academy of Music reads like a "Who's Who" in music. Fifty-three events have been planned and several will be added during the season.

The series, which will begin Oct. 11 mentions the engagement of Jascha Heifetz, Lotte Lehmann New Friends of Music Orchestra, Lauritz Melchior, Josef and Rosina Lhevinne, Emanuel Feuermann, Ted Shawn and his dance group.

Also the Mozart Boys' Choir, Boston Symphony, Vladimir Horowitz, Bali and Java Dancers with Devi Dja, Jooss Ballet, Negro Folk Festival and Eva Jessye Choir, Trapp Family Choir, Budapest String Quartet and Chamber Music Guild of New York.

An innovation in the Institute's activities in 1939-40 will be a special series of recitals by young artists from the metropolitan area.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

SEP 17 1939

EFFECTS OF WAR

Normal Musical Season Expected Here—Dislocation Looked for Abroad

By HOWARD TAUBMAN

TWO weeks before France and Britain declared war on Germany, Romain Rolland wrote a letter to the first international Congress of the American Musicological Society. M. Rolland's words were read here last week as the Germans pounded away at Warsaw and the French and British deployed in the Saar Valley. There was one paragraph that could serve as a special text for this morning.

"In the field of art," M. Rolland wrote, "there is not—there should not be—any rivalry among nations. The only combat worthy of us is that which is waged, in every country and at every hour, between culture and ignorance, between light and chaos. Let us save all the light that can be saved! There is none more refulgent than music. It is the sun of the inner universe."

M. Rolland would no doubt go farther and say that there should not be rivalry among nations in fields other than art. But the issue has been joined; gunfire and food stocks and human blood are the means of settling the rivalries. Now, more than ever, the watchword must be, in M. Rolland's words, "Let us save all the light that can be saved!"

* * *

What of music in war time? Activity is bound to contract and diminish in belligerent lands. The processes of contraction and diminution had, in fact, begun even before war started. This writer was in France in the weeks before the outbreak of hostilities and observed how the tension and mobilization made inroads into the country's musical life.

The French Summer resorts which offer programs of symphony and opera had to halt their seasons abruptly. In Biarritz, Artur Rubinstein was scheduled to appear as soloists with orchestra. The day before the concert a dozen members of the ensemble were mobilized. Another batch was called to the colors the day of the performance. It was impossible to obtain substitutes. In Vichy the opera company's ranks were thinned out by the daily calls to the ranks. In one day fifteen orchestral players and a group of choristers were mobilized, and the show could not go on.

Even before the tempo of mobilization had been speeded up, anti-Nazi feeling in France had become so intense that performances were affected. A fortnight before the declaration of war, Vichy had scheduled a presentation of Wagner's "Lohengrin," with a tenor from Germany as the guest artist in the title role. The management decided at the last minute to schedule another opera, fearing that there would be demonstrations against a German singer.

Provincial performances everywhere were at a standstill almost a week before the beginning of war. It is true that not only were performers being mobilized but that vacationers were hurrying away from the popular Summer resorts. Foreigners were hastening to get back home, and French men and women were being called to their war tasks. Performances at the Opéra in Paris continued several times a week, since in a large city there were enough musicians available over the mobilization age.

Concert managers who had been busily laying plans for the coming season stopped as the crisis rushed to its dénouement. One man said that he went to his office every day out of habit, but there was nothing for him to do there save to go through useless motions. He reported that prospects seemed bright for an excellent music season for next year. French concert life was coming back, and the new season promised to be the best in a long time. If war comes, he said, there will be nothing. It came.

Certainly there will be little time for music and the other arts. But life goes on in combatant countries. Music there must be, for it has the power to [illegible] and encourage the [illegible] of men. Music will be performed on a restricted basis, but it will be performed. Its importance is recognized by national leaders, and an effort is already being made in France and England to keep performances going as long as possible.

* * *

The effect of war on our musical life, as long as we remain neutral, is not likely to be marked. Some artists who are familiar and popular here may not be able to return, because as citizens of belligerent nations they have been called to arms. On the other hand, many musicians of neutral countries who have confined their work to Europe will seek to appear here, since their opportunities abroad are now more limited than ever.

On the whole, there should be no dislocation of customary musical activity. A quick survey of the field shows that most conductors of American orchestras are now American citizens and that virtually all are in the United States at the present time. Several are citizens of belligerent countries, including John Barbirolli, conductor of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Barbirolli is in the British reserve class least likely to be called, and the management hopes that the twenty-eight week season will go through as scheduled. If the conductor should be called, the Philharmonic-Symphony Society will face that problem when it arises, according to the manager, Arthur Judson. As for the instrumentalists, they are all American citizens.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, according to first reports, may be somewhat affected. A group of native French string players were vacationing in France when the war broke out, and some of them had not been heard from at the time of writing. It is believed that several may have been called up for military service, while the others are probably attempting to obtain passage to the United States. The Boston Symphony's problem does not end there, for several of its important woodwind and brass players were born in France and are still French citizens. Their departure might embarrass the orchestra. However, these men are in the United States, and the authorities believe that they are above the age for military service.

The Metropolitan Opera is also in good shape as it prepares for the new season. While all its artists are not in the United States, most of those in the war zone are accounted for and are either on their way here or planning to start shortly. The company is more fortunately situated than it was at the start of the first World War. The principal singers of the Wagner repertory are not German, but Scandinavian, Australian and American. Several, like Herbert Janssen, are self-imposed exiles from Germany.

Of the handful of Germans in the company last season, Adolph Vogel and Carl Hartmann had not been re-engaged in any case. Three others, Erich Witte, Karl Laufkoetter and Hans Herman Nissen, have not been heard from, and it will surprise no one if they fail to appear. In fact, that contingency is already being guarded against.

* * *

Even before the war broke out, it was clear that America was becoming the principal musical center of the western world. At any rate, Nazism had liquidated cities like Berlin, Vienna and Prague as significant centers. London and Paris had benefited from the exodus of composers, performers and scholars, as this country had. Now the paralysis of war must affect the cultural pursuits of these cities. There are still neutral nations across the Atlantic, but they are uncomfortably close to the conflict; they will be lucky if they feel no ill effects, even indirectly. Even we will not escape repercussions, for the Atlantic cannot absorb every shock, and music, like the other arts and amusements, is bound to feel it.

PREPARING FOR THE NEW SEASON

New York Times Studio

John Barbirolli, conductor of the Philharmonic-Symphony, confers with two of his principal adjutants, Mishel Piastro, concert master, and Joseph Schuster, first 'cellist.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

SEP 17 1939

Words on Music

From Symphony to Swing

War Clouds Again Hovering Over Boston Symphony as Season Nears.

War clouds again are hovering over one of the world's great music-making organizations — the Boston Symphony orchestra, according to Bernard Freeman, Associated Press music writer.

A group of French-born string players, believed to number five, is abroad somewhere in war-troubled Europe—and the orchestra, which has just announced it would open its 59th season in New York Oct. 5 and 7, would like the men back.

Presumably, the five — none of whom are first desk players—have either joined the military services or are attempting to obtain passage to the United States, but until word has been received orchestra officials are keeping their fingers crossed.

The orchestra is somewhat less concerned over the future of several of its key woodwind and brass players, who also are French-born, and who, admittedly, it would be difficult to replace. All of the latter, however, are in this country, and it is believed their ages would preclude any military activity.

"In any event," one official said, "the orchestra is unlikely to be embarrassed by the war."

Trouble in Last War

War currents have played an important part in Boston Symphony history. Back in October, 1917, audiences became quite upset over the fact a German, Dr. Karl Muck, was conductor. Indeed, before one scheduled concert in the Providence, R. I., a demand was made that Dr. Muck conduct the "Star Spangled Banner" to "prove his loyalty." The conductor declined on grounds he had not been given time for rehearsal, and, although he subsequently played the national anthem at other concerts in the east, the resultant furore led to his resignation.

Ironically, the prospectus for Conductor Serge Koussevitzky's sixteenth consecutive season as musical director here announces that the emphasis for 1939-40 will be upon the works of Bach, a German, and Mozart, an Austrian.

Also the last two pairs of the 24 Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts will commemorate the 100th birthday anniversary of Tschaikowsky.

Stravinsky and Malko?

Two Russians — Igor Stravinsky, who is scheduled to lecture on poetry at Harvard University this winter, and Nicolai Malko, have been invited to appear as guest conductors, but whether they will do so depends upon their ability to leave war-stricken Europe.

Dr. Koussevitsky promises the usual number of new compositions, among them a recent symphony by Stravinsky, as yet unheard. That composer, if he arrives, also is expected to revive and conduct his "Oedipus Rex."

Soloists engaged include pianists Josef Hofmann, Rudolph Serkin, Walter Gieseking and Jan Smeterlin; violinists Jascha Heifetz, and 'cellist Emanuel Feuermann.

For the first time in its history, the orchestra will open away from its Symphony Hall home, two New York concerts being listed as part of the musical festival to be given by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. The Boston opening has been set for Oct. 13.

Meyer Davis has sent an order to his 100 bands playing and broadcasting throughout the nation not to play any foreign national anthems regardless of the importance of the person making the request. "If it is anything that smacks of the patriotic," says Maestro Davis, "let it be American only."

More News of Coming Boston Symphony Season

Globe

Further details from Symphony Hall regarding the 59th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra make it known there will be two guest conductors in midseason. One is the previously announced Nicolai Malko, a Russian, the other Tauno Hannikainen of Finland, who made such a favorable impression here when he conducted Sibelius' Second Symphony at the Pops in June, 1938.

To the list of new scores to be performed add a Suite by the Russian, Serge Prokofieff. Mr. Prokofieff himself will be soloist in one of his piano concertos. Sigurd M. Rascher, saxophone virtuoso, will be soloist in Debussy's rarely heard Rhapsody for that instrument and orchestra. In March Webster Aitken, American pianist, makes his Boston debut at a pair of concerts in the shorter series.

Other highlights of the season—which is Dr. Serge Koussevitzky's 16th as conductor—are to be, as detailed in this space a week ago, revival of Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," the composer conducting; introduction of Stravinsky's new C major Symphony; performance of Debussy's "The Martyrdom of St. Sebastian," Mahler's "The Song of the Earth," and a Tchaikovsky Festival the last two weeks of the Friday and Saturday series, which will include concert presentation of the opera "Pique-Dame." A special Spring concert will feature Bach's B minor Mass.

9-17-39

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle 18

SEP 17 1939

Lake Placid Club Sinfonia Has Successful Season Under White's Baton

By STEWART B. SABIN

AFTER eight weeks of music in the mountains, Paul White and the Rochester Philharmonic men who made up the orchestra he has been conducting at Lake Placid were back in Rochester last night.

But glowing reports of the success of this comparatively small summer music group had filtered back to Rochester prior to the return of the orchestra.

White, who is assistant conductor of both the Eastman School Symphony Orchestra and the Rochester Civic Orchestra, confirmed those reports. Told that he must assume the role of spokesman for the orchestra, he presented the story:

"Well, first about the orchestra. The Lake Placid Club Sinfonia is its name and it was this summer made up of first desk players of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra plus Carl Lamson, accompanist to Fritz Kreisler. Then there was also the Club Trio, Alexander Leventon, Allison MacKown and Mr. Lamson; and, by the way, the trio is staying on at Lake Placid until Oct. 1.

"We gave 48 concerts of symphonic and chamber music, including educational programs for children. The audiences were large and truly enthusiastic. A great many listeners at the club are members of symphonic boards in such cities as New York, Boston, Chicago, Cincinnati and Philadelphia. We talked with one board member of the Los Angeles Symphony.

"We had in our audiences people from Vienna, Bohemia and Cuba as well as from cities all over this country and Canada. Many of them spoke with the men and with me after concerts. They seemed to mean what they said, which was pleasant to hear. Our Rochester players were told after the final concert, by Harry Wade Hicks, official of the club speak[illegible], that they had not only [illegible] to the [illegible]ndard of the club, which has been high since 1895, but had succeeded in raising it. Please remember that members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been at Lake Placid for 21 years, which makes such a tribute to our Rochester men worth noting. And we have been invited to return next year.

"And aside from the concerts, we have had a good time. The men enjoyed playing tennis and found Lamson an expert and a good teacher.

"Bill Street lowered his golf score to 83 and I succeeded in breaking 90 for the first time. Fred Klein had swimming instruction with a money-back guarantee; after six lessons he was pushed from the raft and swam 100 feet to the shore.

"In the chamber concerts some of our men appeared as soloists and Abram Boone was thrilled to play sonatas with Lamson. Joseph Mariano got an ovation and had to repeat the Gluck dance which he played more than once. Members of symphonic orchestras had cordial words to say—a Pittsburgh horn player said that he waited a week or more before Fred Klein missed a single entrance and other remarks included 'I never heard a bass player like that,' 'the most intelligent percussion playing I ever heard,' 'beautiful phrasing by the oboe,' etc.

"From my angle the men deserve the praise given them and the more, as they gave 100% co-operation and enthusiasm at all concerts. We had a fine musical experience and change of scene. Here we are back in Rochester and ready to commence the season."

Dr. White is also the instructor of the Eastman School class in orchestral conducting. Of his own work at Lake Placid he refused to speak, but he did say that the Eastman School comes in for a word because many of the orchestra players are also members of its faculty.

Personnel of the Lake Placid Club Sinfonia was as follows: Dr. Paul White, conductor; Alexander Leventon, concertmaster; Fred J. Reinisch, violin; Mordecai Lurie, viola; Allison MacKown, 'cello; Nelson Watson, bass; Joseph Mariano, flute; Robert Sprenkle, oboe; Reed Finley, clarinet; Fred Klein, horn; Carl Lamson, piano; W. G. Street, percussion.

Whether or not Conductor White and his group of musicians will return to Lake Placid next year is a question the ensemble will decide in the near future.

Meanwhile White, who is following in the footsteps of Guy Fraser Harrison in acquiring prestige far beyond this city's boundaries, already has settled down to his dual role of teaching the art of conducting to embryonic baton-wielders and helping Harrison weld the Rochester Civic Orchestra into peak form for the coming season.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1939

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Paul Davis

Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra

Preparations are now under way for the fifty-ninth season, which opens at Symphony Hall on Oct. 13.

C.S.M. 9-16 39

Saxophone With Symphony

A saxophone soloist will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season. Sigurd M. Rascher, virtuoso of the instrument, will play in Debussy's Rhapsody for Saxophone and Orchestra.

Serge Prokofieff will be soloist in a piano concerto of his own, besides conducting his new orchestral suite.

Tauno Hannikainen, Finnish conductor, will be guest director of the orchestra for a week in midseason. Another guest conductor, already announced, is Nicolai Malko, of Leningrad, and Igor Stravinsky will direct a performance of his "Oedipus Rex." Stravinsky's new Symphony in C major will also be introduced.

Debussy's "Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian" will be revived, and likewise Mahler's "Song of the Earth," each with solo singers.

Soloists will include Josef Hofmann, Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking, Jan Smeterlin, Jascha Heifetz, and Joseph Szigeti. Emanuel Feuermann, the cellist, will make his first appearance with the Boston Orchestra.

A festival of the music of Tchaikovsky will close the season, celebrating the hundredth anniversary of his birth. There will be orchestral works, music with instrumental soloists, and a concert performance of the opera "Pique-Dame." Bach's Mass in B minor is announced for a special concert in the spring.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT

SEP 19 1939

Players in European Armies; War May Affect 1940 Festival

The Berkshire Symphonic festival next season is likely to be affected by the European war. Several members of the Boston Symphony orchestra which gives the festival concerts were in European countries when the war broke out and some, citizens of countries at war, are believe to have been called for military service.

It is definitely known that native French string players in the orchestra are now in France on their vacations and it is understood several may have been taken for military service, while the others are probably attempting to obtain passage to New York. It is believed that other members of the orchestra may be visiting in other European countries and be similarly subject to military duty. It is also pointed out that several of the orchestra's important windwood and brass players were born in France and are still French citizens. Their departure, it is pointed out, might embarrass the orchestra. However, these men are in the United States and the authorities think they are above the age for military service.

A number of the patrons of the festival in past years have been from European countries, it is also pointed out, and a continuance of the war would prevent their attendance at the festival next year.

The Boston Symphony orchestra is scheduled to open its concert season in Boston next month.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MAPLEWOOD, N. J.
WEEKLY NEWS

SEP 21 1939

WORDS WITHOUT MUSIC

By LOUIS REID

ONE of the few successful composers who write two different kinds of music under two different names is the Russian-born American, Vladimir Dukelsky, better known to the public at large as Vernon Duke.

Louis Reid

Under his Russian name he indites ambitious symphonic compositions. His symphony, "Dedicaces," for piano, orchestra and woman's voice obligato, was recently featured by the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

SEP 21 1939

MUSIC FESTIVAL ROW UNDER WAY

Union Objects to Use of Boston Symphony

New York, Sept. 21 (UP) — Mayor F. H. La Guardia confers today with officials of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and the American Federation of Musicians in an effort to settle a dispute over participation of the non-union Boston Symphony in New York's festival of music, projected as an antidote to war worry.

Edward Canavan, assistant to the president of the Musicians' Federation, an A. F. L. affiliate, announced that Frank Black, Edwin Frank Goldman, Fred Waring, Benny Goodman, Paul Whiteman, and other union members would not be permitted to participate in the week's festival, beginning Oct. 1, if the Boston Symphony participated.

The A. F. M. attempted unsuccessfully to organize the Boston Symphony in 1919. At the mayor's office it was said that the will of Henry Lee Higginson, its founder, provided that if its musicians were unionized the orchestra would lose his endowment.

The Boston Symphony, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, has presented annual concerts for years at Carnegie Hall. Canavan said that at the music festival, however, the non-union orchestra would be working for an organization that also was employing union members and that this was a competitive set-up and called for union action.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
RIVERHEAD, N. Y.
Weekly County Review

SEP 21 1939

Music And Your Child

By RUTH W. KOCH

Who is registrar and member of the faculty of the Suffolk Conservatory of Music and Arts. Founded in Riverhead in 1934 by Howard Lee Koch, this organization has dedicated itself to furthering the purpose of music and the correlated arts through its community activities

Last week I told you of the ambitions of our local music enthusiasts to have a series of artists recitals in Eastern Suffolk. Since that time the organization has gotten under way with the title, Eastern Suffolk Concert association. The Rev. Dr. Percy E. Radford of Mattituck was chosen as president and he has as his assistants an excellent list of workers drawn from practically every town from Riverhead to Orient Point. The club is a non-profit organization. It will co-operate with the Embree Concert Bureau to bring three worthwhile musical events to eastern Suffolk. These concerts will be of especial interest to every music student.

We are running a little contest which will enable several public school students to win a ticket to this series. Mrs. Edmund Lupton, wife of Assemblyman Lupton of Cutchogue, is donating two series tickets to the first prize winner and the Suffolk Conservatory of Music is giving one ticket as the second prize.

It's a quiz contest. Write on one side of the paper and have your answers in by midnight October 12. Send to "Music and Your Child Contest" care of The County Review, Riverhead, N. Y. Any public school child is eligible to enter this contest.

Here are the questions —Good luck!

1—Who wrote the "Coffee Cantata?

2—Is the composer of the "Rhapsody in Blue" still alive?

3—Which symphony is known as "Beethoven's Tenth?"

4—Name the American composer who wrote a composition based on the flood disaster of 1937.

5—What famous composer of symphonies wrote one opera? What is the name of that opera?

6—What famous composer of opera wrote one symphony? What is that symphony called?

7—Who founded the Salzburg Festival?

8—What American composer is playing at the World's Fair every day?

9—Who is known as "the Father of the Symphony?"

10—What composer wrote music to describe walking in the snow?

11—Three famous musicians of to-day were child prodigies. Who are they?

12—Who was Richard Geyer?

13—Name three different operas by three different composers in each one of which one of the males roles is sung by a woman.

14—Who are the three B's in music?

15—What musician today is well-known as a composer, conductor, and soloist?

16—Who is the most famous American composer of the 19th Century?

17—What state in the United States boasts two outstanding symphony organizations?

18—What is the name of the man who is a leader of a swing-band and who also plays classical music with a string quartette?

19—Identify the following: (1) Bartok; (2) De Falla; (3) Poulenc; (4) Barbirolli; (5) Honegger.

20—In what symphony do we find Schiller's "Ode to Joy" incorporated?

21—How many symphonies has Jean Sibelius written?

22—Who wrote "Amelia Goes to the Ball," "The Devil and Daniel Webster," and "The Flying Dutchman?"

23—Identify the following: "Old Maid and the Thief;" Serge Koussevitzky; Bayreuth; Fray and Bragiotti; Tito Schipa.

24—Did Mozart and Beethoven ever meet?

25—With what famous composer is the name of Madame von Neck associated? Did she ever meet the composer?

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

SEP 21 1939

UNION PROTEST PERILS CONCERT

Boston Symphony Is Center Of New York Row

NEW YORK, Sept. 21 (INS)—A union boycott directed at the Boston Symphony Orchestra today threatened the seven-day free music festival planned by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to divert the thoughts of worried New Yorkers from the European war.

The American Federation of Musicians announced that if the Boston Symphony, which has resisted unionization for 20 years, is permitted to play its two concerts as scheduled, none of the other union orchestras, including those of Paul Whiteman, Benny Goodman and Fred Waring, will be allowed to participate.

Mayor F. H. LaGuardia's office traced the dispute back to the will of Colonel Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony, who died in 1919. The will provided that the orchestra could not become unionized and still benefit from the Higginson endowment, according to the Mayor's office.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN

SEP 22 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

SEP 21 1939

UNION WOULD BAR BOSTON SYMPHONY

Threatens to Withdraw Bands From Festival.

Union protest against participation of a non-union group, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at a music festival here, threatened today to silence the entire seven-day program scheduled to begin on October 1 at Carnegie Hall.

The American Federation of Musicians announced that none of its members would be allowed to participate if the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, gives the concerts slated for October 5 and 7.

Hopeful of settling the controversy, the Mayor was to meet today at summer City Hall with representatives of both Local 802 of the musicians' union and the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, which is sponsoring the festival. It was said at the Mayor's office that the dispute had its origin in the will of Col. Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony, which provided that so long as the orchestra made use of his endowment the musicians were not to be unionized.

Gene Buck, president of the A. S. C. A. P., said the organization had signed contracts with all the participating orchestras and that the festival would be held. A union boycott, however, would affect the Frank Black program of light opera on October 1; William Grant Still's program of Negro music on October 2; Edwin Franko Goldman's band program on October 3; a program of popular songs on October 4 and a symphonic jazz program by Paul Whiteman, Benny Goodman [redacted] orchestras on October 6.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

SEP 21 1939

Peace Sought by LaGuardia in Music Row

Appearance of Non-Union Hub Symphony in Festival Crux of Dispute

NEW YORK, Sept. 21 (UP)—Mayor F. H. LaGuardia conferred today with officials of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and the American Federation of Musicians in an effort to settle a dispute over participation of the nonunion Boston Symphony in New York's festival of music, projected as an antidote to war worry.

Edward Canavan, assistant to the president of the musicians' federation, an AFL affiliate, announced that Frank Black, Edwin Frank Goldman, Fred Waring, Benny Goodman, Paul Whiteman and other union members would not be permitted to participate in the week's festival, beginning Oct. 1, if the Boston Symphony participated.

The AFM attempted unsuccessfully to organize the Boston Symphony in 1919. At the Mayor's office it was said that the will of Henry Lee Higginson, its founder, provided that if its musicians were unionized the orchestra would lose his endowment.

The Boston Symphony, directed by Serge Koussevitzky, has presented annual concerts for years at Carnegie Hall. Canavan said that at the music festival, however, the nonunion orchestra would be working for an organization that also was employing union members and that this was a competitive set-up and called for union action.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
STATEN ISLAND, N. Y.
ADVANCE

SEP 21 1939

Union Fight Hits Music Festival

A union boycott directed at the Boston Symphony Orchestra today threatened the seven day free music festival planned by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to divert the thoughts of worried New Yorkers from the European War.

The American Federation of Musicians announced that if the Boston Symphony, which has resisted unionization for 20 years, is permitted to play its two concerts as scheduled, none of the other union orchestras, including those of Paul Whiteman, Benny Goodman and Fred Waring, will be allowed to participate.

Mayor F. H. LaGuardia's office traced the dispute back to the will of Colonel Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony, who died in 1919. The will provided that the orchestra could not become unionized and still benefit from the Higginson endowment, according to the mayor's office.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

SEP 21 1939

MUSIC UNION MAY BOYCOTT N. Y. FESTIVAL

THIS CLIPPING FROM
COHOES, N. Y.
AMERICAN

SEP 21 1939

Boycott Threatens 7-Day Music Festival Planned in New York

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
SEP 21 1939

Music Festival Threatened by Union Boycott

Non-Union Boston Symphony Is Center of Fight Which May Halt Concerts

The American Federation of Musicians, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, has instructed its members not to participate in the projected seven-day festival of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers if the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is non-union, gives its two scheduled festival concerts, it was disclosed yesterday. The action of the musician's union would effectively silence the other concerts of the festival, which was planned to start Oct. 1.

Mayor F. H. LaGuardia announced the plans Sept. 9 for "a whole week of music" as a "monument dedicated to art and to peace" to counteract "profiteering on sorrow and anxiety." The festival, he said, would also mark the twenty-fifth anniversary of A. S. C. A. P., which is a sort of union of those who create music, to protect royalties through a copyright pool.

Edward Canavan, assistant to Joseph N. Weber, international president of the musicians' union, said that he and two other union officials would confer with Mayor LaGuardia on the threatened impasse at 12:15 p. m. today at summer City Hall. The other officials will be Thomas F. Gamble, likewise an assistant to Mr. Weber, and George Gibbs, president of Local 9, the Boston musicians' union.

Mr. Canavan, who disclosed the orders to the union's members to boycott the festival if the Boston Symphony played, said he [illegible] understand why A. S. C. A. P. had picked out "the only non-union symphonic orchestra in the United States or Canada" to perform at the festival, which is to be a celebration of American music, classical, light operatic, band, jazz, Negro and folk. The Boston Symphony is conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

"The Boston Orchestra," Mr. Canavan added, "imports its performers from Europe. It's not giving American boys any chance." He said that the Americain Federation of Musicians for years had had a closed-shop policy which would make it impossible for its members to play in the same festival with the Boston Symphony, unless there was "some adjustment." Other scheduled festival performers, such as members of Paul Whiteman's, Benny Goodman's and Fred Warning's bands, are union members.

Mr. Canavan said that A. S. C. A. P. had been notified of the musicians' federation's intention to withdarw its members ten days ago, but Gene Buck, president of A. S C. A. P., insisted that he had received no such official notification. Mr. Buck expressed surprise at the development. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, he said, was an established institution and was noted for the way it had opened the door for American symphonic composers.

Mr. Buck declared that the plans for the festival would go ahead. It would be held, he disclosed, in Carnegie Hall. As Mayor LaGuardia had already announced, the festival would be free, he said. A. S. C. A. P. is paying all the performers. Innumerable requests for tickets had been received and filed, he said, with plans to allot them according to priority of request. Mr. Buck said that A. S. C. A. P. expected a total attendance of 30,000 over the seven days.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEWARK, N. J.
LEDGER
SEP 21 1939

Pianist Aitken Returns

Webster Aitken, young American pianist, who is well known to New Jersey audiences, returned from Europe on board the S. S. Washington, Tuesday. Due to the critical situation abroad, Aitken, who played with the London Schubert Society last May, was compelled to cancel his London engagement at Aeolian Hall as well as a number of appearances throughout England.

His schedule for the coming season includes a recital in New York's Town Hall in January, appearances as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Serge Koussevitzky, on the concert series at the Frick Galleries in New York and various other committments throughout the United States and Canada.

He will also be heard at the Paper Mill Playhouse with August May, conductor, next Jan. 26.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
SEP 21 1939

Artist Decorates Symphony Folder

Donald Greason's vivid oil painting of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky rehearsing the Boston Symphony Orchestra is reproduced in full color on the cover of the announcement of the plans of the orchestra's new season, opening Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 13 and 14. Greason's paintings were on exhibition at the Berkshire Museum during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival.

The first photograph of the entire orchestra in performance stretches across the inside of the announcement. On the back cover are reproductions of quick sketches characteristic attitudes of the leader and his men painted by Mr. Greason in wash, during his attendance at many rehearsals.

The folder names the highlights of the season's programs, and lists the distinguished soloists. A copy of the illustrated announcement will be mailed on application to the subscription office, Symphony Hall.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
SEP 21 1939

City Music Festival Threatened By Union Protest on Symphony

Musicians Move to Bar Most of Events if the Non-Organized Boston Group Plays—Mayor Will Seek a Solution at Parley Today

The seven-day music festival designed to allay public anxiety over the European war, which the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers plans to offer free of charge at Carnegie Hall, was jeopardized last night by a twenty-year-old dispute between the American Federation of Musicians and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the only major American symphony employing nonunion musicians. The music fête, which is virtually unprecedented in scope, is scheduled to open Oct. 1.

Edward Canavan, assistant to Joseph N. Weber, president of the musicians' federation, announced that none of the union's members, including Paul Whiteman, Benny Goodman and Fred Waring, would be allowed to participate in the festival if the Boston Symphony, directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, gave its scheduled concerts at Carnegie Hall on Oct. 5 and 7.

Emphasizing that the union insisted either the Boston Symphony's two programs be dropped or no music would be furnished for the other five days of the festival, Mr. Canavan said: "Our men will not work if the Boston Symphony works." He acknowledged that instructions to that effect had been sent to the federation's Local 802, which covers all musicians playing in New York City.

The office of Mayor La Guardia, who announced the festival on Sept. 9, disclosed that Gene Buck, A. S. C. A. P. president, and Jacob Rosenberg, president of Local 802, had been called to a conference today at the World's Fair City Hall. The Mayor was hopeful the controversy could be settled peaceably.

The Mayor's office said that the dispute had its origin in the will of Colonel Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony, who died in 1919. The testament provided that so long as the symphony made use of any of Colonel Higginson's endowement the musicians were not to be unionized, according to the Mayor's office. The Musicians Federation, which is affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, attempted to organize the symphony in 1919 but only one-third of the musicians went on strike.

Mr. Buck said that A. S. C. A. P. had signed contracts with all the participating orchestras, including the Boston Symphony, and that "this festival is going to be held as announced by the Mayor."

George Judd, manager of the symphony, said in Boston that he had no knowledge of the controversy. In its contract with Mr. Buck, he said, the symphony was charging the A. S. C. A. P. only for "costs."

Surprise was expressed at the A. S. C. A. P. office at 30 Rockefeller Plaza that the musicians' union should make an issue of the Boston Symphony at this time, since the famous organization has presented annual concerts at Carnegie Hall for almost as long as the building has stood at Fifty-seventh Street and Seventh Avenue.

Mr. Canavan contended, however, that the case of the A. S. C. A. P. festival and that of the Boston Symphony's annual concerts were not comparable. He noted that union members at the festival would be working for an organization also employing non-union musicians. The symphony's concerts at Carnegie Hall, he added, involve only the non-union musicians from Boston, and the bookings outside of Boston are negotiated by the Symphony itself.

"The Boston Symphony came here and created their own concerts at Carnegie and we have not interfered," Mr. Canavan said. "But now they have been hired to play an engagement and are entering the competitive field. That's different."

If a truce is not arranged and the musicians' union does boycott the festival, the concerts affected would be Frank Black's program of light opera and musical comedy, on Oct. 1; William Grant Still's program of Negro music, on Oct. 2; Edwin Franko Goldman's band program on Oct. 3; a program of popular songs of past and present, on Oct. 4, and a program of symphonic jazz, with the Whiteman, Goodman and Waring orchestras, on Oct. 6.

The American Guild of Musical Artists, the A. F. of L. affiliate covering solo instrumentalists and concert artists, which is headed by Lawrence Tibbett, is not affected directly by the dispute between the musicians' union and the Boston Symphony, not having a working arrangement with the musicians. If the proposed agreement between the performers, musicians and stagehands is executed, however, the Boston Symphony's sponsors might face difficulties in obtaining the services of solo instrumentalists. Labor leaders are not overly optimistic as to the chances of such a pact being concluded, however.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN
SEP 21 1939

LaGuardia Calls Parley to Save Music Fete

Union Objects to Boston Orchestra, Threatens Bands

Union trouble, jeopardizing the city's plans for a seven-day music festival, today prompted Mayor LaGuardia to call an immediate conference at World's Fair City Hall.

Those invited to try and iron out the controversy included Gene Buck, president of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, and Jacob Rosenberg, president of Local 802, American Federation of Musicians.

The threat to the festival, arranged by the Mayor and the A. S. C. A. P. to alleviate public fears over the European war, was revealed to be based upon a 20-year-old dispute between the musicians' federation and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

ORCHESTRA NON-UNION.

The orchestra is the only major American symphony whose members are not unionized, because of a stipulation in the will of its founder, the late Col. Henry Lee Higginson.

The union announced that, if the orchestra gives its scheduled Carnegie Hall concerts on Oct. 5 and 7, such union members as Benny Goodman, Paul Whiteman and Fred Waring will be barred from participating in the festival.

Before attending the Mayor's conference, Buck declared the A. S. C. A. P. had signed contracts for the festival with all the orchestras scheduled to appear, including the Boston Symphony.

"This festival is going to be held as announced by the Mayor," he said.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST
SEP 21 1939

UNION'S BOYCOTT PERILS FESTIVAL

Band Leaders Won't Join if Boston Symphony Is a Participant

By KARL BOSTROM

Benny Goodman, Paul Whiteman, Fred Waring and other leaders and their orchestras will not be permitted by their union to play in the seven-day music festival here if the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra plays in the same festival.

That was the order issued by Joseph N. Weber, president of the American Federation of Musicians, to Local 802, which covers all musicians in New York City.

The music festival was to be given free October 1 at Carnegie Hall under the auspices of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. Gene Buck is president of the A. S. C. A. P.

Amalgamated Shirt Makers Get 7½ Per Cent Increase

Forty thousand shirtmakers in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and other North Atlantic States obtained a 7½ per cent increase in wages as a result of a conference concluded last night between the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, C. I. O., and the Shirt Institute, employers' association.

Additional Items on Labor Activities

District Council 18, Brotherhood of Painters, A. F. L., in Brooklyn, today announced the signing of twenty-two agreements with contractors. Forty-five shops are still on strike in the borough-wide strike. . . . C. I. O.'s first Jersey City agreements, for unions of office and electrical workers, have been renewed with the Idealite Company of that city. . . .

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
SEP 21 1939

HUB SYMPHONY WILL OPEN ITS SEASON OCT. 13

Interesting Features Planned for Series of Concerts by Boston Group

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced interesting features for its 59th season which will open in Symphony Hall, Boston, Friday afternoon, Oct. 13. This will be the 16th successive year of the famous orchestra under the direction of its conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The Boston season will consist of the usual 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts, and six pairs of Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall. There are to be concerts as usual in other cities of New England, New York and the West.

There will be two preseason concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York, when on Oct. 5 and 7 the orchestra, under its regular conductor, presents two programs entirely of American music, old and new, as part of the festival to be given by the American Society of Composers.

The classical repertory will of course have the largest place upon Dr. Koussevitzky's program. He intends a larger repetition than usual of the music of Bach and Mozart. Bach's Mass in B minor will be performed at a special concert in April. The season will end with a Tchaikovsky Festival, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of the Russian composer. There will be a concert performance of the opera "Pique-Dame," in addition to orchestral works. Announced revivals are Mahler's "Song of the Earth," Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian," and Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," to be conducted by the composer. A new symphony of Stravinsky will also be introduced. Serge Prokofieff has been invited to play a piano concerto of his own.

Soloists engaged for the Friday and Saturday series include the pianists Josef Hofmann, Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking, and Jan Smeterlin; the violinists Jascha Heifetz, and Joseph Szigeti; 'cellist Emanuel Feuermann; and the celebrated saxophone virtuoso, Sigurd Rascher.

18

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.
WEEKLY HERALD

SEP 22 1939

Music Festival Program Omitted—Union Difficulty

NEW YORK, Sept. 22 (UP)—The final program of New York's festival of music omitted the Boston Symphony Orchestra today.

The American Federation of Musicians had declared that its members would not appear on the same program with the non-union Boston orchestra.

Mayor F. H. LaGuardia announced that the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra would play Oct. 5th and 7th, which had been set for the Boston orchestra's concerts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

SEP 22 1939

Union Believed Victor in Music Festival Fight

Mayor Says Philharmonic Will Play on Nights Set for the Boston Symphony

A formal program for the seven-day music festival of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, issued yesterday by Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, disclosed that the American Federation of Musicians apparently had won its fight to prevent the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is non-union, from participating in the festival, which starts Oct. 2.

Following a conference with Gene Buck, president of the A. S. C. A. P., and officials of the musicians' union, Mayor LaGuardia said that the New York Philharmonic Orchestra had been placed on the program for concerts on Oct. 5 and 7, the nights which the Boston orchestra had been scheduled to play. He revealed that the program had been arranged in conjunction with Mr. Buck and that the exact time and place of each performance would be announced shortly.

The union, in a statement issued on Wednesday by Edward Canavan, assistant to Joseph N. Weber, international president of the organization, announced that none of the union members, including Paul Whiteman, Benny Goodman and Fred Waring, would be allowed to participate in the festival if the Boston orchestra, directed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, gave its scheduled concerts. Mr. Canavan and Thomas Gamble represented the union at the conference yesterday.

The program did not mention Carnegie Hall, where the Boston Symphony was to have played, and the Mayor, refusing to announce definitely that a substitution had been made, said that the program was still tentative. No comment was forthcoming from Mr. Buck or officials of the union, who said that they had agreed that Mayor LaGuardia would issue the only statement.

In a formal announcement of the festival, Mayor LaGuardia said that it was undertaken to allay public anxiety resulting from contemplation of the European war and would offer to the public at no charge "the greatest event in the history of American music." He also pointed out that practically every major composer, singer and musician in the field of American music had been included on the program.

"I believe this will be the greatest musical festival in the history of American music," he said. "There will be one whole week with American musicians participating, playing the compositions of American composers and sung by Americans, and it is all free to the people of the City of New York. The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers is certainly making a marvelous contribution to music."

The festival, from Monday through Saturday, will feature the various phases of American musical life. Included on the various evening programs are the works of Negro composers of symphony and jazz, the works of John Philip Sousa, the popular songs of Irving Berlin and George M. Cohan, as sung by themselves, symphonic music as played by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra and popular music as rendered by Benny Goodman, Glenn Miller, Fred Waring and others. A matinee will be held on Saturday afternoon at which children's music exclusively will be played.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST
SEP 22 1939

MUSIC FESTIVAL STRICTLY UNION, ASSERTS MAYOR

Philharmonic to Replace Boston Symphony on A.S.C.A.P. Program

By KARL BOSTROM

The seven-day American music festival beginning October 1 will be a strictly union affair.

Free to the public, the festival will celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

The non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra, which had been scheduled to play two concerts, will be replaced by the union New York Philharmonic.

The change was announced by Mayor LaGuardia after the American Federation of Musicians stated that none of its members in the popular music bands would be allowed to play in the festival if the Boston Symphony was included in the program.

A conference betweeen the musicians' union, the ASCAP and Mayor LaGuardia yesterday ironed out the difficulty.

Hosier Union Opposes War; Criticize NLRB for Delays

The American Federation of Hosiery Workers, C.I.O., stated on behalf of its 55,000 members its opposition to this country's participation in the European war by a resolution adopted yesterday at its convention.

The union will conclude its sessions tomorrow. In another resolution, the convention supported the Wagner act in its present form, but criticized the National Labor Relations Board for administrative delays.

Longshoremen Consider Rejection of Demands

The International Longshoremen's Association, A. F. L., today had under consideration the rejection by the New York Shipping Association of demands for a new agreement calling for $1.15 an hour, instead of $1.05, and $1.75 instead of $1.60 for overtime.

Joseph P. Ryan, leader of the longshoremen, said the ship owners had agreed to the union's request to reopen the contract for wage adjustment every six months if necessary.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

SEP 22 1939

Non-Union Music Out at Festival

Federated Musicians Refuse to Play with Boston Group

NEW YORK, Sept. 22 (UP)—The final program of New York's festival of music omitted the Boston Symphony orchestra today.

The American Federation of Musicians had declared that its members would not appear on the same program with the nonunion Boston orchestra.

Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, after a conference yesterday with Gene Buck, president of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, which is sponsoring the festival; Edward Canavan, assistant to the president of the AFM, and Thomas F. Gamble, president of the federation's New York local, announced that the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra would play Oct. 5 and 7, which dates had been set for the Boston orchestra's concerts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW BRITAIN, CONN.
HERALD

SEP 22 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

SEP 22 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY OUT OF FESTIVAL

Musicians' Union Wins Fight Against Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will not take part in the seven-day musical festival of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers which starts on October 2, according to the revised program.

The elimination of the Boston orchestra makes it appear that Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians had won its fight to prevent that organization from taking part in the festival. If it played no members of Local 802 would participate it was announced.

When Mayor LaGuardia announced the program yesterday it was noted that the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra had been substituted for the Boston group. The latter was to have given two concerts in Carnegie Hall, one on the night of October 5 and the other on October 7.

The fight of the union against the Boston orchestra the only major musical organization of its kind in the country still non-union, has been going on for twenty years.

The program for the festival was reorganized yesterday after Mayor LaGuardia had conferred with Gene Buck, president of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers; Edward Canavan, assistant to Joseph N. Weber, president of the musicians' federation, and Thomas F. Gamble, representing Local 802.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BAYONNE, N. J.
TIMES

SEP 22 1939

MUSIC DISPUTE ENDED

New York, Sept. 22.—Because of union objections, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been eliminated from the city's musical festival to be staged next month to divert the thoughts of the population from the European war and the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra has been substituted, it was revealed today by the mayor's office. The musician's union threatened to withdraw all other union orchestras if the non-union Boston orchestra was permitted to play.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NAUGATUCK, CONN.
NEWS

SEP 22 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE

SEP 22 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.
WEEKLY HERALD

SEP 22 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

SEP 22 1939

Artist Decorates Program Folder Of Boston Symphony

Donald Greason's vivid oil painting of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky rehearsing the Boston Symphony Orchestra is reproduced in full color on the cover of the announcement of the plans of the orchestra's new season, opening Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 13 and 14.

The first photograph of the entire orchestra in performance stretches across the inside of the announcement. On the back cover are reprdouctions of quick sketches of characteristic attitudes of the leader and his men painted by Mr. Greason in wash during his attendance at many rehearsals.

The folder names the highlights of the season's programs and lists the distinguished soloists. A copy of the illustrated announcement will be mailed on application to the Subscription Office, Symphony Hall.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION
SEP 22 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
SEP 22 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
SEP 22 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WATERBURY, CONN.
REPUBLICAN
SEP 22 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
SEP 22 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY WON'T PLAY AT N. Y.

New York, Sept. 21—(AP)—A dispute over participation of nonunion musicians in New York's music festival next month was averted today when Mayor LaGuardia announced the New York Philharmonic orchestra would appear at Carnegie hall October 5 and 7 instead of the Boston symphony, as previously announced.

The American Society of Musicians said last Wednesday union members, including Paul Whiteman, Benny Goodman and Fred Waring, could not take part in the festival if the Boston symphony, a nonunion group, gave its concerts as scheduled.

The mayor, who conferred with union officials and Gene Buck, president of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, declined to say a substitution had been made.

"What substitution?" he asked. "That (the program previously announced) was tentative."

The festival will run from October 1-7 and offer compositions by American composers. It is sponsored by A. S. C. A. P.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

SEP 22 1939

Boston Symphony Out of City Festival; Philharmonic Named After Union Protest

Faced with a declaration by the American Federation of Musicians that none of its members would appear on the city's large scale music festival next month if the non-union Boston Symphony appeared, Mayor La Guardia eliminated the Boston orchestra from the program yesterday and substituted the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra in two concerts to be given in Carnegie Hall on the nights of Oct. 5 and 7.

The Mayor's action followed his conference at the World's Fair City Hall with Gene Buck, president of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers; Edward Canavan, assistant to Joseph N. Weber, president of the musicians' federation, and Thomas F. Gamble of Local 802, the New York City branch of the federation. Mr. Buck, who on Wednesday had insisted that the original program would be presented intact, joined the Mayor after the conference in announcing the shift from the Boston Symphony to the Philharmonic. Evidently as a result of agreement at the conference, neither he nor Mr. Gamble would discuss the matter afterward.

The Mayor's office limited its reference to the union row to one short paragraph toward the end of a 700-word announcement. Avoiding any use of the name of the Boston Symphony, the Mayor's announcement merely said:

"Thursday, Oct. 5. This evening will be the first evening—one of two devoted to the American symphonic compositions of members of the society, and the New York Philharmonic Orchestra has been engaged and famous outstanding symphonic compositions will be conducted by some of the composers of these works."

As the Mayor was leaving City Hall reporters inquired about the substitution of the New York orchestra for the Boston organization.

"What substitution?" he asked. "There wasn't any substitution. The original program was tentative. This one is final. The composers are going to conduct their own works. That's new."

Viewing the seven-day festival which begins Oct. 1 as "the greatest event in the history of American music," the Mayor said ASCAP was bearing the costs in connection with its twenty-fifth anniversary and that each event in the festival would be free to the public.

Beginning Sunday, Oct. 1, with light opera and operatic works by American composers, the festival includes works of Negro composers; brass band compositions; famous popular works of the present and past; the two symphonic presentations, an afternoon of children's music and a session of modern symphonic jazz and swing with the Paul Whiteman, Benny Goodman, Glenn Miller and Fred Waring orchestras all appearing on the same program. The Mayor said details on the distribution of tickets, for which there is already a heavy demand, would be made public soon.

George Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said in Boston yesterday that the will of Henry Lee Higginson, founder of the ensemble, contained no restriction of any kind on the future policies of the orchestra. Nor did Mr. Higginson's will provide the orchestra with any endowment, Mr. Judd said.

The manager explained that Mr. Higginson turned over the orchestra to a board of directors a year before his death.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PASADENA, CALIF.
STAR-NEWS

SEP 23 1939

19

BRUNO DAVID USSHER

Speaking of Music

LINDBERGH'S APPEAL

Few public statements made of late have impressed me as much as Colonel Lindbergh's address made a few days ago regarding the American attitude in the international situation. Particularly the closing paragraphs of this potently worded appeal may be quoted also in a music column. To cite:

"And if Europe is prostrated again by war, as she has been so often in the past, then the greatest hope for our western civilization lies in America . . . . If war brings more dark ages to Europe, we can better preserve the things of civilization which we love and which we mourn the passing of in Europe today by preserving them here, by strengthening them here, rather than by hurling ourselves thoughtlessly to their defense over there, and thus destroying all in the conflagration. The German genius for science and organization, the English genius for government and commerce, the French genius for living, and the understanding of life—they must not go down here as well as on the other side.

"Here in America they can be blended to form the greatest genius of all. The gift of civilized life must still be carried on. It is more important than the sympathies, the friendships, the desires of any single generation. This is the test before America now. This is the challenge—to carry on western civilization."

Quite obviously the famous flyer could not have specified what these high manifestations of western civilization are. In these urgent days he had no need to point to music and to literature, to the museums schools, and opera houses. They are western civilization and one dare not to think how much of these was shoveled into the furnaces of war a generation ago. That also was done "to keep the home fires burning." But at what cost.

Fighting the War Tension

Headed by Mayor La Guardia of New York City, a committee started by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, is giving to great Manhattan a full week of free music beginning the first of October. New York has always done well by music week each May. Perhaps it is because of the moral effect of this spring concert festival on a vast metropolis where life is hard in proportion to the size of the city, that the aid of music is invoked again "to soothe the savage breast" or to bring cheer to a city which is a veritable filter for that human stream which has flown to these shores.

It will be a music festival designed on an unprecedented scale in every instrumental and vocal form of activity, from swing bands and gay choruses to two performances by the Boston Symphony (all-American programs), oratorio and opera.

"The week's program is conceived to allay public sorrow and anxiety occasioned by the conflict in Europe. It will counteract the war tension bearing down on this city," Mayor La Guardia explained, and no civic chief executive ever has prescribed wiser treatment for his community.

Splitting Tickets

Latest reports are encouraging regarding the financial future of the Philharmonic Orchestra of Los Angeles, at least the coming season being secured by $100,000 worth of pledges. W. S. Rosecrans and his executive board which marshaled the refinancing of orchestral affairs have done good work in a record-breaking time limit. But what of the season after this? Shall we have to listen anew to the threats of losing the orchestra?

Philadelphia is stepping up the number of subscribers by a method which not only increases revenues, but definitely ties in a larger number of individuals, who by virtue of being subscribers, take a greater interest in obtaining wider support than "their" orchestra has enjoyed in the past. Of course, Philadelphia closed the last season with a net dificit of only $34,405, which is a relatively small amount as such deficits go.

Philadelphia, like Los Angeles, found it difficult to sell tickets, although I must add that the season there is longer than here—28 weeks—and three definite series are scheduled. The Saturday series particularly experienced lack of patronage. Some concerts were played on Thursdays with worse results because this is church choir practice night while many professional and business men found it necessary to keep such late hours of work as to make concert attendance impossible.

Then the plan of splitting season tickets was undertaken last season and it proved successful. It bids fair to work better yet during the coming music-year.

Harl McDonald's Plan

Splitting season tickets was a new method of getting subscribers and the method is proving popular, according to Harl McDonald, nationally successful American composer, former professor at the University of Pennsylvania where he headed the music department. He had been "mulling over the idea for a year and a half." It appears that in and near the City of Philadelphia are some 250 men's and women's clubs, all of them aiming at civic betterment and the finer things of life. McDonald concluded that many of the members of these clubs were interested in the orchestra without being regular subscribers. He managed in due time to bring together the officers of a very considerable proportion of these clubs, the admirable result being the formation of "The Associated Clubs of the Philadelphia Symphony."

Two hundred seats each on the main floor and in the first balcony were set aside for use of members of the "Associated Clubs." These 400 seats, or rather the full season tickets, then were quartered. That is to say 1600 quarter season tickets were issued at $12.50 each, the ticket covering seven programs, or exactly one-fourth of the total number of programs announced for the entire season. Buyers of quarter tickets liked the plan for at least two reasons. Some are still "afraid" of too much symphony music. Others cannot afford either the time or the money to attend every program. On the other hand the quarter ticket subscribers were given a bargain at the $12.50 rate because single tickets sell at $2.50. They liked the $5 saving.

Organizational Success

While the idea of breaking up tickets is not so new, McDonald's success lies in organizational direction, in getting together the boards of these clubs, and reaching through them the individual members. He figured correctly that "the corner movie is a competitor to a symphony orchestra in proportion to the number of subscribers." The temptation of passing up a concert at a late hour, on a rainy night, and going to a cinema instead, is great if the tickets have not been purchased. "The movie 'frequently wins the toss'."

What applies to the adults, figured Harl McDonald, applies also to the younger generation, which, if of the student age, more likely than not is restricted as to ticket buying power. Manager McDonald, remembering his own music student days, promptly set aside 350 seats in another section of the Academy of Music Auditorium, converting them into 1400 quarter subscriptions, offering again a discount for these new seven-concert admission cards. As in the case of the adult club members, so now McDonald proceeded to offer entire blocks to members of a school or college. Practically all of the 1400 seats have been sold.

Quoting McDonald

"In Philadelphia," writes Manager McDonald, "the orchestra had heretofore a following of 8000 to 10,000 persons, far too small a number for a city of this size and far too small for the needs of the orchestra. Under the club plan we are receiving handsome co-operation of much larger public and we are spreading the cause of music and of the orchestra. In brief, this seems the way to secure the support of 100,000 persons instead of only one-tenth this number."

The Philadelphia orchestra plays to sold-out series in Baltimore and Washington and their New York sales are going up. It is something to be pondered over by those interested in the future success of the Southern California Symphony Association, the sponsoring body of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra. A municipal music tax seems desirable, but the road to such a happy state, I believe, is paved with quarter-split-tickets.

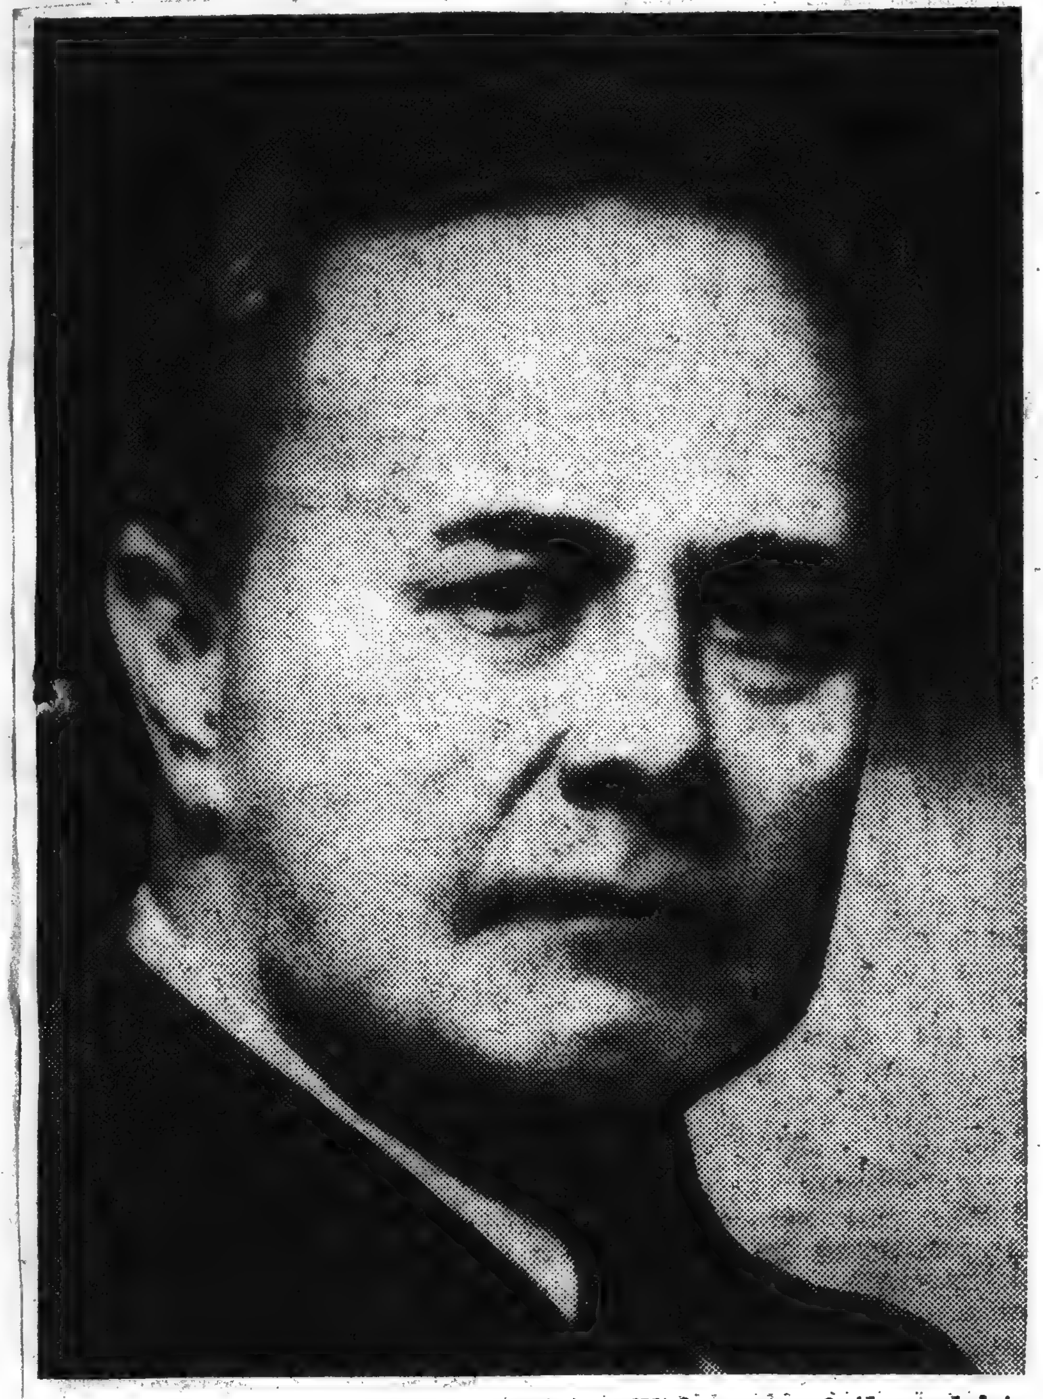
BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 23, 1939

NEWS OF MUSIC

The Symphony Hall Announcement Is In, Indicating the Season at Hand

The Boston Symphony Orchester begins its 59th season Friday afternoon, Oct. 13, at Symphony Hall. With the first concert, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will be entering upon his 16th year as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. These items and a general description of the approaching season, including the host of soloists, are to be found in the annual announcement, sent to this office during the past week.

One of Donald Greason's oil paintings of Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra in rehearsal is on the upper half of the front cover, an innovation in the decor of Symphony Hall announcements. On the rear cover there are several of Greason's pen and wash drawings of the orchestra and the conductor, made at other rehearsals. The announcement opens to a two-page photograph of the orchestra, apparently just before a concert.



Josef Hofmann, celebrated pianist, will be one of the soloists with the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the coming season which begins Friday afternoon, Oct. 13.

The First Soloist

Josef Hofmann, pianist, will be the first soloist of the season, appearing sometime in October. Although he has given concerts at Symphony Hall in recent years, Hofmann has not been soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra since 1922. It is expected that he will be followed by Emanuel Feuermann, violin-cellist, who will appear early in November. During the rest of the season, plans call for alternating the instrumental soloists, who, besides Hofmann and Feuermann, will be Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking and Jan Smeterlin, pianist, and Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti, violinsts. Other soloists will be Sigurd Rascher, saxophonist, who will play in the Debussy Concerto for Saxophone, and Serge Prokofiev, who has been invited to appear as soloist in a concerto of his own.

Guest Conductors

Two European conductors have been invited to lead the orchestra as guest conductors. They are the Russian Nicolai Malko, and the Finn, Tauno Hannikainen. Pending their arrivals, which may be difficult under present conditions, it is planned that each of these conductors will appear for one week, in mid-season.

Morning Musicales

The 12th season of Morning Musicales in the Statler Ballroom will begin November 8, when Bidu Sayao, Brazilian soprano and a member of the Metropolitan Opera Association, will sing. The musicales, which will benefit the Boston School of Occupational Therapy, will continue through March 6, with the following soloists: Robert Virovai, violinist, Nov. 29; Elisabeth Rethberg, soprano, and Ezio Pinza, basso, Dec. 13; Walter Gieseking, pianist, Jan. 17; Rise Stevens, soprano, and Richard Crooks, tenor, Feb. 14; and Lauritz Melchior, tenor, March 6.

Free Concert

Esther May-Barrett, soprano, and Leo Litwin, pianist, will give a concert at the Gardener Museum tomorrow afternoon, beginning at two. Miss Barrett will sing songs and airs by Gluck, Handel, Schubert, Gretchaninoff, Henschel and Logan. Mr. Litwin will play pieces by Scarlatti, Hummel and Chopin. Reginald Boardman will accompany Miss Barrett.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

SEP 23 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY TO OPEN SEASON OCT. 13

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced interesting features for its 59th season which will open in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Friday afternoon, Oct. 13. This will be the 16th successive year of the famous orchestra under the direction of its illustrious conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The Boston season will consist of the usual 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts, and 6 pairs of Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall. There are to be concerts as usual in other cities of New England, New York and the west.

There will be two pre-season concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York, when on Oct. 5 and 7 the orchestra, under its regular conductor, presents two programmes entirely of American music, old and new, as part of the festival to be given by the American Society of Composers.

Special Works To Be Performed

The classical repertory will of course have the largest place upon Dr. Koussevitzky's programme. He intends a larger repetition than usual of the music of Bach and Mozart. The season will end with a Tchaikovsky Festival, in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of the birth of the Russian composer.

Soloists engaged for the Friday and Saturday series include the pianists Josef Hofmann, Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking, and Jan Smeterlin; the violinsts Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti; 'cellist Emanuel Feuermann and the celebrated saxophone virtuoso, Sigurd Rascher.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

SEP 23 1939

Artist Decorates the Boston Symphony Folder

Donald Greason's vivid oil painting of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky rehearsing the Boston Symphony Orchestra is reproduced in full color on the cover of the announcement of the plans of the orchestra's new season, opening Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 13 and 14.

The first photograph of the entire orchestra in performance stretches across the inside of the announcement. Robert Gundersen (formerly of this city) may be recognized as number two in the second rank of first violins. On the back cover are reproductions of quick sketches of characteristic attitudes of the leader and his men painted by Mr. Greason in wash, during his attendance at many rehearsals. He writes under the sketches: "The whole is the sum of the parts."

The folder names the highlights of the season's programs, and lists the distinguished soloists. A copy of the illustrated announcement will be mailed on application to the subscription office, Symphony Hall.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

SEP 23 1939

20

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WASHINGTON, D. C.
NEWS

SEP 23 1939

War and Music

Ban on Wagner Is the First Ominous Sign of What Is to Come

By HELEN BUCHALTER

War, which leaves no field of man's endeavour untouched, has already caught up with the free enjoyment of music.

First signs of this ominous by-product of war comes from Hastings, England, where the Municipal Orchestra has banned the works of Wagner.

The musical patriots of this city have not yet gone so far as their predecessors in the last war when all German music was banned, but the first step can lead to anything.

Mozart, Beethoven, Haydn, Mendelssohn (a German Jew) may still be played in Hastings. The orchestra's director, Julius Harrison, says the onus falls only on Wagner because his music is "the prototype of Nazi aggression. It is heavy and militant and reminds one of Hitler who incidentally is a great admirer of Wagner."

Wagner is also a favorite of a lot of other people without warlike dispositions. One of them is President Roosevelt who personally requested Conductor Hans Kindler to play Wagner when the President attended his first National Symphony concert at the Water Gate this summer.

EFFECT ON BOSTON

The war may also drain off some key men in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has always had a large proportion of foreign members. Conductor Serge Koussevitzky is reported to have said that he would have no trouble replacing any of the musicians who answer the call to arms in their native lands.

Meanwhile, the Boston Symphony was losing out in a little battle of its own with the American Federation of Musicians. The fracas occurred in connection with a free festival of music designed to help alleviate public anxiety about war.

The festival, planned by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, was to open Oct. 1 in Carnegie Hall, New York, presenting the Boston Symphony along with such distinguished ensembles as Benny Goodman's, Paul Whiteman's, Glenn Miller's and Fred Waring's orchestra.

The Federation objected that these bands, as union members, could not appear on the same series as the non-union Boston Symphony.

Yesterday the Boston engagements were canceled and the New York Philharmonic assigned instead.

The Boston is the only major symphony which employs non-union musicians, one circumstance which explains its large number of foreign members. Attempts to unionize the orchestra have failed, it is believed, chiefly because of the will of Col. Henry Lee Higginson, who died in 1919 leaving the orchestra a large sustaining fund, to be used only if the orchestra remained non-union.

MORE SERIOUS EFFECTS

The inroads of war on music, noted above, are of course minor compared to the possible long-range effect of prolonged hostilities on the future of musical research and composition. It is a truism that art flourishes under relatively peaceful conditions, aside from the appalling possibility that among the thousands to die may be some future Beethoven.

Dr. Alfred Einstein, the musicologist who like his namesake the physicist is an exile from his native Germany, calls attention in the new issue of Musical America to the probable loss of musical treasures should libraries be bombed. Music is still a field full of pioneer material for the reasearch scholar, who would feel this loss most acutely. Dr. Einstein also points out the impossibility of genuine scholarship under fascist rule, which hampers free investigation of art history.

IF WE KEEP OUT

So long as America keeps out of war, our musical life is not likely to be immediately affected, since most of our musical organizations are composed of American citizens.

A noteworthy exception is John Barbirolli, the British conductor of the New York Philharmonic. However, the management thinks he will be able at least to complete this season.

The Metropolitan Opera, which made its comeback a few years ago by the Wagner route (a fortuitous combination of circumstances in which revived public interest in Wagner coincided with the discovery of the greatest voices of our day) is not worried. Most of its Wagnerian singers are Scandinavians!

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH

SEP 23 1939

Festival Fight Won by Union

Philharmonic Noses Out Boston Symphony in Fete Set by ASCAP Oct. 5-7.

Final work on organizing the seven-day music festival of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers proceeded smoothly yesterday, with the union row which threatened to disrupt the entire program safely out of the way. Settlement was a victory for the Musicians' Union, which was successful in its efforts to prevent the non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra from appearing at the fete. The New York Philharmonic Orchestra has been substituted.

The Boston was scheduled to make two appearances during the week-long festival: On October 5 and 7. The Musicians' Union, however, threatened to pull out every other musician in the fete if the Boston was engaged. This would have affected such names as Benny Goodman, Glenn Miller, Fred Waring, Paul Whiteman and others who are slated to be present.

Actual settlement of the controversy came at a conference at the World's Fair City Hall among Mayor LaGuardia, Gene Buck, president of ASCAP, and Edward Canavan and Thomas Gamble of the union. The Mayor issued the statement following the conference, avoiding any mention whatsoever of the Boston orchestra and merely indicating that the Philharmonic had been engaged.

The bulk of the Mayor's statement was devoted to announcing the festival's daily schedule, which will include such features as symphonic compositions, popular music, band music, negro music and a Saturday afternoon devoted to American children's music.

The Mayor said: "I believe this will be the greatest music festival in the history of American music. There will be one whole week with American musicians participating, playing the compositions of American composers and sung by Americans, and it is all free to the people of the city of New York. ASCAP is certainly making a marvelous contribution to music."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
UTAH TRIBUNE

SEP 23 1939

Symphony Bows to Union

NEW YORK, Sept. 22 (INS) — Because of union objections, the Boston Symphony orchestra has been eliminated from the city's musical festival to be staged next month to divert the thoughts of the population from the European war and the New York Philharmonic Symphony orchestra has been substituted, it was revealed Friday by the mayor's office.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

SEP 24 1939

Native Works To Be Offered For Festival

Ascap Sponsors Series Throughout Next Week; Tickets Will Be Free

Seven evening concerts will be held during the first week of October in Carnegie Hall in a festival of American music presented under the auspices of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. Admission will be by free tickets; where and when these can be obtained will be announced later.

Next Sunday night Dr. Frank Black, of the National Broadcasting Company, will conduct a program of light opera and musical comedy music. American Negro music, including spirituals, symphonic works and popular music, will be presented Monday night, Oct. 2. Edwin Franko Goldman and his band and other organizations will take part in a program of band music on Wednesday. On Wednesday, American composers of popular songs will play and sing in a program of past and present music of this kind. The Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra will play American symphonic music under the direction of the composers represented on Thursday and Saturday. Friday night, Oct 6, will bring a program of American symphonic jazz, melody and swing under the direction of Paul Whiteman, Benny Goodman and Fred Waring.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was first engaged for the two symphonic programs, but was replaced by the Philharmonic after Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians had protested against the use of a non-union organization in a series in which many of its members are taking part. The festival has been arranged through Mayor F. H. LaGuardia and Gene Buck, president of the A S. C. A. P., as a celebration of the society's twenty-fifth anniversary and also, according to the Mayor's statement of Sept. 10, as a demonstration against "profiteering on sorrow and anxiety."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

SEP 24 1939

Koussevitzky Furthers Plans For Berkshires

Boston Awaits Opening of Symphony Season, Listens to Short Opera Series

George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said at a recent interview in Boston last week that only four or five of the orchestra's 104 musicians were still abroad, and that he expected these to be back before the beginning of the season, which open in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon, Oct. 13. Serge Koussevitzky, who will begin his sixteenth Boston season on that date, was expected to return by the end of the week from the Berkshires, where he was discussing with the Berkshire Symphonic festival trustees plans for the musical academy to be opened next July at Tanglewood. According to arrangements now being considered, the Academy will include a group of advanced students, a group pursuing a regular curriculum, and a group studying on a non-curricular basis. There will probably be two student orchestras, one consisting of advanced players and one for those whose training is in a more elementary stage.

An extension of the 1940 festival beyond the two weeks' span of recent summers has not yet been officially announced, but according to recent reports at Symphony Hall the addition of a third week can be regarded as a strong possibility.

While awaiting the opening of the symphonic season Boston's music lovers had opportunity to hear popular-priced opera of an unusually commendable standard from the New York Grand Opera Company directed by Amedeo Passeri, which opened a season intended to last a month at the Boston Opera House on Sept. 14. The announced casts included several present and former members of the Metropolitan, such as Armand Tokatyan, Carlo Morelli, John Gurney, Ralph Errolle, Pompilio Malatesta, Gladys Swarthout and Anne Roselle, and, [illegible]ther well known singers, James Melton, Rosemarie Brancato and Jan Peerce.

The enterprise, however, ran into difficulties at the start, what with the fact that the first two days were those of the Jewish Rosh Hashona holidays, a factor that the management had apparently overlooked, and, as a factor unpredictable by any management, a Saturday which proved to be the hottest day which Boston had experienced this summer. That evening the American Guild of Musical Artists reorganized the company on a co-operative basis and carried on the series through last Tuesday, when it was brought to a close. Aided by a $1,000 cheque from its president, Lawrence Tibbett, the AGMA helped the less affluent members of the company to pay their hotel bill and return to New York.

Although Saturday's performance of "Rigoletto," held while discussions whose warmth corresponded at times to that of the evening were pursued between the management and AGMA representatives, began over an hour late, it merited much praise for the singing of a cast including Miss Brancato, Georgia Standing, Mr. Peerce, Mr. Morelli and Mr. Gurney, and for the smoothness and co-ordination shown under the conductorship of Gabriele Simeoni and the stage direction of Beniamino Altieri. The story of this abbreviated season suggests, however, that even with casts above the average standard of popular-priced opera, prudence calls for the possession of a fairly sizable reserve fund to enable an enterprise of this kind to make a successful start.

F. D. P.

THIS CLIPPING FROM KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE

SEP 24 1939

Alec Templeton To Give Recital In City Dec. 5

Pianist to Play Return Engagement for Local Symphony Orchestra.

In response to a great number of requests for a return engagement by Alec Templeton, the blind English pianist, Mrs. H. M. Snow announced Saturday that he will be presented as the Kalamazoo Symphony Orchestra's extra attraction this season. The recital will be given Tuesday evening, Dec. 5, in Central high school auditorium, and admission will be by separate ticket, Mrs. Snow says. It is not included in the books of season tickets for orchestra programs.

Templeton was so enthusiastically received as to be almost classed as a sensation when he played here last season. Immediately, Mrs. Snow said, she was bombarded with requests to obtain a return engagement, both from those who heard him, and from many others who heard how fine and entertaining he was.

In addition to his regular radio work, Templeton will play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and with the Detroit Symphony Orchestra this winter. His Detroit appearance will be his fifth with the Detroit orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

SEP 25 1939

Music News

The unionized New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra has been substituted for the non-union Boston Symphony in the two concerts of American symphonic music which are to be part of the festival to be held in Carnegie Hall next week, but otherwise the plans are going forward as originally scheduled. Abram Chasins, composer and pianist, who was to have played the Gershwin piano concerto in F with the Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky on October 7, now will play the same work with the Philharmonic under Walter Damrosch on that date.

On October 5 he will play it with the Boston Symphony at a concert in that orchestra's own quarters, Symphony Hall, Boston.

THIS CLIPPING FROM AURORA, ILL.
BEACON-NEWS

SEP 24 1939

Music Notes

ROBERT BARCLAY

Did you see the story that June Provines told recently in the Tribune about Serge Koussevitsky's conducting in France? Miss Provine credits Carleton Smith, well known musicologist, with the yarn.

According to the story, Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was in France not long ago rehearsing a French symphony orchestra in preparation for a concert. They say that in France rehearsing is violently disliked by orchestra musicians and whenever possible the regular members of a symphony hire substitutes to practice for them. (Not in the story: Must be nice to feel that way about your playing!)

Mr. Koussevitsky must have been having his difficulties, because at the fourth rehearsal he looked over the orchestra and found only one familiar face. He rushed over to this man, the first clarinetist, and shook hands with him.

"I'm so glad to see you here," he said. "You deserve credit for coming to all of the rehearsals."

"Thank you," said the clarinetist. "I'm sorry that I won't be able to be here for the performance."

THIS CLIPPING FROM QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER

SEP 25 1939

Milton Residents Subscribe to 25th Symphony Season

At least 25 residents of Milton have subscribed for the 59th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra, to open next Friday.

Among Milton residents who will have seats during the season are Mrs. Alexander Forbes of Harland street, Mrs. John W. Hallowell of Brush Hill road, Miss Anne Houghton of Adams street, Mrs. Malcolm Donald of Blue Hill avenue, Mrs. Philip S. Dalton, James C. Howe of Canton, Mrs. James S. Russell of Canton avenue, Mrs. Horatio Lamb of Blue Hills parkway, Mrs. George Megrew of Hinckley road, Miss Elizabeth Leland of Brush Hill road, Mrs. Philip L. Spalding of Highland street, Mrs. John W. Bartol of Canton avenue, Mrs. Edward Thaw of Brush Hill road, Mrs. Theodore E. Brown of Brush Hill road, Mrs. Robert Saltonstall of Milton street, Bernard W. Trafford of Woodland road, Mrs. Samuel Huntington Wolcott, Jr., of Brush Hill road, Mrs. Charles Devens of Brush Hill road, Mrs. William R. Driver of Hutchinson street, Mrs. Alexander H. Ladd of Center street and Robert T. Gannett, 2nd, of Dana avenue.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1939

Symphony to Give Two Free Concerts—

Barred at New York Festival, Will Participate From Boston

By L. A. Sloper

Barred by the American Federation of Musicians from participation in the New York celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will make its contribution from Boston.

The orchestra, under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give two concerts in Symphony Hall on Wednesday evening and Friday afternoon of next week. These concerts will be free to the public.

They are offered, in the words of an official announcement, "as a tribute to the American composers of symphonic works."

The announcement makes no reference to the action of the New York union in barring the Boston Symphony from the celebration, remarking merely that these concerts in Boston "are in addition to the concerts which the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers is giving in celebration of its twenty-fifth anniversary, in Carnegie Hall, New York, during the same week."

The name of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was removed from the programs of the New York celebration by Mayor Fiorello La Guardia after a declaration by the American Federation of Musicians that none of its members would participate in the festival if the Boston orchestra took part. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is the only non-union major symphony orchestra in the United States.

The New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra will occupy the place originally assigned to the Boston Orchestra in the festival programs.

The announcement from Symphony Hall continues:

"Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who has evidenced this great interest in American music ever since his first season with the Boston orchestra, is arranging two programs of works by Deems Taylor, John Alden Carpenter, George Gershwin, Howard Hanson, Roy Harris, William Schuman, Arthur Foote, Charles Ives, Louis Gruenberg, Randall Thompson, and Henry Hadley.

"Admission to the concerts will be by ticket only, application for which should be addressed to George E. Judd, Manager, Symphony Hall, Boston. It is unlikely that anyone will receive tickets for more than one concert, and not more than two tickets will be allotted to any one person.

"The regular subscription concerts will begin as originally announced on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 13 and 14. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will assemble the orchestra next Monday for the longest season in the orchestra's history which will extend from Oct. 2 to the middle of August, embracing the Symphony and Pops seasons, the Esplanade Concerts, the Berkshire Festival, and the Orchestra's Tanglewood School."

Symphony Announces Program to Open Season

Dr. Koussevitzky will open his sixteenth successive season as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the fifty-ninth season of the orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 13 and 14.

The opening program will consist of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony No. 3, in E flat; Vincent d'Indy's Symphonic Variations, "Istar;" and Debussy's "La Mer."

Soloists shortly to be heard in the Friday and Saturday series will be Sigurd Rascher, saxaphone virtuoso, and Josef Hofman, pianist, who has not played at these concerts for a number of years. Further soloists are Walter Gieseking, Rudolf Serkin, Jan Smeterlin, Jascha Heifetz, and Joseph Szigeti. There will also be vocal soloists, notably in the Tchaikovsky Festival which will end the season.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
GAZETTE

SEP 25 1939

THE MUSIC BOX

City to Hear Symphony If War Doesn't Interfere

The Philadelphia Orchestra will make a long hoped for visit to Schenectady this season when it comes in the Schenectady civic music course. The Philadelphia orchestra has never before played in Schenectady but has been booked by the Civic Music Association for this season. The annual membership drive of the association will begin a week from today.

Eugene Ormandy will conduct the program in this city. He and Leopold Stokowski will conduct the orchestra this season in its concerts in Philadelphia, New York, Washington and other cities.

Many persons are wondering what the war in Europe will do to the orchestras in this country, remembering perhaps what happened to the Boston Symphony and some of the others during the World war. So many were aliens that when they were called home for service the orchestra was broken up and still worse, when this country went into the war many were "enemy aliens". Mostly gentle artists, with no animosity against anyone, least of all their American friends, they hid away in quiet places, unless they returned to their native lands, and afterward probably found their places again in American life. But that is just supposition and this time, according to the press department of the Philadelphia Symphony there will be no such trouble with that orchestra.

According to the press department turmoil in Europe will not affect any member of the orchestra directly as all of them are American citizens, or at least have first papers. Marcel Tabuteau, solo oboist, was in France, and his departure was delayed for a few days, but he arrived safely on the Ile de France. Albin Hase and Heinrich Wiemann, double bass players, were in Berlin when war broke out, but they made their way to Sweden and are now en route to this country.

There are but few changes in personnel this season. Two musicians, Benjamin Heifitz and Samuel H. Mayes 3rd, will share the post of principal cellist. Mr. Mayes, who is just 21, is the youngest player to hold so important a post in any major symphony orchestra. It was his extreme youth that persuaded the directors to make the unusual duplicate appointment. The son of a St. Louis physician, he is proud of being the most thoroughly American member of the orchestra. He has that distinction by virtue of a strain of Indian blood. He is distantly related to Will Rogers. He came to the Curtis Institute to study at the age of 12, and became a member of the Philadelphia Orchestra six years later.

Mr. Heifetz, born in Russia in 1899, came to America as cellist of the Kolisch String Quartet, since disbanded. He was a recitalist at the age of 13, when he left the St. Petersburg Conservatory. He was one of the founders of the "Conductorless Orchestra" of Moscow. Political changes drove him, after 1922, first to Poland, then to Germany, where he joined the Kolisch Quartet in 1927.

Three other newcomers to the orchestra are Curtis Institute graduates. Frederick Vogelgesang, violin, is (like Mr. Mayes) beginning his professional career at an unusually early age. He will be 19 in November. He has been studying with Efrem Zimbalist, and has for a year served as Mr. Zimbalist's assistant in teaching.

Theodore Seder, French horn, comes from Pittsburgh. He has played a season with the National Symphony of Washington, four seasons with the Cleveland Orchestra and two with the Detroit. Gordon H. Pulia, a native of San Francisco, has for several years been first trombone in the music hall orchestra at Radio City, New York.

Globe 9-27

Boston Symphony to Give Free Concerts on Oct. 4 and 6

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, will give two concerts in Symphony Hall, Wednesday evening and Friday afternoon, Oct. 4 and 6, free to the public and as a tribute to the American composers of symphonic works. These concerts are under Boston Symphony auspices.

The Boston Symphony concerts are in addition to the concerts which the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers are giving in celebration of its 25th anniversary, in Carnegie Hall, New York, during the same week.

Dr. Koussevitzky is arranging two programs of works by Deems Taylor, John Alden Carpenter, Arthur Foote, George Gershwin, Howard Hanson, Roy Harris, William Schuman, Charles Ives, Louis Gruenberg, Randall Thompson and Henry Hadley.

Admission will be by ticket only, applications for which should be addressed to George E. Judd, manager, Symphony Hall, Boston. It is unlikely that anyone will receive tickets for more than one concert, and not more than two tickets will be allotted to any one person.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

SEP 27 1939

Orchestra To Give Free Concerts

New England Music Lovers Invited to Boston

The Boston Symphony Orchestra management today announced two free concerts to be given at Symphony Hall in Boston as tribute to American composers. The concerts will take place Oct. 4 and 6.

These concerts are primarily planned for residents of New England and "especially the Berkshires," says the announcements. Requests for tickets will be filled in the order of application and should be sent at once to Symphony Hall.

Originally it was the purpose to give two concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York, on the invitation of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, but union troubles interfered with Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia's festival plans.

The concert Wednesday will be in the evening, the Friday concert in the afternoon.

TRAVELER, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27.

Soloists for Symphony

There is a special interest in the return of Josef Hofmann as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, since the celebrated pianist has not appeared at the Symphony concerts since 1922. The other pianists announced for the Friday and Saturday series are Rudolf Serkin, the brilliant young artist whose debut at these concerts was one of the features of the season past; Walter Gieseking, and Jan Smeterlin, who have also recently appeared. Serge Prokofieff has also been invited to appear as soloist in a concerto of his own.

Two violinists are announced—Jasche Heifetz, whose great artistry has become an expected event each Symphony season, and Joseph Szigeti. Mr. Szigeti's last appearance at these concerts was in 1935. A newcomer will be Emanuel Feuermann, the celebrated violoncellist. Sigurd Rascher, the remarkable virtuoso of the saxophone, has been engaged to perform the saxophone concerto of Debussy. Tchaikovsky's "Pique-Dame," and a number of his works for orchestra alone and orchestra with soloists will comprise a festival at the end of the season, commemorating the hundredth anniversary of his berth. The opera "Pique-Dame" will then be presented in concert form.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BURLINGTON, VT.
NEWS

SEP 27 1939

To Analyse War News

The second edition of a new daily station feature, analyzing the war developments of the day, will be heard over WCAX at 5:30 tonight. This special newscast is designed to point out those aspects of the world situation which are important to Americans, but which may not necessarily be the biggest headlines in the day's war news. This cast covers the broad strategic developments on the military fronts and brings into focus developments on the diplomatic fronts. Remember to listen to this new feature at 5:30 tonight.

Tex Rocky and his Ridge Runners will offer a program of rural rhythm in the modern manner, following the 6:30 news tonight.

Sanford Cobb of Burlington presents another in his fall series of book talks over WCAX tonight, following the American Family Robinson program. "Views and Reviews from the Book Shelf" is a regular Wednesday evening feature of your Daily News Station WCAX.

Music of the Masters, at 8 o'clock tonight, presents the Lieutenant Kije Suite of Prokofieff as performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

American - 9-27-39

All-American Concerts Free

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is America-minded.

Open to the public of New England without charge, on the evening of Oct. 4 and the afternoon of Oct. 6, concerts of all-American symphonic music will be given in Symphony Hall.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will conduct and George E. Judd, manager of Symphony hall, is in charge of the free tickets.

Since he came to Boston in 1924, Dr. Koussevitsky, more than any other symphony conductor, has encouraged the composition of American symphonic music.

The All-American programs will feature the works of Deems Taylor, John Alden Carpenter, Arthur Foote, George Gershwin, Howard Hanson, Roy Harris, William Schuman, Charles Ives, Louis Gruenberg, Randall Thompson and Henry Hadley.

22

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
SEP 27 1939

Literary Topics

By E. N. C.

Readers of last week's Literary Topics may recall a reference to a term of "collegiate" slang—"the flicks"—signifying the moving pictures. The sight of this phrase brought to my instant memory its appearance in Merton Hodge's play, "The Wind and the Rain," first produced in 1933, and I tried to find the speech in which it occurred. During the past week I have, according to promise, re-read this sensitive, appealing play, which covers several years in the lives of a group of medical students in a Scottish university town, and I found the term in a speech uttered by Gilbert Raymond, the casual, lazy student of the group, who says, as he joins the others for tea in the study they share in Mrs. McFie's boarding house, "I've just been to the flicks all afternoon, with that blonde from the Kosy Korner. Damn' awful film, but we had our bob's worth of dark." My friend Mrs. R., so often referred to in this column and who is, to the relief and satisfaction of her many friends, just back in safety from a sojourn abroad, tells me that she can recall the exact accent with which these words were spoken by the actor taking the part of Raymond ,when she saw and greatly enjoyed "The Wind and the Rain" in its New York production. According to Mrs. R's recollection, the splendid acting part of Mrs. McFie was taken by that fine character actress of both stage and screen, Miss Jean Cadell.

Although Mr. H. G. Wells is steadily advancing into the veteran ranks, Mr. Eden Phillpotts is, to the best of my knowledge, dean of English novelists. Mr. Phillpotts is a remarkable figure in contemporary fiction, and a publisher's publicity sheet which reached me recently I found so interesting that I felt it fair to assume that readers of this column would share my interest.

Eden Phillpotts was born in 1862 at Mount Abu, in the Rajputana Province of India, where his father was Resident Political Agent. Like Rudyard Kipling and so many others born in India of English parents, young Phillpotts was sent home to England in his early boyhood. I don't know how it may have been with other children, but when I was a child, I was fascinated by the continual appearance in English stories of these children who, born in India, were sent home to escape the effects of an alien climate and to receive their education in England, separated from their parents and living under the care of relatives. It will be recalled that one of the inmates of Mrs. Pipchin's establishment at Brighton, where young Paul Dombey was resident for a time before entering Dr. Blimber's celebrated Academy for Young Gentlemen, was Master Bitherstone, referred to by Major Bagstock as the son of his old comrade, "Bill Bitherstone of Bengal" and who was one of these India-born English children. But beside Master Bitherstone there were many such characters in stories written for children.

I recall especially a book entitled "The Cousin from India," the cousin being a very dynamic little girl, whose coming raised havoc in the quiet, sedate household of her English relatives.

After his school days were over Mr. Phillpotts held for a time a position in a Fire Insurance Office; going to London—from Plymouth and its neighborhood, where he had lived hitherto—he made an unsuccessful attempt at a theatrical career, then began writing and, settling in the lovely Devonshire country, came to be known as a writer of novels of the Devonshire countryside which were even compared to the Wessex novels of Thomas Hardy.

In his later years Mr. Phillpotts has made his home on his own estate near the ancient, historic, picturesque city of Exeter, and he has become known to a younger generation of readers, readers to whom his earlier books are entirely unknown, as the author of a number of remarkable novels, which, though they fall into the category of tales of mystery and crime, are actually penetrating psychological studies and books of distinguished literary excellence. Of these later novels by Mr. Phillpotts, "Lycanthrope" and "Portrait of a Scoundrel" are perhaps the most striking.

Friends who were interested in last week's instances of misquotations which would seem to be so firmly rooted in our general speech that it is impossible to eradicate them have reminded me of other examples, and Mrs. R. told me that, a long time ago, F. P. A. of The Conning Tower, ran a series which he called "Familiar Misquotations." How I wish I had come upon them, but I never did. Among the misquotations sent me by Mrs. T. are "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing," "pride goeth before a fall," and to these I myself add, "money is the root of all evil." It would be, I think, peculiarly annoying to Alexander Pope, so deft, so accurate, so assured, in the exact significance of every word he wrote, to find the word "knowledge" substituted for the word "learning," thereby destroying the whole pith and marrow of his famous lines in the "Essay on Criticism." The popular tendency toward abbreviation, wherever possible, is, presumably, responsible for the Biblical misquotation from the Book of Proverbs, which reads, in its full majesty of phrase, "Pride goeth before destruction, and an haughty spirit before a fall." By omitting the four opening words of the sentence from St. Paul's Epistle to Timothy, "For the love of money is the root of all evil," the essential meaning of this fine saying is completely distorted by innumerable speakers and writers.

When my thoughts turn, and they do so very often, to the past days of Hartford's glory as a high-ranking theatrical town and to an even earlier time when I was a constant theater-goer in Boston and during an intensive yearly season in New York, I am led to wonder whether any other stage lovers of an older generation deplore, as I do, the absence of the now derided boxes from the auditorium. Especially when there were musical performances by orchestras and solo pianists did I delight in the boxes. In the ancient days when the Boston Symphony played in the Capitol Theater, I used to be able, seated in the precious little single chair at the front of the lower box at the left of the stage, to see the actual crook of Koussevitsky's magic left-hand little [illegible], and I could see under the hands of Paderewski.

And with the mention of that venerated name I must break a rule I had set for myself, not to refer in this column to the present tragedy in Europe, which darkens my whole horizon. I must offer a word of tribute to that heroic figure, the greatest, as I feel, of all the few great men I have ever seen, who now lives to see his beloved land again in bitter straits and whose quoted words regarding the situation are, as ever, rich in a noble and splendid dignity.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

SEP 28 1939

CHATTER: Sheila Barrett is at the Leroy Sanitarium ... Eddy Duchin, who played to 60,000 people at the Fair on Saturday, last night had Harvey D. Gibson, Al Smith, Newbold Morris and Boro Pres. George Harvey dancing with jitterbugs, to his music ... Lou Clayton will make his tenth trip to the hospital next week—all as a result of his nose-beautifying operation ... The unseasonable weather is delaying the opening of Colbert's elaborate sea-food bar, which cost $10,000 ... The Steinway Company will enter the phonograph-record business, recording only classical music ... ASCAP's forced hiring of the Philharmonic to replace the nonunion ~~Boston Symphony~~ at the Music Festival here cost $20,000—the contract price stipulated for the Boston Symphony.

TRANSCRIPT, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1939 B

Boston Symphony to Play Two Concerts of American Music

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitsky will present two concerts of American music at Symphony Hall on Wednesday evening and Friday afternoon, Oct. 4 and 6, as a tribute to American symphonic composers, it was announced at Symphony Hall today.

Following the decision tha tthe Boston Symphony will not appear next week at Carnegie Hall for the New York Festival of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, comes the welcome news that New England is thus to have its own festival of American music, under the auspices of the Boston Symphony.

Dr. Koussevitsky is arranging two programs of works by Deems Taylor, John Alden Carpenter, Arthur Foote, George Gershwin, Howard Hanson, Roy Harris, William Schuman, Charles Ives, Louis Gruenberg, Randall Thompson and Henry Hadley.

Concerts to be Free

These concerts are entirely free to the public. Admission will be by ticket only and applications should be addressed to George E. Judd, Manager, Symphony Hall, Boston. It is unlikely that anyone will receive tickets for more than one concert, and not more than two tickets will be alloted to any one person.

The regular subscription concerts will begin as originally announced on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 13 and 14. Dr. Koussevitzky will assemble the Boston Symphony next Monday for the longest season in the orchestra's history which will extend from the beginning of October to the middle of August embracing the Symphony and Pops seasons, the Esplanade concerts, the Berkshire Festival and the orchestra's "Tanglewood" School.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
SEP 28 1939

2 FREE CONCERTS

Boston Symphony Orchestra to Honor R. I. Ticket Requests.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give two [illegible] concerts in Symphony Hall, the night of Oct. 4 and the afternoon of Oct. 6, it is announced.

The programs will contain only American music, as a tribute to American symphonic composers. The full orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will participate.

The concerts were to have been given in New York as part of the festival to be conducted by the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, but the Musicians' Union ruled that if the Boston Symphony, a non-union orchestra, took part, all other musicians would withdraw from the festial.

According to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, the concerts "are for New England" and requests from Rhode Island for tickets will be honored as far as possible.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
SEP 28 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY WILL GIVE TREAT

Two Free Concerts to be Presented as Tribute to American Symphonic Composers.

Boston, Sept. 28 (AP)—As its tribute to American composers of symphonic works, the world-famous Boston symphony orchestra will present two free concerts during the week marking the 25th anniversary of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. The concerts will be held in Symphony hall Oct. 4 and 6.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH
SEP 28 1939

HubSymphony Sets Concerts

Orchestra, Barred by Union Here, Arranges 2 Free Boston Recitals.

BOSTON, Sept. 27.—Barred by union protests from participating in the forthcoming American music festival in New York, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give two free concerts in Symphony Hall here as a tribute to American symphonic composers, it was announced today.

The concert programs will consist exclusively of symphonic works by American composers and will be presented the night of October 4 and the afternoon of October 6. The full 110-piece orchestra under the conductorship of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will give the concerts.

The American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers invited the orchestra to take part in the New York festival. However, the Musicians' Union ruled that if the non-union Boston Orchestra participated all other musicians, being unionized, would withdraw. p

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM MIDDLETOWN, CONN.
PRESS
SEP 27 1939

TO GIVE FREE CONCERTS

BOSTON, Sept. 27.—(UP)—Barred by union protests from participating in the forthcoming American music festival in New York, the Boston symphony orchestra will give two free concerts in Symphony hall here as a tribute to American symphonic composers, it was announced today.

The concert programs will consist exclusively of symphonic works by American composers, and will be presented the night of Oct. 4 and the afternoon of Oct. 6. The full 110-piece orchestra, under the conductorship of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give the concerts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PRESS
Southbridge Mass
SEP 28 1939

Library Notes

The Worcester Music Festival will be held during the week beginning October 2.

All of us can get more pleasure, as well as profit, from music if we know what to listen for, and know the background - stories behind the world's great music.

Of Men and Music, by Deems Taylor - analysis, interpretation, appreciation. "Candid comments on music and musicians of the past, present and future, given originally as radio talks and reviews in periodicals."

Feldman - Music and the Listener (intended to aid the radio and concert listener with little musical knowledge to appreciate orchestral music. Mr. Feldman has played in symphony orchestras under well-known conductors); Stories Behind the World's Great Music, by Spaeth (anecdotes, facts and bits of biography about the following: Bach, Handel, Gluck, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Chopin, Schumann, Wagner, Brahms, Tschaikowski);

Music on the Air, by Kinscella (written to answer some of the many questions sent in by radio listeners. All this variety of information is conveyed interestingly and in a manner that will strain the attention of no radio listener, but will stimulate it); Philip Hale's Boston Symphony Programme Notes ("[illegible] enough here to give much satisfaction and enjoyment...provocation to thought and...stimulation that radiated from Mr. Hale as he lived");

Friends and Fiddlers, by Bowen (what music can mean to a circle of family and friends is delightfully told); Discoveries of a Music Critic, by Rosenfeld (interpretative essays on music, its meaning, creators of music, recent composers and recent American operas); Layman's Music Book, by Samaroff Stokowski (a book on music appreciation - the discourse to intelligent listeners of a well equipped teacher who does not undertake to tell them everything but to stimulate and interest them.)

Other worthwhile books are Music, 1900-1930, by Swan; Toscannini, by Stefan; Music to the Listening Ear, Earhart; The Metropolitan Book of the Opera, by Sanborn; Symphonic Broadcasts, by Olin Downes; An Hour with American Music, Rosenfeld.

There are a number of volumes of music in the Library, mostly given by William McGilpin. A very popular and excellent collection is the Scribner Radio Music Library, in eight volumes.

THE BOSTON HERALD, THURSDAY, SEPTEM[illegible] 28, 19

U. S. Music Held Greatest

Koussevitzky Lauds Native Composers

By LAWRENCE DAME

About to launch his 16th season as leader of the Boston Symphony orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky lauded American composers, whose works will be played in a free public festival here next week; deplored the decline of European music and even had many good words to say for jazz in an interview yesterday. The famous conductor was in high spirits, full of youthful energy and expressive gestures.

Forced to cancel its scheduled participation in the New York music festival, sponsored by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, because of trade union objections that it held an open shop, the orchestra decided to have a symphonic festival of its own, next Wednesday evening, Oct. 4, and next Friday afternoon, Oct. 6, in Symphony Hall.

The two programs will include American works by Deems Taylor, John Alden Carpenter, Arthur Foote, George Gershwin, Howard Hanson, Roy Harris, William Schuman, Charles Ives, Louis Gruenberg, Randall Thompson and Henry Hadley.

"The most interesting new music of today, in the field of younger composers, is made by Americans," said Dr. Koussevitzky, who is noted for encouraging progress in the American music field.

"In Europe, because of the war and its beginnings, there is no longer the creative mind. It is not possible to have the tranquillity, the concentration, and that is the trouble.

"They have forgotten in Europe to write the great things, they have forgotten that in music can be expressed the greatest emotions, more than in any other art. They write the little things now—little variations, polkas or something, a suite provencale, the trivia.

"But in the United States, there are many young composers actually trying to do the big things, actually progressing, like Aaron Copland and Roy Harris—extraordinary artists with tremendous technical command."

Dr. Koussevitzky, who praised his predecessors here and other orchestras for their interest in American works, revealed that he is swamped every season by submissions of new music pieces written by unknowns.

"Sixty, 70, 50 scores come to me—enormous!" he said. "Do you know we have more than 400 composers here in America? Tremendous! And from the 50 scores sent, perhaps I can play three or four. Meanwhile, the artists like William Shuman keep improving. Amazing, amazing! The public likes the new pieces, but not too many. We can't always play the new things, we must take pieces from the standard repertoire, too. To make up the programs, ah, what a task."

Interviewers expected the sensitive conductor to bridle when asked about jazz. Instead his eyes twinkled, he looked behind him at the radio, and he admitted that he often tunes in on jazz. Not for the music itself, but for study of the amazing technique.

"It is something in the air that makes jazz, and something in the ground," declared the artist. "For me, the music is too noisy, too loud, but it has no end of rhythms in it.

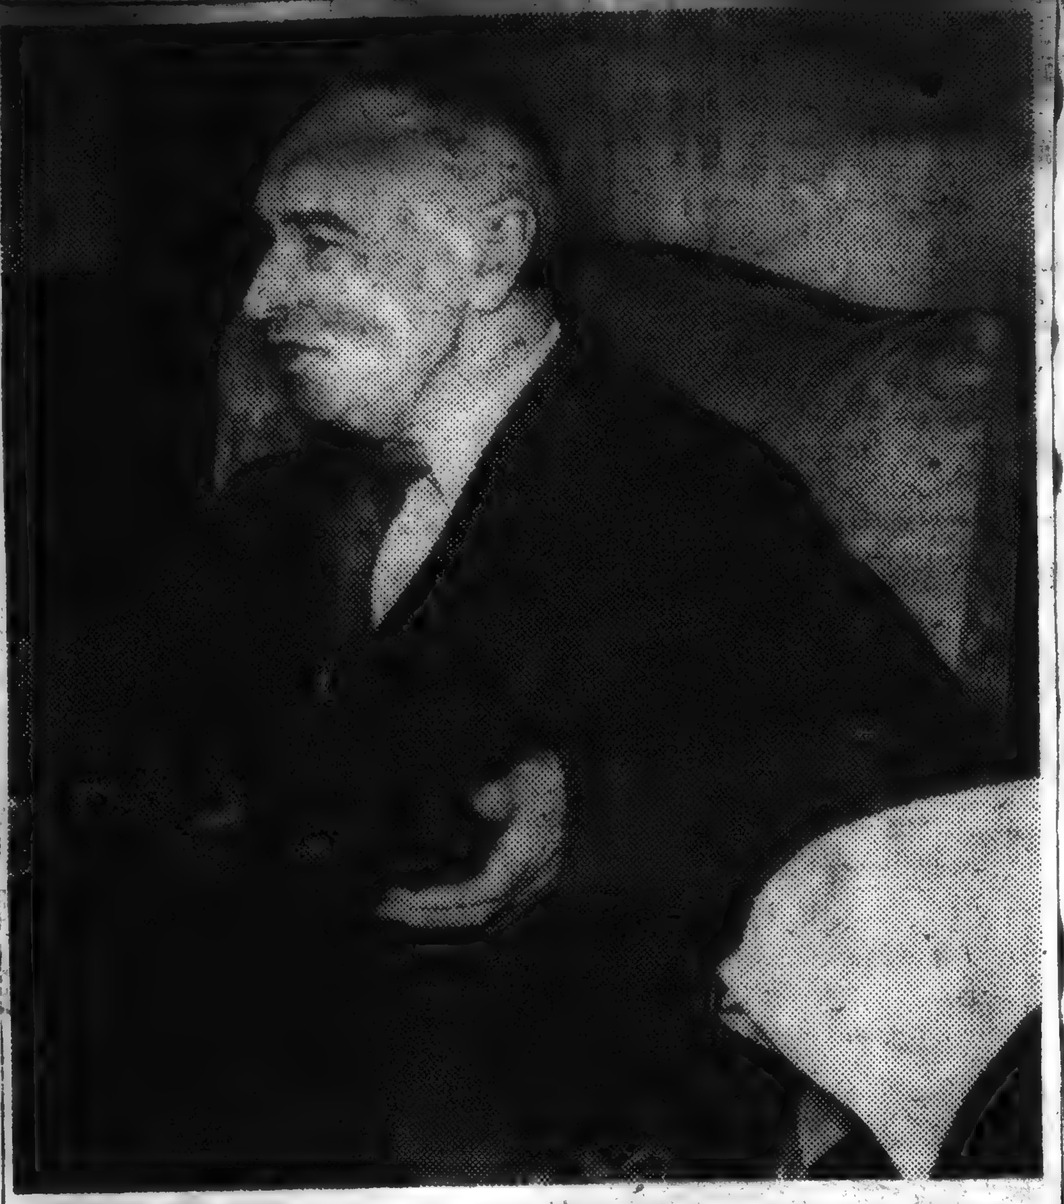
'NATIONAL SONG'

"How wonderfully it is performed, how marvellously it is played. Certainly it has influenced our good music, much of which is so American that you can tell it as you could another language. In following a jazz score, you can see it is like a national song, you feel something from the turn of the phrase. Certainly it influences composers.

"Aaron Copland took me to a place where they played jazz—six or seven Negroes witn great vitality. The first five or six minutes I was so surprised, so astonished by the performance and the phantasy. They improvised so, those Negroes, and I was surprised and happy to see their technique.

"It was extraordinary for the first five or six minutes. Then I became so tired. I said, 'I cannot stay.' Copland said, 'Why, I often listen two hours.' I said, 'Two hours, and I must go to a hospital.' It was too exciting, too much noise. Of course, perhaps I was tired before I went. Besides, it was such a noisy little small room."

Dr. Koussevitzky related, in humming a few snatches of music relative to his story, that he once surprised that conservative New England composer, Arthur Foote, by saying, "You know, M. Foote, there is something of jazz in your suite." Foote jumped with astonishment, but Dr. Koussevitzky proved his point by softly repeating yesterday, "Maree de rump pouf, maree de rump pouff."



CONDUCTOR TALKS—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky as he appeared during an interview yesterday in his Brookline home.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

SEP 28 1939

Symphony Conductor Says War Slows Creative Power in Music

BOSTON, Sept. 28—"American music is the best new, modern music today," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"The war tension absolutely brings down creative power. There are no more creative minds in Europe, musically, among the younger generation. Such well-known older masters as Strauss and Hindemith are, of course, exceptions. Why is this so? There is not the necessary tranquility in Europe for young composers."

Dr. Koussevitzky has been one of the leaders among symphonic conductors in this country in bringing forward what he considers significant new music by American composers. The list of his premieres is impressive.

HONOR U. S. COMPOSERS

Next Wednesday evening and Friday afternoon, Oct. 6, the Boston Symphony will present two free concerts of American music by nine composers, members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

One of the pieces to be heard at Symphony Hall next week is an American Festival Overture, written especially for the occasion by William Schuman, a New Yorker.

Dr. Koussevitzky's interest in American music has led him to definite conclusions about it.

"In the last three years I have realized that the best of the young Americans have developed a musical technic quite different from the European technic. It is connected with the past, as all art is an evolution of what has gone before, yet it is distinctive.

"The public accepts new American music 100 times more readily today than 15 years ago. There are over 400 composers in this country, and to me are submitted from 50 to 70 native scores each season."

He speaks with surprising warmth of approval on the subject of jazz.

JAZZ GREAT INFLUENCE

"Jazz has had a very great influence. It is something like a national song, it comes from the earth and is not superficial.

"Yes, I enjoy listening to jazz, but for the performances rather than the music. Aaron Copland once took me to a night club in New York (the conductor called it 'night restaurant') where I heard seven Negroes play marvelously. What a technic the trumpeter had! Those men were able to improvise in an extraordinary way! But as a matter of fact I was so tired, the music was so noisy, so exciting that I could listen to it only for 10 minutes! There is no end of new rhythms in jazz."

The war crisis has brought about no greater interest in American music on Dr. Koussevitzky's part than he had before.

"I had played American scores ever since I came here. In Europe, before that, I knew some of the compositions of such men as Boston's Arthur Foote and George W. Chadwick, of MacDowell and John Alden Carpenter. Five years ago I said that American music is the best new music."

Globe 9-28-39

Dr. Koussevitzky Says War Hurts European Music

American Product Best Now, He Declares—Symphony to Give Free Concerts

"American music is the best new, modern music today," says Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"The war tension absolutely brings down creative power. There are no more creative minds in Europe, musically, among the younger generation. Such well-known older masters as Strauss and Hindemith are, of course, exceptions. Why is this so? There is not the necessary tranquillity in Europe for young composers."

Dr. Koussevitzky has been one of the leaders among symphonic conductors in this country in bringing forward what he considers significant new music by American composers. The list of his premieres is impressive.

Two Free Concerts

Next Wednesday evening and Friday afternoon, Oct. 6, the Boston Symphony will present two free concerts of American music by nine composers, members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

One of the pieces to be heard at Symphony Hall next week is an American Festival Overture, written especially for the occasion by William Schuman, a New Yorker.

Dr. Koussevitzky's interest in American music has led him to definite conclusions about it.

"In the last three years I have realized that the best of the young Americans have developed a musical technic quite different from the European technic. It is connected with the past, as all art is an evolution of what has gone before, yet it is distinctive.
what has gone before, yet it is distinctive.

"The public accepts new American music 100 times more readily today than 15 years ago. There are over 400 composers in this country, and to me are submitted from 50 to 70 native scores each season."

Approves of Jazz

He speaks with surprising warmth of approval on the subject of jazz.

"Jazz has had a very great influence. It is something like a national song, it comes from the earth and is not superficial.

"Yes, I enjoy listening to jazz, but for the performances rather than the music. Aaron Copland once took me to a night club in New York (the conductor called it 'night restaurant') where I heard seven Negroes play marvelously. What a technic the trumpeter had! Those men were able to improvise in an extraordinary way! But as a matter of fact I was so tired, the music was so noisy, so exciting that I could listen to it for only 10 minutes! There is no end of new rhythms in jazz."

The war crisis has brought about no greater interest in American music on Dr. Koussevitzky's part than he had before.

"I have played American scores ever since I came here. In Europe, before that, I knew some of the compositions of such men as Boston's Arthur Foote and George W. Chadwick, of MacDowell and John Alden Carpenter. Five years ago I said that American music is the best new music."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

SEP 29 1939

TWO FREE CONCERTS

Boston Symphony Orchestra to Honor R. I. Ticket Requests.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give two free concerts in Symphony Hall, the night of Oct. 4 and the afternoon of Oct. 6, it is announced.

The programs will contain only American music, as a tribute to American symphonic composers. The full orchestra, with Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will participate.

The concerts were to have been given in New York as part of the festival to be conducted by the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, but the Musicians' Union ruled that if the Boston Symphony, a non-union orchestra, took part, all other musicians would withdraw from the festival.

According to George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra, the concerts "are for New England" and requests from Rhode Island for tickets will be honored as far as possible.

24

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
SEP 29 1939

America Must Rescue Arts From Death, Says Dr. Stock

A belief that music and the arts in Europe will perish if the war lasts as long as four years, and that America must take the lead in maintaining world culture, was expressed today by Dr. Frederick Stock, conductor of the Chicago Symphony, who has just returned from Europe.

"This is a great opportunity for the United States," Dr. Stock said. "With our wonderful resources of fine musicians and composers, I believe we can take world leadership in fine arts."

Dr. Stock visited most of the large European cities on his trip from June 9 to July 27. He visited with most noted European musicians, including Jean Sibelius, Finnish composer; Nicolas Miaskowski and Reinhold Gliere, Russian composers; and Sir Hamilton Harty, conductor of the London Symphony.

'American Composers Do Better.'

Dr. Stock believes that the rank and file of American composers are doing better today than those of Europe, and said that Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, shares his belief.

He pointed out that composers and musicians in the dictator states are serving the state, many being regimented to write music for the country. They are rewarded with special privileges, if their idea of good music and that of the government officials agree.

"But many of the musicians, as in the World War, are serving in the trenches, and many are dying there," the noted conductor said. "There is bound to be a drop in the cultural assets of the warring nations. If we don't take advantage of this opportunity, we are fools. And the same applies to the other arts."

'German People Oppose War.'

When he visited Germany, Dr. Stock received a definite impression that the people do not want war, and that they wouldn't have marched into Poland if they had their way.

"The people have nothing to say in Germany. Why should they want war? They know what they will lose. I believe more than half of the people are against Hitler. If anyone dares disagree with him—well, look what happened to Gen von Fritsch."

The conductor intimated he will lead the efforts of Americans to assume cultural leadership by including as many American works in the Chicago Symphony programs as possible. The symphony season will open Oct. 12.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS

SEP 29 1939

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, about to begin his sixteenth year as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, says he has high regard for American composers. "The most interesting new music of today, in the field of younger composers, is made by Americans," he said,

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

SEP 30 1939

Programs of Free Concerts

For the information of Lowell music lovers, the programs for the two concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra next week in Boston are made known by officials of Symphony hall, where the concerts will be played.

For the program to be played beginning at 8.15 o'clock Wednesday evening Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen the following compositions: Suite in E major for Strings, Arthur Foote; Angelus from the Third Symphony, Henry Hadley; "Skyscrapers," a Ballet of American Life, John Alden Carpenter; Excerpts from the suite "Through the Looking Glass," Deems Taylor; Symphony No. 2, "Romantic," Howard Hanson.

On Friday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock the program will be as follows: American Festival Overture, written for this occasion, William Schuman; Concerto for Piano and Orchester in F (last two movements), George Gershwin; Symphony No. 3, Roy Harris; Symphony No 2 in E minor, Randall Thompson.

Application for the complimentary tickets should be made to George E. Judd, manager, Symphony hall, Boston. In view of the demand not more than two seats will be available to one applicant. Nor is it likely that requests for admission to both the concerts

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, OHIO
JEWISH REVIEW ✓
& OBSERVER

SEP 29 1939

CLEVELAND CONCERT COURSE

The Cleveland Concert Course under the auspices of The Cleveland Museum of Art and the direction of Mrs. Emil Brudno will open its 7th season November 10th when The Bali Ballet will be presented. This company of Oriental dancers and musicians will appear in its native costumes. On November 24th Zino Francescatti, French violinist, will make his debut here. Cleveland audiences have demanded the return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Koussevitzky which will play here December 15th. January 26 is the date when Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist will be featured with Beryl Rubinstein and Arthur Loesser in duo piano numbers. Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, who has been absent from America since 1935 will return to appear on the program February 9. Another pianist, Walter Gieskng, will be the soloist on February 23. The final evening of the season will be on March 15th when the Joos Ballet will return to present the famous "Green Table" dancing comic-tragedy, and many new numbers.

These concerts will all take place at the Public Music Hall, on Fridays at 8:45. Box office opens October 16 at the Korner and Wood Co., 1512 Euclid avenue.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TORONTO, CANADA ✓
STAR

SEP 30 1939

TORONTO SYMPHONY AGAIN IN FRONT LINE

Negotiations Result in 10 Broadcast Programs—Start Oct. 24

Good news from the T.S.O. at last is that Toronto Symphony will carry on, opening, as usual, Oct. 24. The first four of 10 programs are now ready. The concerts will again be broadcast. Players, conductor, directors, in spite of all difficulties are enthusiastic. They expect the same co-operation from 10 record audiences.

Sibelius and Schneevoight conducted the N.B.C. orchestra in New York this week on special Finnish programs, one of them all Sibelius. Barbirolli came back this month to conduct the Philharmonic; no change in his programs. Chicago has booked 88 symphony concerts for Orchestra hall. Philadelphia reopens shortly with special Stokowski concerts, one conducted by Rachmaninoff, who also will play his own new concerto. Boston Symphony carries on its plan of 60 concerts. to include 10 noted soloists, guest composers and special choral works.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER

SEP 29 1939

War Won't Hold Up Schedule of Forum

Artists Scheduled Are En Route to America or Will Be Shortly

The Philadelphia Forum's program will go on as scheduled, regardless of the war, William K. Huff, executive director, announced today.

Mme. Flagstad is now on the Atlantic on the Norwegian S. S. Bergensfjord and will arrive early in October. Marjorie Lawrence is on her way back from Australia and Georges Enesco, violinist, Walter Gieseking and Robert and Gaby Casadesus, pianists, who are in Paris, are preparing to sail soon.

The Boston Symphony, of course, is intact in the United States after its Berkshire Festival performances. Alexander Kipnis, famous Russian basso, arrived last week and Robert Virovai, the new violin sensation, has been here for some time.

Of the lecturers Captain C. W. R. Knight, of England, has been given permission by the British war office to come to America, and Ambassadors Bullitt, Gibson and Masaryk are holding to their plans to come shortly, as is "Augur," world-famous London journalist. Argentinita and her Spanish ensemble are en route from South America and the Jooss European Ballet is preparing to leave England in time for the American tour.

The many other people on the schedule are either American citizens or are already safely here. The Forum will, therefore, carry on as usual except that there will be further additions to the program as events in Europe develop.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

ROCKLAND, ME.
COURIER
9/30/39

Another great Negro voice has been discovered. Before the opening of Series B of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., held this past summer, Serge Koussevitzky entertained the entire orchestra and invited guests at an informal picnic at "Tanglewood" and at this time Dorothy Maynor, a young Negro soprano made Berkshire Festival history, giving an informal concert, accompanied by Bernard Zighera. Miss Maynor's success was phenomenal. Those who listened were amazed at the poise and technical proficiency of the young woman. Dr. Koussevitzky in his enthusiasm for the young singer has termed her a "native Flagstad." Miss Maynor is from Norfolk, Va., and received training at the Hampton Institute, later going to New York to study with John Alan Haughton. She is slightly below medium height, rather stocky in build, possesses a quick smile and a sparkling eye which usually connotes a sense of humor. We'll watch now to see what we hear of Miss Maynor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP 30 1939

Brooklyn Academy of Music—The Institute of Arts and Sciences announces a Winter of ballet, opera, and concerts, opening with a Concert Festival on October 11. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play there in this series on November 24, January 12, February 15, March 15, and April 5. There will be performances by the Bali and Java Dancers, Jooss Ballet, Ted Shawn and his Men Dancers. There will be a Negro Folk Festival there in April.

—JULIAN SEAMAN

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR,

SEPTEMBER 29, 1939

Programs Announced Of American Music

Nine American composers are represented in the two programs to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next week. These concerts, "a tribute to the American symphonic composer" will be open to the public without charge.

The nine composers represented are well established in the musical world. Several important contemporary names are missing. It is reported that their absence is due to circumstances beyond the control of the symphony management.

The programs:

Wednesday Evening, Oct. 4, at 8:15

Arthur Foote	Suite in E major for String Orchestra, Op. 63
Henry Hadley	"Angelus" (Andante tranquillo) from the Symphony No. 3 in B minor, Op. 60
John Alden Carpenter	"Skyscrapers," A Ballad of American Life
Deems Taylor	Suite, "Through the Looking Glass" (Excerpts)
Howard Hanson	Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"

Friday Afternoon, Oct. 6, at 2:30

William Schuman	American Festival Overture (1939)
George Gershwin	Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in F (Last two movements)
Roy Harris	Symphony No. 3
Randall Thompson	Symphony No. 2 in E minor

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

SEP 30 1939

Programs for Free Concerts Are Released

American Music to Be Played Exclusively at Musicals by Boston Symphony Orchestra Oct. 4 and 6.

From Symphony hall come the details of the two concerts of American music to be given free to the public next week by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

For the program to be played beginning at 8.15 o'clock Wednesday evening Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen the following compositions: Suite in E major for Strings, Arthur Foote; Angelus from the Third Symphony, Henry Hadley; "Skyscrapers," a Ballet of American Life, John Alden Carpenter; Excerpts from the suite "Through the Looking Glass," Deems Taylor; Symphony No. 2, "Romantic," Howard Hanson.

On Friday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock the program will be as follows: American Festival Overture, written for this occasion, William Schuman; Concerto for Piano and Orchester in F (last two movements), George Gershwin; Symphony No. 3, Roy Harris; Symphony No 2 in E minor, Randall Thompson.

Application for the complimentary tickets should be made to George E. Judd, manager, Symphony hall, Boston. In view of the demand not more than two seats will be available to one applicant. Nor is it likely that requests for admission to both the concerts can be honored S. R. F.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

SEP 30 1939

✓ Boston Symphony Orchestra—Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, considered by many critics and connoisseurs to be the premier orchestra of the world, will begin its fifty-fourth season in New York at Carnegie Hall on November 23. At this writing, no announcement has been made by the orchestra of its plans, and I have no idea what Mr. Koussevitsky has on hand for his New York subscribers,

24

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS
SEP 29 1939

America Must Rescue Arts From Death, Says Dr. Stock

A belief that music and the arts in Europe will perish if the war lasts as long as four years, and that America must take the lead in maintaining world culture, was expressed today by Dr. Frederick Stock, conductor of the Chicago Symphony, who has just returned from Europe.

"This is a great opportunity for the United States," Dr. Stock said. "With our wonderful resources of fine musicians and composers, I believe we can take world leadership in fine arts."

Dr. Stock visited most of the large European cities on his trip from June 9 to July 27. He visited with most noted European musicians, including Jean Sibelius, Finnish composer; Nicolas Miaskowski and Reinhold Gliere, Russian composers; and Sir Hamilton Harty, conductor of the London Symphony.

'American Composers Do Better.'

Dr. Stock believes that the rank and file of American composers are doing better today than those of Europe, and said that Sergei Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, shares his belief.

He pointed out that composers and musicians in the dictator states are serving the state, many being regimented to write music for the country. They are rewarded with special privileges, if their idea of good music and that of the government officials agree.

"But many of the musicians, as in the World War, are serving in the trenches, and many are dying there," the noted conductor said. "There is bound to be a drop in the cultural assets of the warring nations. If we don't take advantage of this opportunity, we are fools. And the same applies to the other arts."

'German People Oppose War.'

When he visited Germany, Dr. Stock received a definite impression that the people do not want war, and that they wouldn't have marched into Poland if they had their way.

"The people have nothing to say in Germany. Why should they want war? They know what they will lose. I believe more than half of the people are against Hitler. If anyone dares disagree with him—well, look what happened to Gen von Fritsch."

The conductor intimated he will lead the efforts of Americans to assume cultural leadership by including as many American works in the Chicago Symphony programs as possible. The symphony season will open Oct. 12.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEWPORT, R. I.
NEWS
SEP 29 1939

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, about to begin his sixteenth year as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, says he has high regard for American composers. "The most interesting new music of today, in the field of younger composers, is made by Americans," he said.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER
SEP 30 1939

Programs of Free Concerts

For the information of Lowell music lovers, the programs for the two concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony orchestra next [illegible] Boston are made known by officials of Symphony hall, where the concerts will be played.

For the program to be played beginning at 8.15 o'clock Wednesday evening Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen the following compositions: Suite in E major for Strings, Arthur Foote; Angelus from the Third Symphony, Henry Hadley; "Skyscrapers," a Ballet of American Life, John Alden Carpenter; Excerpts from the suite "Through the Looking Glass," Deems Taylor; Symphony No. 2, "Romantic," Howard Hanson.

On Friday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock the program will be as follows: American Festival Overture, written for this occasion, William Schuman; Concerto for Piano and Orchester in F (last two movements), George Gershwin; Symphony No. 3, Roy Harris; Symphony No 2 in E minor, Randall Thompson.

Application for the complimentary tickets should be made to George E. Judd, manager, Symphony hall, Boston. In view of the demand not more than two seats will be available to one applicant. Nor is it likely that requests for admission to both the concerts

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, OHIO
JEWISH REVIEW ✓
& OBSERVER
SEP 29 1939

CLEVELAND CONCERT COURSE

The Cleveland Concert Course under the auspices of The Cleveland Museum of Art and the direction of Mrs. Emil Brudno will open its 7th season November 10th when The Bali Ballet will be presented. This company of Oriental dancers and musicians will appear in its native costumes. On November 24th Zino Francescatti, French violinist, will make his debut here. Cleveland audiences have demanded the return of the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Dr. Koussevitzky which will play here [illegible] 15th. January 26 is the date when Gregor Piatigorsky, cellist will be featured with Beryl Rubinstein and Arthur Loesser in duo piano numbers. Vladimir Horowitz, pianist, who has been absent from America since 1935 will return to appear on the program February 9. Another pianist, Walter Giesking, will be the soloist on February 23. The final evening of the season will be on March 15th when the Joos Ballet will return to present the famous "Green Table" dancing comic-tragedy, and many new numbers.

These concerts will all take place at the Public Music Hall, on Fridays at 8:45. Box office opens October 16 at the Korner and Wood Co., 1512 Euclid avenue.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TORONTO, CANADA ✓
STAR
SEP 30 1939

TORONTO SYMPHONY AGAIN IN FRONT LINE

Negotiations Result in 10 Broadcast Programs—Start Oct. 24

Good news from the T.S.O. at last is that Toronto Symphony will carry on, opening, as usual, Oct. 24. The first four of 10 programs are now ready. The concerts will again be broadcast. Players, conductor, directors, in spite of all difficulties are enthusiastic. They expect the same co-operation from 10 record audiences.

Sibelius and Schneevoight conducted the N.B.C. orchestra in New York this week on special Finnish programs, one of them all Sibelius. Barbirolli came back this month to conduct the Philharmonic; no change in his programs. Chicago has booked 88 symphony concerts for Orchestra hall. Philadelphia reopens shortly with special Stokowski concerts, one conducted by Rachmaninoff, who also will play his own new concerto. Boston Symphony carries on its plan of 60 concerts, to include 10 noted soloists, guest composers and special choral works.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER
SEP 29 1939

War Won't Hold Up Schedule of Forum

Artists Scheduled Are En Route to America or Will Be Shortly

The Philadelphia Forum's program will go on as scheduled, regardless of the war, William K. Huff, executive director, announced today.

Mme. Flagstad is now on the Atlantic on the Norwegian S. S. Bergensfjord and will arrive early in October. Marjorie Lawrence is on her way back from Australia and Georges Enesco, violinist, Walter Gieseking and Robert and Gaby Casadesus, pianists, who are in Paris, are preparing to sail soon.

The Boston Symphony, of course, is intact in the United States after its Berkshire Festival performances. Alexander Kipnis, famous Russian basso, arrived last week and Robert Virovai, the new violin sensation, has been here for some time.

Of the lecturers Captain C. W. R. Knight, of England, has been given permission by the British war office to come to America, and Ambassadors Bullitt, Gibson and Masaryk are holding to their plans to come shortly, as is "Augur," world-famous London journalist. Argentinita and her Spanish ensemble are en route from South America and the Jooss European Ballet is preparing to leave England in time for the American tour.

The many other people on the schedule are either American citizens or are already safely here. The Forum will, therefore, carry on as usual except that there will be further additions to the program as events in Europe develop.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

ROCKLAND, ME.
COURIER
9/30/39

Another great Negro voice has been discovered. Before the opening of Series B of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., held this past summer, Serge Koussevitsky entertained the en-ti[illegible] invited guests at an informal picnic at "Tanglewood" and at this time Dorothy Maynor, a young Negro soprano made Berkshire Festival history, giving an informal concert, accompanied by Bernard Zighera. Miss Maynor's success was phenomenal. Those who listened were amazed at the poise and technical proficiency of the young woman. Dr. Koussevitsky in his enthusiasm for the young singer has termed her a "native Flagstad." Miss Maynor is from Norfolk, Va., and received training at the Hampton Institute, later going to New York to study with John Alan Haughton. She is slightly below medium height, rather stocky in build, possesses a quick smile and a sparkling eye which usually connotes a sense of humor. We'll watch now to see what we hear of Miss Maynor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SEP 30 1939

Brooklyn Academy of Music—The Institute of Arts and Sciences announces a Winter of ballet, opera, and concerts, opening with a Concert Festival on October 11. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will play there in this series on November 24, January 12, February 15, March 15, and April 5. There will be performances by the Bali and Java Dancers, Jooss Ballet, Ted Shawn and his Men Dancers. There will be a Negro Folk Festival there in April.

—JULIAN SEAMAN

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR,
SEPTEMBER 29, 1939

Programs Announced Of American Music

Nine American composers are represented in the two programs to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra next week. These concerts, "a tribute to the American symphonic composer" will be open to the public without charge.

The nine composers represented are well established in the musical world. Several important contemporary names are missing. It is reported that their absence is due to circumstances beyond the control of the symphony management.

The programs:

Wednesday Evening, Oct. 4, at 8:15
Arthur Foote . . . Suite in E major for String Orchestra, Op. 63
Henry Hadley . . . "Angelus" (Andante tranquillo) from the Symphony No. 3 in B minor, Op. 60
John Alden Carpenter . "Skyscrapers," A Ballad of American Life
Deems Taylor . . . Suite, "Through the Looking Glass" (Excerpts)
Howard Hanson . . . . Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"

Friday Afternoon, Oct. 6, at 2:30
William Schuman . . . . American Festival Overture (1939)
George Gershwin . . Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in F (Last two movements)
Roy Harris . . . . Symphony No. 3
Randall Thompson . . . Symphony No. 2 in E minor

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN
SEP 30 1939

Programs for Free Concerts Are Released

American Music to Be Played Exclusively at Musicals by Boston Symphony Orchestra Oct. 4 and 6.

From Symphony hall come the details of the two concerts of American music to be given free to the public next week by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

For the program to be played beginning at 8.15 o'clock Wednesday evening Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen the following compositions: Suite in E major for Strings, Arthur Foote; Angelus from the Third Symphony, Henry Hadley; "Skyscrapers," a Ballet of American Life, John Alden Carpenter; Excerpts from the suite "Through the Looking Glass," Deems Taylor; Symphony No. 2, "Romantic," Howard Hanson.

On Friday afternoon at 2.30 o'clock the program will be as follows: American Festival Overture, written for this occasion, William Schuman; Concerto for Piano and Orchester in F (last two movements), George Gershwin; Symphony No. 3, Roy Harris; Symphony No. 2 in E minor, Randall Thompson.

Application for the complimentary tickets should be made to George E. Judd, manager, Symphony hall, Boston. In view of the demand not more than two seats will be available to one applicant. Nor is it likely that requests for admission to both the concerts can be honored S. R. F.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SEP 30 1939

Boston Symphony Orchestra—Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, considered by many critics and connoisseurs to be the premier orchestra of the world, will begin its fifty-fourth season in New York at Carnegie Hall on November 23. At this writing, no announcement has been made by the orchestra of its plans, and I have no idea what Mr. Koussevitsky has on hand for his New York subscribers.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

23

SEP 30 1939

College Concerts to Feature Four Familiar Artists

Four Soloists to Appear. Marion Anderson Opens Series on Nov. 22d

Four soloists and three orchestras will be featured in the Smith college concert course for the year 1939-40, to be given in John M. Greene hall. Most of these have given previous performances in Northampton.

The course will open with a recital on Nov. 22 by Marian Anderson, contralto, who gave a concert here three years ago. An outstanding Negro singer, Miss Anderson is ranked as one of the leading contraltos of the world today.

The Rochester Philharmonic orchestra, conducted by Jose Iturbi, will be heard in the second concert on Dec. 2. Mr. Iturbi, who has conducted the Rochester orchestra for several years, presented a piano recital at Smith two years ago.

As the next concert of the course, Adolf Busch, violinist, and Rudolf Serkin, pianist, will be presented in a violin and piano recital on January 16. Mr. Serkin was here last year as a piano soloist.

Cleveland Orchestra Feb. 10

The Cleveland orchestra, which plays annually at Smith, will give a concert, under the direction of Artur Rodzinski, on Feb. 10. Following this a recital will be given by Alexander Brailowsky, well-known concert pianist, on Feb. 17. The course will close with a concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, on March [illegible] This orchestra now ranks as one of the leading symphony orchestras of the country.

All applications for season tickets should be directed to the concert committee of the department of music, Smith college. The sale of tickets will be held during the week of Oct. 23.

American - 9-30-39

Symphony's First Program

Serge Koussevitzky announces the program with which he will open his sixteenth anniversary season as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall.

This, the 59th season, will open on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, October 13 and 14, and continue until May 4, with 24 pairs of Friday and Saturday concerts, and 6 pairs of Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall.

The opening programme will consist of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony No. 3 in E flat: Vincent d'Indy's symphonic Variations, "Istar": and Debussy's "La Mer."

Soloists shortly to be heard in the Friday and Saturday series will be Siguard Rascher, the remarkable saxophone virtuoso, and Josef Hofmann, the pianist who has not played at these concerts for a number of years. Further solists are Walter Gieseking, Rudolf Serkin, Jan Smeterlin, Jascha Heiftez, and Joseph Szigeti. There will also be vocal soloists, notably in the Tchaikovsky Festival which will end the season.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

SEP 30 1939

Symphony to Open R. I. Season Oct. 24

The Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, which is to open its 59th season with two American programs in Boston next Wednesday evening and Friday afternoon, and which will open the regular series there on the following Friday, Oct. 13, is to give the first Providence concert of the series of five at the Metropolitan Theatre on Tuesday evening, Oct. 24. The other concerts will be given on Tuesday evenings, Nov. 28, Jan. 23, Feb. 20 and April 16.

The coming season is the 59th of the orchestra, and the 58th in Providence which the famous organisation in New England has visited regularly from its second year.

VENING TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1939

MUSIC

MUSIC AND POLITICS

Problems Suggested by the Initial Program Of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Season

By EDWARD DOWNES

Both history and our own experience have shown us time and time again that it is a practical impossibility utterly to divorce politics from art. Yet the danger of allowing our artistic lives to be dominated by political passions is enormous. It could hardly be more aptly illustrated than by the program which Serge Koussevitzky has announced for the opening pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 13 and 14.

One-half of the program is French: Debussy's tone-poem, "La Mer" and d'Indy's more rarely heard symphonic variations, "Istar." The other half is German and consists of one of the greatest of all symphonies: Beethoven's "Eroica."

Many present-day concertgoers remember the inroads that mistaken patriotism made on our musical repertoire and roster of artists during the last war. It is disquieting to reflect that we could, even here in Boston, get ourselves into a state of mind that would make us reject one-half of such a program. It would not be the first time that such a thing had happened.

No one should deceive himself on this count. It was and is as difficult to separate politics and music as it is to separate religion and politics. The only people who can really do it are those who are fundamentally indifferent to one of the two fields

Even such an ivory tower inhabitant as Debussy, a devotee of art for art's sake, was passionately swayed in political matters by his art and connections. Indeed, one could build up a pretty good case to show that Debussy's anti-Teutonism had its roots in his anti-Wagnerian aesthetic principles.

Debussy and Germany

Debussy never believed in the possibility of a true international entente. "There is no reason why the Germans should understand us," he said. "Neither should we try to absorb their ideas. . . . The French forget too easily the qualities of clarity and elegance peculiar to them and allow themselves to be influenced by the tedious and ponderous Teuton."

Few people are more hilarious company than Debussy when he turns the rapier of his French wit against Richard Wagner. But as soon as he speaks of the composer of the "Eroica," the tone of approach changes. Debussy's literary mouthpiece, Monsieur Croche, contrasts the orchestras of the two composers. That of Beethoven "appears to him a combination of black and white, resulting in the whole exquisite gamut of greys; that of Wagner . . . is a species of polychromatic putty, spread almost uniformly, in which he assured me he could no longer distinguish the sound of a violin from that of a trombone."

Debussy on Beethoven

Yet even in speaking of Beethoven, Debussy was not always without irony. After a Beethoven Festival of the Concerts Colonne in 1912 he wrote:

"How restful it is to be relieved at last of the necessity to do anything but admire, to exchange knowing smiles at the proper places, always the same places, since they are handed down from generation to generation.

"At the exit one can say with assurance: 'What a genius that fellow Beethoven!' No remark could be more legitimate, indeed, the contrary attitude would be but an affectation stupider yet. One needs have no fear of that atmosphere of nervous tension that distinguishes the Sundays when they play 'a young fellow.' . . . On such occasions one must first decide on some opinion, which is not always easy. Must one also give the impression of having understood? . . . Seriously, it's no joke, being the public!"

War-time Composing

Debussy at the age of 52 was terribly shaken by the outbreak of the last World War. His first instinct was that an artist should stop all creative work in such a time of trial and tragedy. For weeks he would not touch his piano. He felt that composition was impossible and with France in such misery, he was opposed even to allowing performances of his works abroad.

Debussy's patriotism became more self-conscious. D'Annunzio dubbed him "Claude de France" and from now until he died he signed himself "Claude Debussy, musicien Francais."

All through his last days the war was at its most terrible. There were frequent air-raids and Debussy was in such a weakened condition that he could not even be carried to the relative safety of a cellar. He died after the German long-range guns had found their mark and begun dropping shells into the heart of Paris.

Thus the musical taste of the great French musician influenced his political sympathies and we have seen how his politics colored his musical opinions even of such great masters as Wagner and Beethoven.

Beethoven and Politics

What Beethoven might have thought of Debussy we can never know, but we are abundantly informed about his political leanings. The man who hymned the brotherhood of the entire human race in his Ninth Symphony, the man whose bearing in aristocratic salons of Vienna was democratic almost to the point of boorishness, the man who rebuked Goethe for kow-towing to the great, was a champion of freedom and a hater of tyrants to the last.

The thrice-told tale of the dedication of the Eroica Symphony is a case in point. Beethoven had inscribed it to Napoleon at a time when, as First Consul, appeared Napoleon to be a defender of freedom. When Beethoven heard that Napoleon had made himself Emperor, he cried out in anger:

"Now he too will trample on all the rights of man and indulge only his ambition. He will exalt himself above all others and become a tyrant." And in a rage he seized the dedication, tore it in two and threw it to the ground. The symphony was published as "Sinfonia Eroica To celebrate the memory of a dead hero." Later after one of Napoleon's military victories, Beethoven is reported to have said: "It is a pity that I do not understand the art of war as well as I do the art of music. I would conquer him yet."

Can We Separate Them?

To Beethoven, his music and politics were but the practical and the artistic expressions of one and the same thing: his great social humanitarian ideals. Is it therefore conceivable, or would it even have been desirable, that he should separate his political ideals from his music?

And since people of the stature of Beethoven and Debussy neither wished nor were able to dissociate their political ideas from the creative process, can we mere listeners continue to say that art and politics must never be mixed? Were it not better to accept the fact that they are constantly being mixed whether we like it or not, and, instead of trying to hinder a natural process, try to arrange that when the paths of music and politics cross it will be with a minimum of friction and disturbance.

At least we should be able to prevent a repetition of the havoc that unreasoned political passion worked in our musical life during the last war. There are even very venerable authorities, from Plato onwards, who have taught that a meeting of music and politics may be mutually beneficial and pursue high constructive aims.

These are a few of the questions and problems suggested by the opening program of this season's Symphony concerts.

Symphony

American Concert Details Announced

Details of the programs which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has assembled for the two special preseason concerts of American symphonic works to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall next week, as a tribute to American composers, were announced yesterday.

The first program, for Wednesday evening, Oct. 4, 8.15, opens with Arthur Foote's Suite in E major for string orchestra. A movement from Hadley's Third Symphony, John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers," excerpts from Deems Taylor's "Through the Looking Glass" and Hanson's Second Symphony complete it.

The second concert, on Friday afternoon, Oct. 6, at 2.30, brings William Schuman's "American Festival Overture," composed especially for the occasion; Roy Harris's Third Symphony, Randall Thompson's Second and the last two movements of George Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F.

Return of a Critic

Transcript 9-30-39

A new music critic, a new music editor, in fact the representative of an entirely new generation of music appreciation, begins his career with the Transcript today. Edward Downes, only this fortnight arrived here through mine-fields and submarine rescues from a study at the University of Munich for his doctorate. Much of his biographical data appeared in last Saturday's Transcript. He was born in Boston, studied at Columbia, and spent many years abroad where he covered the music festivals at Bayreuth, Salzburg, and other centers for the New York Herald-Tribune. He worked on the New York Post for a year under Samuel Chotzinoff, later contributed foreign music correspondence from abroad to the New York Times, where his father, Olin Downes, is the dean of American music critics. He bears the same name, but is no relation, to William Howe Downes, revered Transcript art critic emeritus.

Mr. Downes, exceedingly modest, rebelled at this notice of his coming. This week, however, filled with the realization of his responsibility to his Transcript music readers, perhaps the most literate and demanding newspaper group in the field, he yielded to the demand for personal information.

His interests are wide: archaeology, art, engineering, mathematics, languages. "The pleasantest of my fresh recollections is Greece. I can say 'Et in Arcadia ego,' not because I ever wrote a poem in my life, but because this spring I drove from one end of Arcadia to the other in a 1938 Buick. From Athens to Peloponnesus, where the palace of Nestor had just been discovered by my companion Marinatos, head of national excavations and archaeology. Here we were excited to find the enormous group of writing tablets such as at Cnossos on Crete, but these were the first on the mainland. Most thrilling was the Marinatos discovery of the tomb of Leonidas and the 300 Spartans at Thermopylae, not yet announced in this country. Then there was the Parthenon by moonlight, and many other things that tourists do.

* * *

"This visit to Greece was during the Easter vacation from the University of Munich. I started going to Germany in 1930 because I wanted to hear Toscanini conduct 'Tristan and Isolde' at Bayreuth. That was really a marvelous year at Bayreuth. There hasn't been such a constellation there in decades. You see, it was the last year that Wagner's son, Siegfried Wagner had charge of the festival, it was the last year that Karl Muck conducted at Bayreuth. Muck was supposed to have been the greatest of modern conductors of "Parsifal." And finally, it was the first year that Toscanini conducted at Bayreuth. It took all the money I had saved up to buy me the tickets for all seven performances of the Bayreuth cycle. But never was money better spent.

"In addition to this I had gotten permission from Toscanini before he left New York that year, to get in to his rehearsals. I still treasure the little slip of paper on which Frau Wagner confirmed this permission and which was a magic pass for me during the two weeks of Bayreuth rehearsals before the season. Thus, instead of one 'Triston' performance I saw the equivalent of three. There were piano rehearsals of Tannhaeuser' where Toscanini clambered all around the stage showing people how to act and sing and there was something going on all the time. It was at Bayreuth that I met Jooss who was doing the Bacchanal in 'Tannhaeuser for Toscanini, and whose ballet started on its road to fame several years later in Paris.

* * *

"At the time that I enrolled at Munich the university was a live and exciting place. The finest art historian in Germany, Pinder, gave me my first real appreciation of painting. There was the professor of theatrical history, Kutscher, through whom I got in touch with the modern German theater, and Karl Vossler, the great Dante authority, had the chair of romance languages.

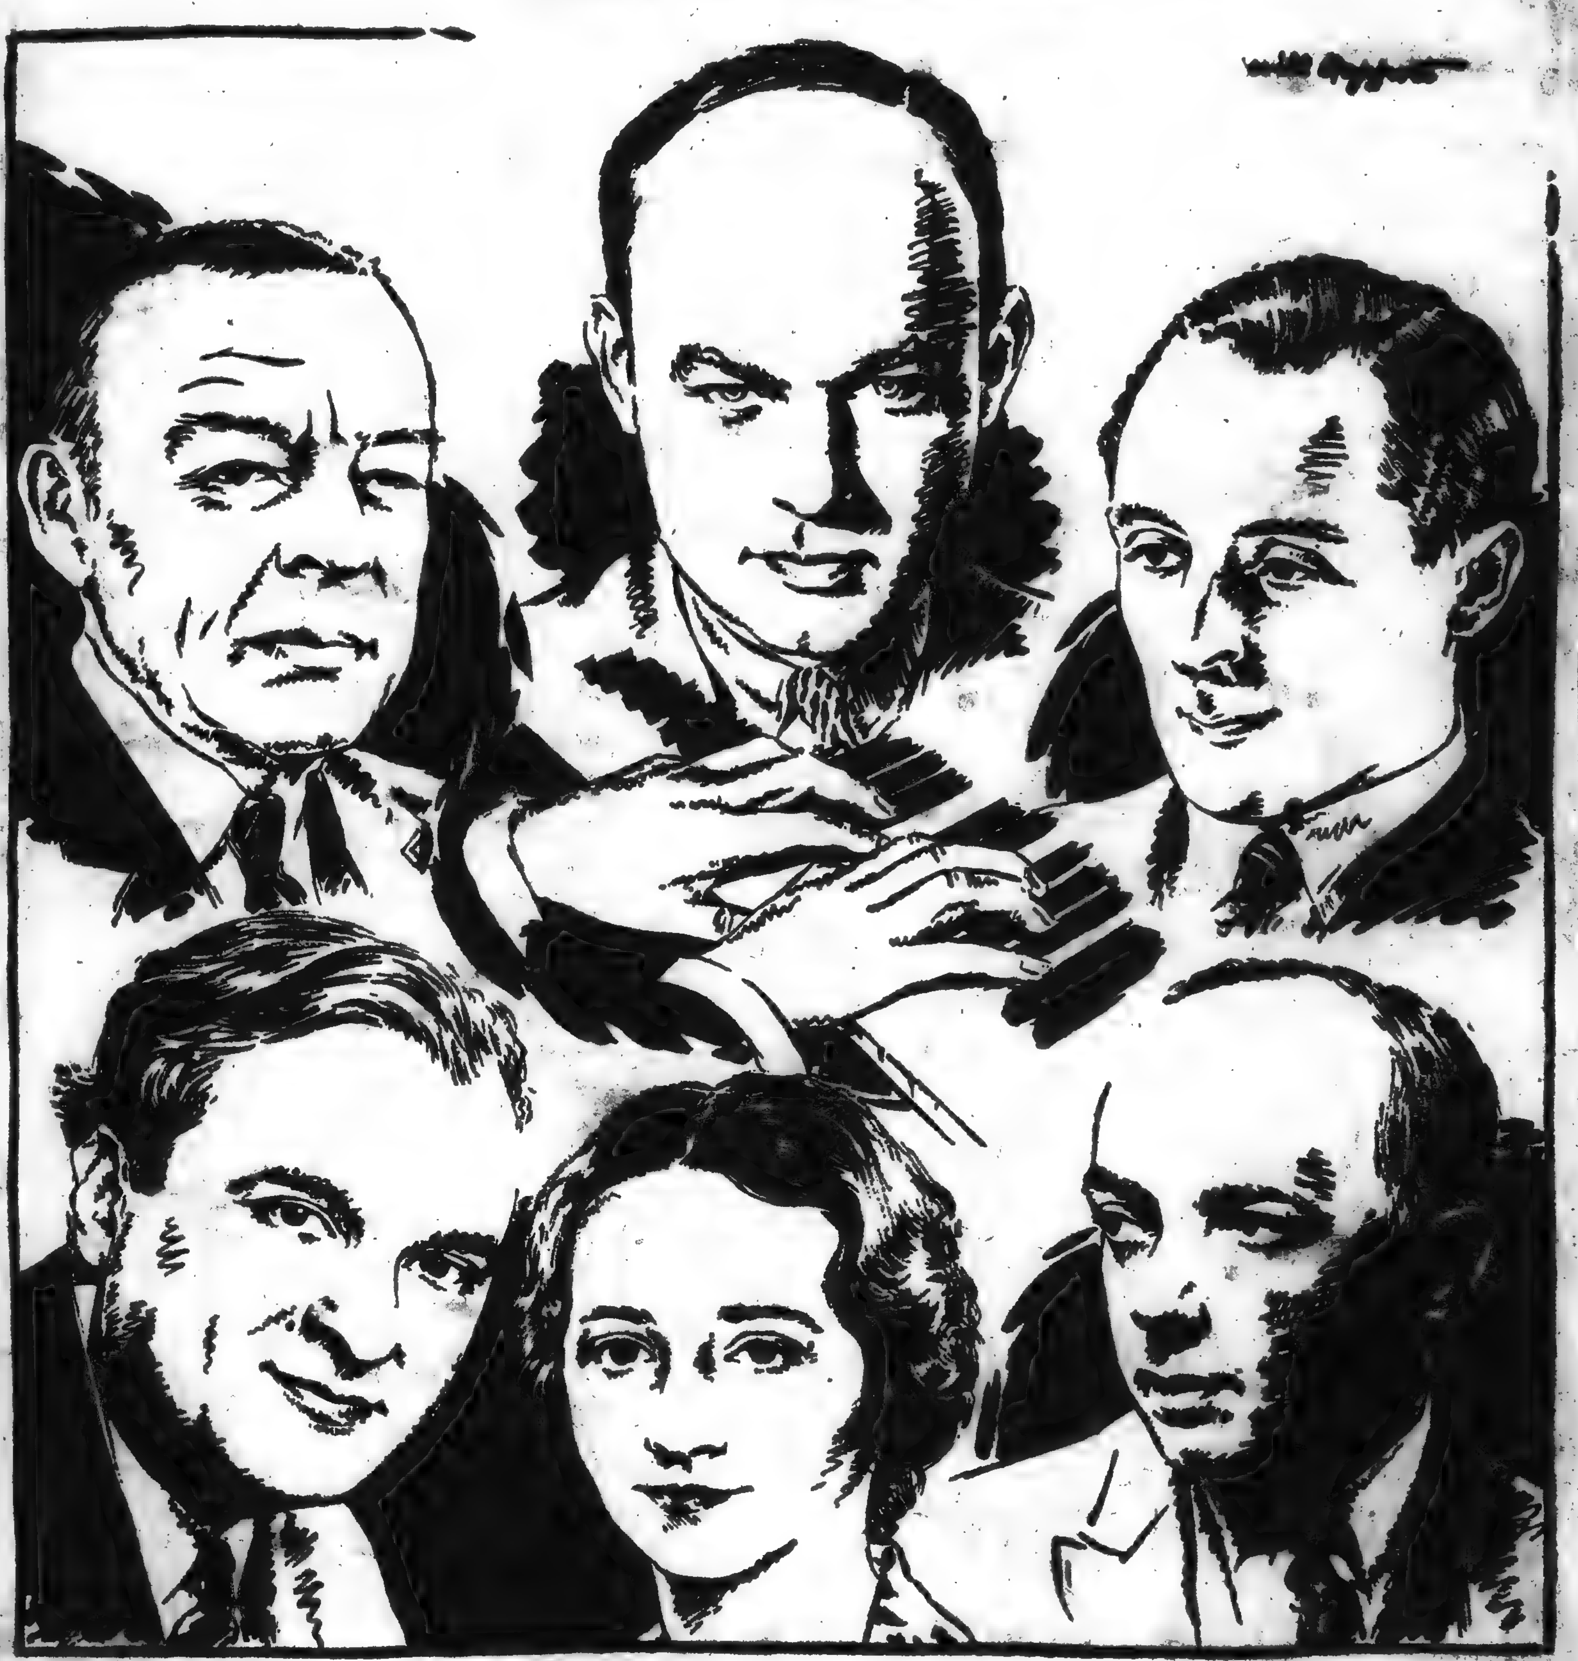
"This last time I left Munich just in time after a cabled warning from my father. I spent a week in Brussels hoping the 'crisis' would blow over and finally got passage back on the Holland-American Statendam. It was an exciting trip. Half the crew walked off in Rotterdam before we started and so passengers had to volunteer to take over some of their jobs. I was a waiter in third class saloon all the way back. I felt awfully sorry for the people I waited on, but they were thankful, I guess, to get home at all. We had a black-out in the English Channel and had to dodge mines going into Southampton harbor. We saw German and English submarines at sea and about two days out we rescued the crew of a torpedoed English freighter.

"We gave the rescued men about 24 hours rest and recuperation and then we put them to work washing dishes. They were about as good dish-washers as we were waiters, but it was better than nothing.

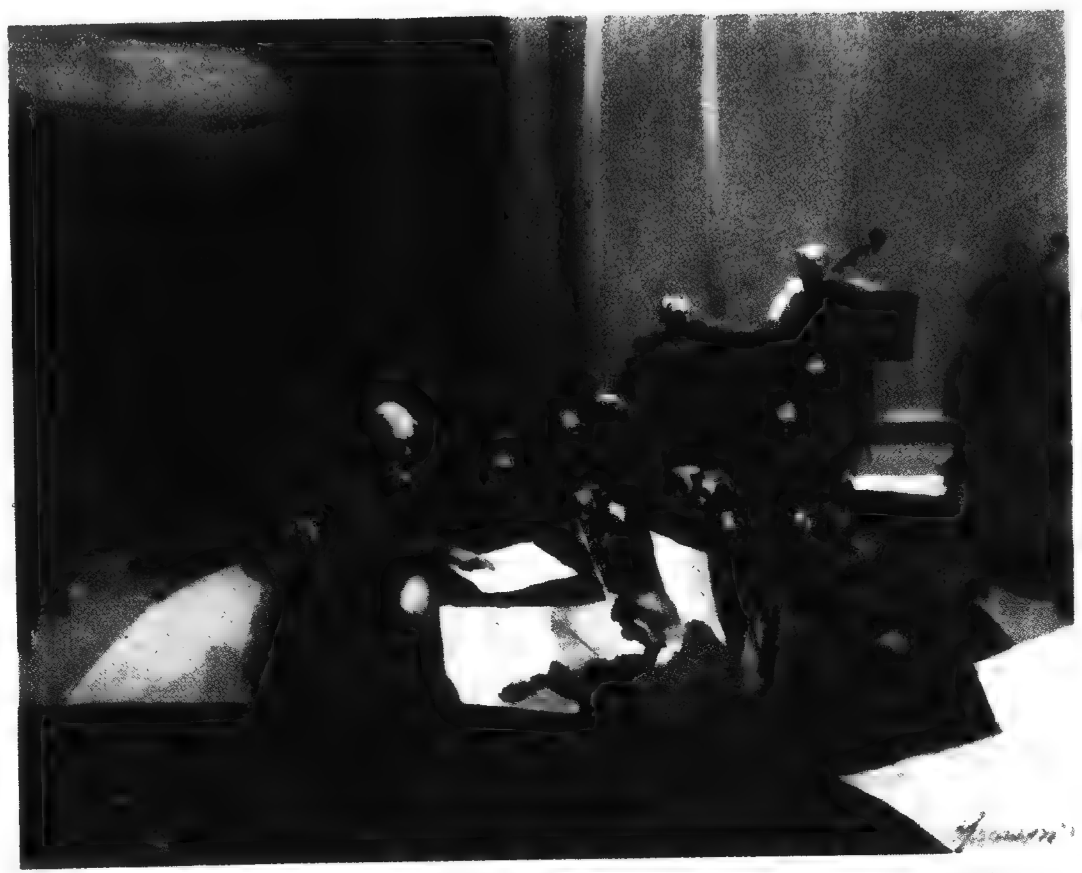
"Now here in Boston I have the very delightful feeling of coming home. I was 13 when I left Boston to go to New York, but I had lived here long enough apparently to feel always afterward that my real home was here.

"I haven't said anything about the Munich opera where standing-room for students is cheaper than going to the movies—even the German movies, and where I so often have heard Richard Strauss conduct his own operas. Nor have I said anything about the Bavarian beer; the Hofbraeu is wonderful, but the little places are even better. Best of all are the Bavarian monasteries that one finds on bicycle trips, usually with a fetching little Rococo church and a beer, brewed by the monks, that would make even Muencheners envious. That, on a hot day, comes pretty near to Heaven.

Circle of Celebrities



A round half dozen virtuosi appearing in Aaron Richmond's "Piano Celebrity Series." Above, left to right: Serge Rachmaninoff, who is scheduled to play in Symphony Hall Nov. 19; Mischa Levitzki, Jordan Hall, Dec. 6; Vladimir Horowitz, Symphony Hall, Feb. 12. Below: Luboschutz and Nemenoff, Jordan Hall, Jan. 10; Jan Smeterlin, Jordan Hall, Oct. 31.



From the painting by Donald Greason

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor

ANNOUNCEMENT
OF THE FIFTY-NINTH SEASON

October 13, 1939 to May 4, 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& Republican

OCT 1 - 1939

Artist Decorates Symphony Folder

Donald Greason's vivid oil painting of Dr Serge Koussevitzky rehearsing the Boston Symphony orchestra is reproduced in full color on the cover of the announcement of the plans of the orchestra's new season, opening Friday afternoon and Saturday night, the 13th and 14th.

The first photograph of the entire orchestra in performance stretches across the inside of the announcement. On the back cover are reproductions of quick sketches of characteristic attitudes of the leader and his men painted by Mr Greason in wash, during his attendance at many rehearsals.

The folder, which was designed by the Merrymount Press, names the highlights of the season's programs, and lists the distinguished soloists. A copy of the illustrated announcement will be mailed on application to the Subscription office, Symphony hall.

From the painting by Donald Greason

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Serge Koussevitzky, Conductor

ANNOUNCEMENT
OF THE FIFTY-NINTH SEASON

October 13, 1939 to May 4, 1940

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& Republican

OCT 1 - 1939

Artist Decorates Symphony Folder

Donald Greason's vivid oil painting of Dr Serge Koussevitzky rehearsing the Boston Symphony orchestra is reproduced in full color on the cover of the announcement of the plans of the orchestra's new season, opening Friday afternoon and Saturday night, the 13th and 14th.

The first photograph of the entire orchestra in performance stretches across the inside of the announcement. On the back cover are reproductions of quick sketches of characteristic attitudes of the leader and his men painted by Mr Greason in wash, during his attendance at many rehearsals.

The folder, which was designed by the Merrymount Press, names the highlights of the season's programs, and lists the distinguished soloists. A copy of the illustrated announcement will be mailed [illegible] in the Subscription [illegible] hall.

27

GREAT orchestral playing can result only from a basis of illustrious individual musicianship, long and uninterrupted association under a single leader who can both inspire and build. The particular approach of Serge Koussevitzky to his art looks further than great playing. It is not his nature to rest upon supremacy. In his sixteenth year at the head of the Orchestra, music remains to him before everything a quest. There can be no point of satisfaction in precision or brilliance of execution, in the pursuit of tonal beauty, in the recapture of intensity or serenity. Music for him, and for those who listen, is an adventure.

This rare quality is reflected in the way a Boston Symphony performance is prized by those who hear it, wherever the Orchestra plays. Great crowds at Tanglewood in the Berkshires, winter audiences which overflow Carnegie Hall, New York, are instances. Boston has the added advantage of a full and rich representation of symphonic music—made possible by the longer series extending through the season in Symphony Hall.

Soloists, and certain works to be heard in the Friday and Saturday series are here announced. Josef Hofmann, who has not appeared with the Orchestra for a number of seasons, will return. Pianists more recently heard will include Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking, and Jan Smeterlin (in concertos of Beethoven, Schumann, Chopin, and Szymanowski). Violinists will be Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti. Emanuel Feuermann, the violoncellist, is to make his first appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Nicolai Malko, the Russian conductor, and Tauno Hannikainen, of Finland, have been invited to lead the Orchestra each for a week in mid-season.

The following works are announced at this time: Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" (to be conducted by the composer); Debussy's "Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian"; Mahler's "Song of the Earth." Serge Prokofieff will appear in a piano concerto of his own. Debussy's Rhapsody for Saxophone will be performed by the Danish virtuoso, Sigurd M. Rascher.

From the classical composers, Dr. Koussevitzky announces a larger representation than usual of the music of Bach and Mozart. The conductor's just recognition of important new trends is consistent with his special discernment in the choice and interpretation of American music. The last two pairs of concerts will be devoted to the music of Tchaikovsky, in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of his birth. In addition to his orchestral works, there will be a presentation of the Opera, "Pique-Dame," in concert form.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& Republican

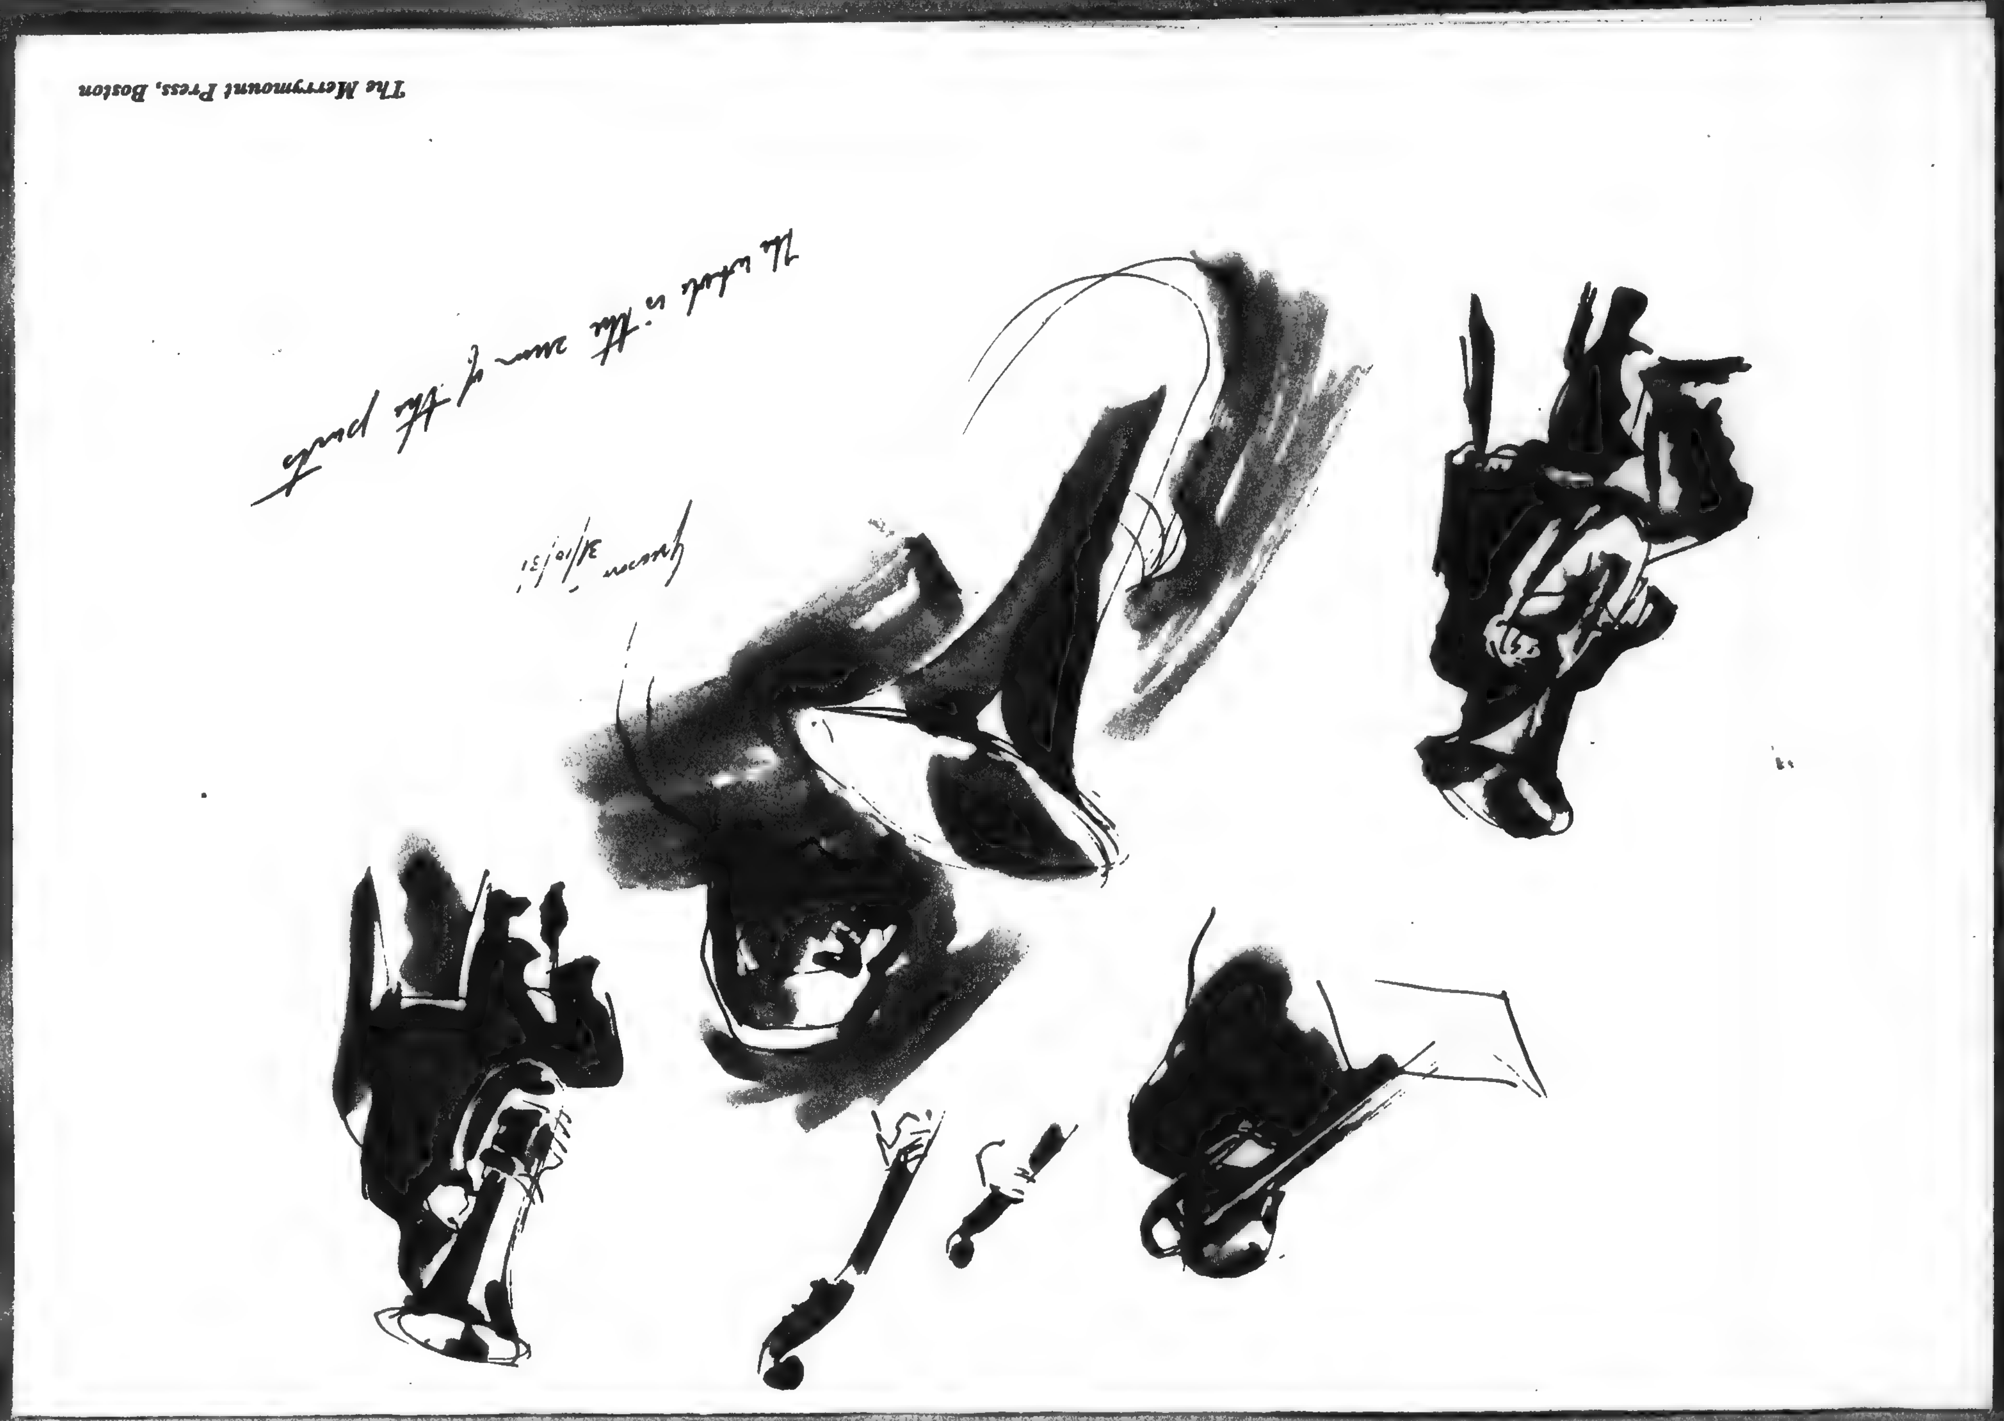
OCT 1 - 1939

Artist Decorates Symphony Folder

Donald Greason's vivid oil painting of Dr Serge Koussevitzky rehearsing the Boston Symphony orchestra is reproduced in full color on the cover of the announcement of the plans of the orchestra's new season, opening Friday afternoon and Saturday night, the 13th and 14th.

The first photograph of the entire orchestra in performance stretches across the inside of the announcement. On the back cover are reproductions of quick sketches of characteristic attitudes of the leader and his men painted by Mr Greason in wash, during his attendance at many rehearsals.

The folder, which was designed by the Merrymount Press, names the highlights of the season's programs and lists the distinguished soloists. A copy of the illustrated announcement will be mailed on [illegible] to the Subscription [illegible] hall.



Greason 31/10/31

The whole is the sum of the parts

The Merrymount Press, Boston

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& Republican

OCT 1 - 1939

Artist Decorates Symphony Folder

Donald Greason's vivid oil painting of Dr Serge Koussevitzky rehearsing the Boston Symphony orchestra is reproduced in full color on the cover of the announcement of the plans of the orchestra's new season, opening Friday afternoon and Saturday night, the 13th and 14th.

The first photograph of the entire orchestra in performance stretches across the inside of the announcement. On the back cover are reproductions of quick sketches of characteristic attitudes of the leader and his men painted by Mr Greason in wash, during his attendance at many rehearsals.

The folder, which was designed by the Merrymount Press, names the highlights of the season's programs, and lists the distinguished soloists. A copy of the illustrated announcement will be mailed on application to the Subscription office, Symphony hall.

INFORMATION OBSCURED

28

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
OCT 1 - 1939

Many Noted Artists Will Appear During Music Season Here

Boston Symphony Will Give Five Concerts; Marion Anderson Plans Two Recitals; Ballet Russe and the Philadelphia Orchestra to Make Visits

TWO of the world's greatest orchestras and an array of virtuosi are announced for the concert season in Providence which includes the usual Community series and many single events.

The calendar begins Tuesday evening, Oct. 24, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's appearance in the Metropolitan Theatre. A week later the Community Concert Association presents the eminent young violinist, Robert Virovai, as the opening number on its series.

Among the notable early season events will be the two Rhode Island recitals of Marian Anderson. The famed Negro contralto appears first on Nov. 15 for the Pawtucket Civic Music Association and will sing here on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 3, in the Metropolitan.

Aaron Richmond, Boston concert manager who is responsible for Miss Anderson's Providence engagement, also announces a return visit of the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo at the Metropolitan on Saturday evening, Nov. 11.

Later in the season, the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy will pay a visit.

Boston Symphony Series

Now in its 59th season and its 16th under the conductorship of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give five concerts in Providence. After the opening on Oct. 24 the orchestra will return to Providence on Nov. 28, Jan. 23, Feb. 20 and April 16. The orchestra visits Providence oftener than any other New England city. Its season opens with concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Oct. 13 and 14.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
OCT 1 - 1939

Boston Symphony Season

Boston's season begins, of course, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert on Friday afternoon, Oct. 13, in Symphony Hall. Loyal patrons feared for a time that the orchestra would break precedent and open its season in New York at Mayor LaGuardia's giant festival but the non-union status of Dr. Koussevitzky's men saved them. The New York union scotched the idea and matters will now proceed according to natural law.

However, the two concerts which would have been played in New York (all American music) will be given free in Boston on Wednesday night and Friday afternoon this week as a prelude to the regular season.

Statistically speaking, it is the orchestra's 59th season and Koussevitzky's 16th year as conductor. Josef Hofmann is to appear as initial soloist sometime in October, his first performance with the orchestra in 17 years. The list of guest stars leans strongly to pianists: Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking, Jan Smeterlin and Serge Prokofieff, who will play one of his own concertos. Emanuel Feuermann, eminent 'cellist, is booked for his first appearance with the orchestra; Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti represent the violinists. By way of novelty, there will be Sigurd Rascher, European saxophone virtuoso, who will play a Rhapsody for Saxophone and Orchestra, by Debussy.

Dr. Koussevitzky plans to program more Bach and Mozart than usual and will offer a Tschaikowsky Festival, to include the seldom-heard opera "Pique-Dame."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& Republican

OCT 1 - 1939

Boston Symphony Opens This Month

The Boston Symphony orchestra has announced interesting features for its 59th season which will open in Symphony hall, Boston, on Friday afternoon, the 13th. This will be the 16th successive year of the famous orchestra under the direction of its illustrious conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The Boston season will consist of the usual 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday night concerts, and 6 pairs of Monday night and Tuesday afternoon concerts in Symphony hall. There are to be concerts as usual in other cities of New England, New York and the west.

There will be two pre-season concerts in Carnegie hall, New York, when on Tuesday and Thursday the orchestra, under its regular conductor, presents two programs entirely of American music, old and new, as part of the festival to be given by the American Society of Composers.

The choice of Boston's orchestra and conductor to present the music of this country is consistent with the keen interest Koussevitzky has always taken in American musical trends. A remark once made by H. T. Parker, late critic of the Boston Transcript, is now equally applicable: "Dr Koussevitzky holds American composers to the highest standards, gives them also the same consideration and opportunity as he follows with Europeans. There is no more to be asked; no more to be done. It is the way of a just, open, wisely fostering mind. Various epitaphs are written for men when they finish their work, withdraw and die. Dr Koussevitzky will deserve one of the choicest and rarest: Friend and Encourager of Youth. And to no neglect of the preceding, semi-established, but still ripening, generation."

The classical repertory will of course have the largest place upon Dr Koussevitzky's program. He intends a larger repetition than usual of the music of Bach and Mozart. Bach's Mass in B minor will be performed at a special concert in April. The season will end with a Tchaikovsky festival, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of the Russian composer. There will be a concert performance of the opera "Pique-Dame," in addition to orchestral works. Announced revivals are Mahler's "Song of the Earth," Debussy's "Martydom of Saint Sebastian," and Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," to be conducted by the composer. A new symphony of Stravinsky will also be introduced. Serge Prokofieff has been invited to play a piano concerto of his own.

Soloists engaged for the Friday and Saturday series include the pianists Joef Hofmann, Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking, and Jan Smeterlin; the violinists Jascha Heifetz, and Joseph Szigeti; 'cellist Emanuel Feuermann; and the celebrated saxophone virtuoso Sigurd Rascher.

1-5

THE INSTITUTE
AT THE
ACADEMY OF MUSIC

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY is caught by the candid camera conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music. This season the Boston Symphony appears in a subscription series of five concerts on Nov. 24, Jan. 12, Feb. 15, March 15 and April 5. The series is presented each season under the joint auspices of the Brooklyn Philarmonic Society, a Brooklyn Committee and the Institute at the Academy of Music. The concerts are held in the Opera House at 8:30 p.m.

28

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

OCT 1 - 1939

Many Noted Artists Will Appear During Music Season Here

Boston Symphony Will Give Five Concerts; Marion Anderson Plans Two Recitals; Ballet Russe and the Philadelphia Orchestra to Make Visits

TWO of the world's greatest orchestras and an array of virtuosi are announced for the concert season in Providence which includes the usual Community series and many single events.

The calendar begins Tuesday evening, Oct. 24, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's appearance in the Metropolitan Theatre. A week later the Community Concert Association presents the eminent young violinist, Robert Virovai, as the opening number on its series.

Among the notable early season events will be the two Rhode Island recitals of Marian Anderson. The famed Negro contralto appears first on Nov. 15 for the Pawtucket Civic Music Association and will sing here on Sunday afternoon, Dec. 3, in the Metropolitan.

Aaron Richmond, Boston concert manager who is responsible for Miss Anderson's Providence engagement, also announces a return visit of the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo at the Metropolitan on Saturday evening, Nov. 11.

Later in the season, the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy will pay a visit.

Boston Symphony Series

Now in its 59th season and its 16th under the conductorship of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give five concerts in Providence. After the opening on Oct. 24 the orchestra will return to Providence on Nov. 28, Jan. 23, Feb. 20 and April 16. The orchestra visits Providence oftener than any other New England city. Its season opens with concerts in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Oct. 13 and 14.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

OCT 1 - 1939

Boston Symphony Season

Boston's season begins, of course, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concert on Friday afternoon, Oct. 13, in Symphony Hall. Loyal patrons feared for a time that the orchestra would break precedent and open its season in New York at Mayor LaGuardia's giant festival but the non-union status of Dr. Koussevitzky's men saved them. The New York union scotched the idea and matters will now proceed according to natural law.

However, the two concerts which would have been played in New York (all American music) will be given free in Boston on Wednesday night and Friday afternoon this week as a prelude to the regular season.

Statistically speaking, it is the orchestra's 59th season and Koussevitzky's 16th year as conductor. Josef Hofmann is to appear as initial soloist sometime in October, his first performance with the orchestra in 17 years. The list of guest stars leans strongly to pianists: Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking, Jan Smeterlin and Serge Prokofieff, who will play one of his own concertos. Emanuel Feuermann, eminent 'cellist, is booked for his first appearance with the orchestra; Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti represent the violinists. By way of novelty, there will be Sigurd Rascher, European saxophone virtuoso, who will play a Rhapsody for Saxophone and Orchestra, by Debussy.

Dr. Koussevitzky plans to program more Bach and Mozart than usual and will offer a Tschaikowsky Festival to include the seldom-heard opera "Pique-Dame."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& Republican

OCT 1 - 1939

Boston Symphony Opens This Month

The Boston Symphony orchestra has announced interesting features for its 59th season which will open in Symphony hall, Boston, on Friday afternoon, the 13th. This will be the 16th successive year of the famous orchestra under the direction of its illustrious conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The Boston season will consist of the usual 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday night concerts, and 6 pairs of Monday night and Tuesday afternoon concerts in Symphony hall. There are to be concerts as usual in other cities of New England, New York and the west.

There will be two pre-season concerts in Carnegie hall, New York, when on Tuesday and Thursday the orchestra, under its regular conductor, presents two programs entirely of American music, old and new, as part of the festival to be given by the American Society of Composers.

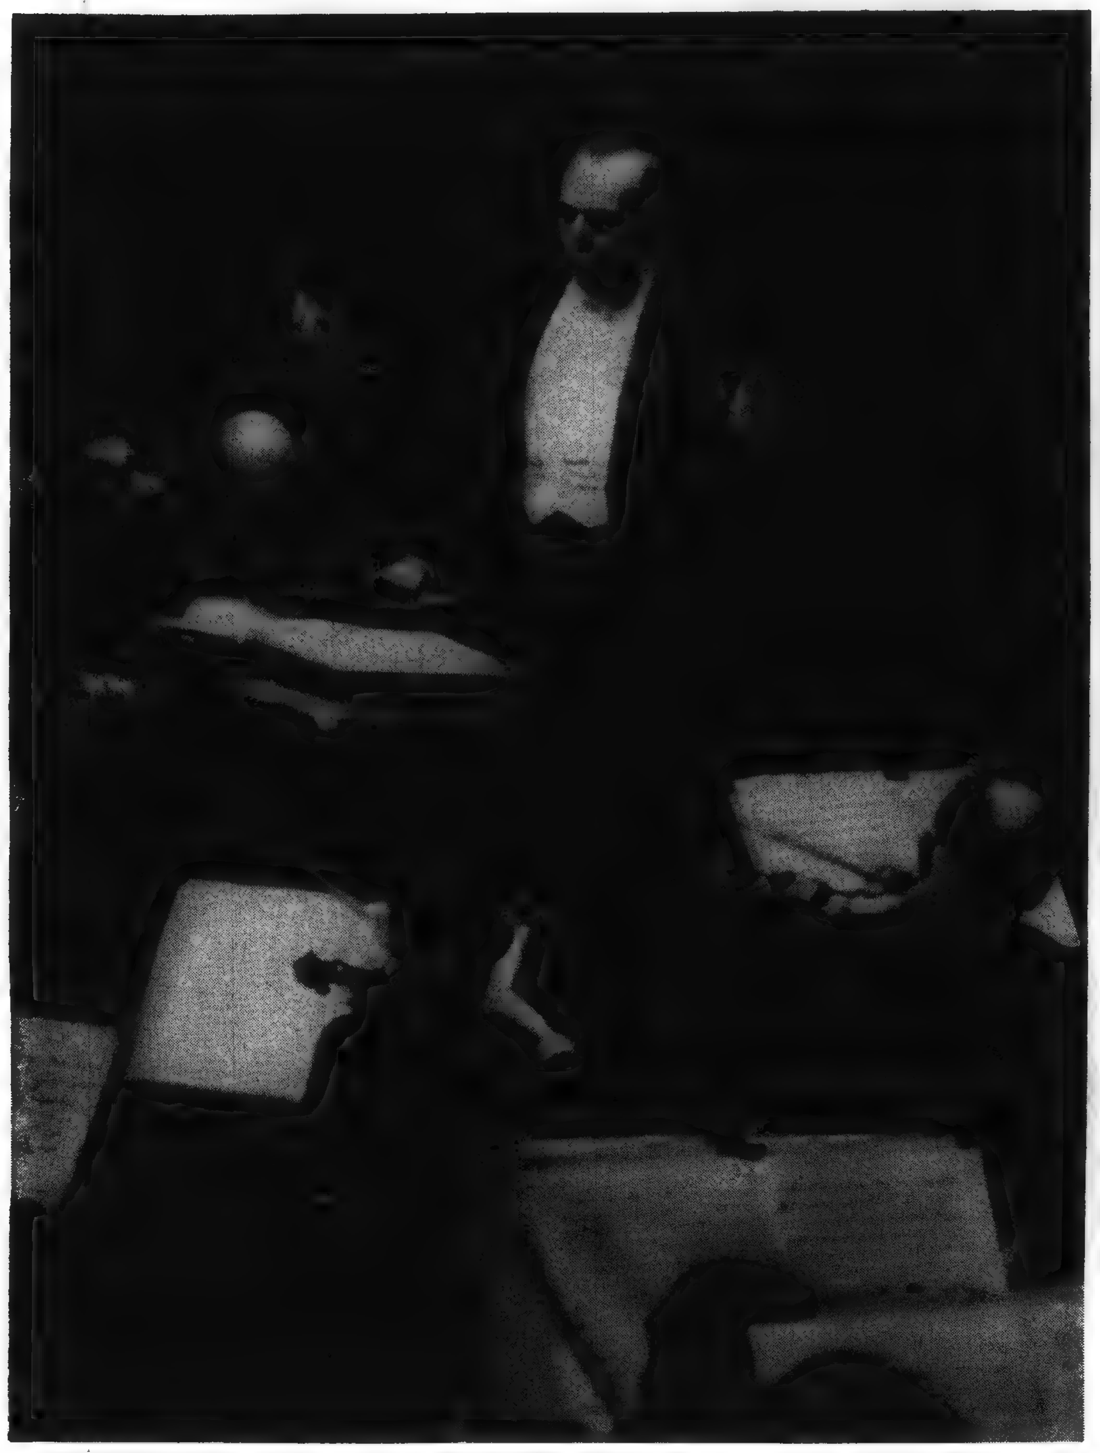
The choice of Boston's orchestra and conductor to present the music of this country is consistent with the keen interest Koussevitzky has always taken in American musical trends. A remark once made by H. T. Parker, late critic of the Boston Transcript, is now equally applicable: "Dr Koussevitzky holds American composers to the highest standards, gives them also the same consideration and opportunity as he follows with Europeans. There is no more to be asked; no more to be done. It is the way of a just, open, wisely fostering mind. Various epitaphs are written for men when they finish their work, withdraw and die. Dr Koussevitzky will deserve one of the choicest and rarest: Friend and Encourager of Youth. And to no neglect of the preceding, semi-established, but still ripening, generation."

The classical repertory will of course have the largest place upon Dr Koussevitzky's program. He intends a larger repetition than usual of the music of Bach and Mozart. Bach's Mass in B minor will be performed at a special concert in April. The season will end with a Tchaikovsky festival, in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the birth of the Russian composer. There will be a concert performance of the opera "Pique-Dame," in addition to orchestral works. Announced revivals are Mahler's "Song of the Earth," Debussy's "Martydom of Saint Sebastian," and Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," to be conducted by the composer. A new symphony of Stravinsky will also be introduced. Serge Prokofieff has been invited to play a piano concerto of his own.

Soloists engaged for the Friday and Saturday series include the pianists Joef Hofmann, Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking, and Jan Smeterlin; the violinists Jascha Heifetz, and Joseph Szigeti; 'cellist Emanuel Feuermann; and the celebrated saxophone virtuoso Sigurd Rascher.

1-5

THE INSTITUTE
AT THE
ACADEMY OF MUSIC



SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY is caught by the candid camera conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Academy of Music. This season the Boston Symphony appears in a subscription series of five concerts on Nov. 24, Jan. 12, Feb. 15, March 15 and April 5. The series is presented each season under the joint auspices of the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, a Brooklyn Committee and the Institute at the Academy of Music. The concerts are held in the Opera House at 8:30 p.m.

29

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

OCT 1 - 1939

1st Symphony Rehearsal Will Be Held Oct. 9

By Cecil Smith.

Another October has rolled around, as Octobers have an inevitable habit of doing, and Orchestra hall is full of preparations for the Chicago Symphony orchestra season. A week from tomorrow morning, the hall will reverberate with the sound of the first rehearsal, and on Thursday evening and Friday afternoon, Oct. 12 and 13, the orchestra will play its first pair of concerts in its forty-ninth season. Dr. Frederick Stock, whose term of service is already longer than that of any other major American orchestral conductor, will remain in charge of the orchestra's artistic destinies.

Any institution, no matter how important, always falls into the danger of being taken too casually when it has functioned for as long as forty-eight years without a serious hitch. By now the Chicago Symphony orchestra seems like a fixed object in the community, like the Michigan avenue bridge or the Union station.

But there was a time when the orchestra was brand new. Its addition to the city's cultural life was fully as momentous a change as the change effected in our material life by the destruction of the little old Rush street bridge and the transformation of placid Pine street into broad Michigan avenue. Until the orchestra was formed as a permanent Chicago institution, the city had depended upon outside forces for its principal music. Symphonic music had alternately flourished and languished, with summer concerts in the old exposition building on the lake front, and with occasional short-lived winter ventures doomed to quick death for want of substantial support.

• • •

In 1891 the city became big and proud enough to want an orchestra of its own, maintained on a dependable perennial basis like the already venerable New York Philharmonic [founded in 1844] and Col. Higginson's upstart Boston Symphony orchestra. Even St. Louis already had an orchestra of sorts; this year the St Louisans celebrate the sixieth anniversary of the beginning of their orchestra.

By fortunate chance Theodore Thomas, one of the best conductors America had yet heard, was out of a job in 1891. Tired of competing year after year in New York with the energetic Leopold Damrosch, who conducted an orchestra formed with the hope of taking precedence over Theodore Thomas' Philharmonic, Thomas had left New York in the late eighties, in order to establish a music conservatory in Cincinnati. Because of internal dissension, Thomas' career in Cincinnati was short-lived. Soon he found himself back in New York sans orchestra, sans salary, sans everything.

This was a dark moment in the life of a tireless enthusiast and competent workman. At 55, at the peak of his capacity, he had no opportunity to put his powers to work. At precisely this point the offer came to move out to Chicago and start a permanent orchestra there.

Thomas was quick to accept. He would rather have stayed in New York, an older and more self-assured community. But the situation there was complicated by the arrival of Anton Seidl, an imposing musician and one of the most admired of all German conductors. Between Damrosch and Seidl, the New York market was thoroughly taken care of.

• • •

Thomas already knew Chicago, having conducted many summer concerts here. He knew it to be a raw town, distinguished more by its eagerness for culture than by its possession of any significant quantity of that intangible commodity. Out of his knowledge of Chicago came one of the most unflattering remarks in the city's history, as he averred that he "would go to hell for an orchestra."

Whether or not it was justified, this was a dirty crack. Fortunately it was born of the discouraged mood under which Thomas had been laboring, and it did not represent the true quality of the man. Once he cast his lot with Chicago and began the first season of the Theodore Thomas orchestra [as it was then called] in 1891, he devoted himself to the task of building up Chicago's music with almost fanatic zeal. In many ways the last fifteen years of his life, spent in Chicago, were the most fruitful, and they brought him the loudest international accolades of his entire long career.

In 1895 a young violinist came to Chicago from Cologne, where he had been playing in the city orchestra and studying at the conservatory. Thomas had no opening for an additional violinist. He did, however, let the newcomer join the viola section of the orchestra.

This young man, whose name was Frederick Stock, proved immediately to be no ordinary orchestral woodsawer. He had played under Tschaikowsky and Richard Strauss, and he had become acquainted with difficult new scores like "Till Eulenspiegel's Merry Pranks" before Thomas had ever seen the music. He knew how to rescore for modern performance the archaic trumpet parts of Bach's Mass in B minor, and he knew how to conduct the opening bar of Beethoven's Fifth symphony without catapulting an orchestra into the abyss of indecision.

• • •

So well grounded a musician was foreordained to play in increasing rôle as time went on. In 1900, Thomas asked Stock to become his assistant. In 1903, Mr. Stock took over the arduous duties of the eight week post-season tour. Late in the fall of 1905 Thomas fell ill, after he had conducted only a few programs in Orchestra hall, the new structure the trustees had erected as a permanent home for the orchestra. During Thomas' illness, and after his death, Mr. Stock carried through brilliantly the program promised for the 1905-'06 season.

Before the beginning of the sixteenth season the orchestra board voted to award the conductor's post to Mr. Stock. Since then he has unremittingly lavished his great gifts upon the orchestra. Unique among American orchestras, the Chicago Symphony orchestra has been guided by one musical policy and by one educational objective for the last thirty-three years. This policy and this objective are worth thinking about, lest we forget or underestimate their value to the community. But that is quite another story.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.
EXAMINER

OCT 1 - 1939

Conductor Koussevitzky of Boston Symphony Faces Loss of Musicians to European Armies

From abroad, Fritz Kreisler has brought his own new version of Tschaikovsky's Violin Concerto. . . . Musical Courier rumors that the Ford Hour this winter will require its vocal soloists to sing everything in English. . . . The San Francisco String Quartet and San Francisco Piano Trio are booked for concerts at the U. C. Agricultural College at Davis.

Because it is a nonunion orchestra (the only one in America) the Boston Symphony has been barred from New York's big war balm music week. . . . And since the Boston Symphony is nonunion, it is able to engage players who are not American citizens, and some of these players may be mobilized—to the distress of Conductor Koussevitzky—into European armies.

Herald Oct 1-1939

Symphony to Give All-American Programs

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky is now announcing the final programs for the two special pre-season concerts of American compositions to be given at Symphony Hall on Wednesday evening and Friday afternoon. The concerts, which will be free to the public, are designed as a tribute to the American composer. These programs were selected by Dr. Koussevitsky from the point of view of balance and contrast and to give a broad view of American musical history in point of time and geographical distribution.

The elder generation will be represented by John Alden Carpenter and by the late Arthur Fotte and Henry Hadley. The younger composers on the program will inclue Deems Taylor, Howard Hanson, Randall Thompson, Roy Harris and his pupil, William Schumann, and the late George Gershwin.

Geographically speaking the composers represent the United States on the basis of birthplaces, from the Brooklyn of Gershwin to the Wahoo, Nebraska, of Howard Hanson, and Lincoln county, Oklahoma, of Roy Harris.

The two programs are as follows:

First Program

WEDNESDAY EVENING, at 8:15

Arthur Foote
Suite in E major for String Orchestra, Op. 63
I. Prelude
II. Pizzicato and Adagietto
III. Fugue
Henry Hadley...."Angelus" (Andante tranquillo) from the Symphony No. 3 in B minor, Op. 60
John Alden Carpenter
"Skyscrapers," A Ballet of American Life
Deems Taylor...Suite, "Through the Looking Glass" (Excerpts)
Looking Glass Insects
The White Knight
Howard Hanson..........Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"
I. Adagio. Allegro moderato
II. Andante con tenerezza
III. Allegro con brio

Second Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON at 2:30

William Schuman
American Festival Overture (1939)
George Gershwin
Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in F
II. Andante con moto
III. Allegro con brio
(Last two movements)
Roy Harris...............Symphony No. 3
(In one movement)
Randall Thompson....Symphony No. 2 in E minor
I. Allegro
II. Largo
III. Vivace
IV. Andante moderato; Allegro con spirito; Largamente

THIS CLIPPING FROM
DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

OCT 1 - 1939

SERGE KOUSSEVISKY

. . . is still in Tanglewood, making plans for next summer's Berkshire festival. The musical academy there will be opened in July and arrangements are being made for the courses to be followed. There will be a group of advanced students, a group taking the regular course, and two student orchestras, one for advanced players and one for those in the elementary stage. There is a suggestion that the regular season next summer will be lengthened to three weeks instead of the customary two weeks.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

OCT 1 - 1939

YESTERDAY AND TODAY. The Ink Spots, popular Negro quartet, are being featured at the Paramount Theatre with Glen Miller's orchestra, and earning $1500 a week . . . . Less than a decade ago Orville "Happy" Jones and Ivory "Deacon" Watson, two of the foursome, worked the same theatre as porters for $18 a week.

* * *

RED HEAD . . . . Larry Clinton received a leter from a Boston fan last week lamenting the lack of red haired musicians . . . He wrote that of the hundred men in the Boston symphony only one sports a carrot top and asked Clinton, who borders on that class, to help find others.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

OCT 1 - 1939

Bloch Concerto

In the recurrent dispute over whether modern works get a fair number of hearings, the new Bloch violin concerto has been submitted as evidence that they are. It received its first performance at the hands of the Cleveland orchestra on Dec. 15, 1938, with Joseph Szigeti as soloist—he holds the sole performing rights for a year. During the rest of the season it was done in London, where it was also recorded, Paris, and Lisbon. The line-up for the new season is as follows: Amsterdam, Nov. 9; Geneva, Nov. 13; Lausanne, Nov. 15; Birmingham, Eng., Nov. 16; Copenhagen, Nov. 30, and Brussels, Dec. 21. When he comes to the United States early in January, 1940, Mr. Szigeti will perform the work in both Boston and New York with the Boston Symphony orchestra, and in Los Angeles. [The Chicago Symphony orchestra, unfortunately, has decided against doing it here this year.] This is an impressive record for the first year's existence of a new musical composition, although Mr. Szigeti's desire to promote the work has undoubtedly helped it. As for the recording, the eminent Hungarian violinist—and he should know—says that it has received one of the largest sales among modern recorded works.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

OCT 1 - 1939

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has long been a fixture on the local musical schedule. Time was when they came but once during a season, but in recent years they have consented to make two yearly appearances here. Their popularity is best indicated by the fact that in the past ten years there has not been an unsold seat in Woolsey Hall for one of their concerts.

While New Haven's music-loving public, which of course includes many of the faculty and student body of Yale University, furnishes the bulk of the audience at each concert of the Woolsey Series, a great many auditors come from out-of-town, and from considerable distances. Subscribers from Bridgeport, Waterbury, Meriden, Derby and Wallingford are numerous, but these towns by no means furnish all of the visiting patrons. Some persons travel fifty and sixty miles each way on every Woolsey Series concert night, and in addition out-of-town school parties of from ten to fifty persons add their presence to the throng. A banner occasion, indeed, is a Woolsey Hall Series event, the popularity of which is best indicated by the use of the "S. R. O." sign at each concert.

THIS CLIPPING FROM OAKLAND, CAL.
TRIBUNE

OCT 1 - 1939

Hungary Violinist To Play Bloch Work

Joseph Szigeti, Hungarian violinist, will make his first appearance of the forthcoming season in this country January 5 and 6 as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Kousevitzky, in Boston, Mass., when he will be heard in the violin concerto by Ernest Bloch. Szigeti will play the same work with the Boston organization at its New York concert January 11 in Carnegie Hall.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

OCT 1 - 1939

Unionism In Music.

Unionism is going farther and deeper into things every day. Its power in music has resulted in a change in the orchestra which was originally chosen to participate in the Carnegie Hall festival of American Music week celebrating the 25th anniversary of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

The Boston Symphony, with Koussevitsky conducting, was to have been the organization to appear in this connection. But the hand of unionism reached out and pushed the Bostonians out of the picture . . . in favor of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, which is a unionized orchestra.

The band from the Hub will be here during the course of the 1939-40 season, however, with ten concerts which already are virtually sold out.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER

OCT 1 - 1939

Notable Music Events In Forum's 19th Season

A dozen musical events that will provide some of the highlights of this city's musical season are on the program of the 19th season of the Philadelphia Forum, as announced by William K. Huff, executive director. The season opens tomorrow and Tuesday with Maurice Evans in "Hamlet." Except for plays, all events will be held in the Academy of Music.

The second and third events of the Forum season will be the local debut of Robert Virovai, youthful violinist, on Oct. 25, and the only appearance this season of Argentinita and her Spanish dance ensemble on Oct. 30.

Alexander Kipnis, basso, will make his only appearance of the season on Nov. 27, and Marjorie Lawrence, Metroprolitan Opera soprano, will give her first local recital on Dec. 21. The Jooss Ballet will appear Jan. 18, presenting "Chronica," a new ballet, on its program. Walter Gieseking, pianist, and Kirsten Flagstad, soprano, will be heard in recital on Jan. 24 and 29, respectively.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will again give its annual Philadelphia concert for the Forum. Its program on Feb. 14 will feature the first local performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," a witty score that will have Richard Hale as narrator.

Georges Enesco, violinist, composer, [illegible], pianist and organist, appears Feb. 26 in his farewell tour as a violinist. Virginia Johnson, soprano, will also be heard that evening, in a cycle of Mr. Enesco's songs with the composer at the piano.

Robert and Gaby Casadesus, distinguished French pianists, again appear for the Forum on March 4, followed by the Philadelphia Opera Company in Johann Strauss's "Die Fledermaus" on March 11. The Comedian Harmonists, a singing sextet, are listed to close the season on March 28, in their first appearance here.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

OCT 1 - 1939

Intermission---

By Elaine Huber

back to the instruments, easels and scales go hundreds in Flint as the music-art-drama season begins activities for the bustling winter season. Back comes "Intermission" to thrust itself into the Sunday copy for there is much to be written as the cultural life of the city takes up tasks temporarily laid aside for the summer and this page begins.

* * *

it seems a long way from now until Christmas, but the Flint Choral Union is looking ahead to that traditional time for presenting Handel's "Messiah." They have set aside Tuesday, Oct. 17, as "visiting choir" night, an annual event. On this occasion, all the church choirs from Flint and the surrounding territory, have an invitation to the Choral Union rehearsal, to go over with its members the music of the oratorio. Membership rolls, of course, are open and new singers are able to register at the weekly rehearsals. They may do so for a few more weeks, and then the roster will close for the season. Mrs. Raymond Williams is chairman of the membership committee, assisted by LeRoy Daniels. Getting back to the choir night, to some it is a sort of "homecoming," for many a church choir singer began vocalizing as a member of the Choral Union and it must be fun to take one's place in the ranks once more to read the familiar scores.

* * *

elsewhere there is a stir in musical circles, too, with Ann Arbor announcing the first of its Choral Union concerts. Sergei Rachmaninoff, pianist, will inaugurate the 60th annual series on Oct. 24 at Hill auditorium. An imposing list of stars will be heard, including Fritz Kreisler, Jussim Bjoerling, Alexander Kipnis, Kirsten Flagstad, Robert Virovai, Bartlett and Robertson, Artur Rubinstein and two orchestras, the New York Philharmonic under John Barbirolli, and the Boston Symphony, under Serge Koussevitzky.

* * *

here's more good news for the many Flintites to whom spring wouldn't be spring without the May festival. The Philadelphia orchestra with Eugene Ormandy will be back again in 1940. The University Musical society has re-engaged this popular organization for the 47th annual festival of six concerts, May 8-11 at Ann Arbor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER EXPRESS

OCT 1 - 1939

To Be Soloist

Fred Ressel, Buffalo violist, who will be heard in the course of the Buffalo Philharmonic series.

MUSIC

Buffalonians With Philharmonic

Among Buffalo musicians who will play with the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra during the coming season are Kurt Paur, pianist; Fred Ressel, violinist, and Arnold Cornelissen, saxophonist.

Mr. Paur, a son of the well known conductor, Emil Paur, studied first in Vienna, and later at the Academy of Music in Berlin, under Dohnanyi. He passed his boyhood in this country when his father was conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returning later to Europe to take up his musical studies. Since 1923 he has lived in Buffalo, where his pianistic gifts long have been well known.

Mr. Ressel, leader of the viola section of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra, studied at the Prague Conservatory and played first viola in the German Civic Opera Orchestra of Prague. For four years he was a member of the Karlsbad Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Ressel is an American citizen and has lived in Buffalo since 1925.

Arnold Cornelissen, a young cellist in the orchestra, is a son of the cellist, Andries Cornelissen, and a nephew of the pianist, composer and conductor, Arnold Cornelissen. Although he is a professional cellist, his playing of the saxophone amounts to virtuosity, and he will be heard with the orchestra in a modern work for that instrument.

The orchestra series, under the direction of Franco Autori, will open on November 5th with Benny Goodman, clarinetist, as soloist.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM PROGRAM
NEW YORK CITY

OCT - - 1939

Lovely Coals for Newcastle

EVEN the great Berkshire Symphonic Festival admits that symphonies need interpreting. Its own specialized audiences are not exempted. Before the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed at Great Barrington, Mass. this summer, Doris Adams Hunn was lured from her western habitat to present a "preview" of the Brahms Symphony to be played. Her method of simplifying symphonies is unique. In chatty talk she explains the motifs, printed charts are distributed that clarify the themes, at the piano she plays excerpts from the main work, finally she presents the work itself in recordings by the greatest orchestras. When she finishes with you, a symphony is no longer a musical maze, it is a thing for exquisite enjoyment.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WASHINGTON, D. C.
POST
OCT 1 - 1939

30

Symphony to Present New Spier Composition

Four weeks before the opening of the National Symphony Orchestra's ninth season on October 29, in Constitution Hall, Hans Kindler discloses some of the novelties which he will introduce. One is a new work, "Seven Visions," by the resident composer, LaSalle Spier, who will be for the second time honored by the premiere of an orchestra composition in Washington. Admirers of another resident composer, Mary Howe, will be pleased to know that her "Castellana" concerto for two pianos, which was given its premiere here by Dr. Kindler several seasons ago, will be repeated on November 8 with Pierre Luboschutz and Genia Nemenov as soloists.

Scheduled to be given their first performances here by the National Symphony Orchestra are Olivier Messiaen's "Les Offrandes Oubliees," Karol Rathaus' "Uriel Acosta" and Guenther Raphael's "Smetana Suite," based on dances by the Czech composer of "The Bartered Bride." Messiaen, who was born in Avignon, December 10, 1908, is one of the most interesting contemporary French composers. His works for organ, chorus and orchestra are characterized by Catholic mysticism and suggest a continuation of Franck and Vincent d'Indy. His symphonic poem, "The Forgotten Offerings," has been previously played in this country only by the Boston Orchestra.

Karol Rathaus is a Polish-German composer, born in Tarnopol September 16, 1895. A pupil of Franz Schreker, he has written five operas, two symphonies and other orchestral works. His suite, probably the first of his compositions to be heard in this country, is drawn from the opera, "Uriel Acosta," which was written for the Habimah Theater in Jerusalem.

Guenther Raphael, composer of the "Smetana Suite," was born in Berlin April 30, 1903. His compositions include choral and orchestral works and chamber music. As far as can be ascertained from records, this suite has not been performed in the United States.

In the British Museum last spring, Dr. Kindler came upon a practically unknown Haydn symphony, No. 46 in B major, and copied the score in order to give the work its first American performance. Almost as unfamiliar and unplayed as the Haydn symphony is Mozart's symphony, No. 34, in C major, which Dr. Kindler recently unearthed in the Library of Congress

Another novelty is a ballet suite by Dr. Ernst Kanitz, Austrian composer, who is now teaching at Winthrop College in South Carolina; it has been played only once before in this country. Dr. Kindler also plans to present Howard Hanson's "Romatic" symphony. Schoenberg's orchestral arrangement of Brahms' G minor quartet for piano and strings, Ravel's "Valses Nobles et Sentimentales," Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde," Richard Strauss' "Aus Italien," Bach's Church Cantata No. 39, Schumann's fourth symphony, Stravinski's "Zhar Ptitza" suite, Liszt's "Mephisto Waltz" and John Alden Carpenter's piano concertino in which Percy Grainger will be the soloist.

All these works will be played in either the mid-week or the first Sunday afternoon series in which other soloists will be Moriz Rosenthal, Kirsten Flagstad, Nino Martini, Albert Spalding, Myra Hess, Marjorie Lawrence, Maurice Marechal, Ossy Renardy, Marcel Mass and Rene Le-Roy. The second Sunday series of "beloved symphonic masterpieces" will include the Franck symphony, Brahms' first, Beethoven's fifth, Chaikovski's fifth and Rimzki-Korsakov's "Shahrazad" suite. The final concert of this series will be a "request" program.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH

OCT 1 - 1939

Hayes in, First Of Season's Concerts

By J. FRED LISSFELT
Sun-Telegraph Music Critic

Honors for the season's first concert go to Roland Hayes, celebrated Negro tenor, who has been too long absent from Pittsburgh.

Mr. Lissfelt

With Marian Anderson and Paul Robeson, Hayes has done everything to raise the standard of the Negro artist, not only because of the refinement with which he approaches his own racial music, but also because of the perfection and finesse of his singing of the classics.

His career takes him from the barefoot ploughboy to the Court of St. James. With genius and diligence he worked from ignorance to a supreme understanding of the most exacting of songs. With intelligent technique and the natural resources of his fine tenor voice on last hearing in Pittsburgh he gave a demonstration of the best in singing.

Concert Thursday

The present concert takes place in Carnegie Music Hall on Thursday evening, under auspices of the Harriet Tubman Guild, which looks after convalescent Negro women and girls. The program follows:

Lungi Da Te Ben Mio..Giovanni Bononcini
Maldetto Sia L'Aspetto..Claudio Monteverdi
Lascia Ch'io Panga (From Opera "Rinaldo")....................G. F. Handel
L'Amour De Moi (French Chanson of the Thirteenth Century)..................
......Accompaniment by Hubert J. Foss
Steal Away (An American Negro, religious Folk)......Arr. by Roland Hayes
Xango (Brazilian African fetiche Chant of Makumba)..Harmonized by Villa-Lobos
Michieu Baingo (Louisiana Creole Folk)
..............Arr. by Camille Nickerson
'Round 'Bout de Mountain (Tennessee Mountain Negro Folk).............
................Arr. by Percival Parham
Du Bist Die Ruh..........Franz Schubert
Der Jungling An Der Quelle..Franz Schubert
The Youth at the Spring
The Stars Looked Down.Reginald Boardman
Les Trois Presents.....(Sarazin XVIII)
.....................Germaine Taillefere
Hear de Lambs?....Arr. by Roland Hayes
Good News
Dry Bones
Every Time I Feel de Spirit..........
................Arr. by Lawrence Brown

Orchestra Concerts

This is the first concert presented by May Beegle outside her regular concert series. Among the others are the five concerts by visiting orchestras. A novelty here will be the first hearing of the New York Philharmonic under the British director Barbirolli, also the seeing of this famous organization for the first time in 10 years and after having heard so many of its broadcasts.

The Philharmonic Orchestra with Ormandy comes for two concerts, one in November and one in May, and the ever-popular Boston Symphony, with Koussevitsky, plays two concerts [illegible] days, Saturday night, December 16, and the next afternoon.

In her regular series Miss Beegle presents Fritz Kreisler for the opening at Syria Mosque a week later than Hayes. Stars such as Nelson Eddy, Lily Pons and Horowitz, whom illness has kept in Switzerland for several years and who now returns again to dazzle America, will return. Marian Anderson breaks into this series for the first time.

Gilbert and Sullivan

The San Carlos Opera will offer "Madame Butterfly" with a charming Japanese prima donna in the leading role in this same series, and as novelties two dance groups will contend for honors—the Bali Dancers, Javanese artists of exquisite charm, and Argentinita and a Spanish ensemble, who replace the beautiful and unfortunate L'Argentina. The Mozart Boys Choir completes this program.

If we were to look for delightful entertainment we must not overlook the performances of Gilbert and Sullivan by the Pittsburgh Savoyards, organized and directed by Harvey B. Gaul. There are to be three performances during the winter, "The Mikado," October 10 and 11, "Yeoman of the Guard," February 13 and 14, and "The Gondoliers," May 14 and 15.

All performances are to be given in the auditorium of the Twentieth Century Club. The singers are local stars. Those who saw the initial play of last year praised it generously.

THIS CLIPPING FROM OAKLAND, CAL.
TRIBUNE

OCT 1 - 1939

Hungary Violinist To Play Bloch Work

Joseph Szigeti, Hungarian violinist, will make his first appearance of the forthcoming season in this country January 5 and 6 as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Kousevitzky, in Boston, Mass., when he will be heard in the violin concerto by Ernest Bloch. Szigeti will play the same work with the Boston organization at its New York concert January 11 in Carnegie Hall.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT
OCT 1 - 1939

Unionism In Music.

Unionism is going farther and deeper into things every day. Its power in music has resulted in a change in the orchestra which was originally chosen to participate in the Carnegie Hall festival of American Music week celebrating the 25th anniversary of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

The Boston Symphony, with Koussevitsky conducting, was to have been the organization to appear in this connection. But the hand of unionism reached out and pushed the Bostonians out of the picture . . . in favor of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, which is a unionized orchestra.

The band from the Hub will be here during the course of the 1939-40 season, however, with ten concerts which already are virtually sold out.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
OCT 1 - 1939

Notable Music Events In Forum's 19th Season

A dozen musical events that will provide some of the highlights of this city's musical season are on the program of the 19th season of the Philadelphia Forum, as announced by William K. Huff, executive director. The season opens tomorrow and Tuesday with Maurice Evans in "Hamlet." Except for plays, all events will be held in the Academy of Music.

The second and third events of the Forum season will be the local debut of Robert Virovai, youthful violinist, on Oct. 25, and the only appearance this season of Argentinita and her Spanish dance ensemble on Oct. 30.

Alexander Kipnis, basso, will make his only appearance of the season on Nov. 27, and Marjorie Lawrence, Metropolitan Opera soprano, will give her first local recital on Dec. 21. The Jooss Ballet will appear Jan. 15, presenting "Chronica," a new ballet, on its program. Walter Gieseking, pianist, and Kirsten Flagstad, soprano, will be heard in recital on Jan. 24 and 29, respectively.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will again give its annual Philadelphia concert for the Forum. Its program on Feb. 14 will feature the first local performance of Prokofieff's "Peter and the Wolf," a witty score that will have Richard Hale as narrator.

Georges Enesco, violinist, composer, [illegible] pianist and organist, appears Feb. 26 in his farewell tour as a violinist. Virginia Johnson, soprano, will also be heard that evening, in a cycle of Mr. Enesco's songs with the composer at the piano.

Robert and Gaby Casadesus, distinguished French pianists, again appear for the Forum on March 4, followed by the Philadelphia Opera Company in Johann Strauss's "Die Fledermaus" on March 11. The Comedian Harmonists, a singing sextet, are listed to close the season on March 26, in their first appearance here.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

OCT 1 - 1939

Intermission---

By Elaine Huber

back to the instruments, easels and scales go hundreds in Flint as the music-art-drama season begins activities for the bustling winter season. Back comes "Intermission" to thrust itself into the Sunday copy for there is much to be written as the cultural life of the city takes up tasks temporarily laid aside for the summer and this page begins.

* * *

it seems a long way from now until Christmas, but the Flint Choral Union is looking ahead to that traditional time for presenting Handel's "Messiah." They have set aside Tuesday, Oct. 17, as "visiting choir" night, an annual event. On this occasion, all the church choirs from Flint and the surrounding territory, have an invitation to the Choral Union rehearsal, to go over with its members the music of the oratorio. Membership rolls, of course, are open and new singers are able to register at the weekly rehearsals. They may do so for a few more weeks, and then the roster will close for the season. Mrs. Raymond Williams is chairman of the membership committee, assisted by LeRoy Daniels. Getting back to the choir night, to some it is a sort of "homecoming," for many a church choir singer began vocalizing as a member of the Choral Union and it must be fun to take one's place in the ranks once more to read the familiar scores.

* * *

elsewhere there is a stir in musical circles, too, with Ann Arbor announcing the first of its Choral Union concerts. Sergei Rachmaninoff, pianist, will inaugurate the 60th annual series on Oct. 24 at Hill auditorium. An imposing list of stars will be heard, including Fritz Kreisler, Jussim Bjoerling, Alexander Kipnis, Kirsten Flagstad, Robert Virovai, Bartlett and Robertson, Artur Rubinstein and two orchestras, the New York Philharmonic under John Barbirolli, and the Boston Symphony, under Serge Koussevitzky.

* * *

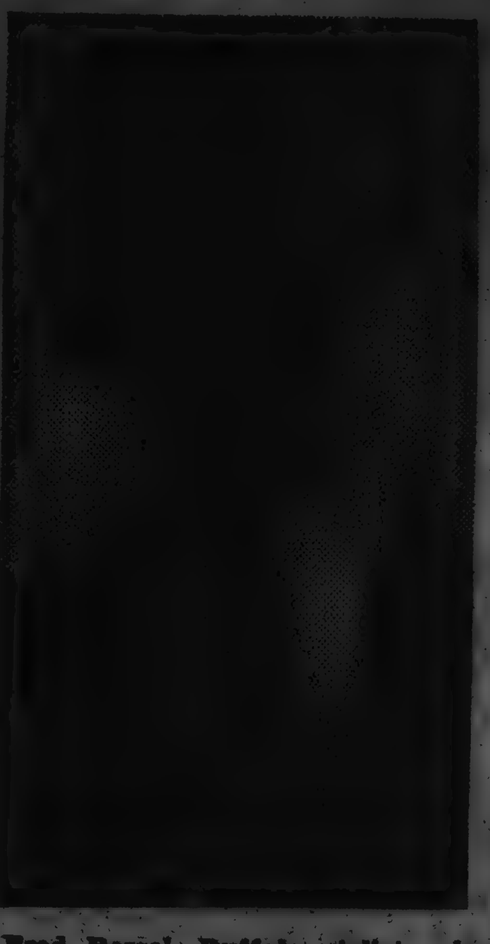
here's more good news for the many Flintites to whom spring wouldn't be spring without the May festival. The Philadelphia orchestra with Eugene Ormandy will be back again in 1940. The University Musical Society has re-engaged this popular organization for the 47th annual festival of six concerts, May 8-11 at Ann Arbor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
OCT 1 - 1939

To Be Soloist



Fred Ressel, Buffalo violist, who will be heard in the course of the Buffalo Philharmonic series.

MUSIC

Buffalonians With Philharmonic

Among Buffalo musicians who will play with the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra during the coming season are Kurt Paur, pianist; Fred Ressel, violinist, and Arnold Cornelissen, saxophonist.

Mr. Paur, a son of the well known conductor, Emil Paur, studied first in Vienna, and later at the Academy of Music in Berlin, under Dohnanyi. He passed his boyhood in this country when his father was conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returning later to Europe to take up his musical studies. Since 1923 he has lived in Buffalo, where his pianistic gifts long have been well known.

Mr. Ressel, leader of the viola section of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra, studied at the Prague Conservatory and played first viola in the German Civic Opera Orchestra of Prague. For four years he was a member of the Karlsbad Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Ressel is an American citizen and has lived in Buffalo since 1925.

Arnold Cornelissen, a young cellist in the orchestra, is a son of the cellist, Andries Cornelissen, and a nephew of the pianist, composer and conductor, Arnold Cornelissen. Although he is a professional cellist, his playing of the saxophone amounts to virtuosity, and he will be heard with the orchestra in a modern work for that instrument.

The orchestra series, under the direction of Franco Autori, will open on November 5th with Benny Goodman, clarinetist, as soloist.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM PROGRAM
NEW YORK CITY

OCT - - 1939

Lovely Coals for Newcastle

EVEN the great Berkshire Symphonic Festival admits that symphonies need interpreting. Its own specialized audiences are not exempted. Before the Boston Symphony Orchestra performed at Great Barrington, Mass. this summer, Doris Adams Hunn was lured from her western habitat to present a "preview" of the Brahms Symphony to be played. Her method of simplifying symphonies is unique. In chatty talk she explains the motifs, printed charts are distributed that clarify the themes, at the piano she plays excerpts from the main work, finally she presents the work itself in recordings by the greatest orchestras. When she finishes with you, a symphony is no longer a musical maze, it is a thing for exquisite enjoyment.

POST
OCT 1 - 1939

Symphony to Present New Spier Composition

30

Four weeks before the opening of the National Symphony Orchestra's ninth season on October 29, in Constitution Hall, Hans Kindler discloses some of the novelties which he will introduce. One is a new work, "Seven Visions," by the resident composer, LaSalle Spier, who will be for the second time honored by the premiere of an orchestra composition in Washington. Admirers of another resident composer, Mary Howe, will be pleased to know that her "Castellana" concerto for two pianos, which was given its premiere here by Dr. Kindler several seasons ago, will be repeated on November 8 with Pierre Luboschutz and Genia Nemenov as soloists.

Scheduled to be given their first performances here by the National Symphony Orchestra are Olivier Messiaen's "Les Offrandes Oubliees," Karol Rathaus' "Uriel Acosta" and Guenther Raphael's "Smetana Suite," based on dances by the Czech composer of "The Bartered Bride." Messiaen, who was born in Avignon, December 10, 1908, is one of the most interesting contemporary French composers. His works for organ, chorus and orchestra are characterized by Catholic mysticism and suggest a continuation of Franck and Vincent d'Indy. His symphonic poem, "The Forgotten Offerings," has been previously played in this country only by the Boston Orchestra.

Karol Rathaus is a Polish-German composer, born in Tarnopol September 16, 1895. A pupil of Franz Schreker, he has written five operas, two symphonies and other orchestral works. His suite, probably the first of his compositions to be heard in this country, is drawn from the opera, "Uriel Acosta," which was written for the Habimah Theater in Jerusalem.

Guenther Raphael, composer of the "Smetana Suite," was born in Berlin April 30, 1903. His compositions include choral and orchestral works and chamber music. As far as can be ascertained from records, this suite has not been performed in the United States.

In the British Museum last spring, Dr. Kindler came upon a practically unknown Haydn symphony, No. 46 in B major, and copied the score in order to give the work its first American performance. Almost as unfamiliar and unplayed as the Haydn symphony is Mozart's symphony, No. 34, in C major, which Dr. Kindler recently unearthed in the Library of Congress

Another novelty is a ballet suite by Dr. Ernst Kanitz, Austrian composer, who is now teaching at Winthrop College in South Carolina; it has been played only once before in this country. Dr. Kindler also plans to present Howard Hanson's "Romantic" symphony. Schoenberg's orchestral arrangement of Brahms' G minor quartet for piano and strings, Ravel's "Valses Nobles et Sentimentales," Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde," Richard Strauss' "Aus Italien," Bach's Church Cantata No. 39, Schumann's fourth symphony, Stravinski's "Zhar Ptitza" suite, Liszt's "Mephisto Waltz" and John Alden Carpenter's piano concertino in which Percy Grainger will be the soloist.

All these works will be played in either the mid-week or the first Sunday afternoon series in which other soloists will be Moriz Rosenthal, Kirsten Flagstad, Nino Martini, Albert Spalding, Myra Hess, Marjorie Lawrence, Maurice Marechal, Ossy Renardy, Marcel Mass and Rene LeRoy. The second Sunday series of "beloved symphonic masterpieces" will include the Franck symphony, Brahms' first, Beethoven's fourth, Chaikovski's fifth and Rimzki-Korsakov's "Shahrazad" suite. The final concert of this series will be a "request" program.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSBURGH, PA.
SUN-TELEGRAPH
OCT 1 - 1939

Hayes in First Of Season's Concerts

By J. FRED LISSFELT
Sun-Telegraph Music Critic

Honors for the season's first concert go to Roland Hayes, celebrated Negro tenor, who has been too long absent from Pittsburgh.

Mr. Lissfelt

With Marian Anderson and Paul Robeson, Hayes has done everything to raise the standard of the Negro artist, not only because of the refinement with which he approaches his own racial music, but also because of the perfection and finesse of his singing of the classics.

His career takes him from the barefoot ploughboy to the Court of St. James. With genius and diligence he worked from ignorance to a supreme understanding of the most exacting of songs. With intelligent technique and the natural resources of his fine tenor voice on last hearing in Pittsburgh he gave a demonstration of the best in singing.

Concert Thursday

The present concert takes place in Carnegie Music Hall on Thursday evening, under auspices of the Harriet Tubman Guild, which looks after convalescent Negro women and girls. The program follows:

Lungi Da Te Ben Mio..Giovanni Bonencini
Maldetto Sia L'Aspetto..Claudio Monteverdi
Lascia Ch'io Pianga (From Opera "Rinaldo")..................G. F. Handel
L'Amour De Moi (French Chanson of the Thirteenth Century)..................
......Accompaniment by Hubert L. Fox
Steal Away (An American Negro, religious Folk)......Arr. by Roland Hayes
Xango (Brazilian African fetiche Chant of Makumba)..Harmonised by Villa-Lobos
Michieu Baingo (Louisiana Creole Folk)
...............Arr. by Camille Nickerson
'Round 'Bout de Mountain (Tennessee Mountain Negro Folk)..............
..................Arr. by Percival Parham
Du Bist Die Ruh..........Franz Schubert
Der Jungling An Der Quelle..Franz Schubert
The Youth at the Spring
The Stars Looked Down Reginald Boardman
Les Trois Presents.....(Sarazin XVIII)
...................Germaine Tailleferre
Hear de Lambs?....Arr. by Roland Hayes
Good News
Dry Bones
Every Time I Feel de Spirit..............
...............Arr. by Lawrence Brown

Orchestra Concerts

This is the first concert presented by May Beegle outside her regular concert series. Among the others are the five concerts by visiting orchestras. A novelty here will be the first hearing of the New York Philharmonic under the British director Barbirolli, also the seeing of this famous organization for the first time in 10 years and after having heard so many of its broadcasts.

The Philharmonic Orchestra with Ormandy comes for two concerts, one in November and one in May, and the ever-popular Boston Symphony, with Koussevitsky, plays two concerts consecutive days, Saturday night, December 16, and the next afternoon.

In her regular series Miss Beegle presents Fritz Kreisler for the opening at Syria Mosque a week later than Hayes. Stars such as Nelson Eddy, Lily Pons and Horowitz, whom [illegible] has kept in Switzerland for several years and who now returns again to dazzle America, will return. Marian Anderson breaks into this series for the first time.

Gilbert and Sullivan

The San Carlos Opera will offer "Madame Butterfly" with a charming Japanese prima donna in the leading role in this same series, and as novelties two dance groups will contend for honors—the Bali Dancers, Javanese artists of exquisite charm, and Argentinita and a Spanish ensemble, who replace the beautiful and unfortunate L'Argentina. The Mozart Boys' Choir completes this program.

If we were to look for delightful entertainment we must not overlook the performances of Gilbert and Sullivan by the Pittsburgh Savoyards, organized and directed by Harvey B. Gaul. There are to be three performances during the winter, "The Mikado," October 10 and 11, "Yeoman of the Guard," February 13 and 14, and "The Gondoliers," May 14 and 15.

All performances are to be given in the auditorium of the Twentieth Century Club. The singers are local stars. Those who saw the initial play of last year praised

31

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1939 ★ GREEN MAGAZINE ★ BOSTON SUNDAY ADVERTISER—Page [illegible]

CONCERT SEASON IMPENDS

Hailing Hofmann and Music of the U. S. A.

"WIZARD of the piano" and "pianist's pianist" are among the titles bestowed on Josef Hofmann, who is to be first of a distinguished group of soloists scheduled to appear with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its formal season, opening on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 13 and 14.

Hofmann is unsurpassed for command of tone color, for resources of power.

"You could be a proficient performer yourself, and yet time and again as you sat there listening to Hofmann, you would wonder how he got his effects," as one critic puts it.

The appearance of the great Polish-born artist as soloist with the Boston orchestra is his first since the days of Karl Muck. Although he has been a frequent visitor in Symphony Hall for his own recitals.

Another important announcement is the appearance of the celebrated 'cellist, Emanuel Feuermann, as soloist for the first time with the Boston orchestra. Truly great exponents of the 'cello are limited in number, and he is in the top rank of that select group.

The illustrious Spaniard, Casals, has justified his immense reputation before the Boston Symphony audiences, and so also, in recent years, has the dazzling Russian, Piatigorsky. But through exigencies of arranging dates, not until this season will Feuermann's virtuosity, long famous in Vienna, be mated with Boston's great orchestra.

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY has assembled the programs for two special pre-season concerts of American compositions to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall next week as a tribute to the American symphonic composer. This music will be offered free to the public on Wednesday evening and Friday afternoon, October 4 and 6.

Selecting works for these programs primarily from the point of view of balance and contrast, Dr. Koussevitsky has contrived also to give a broad view of American musical history in point of time and geographical distribution.

Of the elder generation, the late Arthur Foote and Henry Hadley and the living John Alden Carpenter will be represented.

Among the younger generation, the names range from Deems Taylor and Howard Hanson to Randall Thompson, Roy Harris and his pupil, William Schuman. Of particular interest in this category is the revival of the Piano Concerto in F of the late George Gershwin.

Geographically, the composers represent the nation, on the basis of birthplace, from Brooklyn of Gershwin to the Wahoo, Nebraska, of Howard Hanson, and Lincoln County, Oklahoma, of Roy Harris.

FIRST PROGRAM

Arthur Foote — Suite in E Major for String Orchestra, op. 63.

Henry Hadley — "Angelus" from the Symphony No. 3 in B Minor, op. 60.

John Alden Carpenter—"Skyscrapers," a ballet of American life.

Deems Taylor — Suite, "Through The Looking Glass."

Howard Hanson — Symphony No. 2, "Romantic."

SECOND PROGRAM

William Schuman—American Festival overture (1939).

George Gershwin — Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in F.

Roy Harris — Symphony No. 3—in one movement.

Randall Thompson — Symphony No. 2 in E Minor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES-DISPATCH

OCT 1 - 1939

Ruth Posselt To Be Soloist At Concert

Ruth Posselt, brilliant young American violinist, will be guest artist with the National Symphony Orchestra at the Mosque November 1 at the opening concert of the Symphony Society of Richmond's second season, it was announced last night by the society's president, Mrs. Richard W. Carrington. The concert will be conducted by Dr. Hans Kindler.

The box-office will be opened both for season and single concert reservations tomorrow morning in the lobby of the News Leader building under the direction of Mrs. John M. Caskie, chairman of the society's subscription committee. From numerous inquiries already received, Mrs. Caskie has reported keen interest in the program of four concerts, November 1, January 9, February 20 and April 2. The signal success of last year, said Mrs. Caskie, is definitely reflected in the bright prospects for the approaching season.

Ruth Posselt scored notably in Washington last year with the National Symphony in the Dvorak concerto and the D major violin concerto of Mozart as well as Edward Burlingame Hill's new violin concerto.

Miss Posselt, a native of Medford, Mass., was reared in an atmosphere of music. Her father had traveled with Nellie Melba for many years and her mother, descendant of an old New England family, was an instructress of music. Some years ago, three of her sisters constituted the Posselt Trio. A precocious child, Ruth took early to the violin and at 3 her playing of "It's a Long Way to Tipperary" had brought her local fame. She began studying with her sister, Marjorie, an accomplished violinist, and at 4 was reading notes with precision.

The following year, she first appeared before footlights and at 6 was playing for Red Cross relief funds, giving her first public recital in Boston at Jordan Hall. Immediately recognized as a genuine prodigy, Ruth became a pupil of the noted violin teacher, Emanuel Ondricek. Several years later, she made her formal debut at Carnegie Hall, New York, which concert was followed by her appearance in Symphony Hall, Boston.

When only 14, Ruth Posselt was soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra, under Walter Damrosch, and with the Boston People's Symphony Orchestra. In 1929, Miss Posselt was awarded the Schubert Memorial Prize, winning over 165 violinists from every section of the United States. She was also the winner of the 1929 National Federation of Music Clubs' prize.

The succeeding season, Miss Posselt was booked on her first transcontinental tour of the United States, scoring both in critical favor and at the box-office. Leaving for Europe the following year, Miss Posselt spent considerable time concentrating on her French repertoire under the guidance of Jasques Thibaud. A spectacular European debut followed in Paris. She toured extensively in France, Holland, Belgium, Scandinavia, England, Spain, Italy, Germany, Austria and Soviet Russia, winning acclaim. A critic in Holland described her as "the Adelina Patti of the violin."

Returning to New York, Miss Posselt was received at Town Hall, and, among other engagements, appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony, under Koussevitsky; the Chicago, under Stock; the Detroit Symphony and Washington's own National Symphony.

Dr. Kindler is preparing an outstanding program for the opening concert of the Richmond season, which is preceded on the National Symphony schedule only by a concert in Washington and another in Baltimore.

The Symphony Society of Richmond, a noncommercial enterprise, has established its policy of devoting all profits from the concerts to the promotion of fine music for the community.

Miss Ruth Posselt, young violinist, will be guest artist with the National Symphony, when Dr. Hans Kindler brings his orchestra to the Mosque for their first concert on November 1.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD

OCT 1 - 1939

Musician Is Notable in Three Fields

Rachmaninoff to Give Pianoforte Recital on Oct. 20

The world famous pianist to open the Syracuse Civic Music Association 1939-40 concert series in Central High School Lincoln Auditorium the night of Oct. 20 has the full name of Sergei Vassilievitch Rachmaninoff. One of the outstanding musicians of the epoch, his personality has colored three fields of music, his gifts having brought him fame as a composer, pianist and conductor. Tall, austere, aristocratic in bearing, he makes a commanding figure on the concert platform. His pianistic art has ripened with each succeeding year.

As a composer Rachmaninoff ranks among the foremost of the day. He has written practically all forms of music—operas, symphonies, piano compositions, songs. To those unfamiliar with his other works, he is known as the composer of the famous C Sharp Minor Prelude. As a conductor also he has achieved distinction, though of late he has appeared in this role infrequently. In his native Russia for a number of years he conducted the Moscow Symphony Orchestra and the Moscow Private Opera. Later in England he conducted the London Symphony. In the United States he was offered the conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but refused since he preferred his career as a pianist. An exile from Russia since the revolution Rachmaninoff now passes winters in the United States and his summers in Switzerland.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE

OCT 1 - 1939

NEW York's mayor, Fiorella La-Guardia, wielded a baton in Carnegie Hall the other night. Standing in the same spot where Toscanini, Stokowski, Koussevitsky and others have conducted, the mayor directed not the Philharmonic-Symphony, although once he did take them through a few passages but this time he led a combination of police, fire and sanitation bands. The players wore smart uniforms and the leader, a dinner coat. It all happened at band night of the American music festival presented by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

* * *

IT might interest local concert goers to learn that the New York debut of Helen Traubel, soprano who once appeared here on our local series, has again attained great success with the critics in the metropolis. Miss Traubel sang in Walter Damrosch's opera "The Man Without a Country," at the Metropolitan two years ago. (The soprano was not well received in Niagara Falls by many Civic Music subscribers). One critic concluded his flow of praise with these words: "In all, Miss Traubel has the attributes that summon the name of Flagstad." This is definitely 'tops' to any critic of dramatic sopranos.

* * *

THE $400,000 fire in Los Angeles' famous Palomar ballroom has been laid to a resin-saturated rag which was used to wipe the strings of the musicians' instruments. Resin is highly inflammable and it is said that a musician may have inadvertently dropped the cloth upon a hot light bulb. Watch out, resin users, it sounds easy to do!

* * *

DUE to the fact that WPA music has gone on the rocks, practically speaking, the Buffalo orchestra will no longer be a federal organization. The Buffalo Philharmonic Society is having a drive with the hope of securing substantial backing for the orchestra. Franco Autori is engaged to continue as conductor and outstanding soloists are scheduled to appear with the orchestra this winter. Among the names recently added to the list of local artists is Paola Autori, wife of the conductor and formerly well-known as a star of the Philadelphia Opera company. Benny Goodman, playing a Mozart concerto for clarinet, will be a special attraction to Buffalo orchestra followers.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARPERS MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

OCT - - 1939

HOW TO TAME AN ORCHESTRA

"OUR experts to-night will include those veterans of 'Information, Please,' John Kieran, sports-writer and general walking encyclopedia, Franklin P. Adams, columnist of the New York Post, and Oscar Levant, composer and musical director of 'The American Way.' . . ."

Yes, that is the Oscar Levant who writes this month on "Music in Aspic." Next month he will contribute to HARPER'S some observations upon Koussevitzky, Toscanini, and Stokowski. Both contributions will find their way somewhat later into a book which Mr. Levant is preparing for publication by Doubleday, Doran.

31

CONCERT SEASON IMPENDS

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES-DISPATCH
OCT 1 - 1939

Ruth Posselt To Be Soloist At Concert

Ruth Posselt, brilliant young American violinist, will be guest artist with the National Symphony Orchestra at the Mosque November 1 at the opening concert of the Symphony Society of Richmond's second season, it was announced last night by the society's president, Mrs. Richard W. Carrington. The concert will be conducted by Dr. Hans Kindler.

The box-office will be opened both for season and single concert reservations tomorrow morning in the lobby of the News Leader building under the direction of Mrs. John M. Caskie, chairman of the society's subscription committee. From numerous inquiries already received, Mrs. Caskie has reported keen interest in the program of four concerts, November 1, January 9, February 20 and April 2. The signal success of last year, said Mrs. Caskie, is definitely reflected in the bright prospects for the approaching season.

Ruth Posselt scored notably in Washington last year with the National Symphony in the Dvorak concerto and the D major violin concerto of Mozart as well as Edward Burlingame Hill's new violin concerto.

Miss Posselt, a native of Medford, Mass., was reared in an atmosphere of music. Her father had traveled with Nellie Melba for many years and her mother, descendant of an old New England family, was an instructress of music. Some years ago, three of her sisters constituted the Posselt Trio. A precocious child, Ruth took early to the violin and at 3 her playing of "It's a Long Way to Tipperary" had brought her local fame. She began studying with her sister, Marjorie, an accomplished violinist, and at 4 was reading notes with precision.

The following year, she first appeared before footlights and at 6 was playing for Red Cross relief funds, giving her first public recital in Boston at Jordan Hall. Immediately recognized as a genuine prodigy, Ruth became a pupil of the noted violin teacher, Emanuel Ondricek. Several years later, she made her formal debut at Carnegie Hall, New York, which concert was followed by her appearance in Symphony Hall, Boston.

When only 14, Ruth Posselt was soloist with the New York Symphony Orchestra, under Walter Damrosch, and with the Boston People's Symphony Orchestra. In 1929, Miss Posselt was awarded the Schubert Memorial Prize, winning over 165 violinists from every section of the United States. She was also the winner of the 1929 National Federation of Music Clubs' prize.

The succeeding season, Miss Posselt was booked on her first transcontinental tour of the United States, scoring both in critical favor and at the box-office. Leaving for Europe the following year, Miss Posselt spent considerable time concentrating on her French repertoire under the guidance of Jacques Thibaud. A spectacular European debut followed in Paris. She toured extensively in France, Holland, Belgium, Scandinavia, England, Spain, Italy, Germany, Austria and Soviet Russia, winning acclaim. A critic in Holland described her as "the Adelina Patti of the violin."

Returning to New York, Miss Posselt was received at Town Hall, and, among other engagements, appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony, under Koussevitzky; the Chicago, under Stock; the Detroit Symphony and Washington's own National Symphony.

Dr. Kindler is preparing an outstanding program for the opening concert of the Richmond season, which is preceded on the National Symphony schedule only by a concert in Washington and another in Baltimore.

The Symphony Society of Richmond, a noncommercial enterprise, has established its policy of devoting all profits from the concerts to the promotion of fine music for the community.

Miss Ruth Posselt, young violinist, will be guest artist with the National Symphony, when Dr. Hans Kindler brings his orchestra to the Mosque for their first concert on November 1.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SYRACUSE, N. Y.
HERALD
OCT 1 - 1939

Musician Is Notable in Three Fields

Rachmaninoff to Give Pianoforte Recital on Oct. 20

The world famous pianist to open the Syracuse Civic Music Association 1939-40 concert series in Central High School Lincoln Auditorium the night of Oct. 20 has the full name of Sergei Vassilievitch Rachmaninoff. One of the outstanding musicians of the epoch, his personality has colored three fields of music, his gifts having brought him fame as a composer, pianist and conductor. Tall, austere, aristocratic in bearing, he makes a commanding figure on the concert platform. His pianistic art has ripened with each succeeding year.

As a composer Rachmaninoff ranks among the foremost of the day. He has written practically all forms of music—operas, symphonies, piano compositions, songs. To those unfamiliar with his other works, he is known as the composer of the famous C Sharp Minor Prelude. As a conductor also he has achieved distinction, though of late he has appeared in this role infrequently. In his native Russia for a number of years he conducted the Moscow Symphony Orchestra and the Moscow Private Opera. Later in England he conducted the London Symphony. In the United States he was offered the conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, but refused since he preferred his career as a pianist. An exile from Russia since the revolution Rachmaninoff now passes winters in the United States and his summers in Switzerland.

Hailing Hofmann and Music of the U. S. A.

"WIZARD of the piano" and "pianist's pianist" are among the titles bestowed on Josef Hofmann, who is to be first of a distinguished group of soloists scheduled to appear with Dr. Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its formal season, opening on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 13 and 14.

Hofmann is unsurpassed for command of tone color, for resources of power.

"You could be a proficient performer yourself, and yet time and again as you sat there listening to Hofmann, you would wonder how he got his effects," as one critic puts it.

The appearance of the great Polish-born artist as soloist with the Boston orchestra is his first since the days of Karl Muck. Although he has been a frequent visitor in Symphony Hall for his own recitals.

Another important announcement is the appearance of the celebrated 'cellist, Emanuel Feuermann, as soloist for the first time with the Boston orchestra. Truly great exponents of the 'cello are limited in number, and he is in the top rank of that select group.

The illustrious Spaniard, Casals, has justified his immense reputation before the Boston Symphony audiences, and so also, in recent years, has the dazzling Russian, Piatigorsky. But through exigencies of arranging dates, not until this season will Feuermann's virtuosity, long famous in Vienna, be mated with Boston's great orchestra.

DR. KOUSSEVITZKY has assembled the programs for two special pre-season concerts of American compositions to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall next week as a tribute to the American symphonic composer. This music will be offered free to the public on Wednesday evening and Friday afternoon, October 4 and 6.

Selecting works for these programs primarily from the point of view of balance and contrast, Dr. Koussevitsky has contrived also to give a broad view of American musical history in point of time and geographical distribution.

Of the elder generation, the late Arthur Foote and Henry Hadley and the living John Alden Carpenter will be represented.

Among the younger generation, the names range from Deems Taylor and Howard Hanson to Randall Thompson, Roy Harris and his pupil, William Schuman. Of particular interest in this category is the revival of the Piano Concerto in F of the late George Gershwin.

Geographically, the composers represent the nation, on the basis of birthplace, from Brooklyn of Gershwin to the Wahoo, Nebraska, of Howard Hanson, and Lincoln County, Oklahoma, of Roy Harris.

FIRST PROGRAM

Arthur Foote — Suite in E Major for String Orchestra, op. 63.

Henry Hadley — "Angelus" from the Symphony No. 3 in B Minor, op. 60.

John Alden Carpenter—"Skyscrapers," a ballet of American life.

Deems Taylor — Suite, "Through The Looking Glass."

Howard Hanson — Symphony No. 2, "Romantic."

SECOND PROGRAM

William Schuman—American Festival overture (1939).

George Gershwin — Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in F.

Roy Harris — Symphony No. 3—in one movement.

Randall Thompson — Symphony No. 2 in E Minor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y.
GAZETTE
OCT 1 - 1939

NEW York's mayor, Fiorello La Guardia, wielded a baton in Carnegie Hall the other night. Standing in the same spot where Toscanini, Stokowski, Koussevitsky and others have conducted, the mayor directed not the Philharmonic-Symphony, although once he did take them through a few passages but this time he led a combination of police, fire and sanitation bands. The players wore smart uniforms and the leader, a dinner coat. It all happened at band night of the American music festival presented by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

• • •

IT might interest local concert goers to learn that the New York debut of Helen Traubel, soprano who once appeared here on our local series, has again attained great success with the critics in the metropolis. Miss Traubel sang in Walter Damrosch's opera "The Man Without a Country," at the Metropolitan two years ago. (The soprano was not well received in Niagara Falls by many Civic Music subscribers). One critic concluded his flow of praise with these words:

"In all, Miss Traubel has the attributes that summon the name of Flagstad." This is definitely 'tops' to any critic of dramatic sopranos.

• • •

THE $400,000 fire in Los Angeles' famous Palomar ballroom has been laid to a resin-saturated rag which was used to wipe the strings of the musicians' instruments. Resin is highly inflammable and it is said that a musician may have inadvertently dropped the cloth upon a hot light bulb. Watch out, resin users, it sounds easy to do!

• • •

DUE to the fact that WPA music has gone on the rocks, practically speaking, the Buffalo orchestra will no longer be a federal organization. The Buffalo Philharmonic Society is having a drive with the hope of securing substantial backing for the orchestra. Franco Autori is engaged to continue as conductor and outstanding soloists are scheduled to appear with the orchestra this winter. Among the names recently added to the list of local artists is Paola Autori, wife of the conductor and formerly well-known as a star of the Philadelphia Opera company. Benny Goodman, playing a Mozart concerto for clarinet, will be a special attraction to Buffalo orchestra followers.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARPERS MAGAZINE
NEW YORK, N. Y.
OCT - - 1939

HOW TO TAME AN ORCHESTRA

"OUR experts to-night will include those veterans of 'Information, Please,' John Kieran, sports-writer and general walking encyclopedia, Franklin P. Adams, columnist of the New York Post, and Oscar Levant, composer and musical director of 'The American Way.' . . ."

Yes, that is the Oscar Levant who writes this month on "Music in Aspic." Next month he will contribute to HARPER's some observations upon Koussevitzky, Toscanini, and Stokowski. Both contributions will find their way somewhat later into a book which Mr. Levant is preparing for publication by Doubleday, Doran.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAYTON, OHIO
JOURNAL
OCT 1 - 1939

Finnish Government Honors Sibelius With Concert Given in Carnegie Hall

By Pierre Key

NEW YORK, Oct. 1.

Honoring Finland's greatest composer is one credit mark, at any rate, to give the New York world's fair. Grover Whalen and his associates haven't done much for the music arts; but that was no surprise. The trend, if not the dismal finish, was indicated in the early stages of planning.

However, the program devoted exclusively to the works of Jean Siebelius (and presented in Carnegie hall, not in the Music hall on the fairgrounds) was an occasion, as it deserved to be. Georg Schneevoight, foremost conductor of Finland, led the NBC Symphony orchestra. Sponsored by the Finnish government, the concert was an occasion.

I first observed Schneevoight's work as a conductor when he was preparing the Los Angeles Philharmonic orchestra for its opening concerts of the 1924-25 season.

There was musicianship and seriousness in all this Finn did, but he did not become popular with the Los Angeles public. Will Clark, who founded and backed and bossed the Los Angeles band in those days, didn't care particularly for Schneevoigt. So he remained only a short time. He is an abler conductor today, of course, and his interpretations of the Sibelius compositions performed will be considered in this department next week.

Off the Mark

This coming week brings the first of the long list of recitals and concerts New York has scheduled for the current season. On Thursday Frieda Hempel will again face a New York audience in Town hall.

Miss Hempel made an excellent impression last season, in so far as her interpretive art goes. The voice was warm and responsive, too, in the medium and lower part of her scale. It was only when some of the top notes were delivered that one realized the Hempel vocal resources (once so superlative) were not those of her Metropolitan Opera days.

It is hard for a distinguished artist to give up public appearances. There is a something in the blood, it would seem, that demands being satisfied in the only way satisfaction is to be had.

Prodigy Missteps

The immature pianist or violinist walks out on the stage, bows awkwardly (as is to be expected), waddles to the place to sit or stand, and begins the torture.

I use the word "torture" advisedly, since most of these 9, 10, 11 and 12-year-old youngsters have nothing to offer beyond some finger facility and a certain superficial musicality.

Why do they come before us? Ask their parents. For they are the responsible persons; responsible and, with almost no exceptions, unreasoning in their attitudes and in their procedure. We are to have a 12-year-old pianiste in Town hall recital this week. I, for one, shall not be present.

Irresponsible Managers

Looking back over a lengthy span, I can visualize an army of irresponsible concert and opera managers. If they have a marked degree of managerial ability it doesn't show, because there is invariably a financial smash up . . . more or less similar to the one that happened in Boston some ten days ago, when Lawrence Tibbett sent his cheque for $1,000 for carfare to get the stranded young men and women back to New York.

The "misses" of this undesirable portion of the music managerial fraternity are familiar enough to serve as a warning to the susceptible, yet they do not seem to be. For the same old games continue to be played in the same old way.

One of these days we may have a boss of music matters who will see to it that these persons are not permitted to get themselves, as well as others, into trouble. Until then the lambs will probably continue to be led to poor pastures.

Unionism in Music

Unionism is going farther and deeper into things every day. Its power in music has resulted in a change in the orchestra which was originally chosen to participate in the Carnegie hall festival of American Music week celebrating the 25th anniversary of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

The Boston symphony, with Koussevitzky conducting, was to have been the organization to appear in this connection. But the hand of unionism reached out and pushed the Bostonians out of the picture . . . in favor of the New York Philharmonic symphony, which is a unionized orchestra.

The band from the Hub will be here during the course of the 1939-40 season, however, with ten concerts which already are virtually sold out.

(All rights reserved)

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEX.
TIMES-HERALD
OCT 1 - 1939

THE MUSICAL DIGEST:

Sibelius Honored in Gala Event

BY PIERRE V. R. KEY,
Special Correspondent of The News.

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—Honoring Finland's greatest composer is one credit mark, at any rate, to give the New York World's Fair. Grover Whalen and his associates haven't done much for the music arts; but that was no surprise. The trend, if not the dismal finish, was indicated in the early stages of planning.

However, the program devoted exclusively to the works of Jean Sibelius, and presented in Carnegie Hall, not in the Music Hall on the fair grounds, was an occasion, as it deserved to be, Georg Schneevoigt, foremost conductor of Finland, led the NBC Symphony Orchestra. Sponsored by the Finnish Government, the concert was an occasion.

I first observed Schneevoit's work as a conductor when he was preparing the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra for its opening concerts of the 1924-25 season.

There was musicianship and seriousness in all this Finn did, but he did not become popular with the Los Angeles public. Will Clark, who founded and backed and bossed the Los Angeles band in those days, didn't care particularly for Schneevoigt. So he remained only a short time. An abler conductor today, of course, and his interpretations of the Sibelius compositions performed will be considered in this department next week.

Unionism in Music.

Unionism is going farther and deeper into things every day. Its power in music has resulted in a change in the orchestra which was originally chosen to participate in the Carnegie Hall festival of American Music Week celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

The Boston Symphony, with Koussevitzky conducting, was to have been the organization to apear in this connection. But the hand of unionism reached out and pushed the Bostonians out of the picture . . . in favor of the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, which is a unionized orchestra.

The band from the Hub will be here during the course of the 1939-40 season, however, with ten concerts which already are virtually sold

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WAKEFIELD, MASS.
ITEM
OCT 2 - 1939

Dr. Koussevitzky, Symphony Orchestra conductor, says the war is ruining music in Europe. If what passes for music in America at times could be eliminated the same way, it might not be too high a price to pay.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
Long Island Advocate
OCT 2 - 1939

WORDS WITHOUT MUSIC

By LOUIS REID

(Music Features & Photo Syndicate, N. Y.)

WHEN it comes to songwriting industry consider Schubert and Brahms. Schubert, greatest creative genius in the world of song, wrote more than 600 melodies. Brahms, between symphonies and innumerable dance compositions, wrote more than 200 songs.

Louis Reid

Hackneyed Classics

Few are the listeners at the concert recitals of eminent vocalists who are familiar with more than a half dozen songs by these composers. Season after season, concert vocalists, touring the country, offer the same hackneyed songs of these composers. Inexplicable is their lack of enterprise and imagination in program-building.

Vocalists, for that matter, might also look into the unhackneyed songs of Mendelssohn, Debussy, Grieg and Hugo Wolf.

◆

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is 58 years old, the Chicago 48, the Philadelphia 39 . . . John Charles Thomas has added Peter De Rose's ballad, "I Heard a Forest Praying" to his repertoire . . . Al Roth is preparing a Children's Symphony, made up largely of arrangements of nursery jingles . . Rob Roy Peery is the only composer member of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to receive two degrees of Doctor of Music this Summer. Midland College in Nebraska and Wittenberg in Ohio honored him . . Dance bandleaders are using nicknames more and more to identify themselves,

Fritz Kreisler, A.S.C.A.P
(Has yet to yield to Radio) viz: Red Norvo, Skinnay Ennis, Sandy Williams . . Debussy's "Clair de Lune" sounds most haunting when played by a full symphony orchestra . . . Ernest Krenek, composer of the first jazz-opera, "Jonny Spielt Auf," is coming to America this winter as a guest conductor, briefly, of the Boston Symphony

Paderewski Surrenders

For many years that leading musical triumvirate Paderewski, Kreisler and Rachmaninoff have resisted successfully the baits and blandishments of the broadcasters. Like water wearing away a stone, the radio men kept at work, finally ist (he is now 78 years old) performed for the first time on American airwaves on Sept 25 from Lausanne, Switzerland. He played for one hour—the longest piano recital yet to be scheduled on the radio.

◆

Ignac Jan Paderewski is the only member of the triumvirate who is not an American citizen and hence is not eligible to membership in the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. Fritz Kreisler and Sergei Rachmaninoff were naturalized several years ago, spend Sergei Rachmaninoff, A.S.C.A.P.

(The air waves haven't got him either, as yet)

most of their time in this country. Occupying the topmost rank of concert artists, they devote most of their great talent and energy to the platform. It is only occasionally, between engagements and during rest periods, that they find the time and stimulation to compose.

Their creative periods are invariably attended by enormous success. They continue among the best sellers in the classical field, Kreisler, most notably for his "Caprice Viennois, "Leibesfreud," "The Old Refrain" and Rachmaninoff for his Preludes and Concertos.

It is by these compositions that their names will endure down the ages, just as Paderewski will be chiefly remembered for his Minuet.

◆

It is nothing new for an actor in pictures to sit down at a piano and play a melody that is soundless. It is something else again for a whole group of actors to do it. To achieve authenticity, convince any stray musicians looking at them on the screen that they were actually playing, the orchestra appearing in "Alexander's Ragtime Band," and consisting of Tyrone Power, violin; Don Ameche, piano; Jack Haley, drums; Chick Chandler, slip horn and Wally Vernon, piccolo and saxophone, had to study music, learn to play their instruments and rehearse just like regular bandmen.

The group took lessons for three months, and while their playing was not on the final sound track, they could have made Irving Berlin's music, had it been necessary

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BANGOR, ME.
NEWS
OCT 2 - 1939

Symphony Ticket Sale Announced

First Concert Last of November; Solo Artists

The Bangor symphony orchestra, as has already been briefly announced, is conducting the advance sale of season tickets for its annual concert series. Following the policy inaugurated with the establishment of evening rather than afternoon programs, the concerts will again be four in number. Soloists will also be presented, as in the last two seasons.

The soloists presented last season were among the highlights of a generally brilliant musical year in Bangor. The opening of the symphony series, with Emily Roosevelt as soloist, and the closing event with Mary Hayes Hayford as the soloist, were memorable concerts.

The first concert will be given probably the third week in November, the exact date at present depending upon the booking of solo talent.

A recent survey of the symphony orchestras in the United States reveals a phenomenal growth of public interest in symphonic music. Orchestras have in the past decade increased at staggering figures, and Bangor should take a just pride in the fact that our own orchestra was one of the earliest organized. It is believed that the Bangor symphony may be the oldest in continuous service of all the minor symphony orchestras. When it was founded in 1896 there were but three permanent symphony orchestras in this country, those of New York, Boston, and Chicago. Now not only have all the great cities permanent orchestras, but the smaller cities to a size even smaller than Bangor are rapidly realizing the importance of this musical phase as a civic and cultural asset.

33

THIS CLIPPING FROM
COLUMBUS, MISS.
Commercial Dispatch

OCT 2 - 1939

MUSIC PROFS HAD ENJOYABLE TIME

Professors Spent Summer Traveling, Studying or Attending Concerts

Six members of the music faculty of Mississippi State College for Women have resumed their positions after interesting vacations to all parts of the country. Miss Poindexter, who has been absent some time on account of illness, is cordially greeted by faculty and students again, and Robert N. Lee of Iowa becomes a new member of the piano department.

Theodore Russell, head of the department ,and Mrs. Russell enjoyed a trip to New York during the past summer at which time Mr. Russell selected seven new Steinway Grand pianos which are now being used in the Music Hall. Both Mr. and Mrs. Russell were taken through the Steinway factory by Henry Steinway. From there Mr. and Mrs. Russell went to Stockbridge, Massachusetts where they attended the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at the Tanglewood Estate which was formerly the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne. The estate was given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the understanding that concerts would be given there each summer. These concerts are directed by Serg Koussevitsky, one of the foremost conductors of the world today. There are 125 musicians in the orchestra.

Miss Elizabeth Adams, assistant professor of music, studied at the New England Conservatory of Music coached by Miss Gladys Childs, during the summer months. Miss Adams whose home is in Holliston, Massachusetts was the week-end guest of Mrs. Frank James, well-known philanthropist, of Newport where she gave a musical program. The assisting artist on the program was Count Henri di Teberge, a violinist of note.

Miss Evelyn Hohf, instructor of music, spent an interesting summer attending several college commencements. Among those she attended were Yankton, South Dakota; American Conservatory of Music in Chicago; and the Western Reserve in Cleveland where her sister received her Master's degree in music this summer. Miss Hohf also visited the Black Hills in South Dakota where the four presidents, Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt, are being carved.

Miss Eta Atwell, assistant professor of music, attended the San Francisco World's Fair this summer. Particularly of interest to Miss Atwell was the distinguished School for Music in El Paso, Texas where she attended recitals given by the students of the school. In addition to the Fair, Miss Atwell enjoyed the San Francisco museums. Her return trip included stops in Utah and Colorado.

Adolph Weiser, assistant professor of music, studied this summer at the Chicago Musical College under Rudolph Ganz who is the head of the Musical College. Mr. Weiser took a class in piano, and a class in problems of interpretation and teaching, both taught by Dr. Ganz.

Dr. Ganz is considered one of the greatest living concert pianists, and once visited our campus as conductor of the Saint Louis Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Weiser won the scholarship by playing in competition with twenty-five or thirty people which enabled him to take this work in chicago. He studied composition with Dr. Noetle who does all the arranging of orchestra for Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Weiser wrote nine new chorus numbers which he submitted for publication. Two have been definitely accepted while the others are under consideration. All of these numbers are for men and women's glee clubs and some for mixed choruses.

Robert N. Lee, of Estherville, Iowa joins the music faculty as assistant professor in the piano department. He received his B. M. and M. M. degrees from Oberlin College in Ohio, where he was a pupil of both David Moyer and Frank Shaw. He was formerly a student at the American Conservatory in Chicago, and has done considerable composing.

THIS CLIPPING FROM OAKLAND, CAL.
TRIBUNE

OCT 1 - 1939

Symphony Finished

Nikolai Lopatnikoff has finished his second symphony and expects to have it performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ATHENS, GA.
BANNER HERALD

OCT 2 - 1939

University Music Department Prepared For Largest Enrollment In Its History

With the opening of the University of Georgia 1939 fall quarter session, faculty members of the art and music departments are prepared to offer to the largest student enrollment in history highly specialized training in the subjects whic hthese departments embrace. Hugh Hodgson, director of the Division of Fine Arts and head of the department of music, strongly advocates the doctrine that teachers should remain students.

Mr. Hodgson, in addition to travels in the Bermudas with Mrs. Hodgson, attended series "B" of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Kousevitzky conducting offered concerts which Mr. Hodgson describes as "modern but conventional." He also herad chamber music programs featuring the Gordon and South Mountain String Quartets, and visiting historic points in New England, became acquainted with personalities prominent in the field of the arts and letters as well as musicians.

Lamar Dodd, head of the art department, after completing his usual heavy teaching routine for the first term of summer school, spent some time in New York studying not only the paintings of the old masters, but also the trends in contemporary painting. Copperhill, Tennessee, a small mining community abounding in interesting painting material, is the scene of Mr. Dodd's canvas which has won recognition at the World's Fair.

Bauer Pupil

After the first term of summer school, Michael McDowell toured to New York where he studied with Harold Bauer, internationally known pianist. He also attended some of the Berkshire Festival concerts.

Miss Annie Mae Holliday, popular painting teacher, spent the first part of the summer in New York City working with Robert Phillipp at the Art Students' League. She visited the museums, galleries, and other points of interest, including the World's Fair exhibits and Radio City. In New York, Miss Holliday met up with Miss Laura Blackshear, her niece, Laura Rogers, and Minnie Cutler, a former art student at the University.

James Couper Wright, visiting associate professor of art, who received the greater part of his art training in his native Scotland and who has travelled extensively in Europe, has been teaching design at Occidental College, San Diego, California, for the past year. This summer, in addition to his college routine, he taught watercolor for the San Diego Art Society and at the same time studied design under Norman Edwards.

Kimble Returns

Miss Lucile Kimble is back with the music department after a year's study in Rome, Italy, at the Santa Cecilia Conservatory. She brings with her the inspiration derived from Alfredo Casella, her teacher, as well as contacts made with other musicians, and being in a center that was constantly alive with the best literature from the fields of symphonic, operatic and instrumental music.

Travelling to points of interest that have connection with her teaching field, Miss Mildred Ledford, associate professor of art, visited Williamsburg, Virginia. There Miss Ledford studied the colonial architecture and furnishings, especially those of the governor's palace that were so beautifully preserved by John D. Rockefeller. Later, in New York City, Miss Ledford was attracted by the fair exhibits of design, textiles, pottery, glass and furniture, and in Asheville by the Biltmore, a splendid reprodutcion of a French chateau with all its rich rugs and art objects. -

Vacationing at Highlands,, N. C., Miss Jennie Belle Smith, assistant prfoessor of Public School Music, attended the Education Conference September 18-22.

Alan Kuzmicki, student assistant in the art department, spent the season at Ohio State University stulying ceramics, sculpture, and design in preparation for the courses in pottery that the department again offers after the lapse of a year. While at Ohio he also studied art education for further preparation in teaching at the University Demonstration school.

Reuben Gambrell, graduate assistant, completed work on the designs for the University commemorative plate, soon be issued, and somehow found time to do preliminary drawings for a Federal Mural Competition while continuing work on his master's requirements here and at the same tim eassisted Mr. Dodd and Miss Dick, the latter a guest teacher for the summer session.

A glimpse at the files of Miss Nolee May Dunaway, secretary to Mr. Hodgson, and Miss Sarah Hill, secretary to Mr. Dodd, attest the growth of these two departments.

Interesting exhibitions, the annual music festival, a concert series, the presentation of an oratorio and opera are included among plans for the year.

Begins Thursday

The most popular event of the year, the Music Appreciation Hour, begins Thursday at eight o'clock in the University chapel. A piano recital given by Hugh Hodgson will include the following musical selections:

Sarabande, Ramea-M c Dowell; Moonlight Sonata, Adagio sostenuto, Allegretto, Presto agiato, Beethoven; Polonaise in C sharp minor, Nocturne in C sharp minor, Madurka in F sharp minor, Revolutionary Etude, Chopin; Petrarch's Sonnet No. 123, Liszt; Concert Etude, Liszt; Perpetual Motion, Tocatta, Poulenc; Polka Dots, Hodgson.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Evening Public Ledger

OCT 2 - 1939

Josef Hofmann

JOSEF HOFMANN ILL ON WEST COAST

Pianist Who Gave Up Home Here to Aid Son Undergoes Operation

Josef Hofmann, famous pianist, who gave up his Merion home recently to go into exile on a Pacific isle for the sake of his son's health, is ill himself in a Los Angeles hospital.

All his Eastern concerts have been postponed until at least January 1, it was announced today in New York by his manager, F. C. Schang, who verified reports of Dr. Hofmann's illness.

Schang said the Polish - born pianist underwent an operation for an abscess on the lower back. He did not know just when the operation was performed, but said he received a letter from Dr. Hofmann's physician last Friday, saying that it would take at least two weeks for the incision to heal.

The physician also said that the pianist would need at least a month's rest.

Boston Date Canceled

The operation forced the cancellation of Dr. Hofmann's appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduled for late this month, and of a New York recital set for November 12.

"Dr. Hofmann probably will start his concert tour in the Northwest some time after the middle of November," Schang said.

Last June Dr. Hofmann gave a "farewell" concert at Robin Hood Dell. He and his family then went to a small, unnamed island off the southern coast of California, in the hope that the climate and dust-free air there would help his son, Edward Bok Hofmann, 8, to overcome a sinus condition and susceptibility to colds.

As a boy of 11, Hofmann made his professional debut on the Academy of Music stage fifty years ago. Since then he has been closely identified with music in Philadelphia.

In 1924 he was named director of the Curtis Institute. Eleven years later he gave up active instruction, but continued as director until last year.

Made Hobby of Inventions

Although Dr. Hofmann devoted most of his time to playing and composing, he found enough time to follow other hobbies, including inventions.

He is the holder of more than sixty patents. When he was a boy he developed extensions so that his legs could manipulate piano pedals. At 14 he invented a pair of folding roller skates. Other inventions include three automobiles, several boats, a screw-legged piano stool that won't slip, noiseless oil burners and numerous smaller gadgets.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
HERALD-DISPATCH

OCT 2 - 1939

Q. When will the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts begin? E. H.

A. The 59th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open in Boston on Friday afternoon, October 13th. There will be two pre-season concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York City, on October 5 and 7 as part of the festival to be given by the American Society of Composers.

33

THIS CLIPPING FROM COLUMBUS, MISS.
Commercial Dispatch

OCT 2 - 1939

MUSIC PROFS HAD ENJOYABLE TIME

Professors Spent Summer Traveling, Studying or Attending Concerts

Six members of the music faculty of Mississippi State College for Women have resumed their positions after interesting vacations to all parts of the country. Miss Poindexter, who has been absent some time on account of illness, is cordially greeted by faculty and students again, and Robert N. Lee of Iowa becomes a new member of the piano department.

Theodore Russell, head of the department ,and Mrs. Russell enjoyed a trip to New York during the past summer at which time Mr. Russell selected seven new Steinway Grand pianos which are now being used in the Music Hall. Both Mr. and Mrs. Russell were taken through the Steinway factory by Henry Steinway. From there Mr. and Mrs. Russell went to Stockbridge, Massachusetts where they attended the Berkshire Symphonic Festival at the Tanglewood Estate which was formerly the home of Nathaniel Hawthorne. The estate was given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra with the understanding that concerts would be given there each summer. These concerts are directed by Serg Koussevitsky, one of the foremost conductors of the world today. There are 125 musicians in the orchestra.

Miss Elizabeth Adams, assistant professor of music, studied at the New England Conservatory of Music coached by Miss Gladys Childs, during the summer months. Miss Adams whose home is in Holliston, Massachusetts was the week-end guest of Mrs. Frank James, well-known philanthropist, of Newport where she gave a musical program. The assisting artist on the program was Count Henri di Teberge, a violinist of note.

Miss Evelyn Hohf, instructor of music, spent an interesting summer attending several college commencements. Among those she attended were Yankton, South Dakota; American Conservatory of Music in Chicago; and the Western Reserve in Cleveland where her sister received her Master's degree in music this summer. Miss Hohf also visited the Black Hills in South Dakota where the four presidents, Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt, are being carved.

Miss Eta Atwell, assistant professor of music, attended the San Francisco World's Fair this summer. Particularly of interest to Miss Atwell was the distinguished School for Music in El Paso, Texas where she attended recitals given by the students of the school. In addition to the Fair, Miss Atwell enjoyed the San Francisco museums. Her return trip included stops in Utah and Colorado.

Adolph Weiser, assistant professor of music, studied this summer at the Chicago Musical College under Rudolph Ganz who is the head of the Musical College. Mr. Weiser took a class in piano, and a class in problems of interpretation and teaching, both taught by Dr. Ganz.

Dr. Ganz is considered one of the greatest living concert pianists, and once visited our campus as conductor of the Saint Louis Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Weiser won the scholarship by playing in competition with twenty-five or thirty people which enabled him to take this work in chicago. He studied composition with Dr. Noetle who does all the arranging of orchestra for Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Weiser wrote nine new chorus numbers which he submitted for publication. Two have been definitely accepted while the others are under consideration. All of these numbers are for men and women's glee clubs and some for mixed choruses.

Robert N. Lee, of Estherville, Iowa joins the music faculty as assistant professor in the piano department. He received his B. M. and M. M. degrees from Oberlin College in Ohio, where he was a pupil of both David Moyer and Frank Shaw. He was formerly a student at the American Conservatory in Chicago, and has done considerable composing.

THIS CLIPPING FROM OAKLAND, CAL.
TRIBUNE

OCT 1 - 1939

Symphony Finished

Nikolai Lopatnikoff has finished his second symphony and expects to have it performed by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Evening Public Ledger

OCT 2 - 1939

Josef Hofmann

JOSEF HOFMANN ILL ON WEST COAST

Pianist Who Gave Up Home Here to Aid Son Undergoes Operation

Josef Hofmann, famous pianist, who gave up his Merion home recently to go into exile on a Pacific isle for the sake of his son's health, is ill himself in a Los Angeles hospital.

All his Eastern concerts have been postponed until at least January 1, it was announced today in New York by his manager, F. C. Schang, who verified reports of Dr. Hofmann's illness.

Schang said the Polish - born pianist underwent an operation for an abscess on the lower back. He did not know just when the operation was performed, but said he received a letter from Dr. Hofmann's physician last Friday, saying that it would take at least two weeks for the incision to heal.

The physician also said that the pianist would need at least a month's rest.

Boston Date Canceled

The operation forced the cancellation of Dr. Hofmann's appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, scheduled for late this month, and of a New York recital set for November 12.

"Dr. Hofmann probably will start his concert tour in the Northwest some time after the middle of November," Schang said.

Last June Dr. Hofmann gave a "farewell" concert at Robin Hood Dell. He and his family then went to a small, unnamed island off the southern coast of California, in the hope that the climate and dust-free air there would help his son, Edward Bok Hofmann, 8, to overcome a sinus condition and susceptibility to colds.

As a boy of 11, Hofmann made his professional debut on the Academy of Music stage fifty years ago. Since then he has been closely identified with music in Philadelphia.

In 1924 he was named director of the Curtis Institute. Eleven years later he gave up active instruction, but continued as director until last year.

Made Hobby of Inventions

Although Dr. Hofmann devoted most of his time to playing and composing, he found enough time to follow other hobbies, including inventions.

He is the holder of more than sixty patents. When he was a boy he developed extensions so that his legs could manipulate piano pedals. At 14 he invented a pair of folding roller skates. Other inventions include three automobiles, several boats, a screw-legged piano stool that won't slip, noiseless oil burners and numerous smaller gadgets.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ATHENS, GA.
BANNER HERALD

OCT 2 - 1939

University Music Department Prepared For Largest Enrollment In Its History

With the opening of the University of Georgia 1939 fall quarter session, faculty members of the art and music departments are prepared to offer to the largest student enrollment in history highly specialized training in the subjects whic hthese departments embrace. Hugh Hodgson, director of the Division of Fine Arts and head of the department of music, strongly advocates the doctrine that teachers should remain students.

Mr. Hodgson, in addition to travels in the Bermudas with Mrs. Hodgson, attended series "B" of the sixth annual Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. The Boston Symphony Orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky conducting offered concerts which Mr. Hodgson describes as "modern but conventional." He also herad chamber music programs featuring the Gordon and South Mountain String Quartets, and visiting historic points in New England, became acquainted with personalities prominent in the field of the arts and letters as well as musicians.

Lamar Dodd, head of the art department, after completing his usual heavy teaching routine for the first term of summer school, spent some time in New York studying not only the paintings of the old masters, but also the trends in contemporary painting. Copperhill, Tennessee, a small mining community abounding in interesting painting material, is the scene of Mr. Dodd's canvas which has won recognition at the World's Fair.

Bauer Pupil

After the first term of summer school, Michael McDowell toured to New York where he studied with Harold Bauer, internationally known pianist. He also attended some of the Berkshire Festival concerts.

Miss Annie Mae Holliday, popular painting teacher, spent the first part of the summer in New York City working with Robert Phillipp at the Art Students' League. She visited the museums, galleries, and other points of interest, including the World's Fair exhibits and Radio City. In New York, Miss Holliday met up with Miss Laura Blackshear, her niece, Laura Rogers, and Minnie Cutler, a former art student at the University.

James Couper Wright, visiting associate professor of art, who received the greater part of his art training in his native Scotland and who has travelled extensively in Europe, has been teaching design at Occidental College, San Diego, California, for the past year. This summer, in addition to his college routine, he taught watercolor for the San Diego Art Society and at the same time studied design under Norman Edwards.

Kimble Returns

Miss Lucile Kimble is back with the music department after a year's study in Rome, Italy, at the Santa Cecilia Conservatory. She brings with her the inspiration derived from Alfredo Casella, her teacher, as well as contacts made with other musicians, and being in a center that was constantly alive with the best literature from the fields of symphonic, operatic and instrumental music.

Travelling to points of interest that have connection with her teaching field, Miss Mildred Ledford, associate professor of art, visited Williamsburg, Virginia. There Miss Ledford studied the colonial architecture and furnishings, especially those of the governor's palace that were so beautifully preserved by John D. Rockefeller. Later, in New York City, Miss Ledford was attracted by the fair exhibits of design, textiles, pottery, glass and furniture, and in Asheville by the Biltmore, a splendid reprodutcion of a French chateau with all its rich rugs and art objects.

Vacationing at Highlands,, N. C., Miss Jennie Belle Smith, assistant prfoessor of Public School Music, attended the Education Conference September 18-22.

Alan Kuzmicki, student assistant in the art department, spent the season at Ohio State University stulying ceramics, sculpture, and design in preparation for the courses in pottery that the department again offers after the lapse of a year. While at Ohio he also studied art education for further preparation in teaching at the University Demonstration school.

Reuben Gambrell, graduate assistant, completed work on the designs for the University commemorative plate, soon be issued, and somehow found time to do preliminary drawings for a Federal Mural Competition while continuing work on his master's requirements here and at the same tim eassisted Mr. Dodd and Miss Dick, the latter a guest teacher for the summer session.

A glimpse at the files of Miss Nolee May Dunaway, secretary to Mr. Hodgson, and Miss Sarah Hill, secretary to Mr. Dodd, attest the growth of these two departments.

Interesting exhibitions, the annual music festival, a concert series, the presentation of an oratorio and opera are included among plans for the year.

Begins Thursday

The most popular event of the year, the Music Appreciation Hour, begins Thursday at eight o'clock in the University chapel. A piano recital given by Hugh Hodgson will include the following musical selections:

Sarabande, Ramea-M c Dowell; Moonlight Sonata; Adagio sostenuto, Allegretto, Presto agiato, Beethoven; Polonaise in C sharp minor, Nocturne in C sharp minor, Madurka in F sharp minor, Revolutionary Etude, Chopin; Petrarch's Sonnet No. 123, Liszt; Concert Etude, Liszt; Perpetual Motion, Tocatta, Poulenc; Polka Dots, Hodgson.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HUNTINGTON, W. VA.
HERALD-DISPATCH

OCT 2 - 1939

Q. When will the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts begin? L. H.

A. The 59th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open in Boston on Friday afternoon, October 13th. There will be two pre-season concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York City, on October 5 and 7 as part of the festival to be given by the American Society of Composers.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

OCT 3 - 1939

Music and The Drama

BOSTON SYMPHONY ANNOUNCES PLANS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced interesting features for its 59th season which will open in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Friday afternoon, October 13th. This will be the 16th successive year of the famous orchestra under the direction of its illustrious conductor, Serge Koussevitzky. The Boston season will consist of the usual 24 pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts, and 6 pairs of Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts in Symphony Hall. There are to be concerts as usual in other cities of New England, New York and the west.

There will be two pre-season concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York, when on October 5 and 7 the Orchestra, under its regular conductor, presents two programmes entirely of American music, old and new, as part of the festival to be given by the American Society of Composers.

The choice of Boston's orchestra and conductor to present the music of this country is consistent with the keen interest Koussevitzky has always taken in American musical trends. A remark once made by H. T. Parker, late critic of the Boston Transcript, is now equally applicable: "Dr. Koussevitzky holds American composers to the highest standards, gives them also the same consideration and opportunity as he follows with Europeans. There is no more to be asked; no more to be done. It is the way of a just, open, wisely fostering mind. Various epitaphs are written for men when they finish their work, withdraw and die. Dr. Koussevitzky will deserve one of the choicest and rarest: Friend and Encourager of Youth. And to no neglect of the preceding, semi-established, but still ripening, generation."

The classical repertory will of course have the largest place upon Dr. Koussevitzky's programme. He intends a larger repetition than usual of the music of Bach and Mozart. Bach's Mass in B minor will be performed at a special concert in April. The season will end with a Tchaikovsky Festival, in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of the birth of the Russian composer. There will be a concert performance of the opera "Pique-Dame," in addition to orchestral works. Announced revivals are Mahler's "Song of the Earth," Debussy's "Martyrdom of Saint Sebastian," and Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," to be conducted by the composer. A new symphony of Stravinsky will also be introduced. Serge Prokofieff has been invited to play a piano concerto of his own.

Soloists engaged for the Friday and Saturday series include the pianists Josef Hofmann, Rudolf Serkin, Walter Gieseking, and Jan Smeterlin; the violinists Jascha Heifetz, and Joseph Szigeti; 'cellist Emanuel Feuermann; and the celebrated saxophone virtuoso Sigurd Rascher.

OSTON TRAVELER, TUESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1939

FREE CONCERTS BY SYMPHONY

The definitive programs are now announced, which Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has assembled for two special pre-season concerts of American compositions to be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall., this week as a tribute to the American symphonic composer. This music will be offered free to the public tomorrow evening and Friday afternoon.

Selecting works for these programs primarily from the point of view of balance and contrast, Dr. Koussevitzky has contrived also to give a broad view of American musical history in point of time and geographical distribution.

Of the older generation, the late Arthur Foote and Henry Hadley and the living John Alden Carpenter will be represented. Among the younger generation, the names range from Deems Taylor and Howard Hanson to Randall Thompson, Roy Harris and his pupil, William Schuman. Of particular interest in this category is the revival of the Piano Concerto in F of the late George Gershwin.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

OCT 3 - 1939

WORDS About Music — And Musicians

Four soloists and three orchestras will be featured in the Smith College concert course for the year 1939-40, to be given in John M. Greene Hall in Northampton.

The course will open with a concert by Marian Anderson, contralto, followed by the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Joseph Iturbi; Adolf Busch, violinist, and Rudolf Serkin, pianist; the Cleveland Orchestra, under the direction of Artur Rodzinski; Alexander Brailowsky, pianist, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Serge Kussevitzky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HOLYOKE, MASS.
Transcript Telegram

OCT 3 - 1939

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who was told 15 years ago, when he assumed conductorship of the Boston Symphony orchestra, that American concert-goers disliked American compositions, today has proof that his faith in this country's composers was justified. With two full programs of American compositions, he will play to 5000 music lovers tomorrow night and Friday afternoon—and 5000 applications could not be filled.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORTHAMPTON, MASS.
GAZETTE

OCT 3 - 1939

NORTH ADAMS MAN NAMED MEMBER OF BOSTON SYMPHONY

North Adams, Oct. 3—Pasquale Cardillo, son of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Cardillo of 102 Francis street, this city, and a former North Adams Transcript pressroom boy, has been chosen as a full time member of the Boston Symphony orchestra. During the orchestra's Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts at Lenox he was a substitute member of the famous organization.

Mr. Cardillo, who is but 21 years old, is only 14 weeks out of the New England Conservatory of Music. He was selected for the symphony by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, the conductor. At 21, Cardillo will be one of the youngest members of the orchestra, known as one of the finest in the world.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

OCT 3 - 1939

Big Demand Reported For Boston Concerts

Boston, Oct. 3.—(AP)—Evidence of public enthusiasm for the serious musical work on American composers was seen today by officials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an overwhelming demand for seats for two free concerts to be conducted by the world-famous organization as a tribute to the American composer.

The management announced today that thus far, applications for seats at the two concerts, tomorrow and Friday, had exceeded the capacity of the hall by 5,000.

The orchestra's ussian-born conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, for 15 years has insisted upon giving place on his symphonic programs to American composers. Similar tributes are being conducted by musical organiaztions in New York this week.

THIS CLIPPING FROM WATERVILLE, ME.
SENTINEL

OCT 3 - 1939

Q.—When will the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts begin? L. H.

A.—The 59th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open in Boston on Friday afternoon, October 13th. There will be two preseason concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York City, on October 5 and 7 as part of the festival to be given by the American Society of Composers.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

OCT 3 - 1939

NORTH ADAMS MAN NAMED MEMBER OF BOSTON SYMPHONY

North Adams, Oct. 3—Pasquale Cardillo, son of Mr and Mrs Anthony Cardillo of 102 Francis street, this city, and a former North Adams Transcript pressroom boy, has been chosen as a full time member of the Boston Symphony orchestra. During the orchestra's Berkshire Symphonic festival concerts at Lenox he was a substitute member of the famous organization.

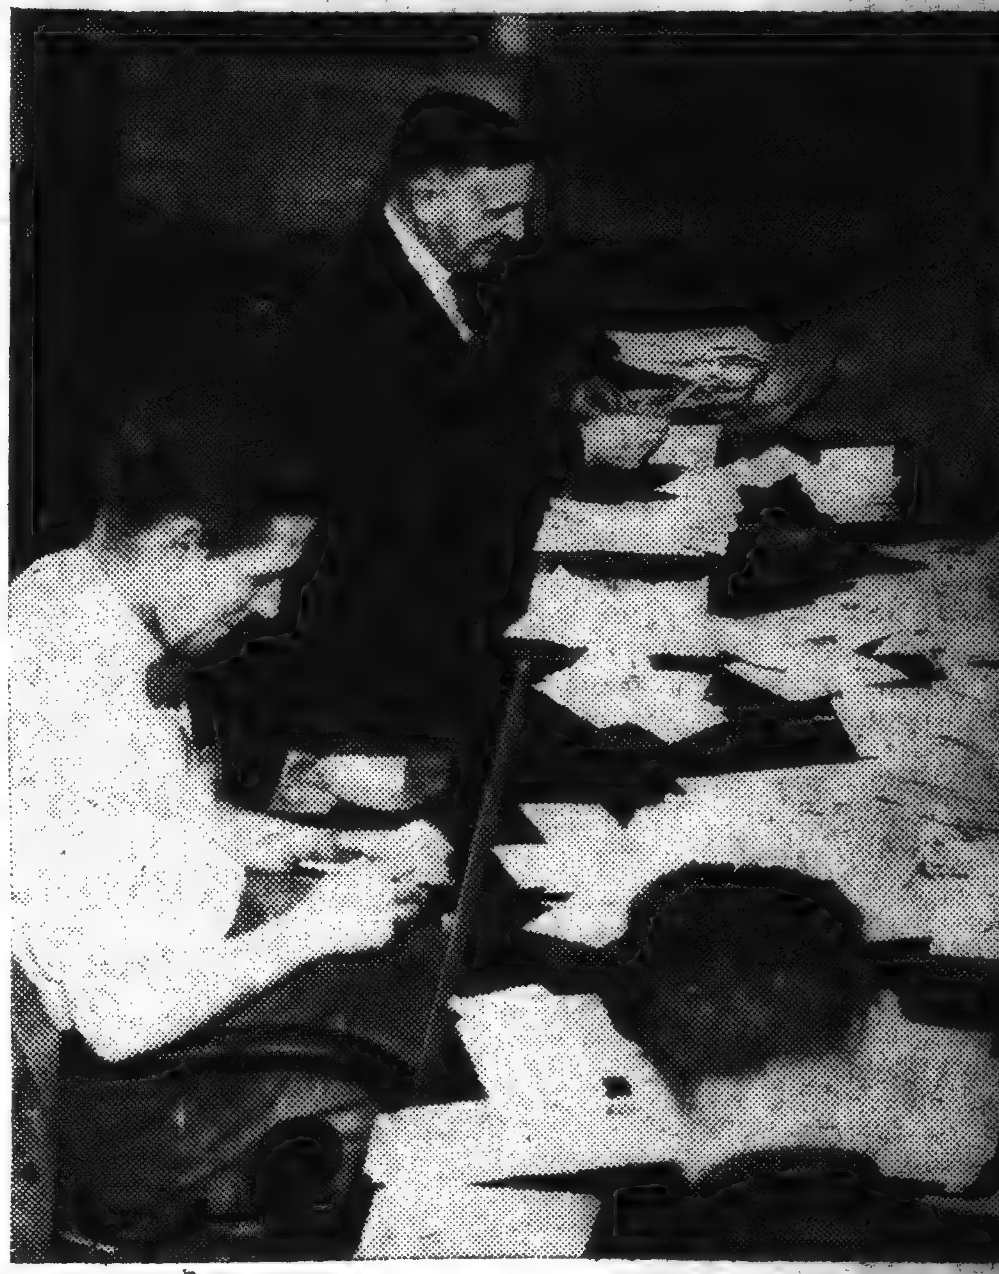
Mr Cardillo, who is but 21 years old, is only 14 weeks out of the New England Conservatory of Music. He was selected for the Symphony by Dr Serge Koussevitzky, the conductor. At 21, Cardillo will be one of the youngest members of the orchestra, known as one of the finest in the world. On entering Drury high school Cardillo became a member of the clarinet section of the band as a freshman and played for four years. Frequently he took the baton ordinarily in the hands of James M. Chambers, supervisor of music, to conduct the band at rehearsals and in concerts.

Encouraged by Prof Chambers, the young man enroled in the conservatory after his graduation from Drury in 1935. After school hours Cardillo worked in the Traanscript pressroom and during vacations throughout his high school course. Today he began his work with the famous orchestra in rehearsals preparing for the coming season which will open at Symphony hall in Boston, the night of the 13th.

With part of his earnings at Lenox in August, Pasquale bought a fine meerschaum pipe for his father, who gave him his first music lessons 10 years ago. The elder Cardillo put the pipe away, saying, "Pasty, I'll not smoke it until you are really a full member of the Boston Symphony." Saturday night he smoked it, years sooner than he or his son thought he might.

OCTOBER 3, 1939 C 34 Page Five

N. E. Love of Good Music Exhausts Symphony Staff



(Photo by Nilsson)

Symphony Hall employees tackle a few of the letters from all over New England written by lovers of American symphonic music who hope to attend the free concerts to be given tomorrow evening and Friday afternoon by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Western Union Boy Is First in Ticket Rush For Two Free Concerts by Boston's Orchestra

Exhausted Symphony Hall employees have mailed out the last available sets of tickets for the free concerts of American symphonic music to be given tomorrow evening and Friday afternoon by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Those who appealed too late or neglected to enclose a stamped envelope will receive a special souvenir program containing program notes by John N. Burk, Symphony annotator, and portraits of the nine American composers whose works will be played at the two concerts.

First of the thousands from all over New England to apply for tickets to the festival was a Western Union messenger boy who presented his own handwritten telegram at the box office. When the great mail rush began appeals came from doctors, lawyers, chemists, the local police department, the Lowell Boy Scout Council, the Federal Reserve Bank, and most of the New England conservatories, music schools and colleges that have courses in music.

The constantly increasing mail disclosed lovers of American symphonic music in a Cambridge firm specializing in hand-split cedar shingles, a chemical company in Everett, a Cliftondale shoe factory, and the Grid Flat Slab Corporation, on Dudley street.

In order to avoid confusion, it was decided to have all seats reserved for the two concerts. For the first time, the familiar Friday afternoon "rush seat" crowd will not have to gather on the Huntington avenue steps several hours before concert time. They will probably come anyway, from force of habit.

According to George E. Judd, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the general tenor of the letters of requests was: "I would like to hear both concerts, but if I may have only one set of tickets, my preference is for . . ."

"The people who come to Symphony are nice people," says Mr. Judd.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD

OCT 3 - 1939

Josef Hofmann Seriously Ill, Eastern Concerts Delayed

Josef Hofmann, famous pianist who went into voluntary exile with his family in June on an island off the Pacific coast in an effort to rebuild his son's health, is seriously ill in a Los Angeles hospital.

The noted Polish-born Philadelphia musician's condition became known when F. C. Schang, his New York manager, announced yesterday that he had been forced to cancel an Eastern concert tour until January 1, at least.

Abscess Operation.

Schang said the musician underwent an operation for an abscess on his back. He did not know when it had been performed, he said, but had received a letter from the pianist's physician saying it would take at least two weeks to heal, and that the patient would need at least a month's rest.

An appearance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra late this month and a New York recital November 12 were among the engagements canceled.

Hofmann probably will resume playing sometime late in November in the Northwest, Schang said.

Went to Unnamed Island.

Last June Hofmann gave a farewell concert at Robin Hood Dell before leaving for an unnamed island off the California coast in an effort to build up the resistance of his son, Edward Bok Hofmann, 8, to colds and a sinus condition.

He was director of the Curtis Institute until last year, actively instructing there from 1924 to 1935. He made his debut as a pianist on the Academy of Music stage 50 years ago.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PHILADELPHIA, PA.
RECORD
OCT 3 - 1939

'A Hundred Men and a—'

By EDWIN H. SCHLOSS

Oscar Levant, the well-known keyboard wit, Broadway orchestra leader and musical savant of radio's "Information Please" program, recently lifted the curtain which shields the private lives of the New York Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony and Philadelphia Orchestras from the public eye and showed us those august institutions in the boudoir with their hair down.

The boudoir of the symphony orchestra is, of course, the rehearsal platform. There, according to the shrewd and impish Mr. Levant, not only are beautiful programs born and temperaments ventilated, but reputations are made, lost, strayed or stolen.

Not Made in Heaven

In an article in the October number of Harper's magazine, "Music in Aspic," Levant says: [illegible] the relationship of conductor and orchestra much depends on the first meeting. As a human equation it has much the same atmosphere as the meeting of the principals in a prearranged Hungarian wedding, with the bride and bridegroom thoroughly aware that they are fated to make common cause whether they are enamoured of each other or not. These are not marriages made in heaven; they are made mostly in the office of Impresario Arthur Judson."

Though Levant does not explicitly say so, his Hungarian wedding analogy is carried further by his later observations about the "post-marital" relations of conductor and players. "Contrary to the general opinion," he says, "a good orchestra can do more to ruin a conductor than it can to make him." This, however, applies to guest conductors or transient podium tenants rather than to the more firmly enthroned monarchs of the baton.

Utter Control Rare

"Essentially," he says, "the question is one of domination. . . . Utter control of a performance . . . is a rare talent among musicians, possessed among conductors now active in America only by Koussevitzky, Stokowski and Toscanini.

"But 'authority,' 'beat' and 'knowledge of scores' aside . . . actual control of an orchestra comes when the conductor has in his inside pocket a contract for next season; in other words, the right to hire and fire." Mr. Levant says the attitude of the average orchestra-player toward any new conductor may be epitomized as 'a hundred men and a louse'." On the other side, the attitude of the new conductor, he says, may vary as widely as the divergent literary tempers of Dale Carnegie's "How to Win Friends and Influence People" and Adolf Hitler's "Mein Kampf."

"When Stokowski spent his memorable and brief guest engagement with the (New York) Philharmonic some years ago," Levant recalls, "he certainly did not leave his authority, beat and knowledge of scores in the green room with his topcoat. But no one will forget the playing of the Philharmonic which led Stokowski to describe the two weeks as 'one of the unhappiest experiences of my life'."

Banished for Smile

The trouble, according to Levant, was precipitated by the New York orchestra's mistaken sense of loyalty to Toscanini plus their resistance to a display of some of our own maestro's imperial hauteur. He says:

"When one of the bass players had the effrontery to smile during a Stokowskian monologue he was summarily banished from the rehearsal. Expecting contrition, Stokowski was astounded to hear him say: 'Thank you—I haven't had a Thursday evening off all winter'."

"This witticism evoked a giggle from a rear desk 'cellist, who promptly was directed to join his colleague in exile."

"Plainly," surmises Mr. Levant, "neither of these occurrences would have happened in Philadelphia, where Stokowski exacts his 'hundred percent co-operation,' not merely by will power, his beautiful hands and exquisite gestures, but more pertinently through the knowledge that dismissal from a rehearsal is not for a day or week but for all time."

When Willem Mengelberg first exercised his exciting personality on the men of the Philharmonic early in the 1920's their eager acceptance, Levant says, finally rose to blind idolatry. Yet when a dark cloud in the form of Arturo Toscanini appeared on the horizon and it became apparent a new boss was coming in, Mengelberg was "gleefully sabotaged."

Still 'Slave Driver'

Toscanini, in turn, passed through the same cycle of question, resentment and endearment. And though the great Arturo stands today the unquestioned maestro of maestros among all musicians, he is still known among the boys as "the slave driver."

Levant's article contributes to the Toscanini legend with several instances of the maestro's incredible memory—his correction of Ernest Schelling in a rehearsal when Schelling made a trifling deviation in one of his own (Schelling's) piano concertos; his astounding ability to remember passages for the third flute and fourth horn however deeply embedded in the score.

As is well known, Toscanini's approach to an orchestra is more in the spirit of Hitler than Dale Carnegie, though his approach to a score is with the art of a poet, with the authority of a god.

Toscanini at rehearsal may be crisp and taciturn. But he also may rave and swear in gutter Italian, break his baton, weep, go down on his knees, or throw a music stand at an errant trombonist. Offenders sometimes are pulverized with a torrent of abuse, but an exceptionally well-played solo will bring the happy performer a beaming smile or even in extreme moments a kiss on both cheeks.

Stokowski Was Ready

Mr. Levant concludes his little back-stage excursion among the maestros and their minions with a story about Stokowski which this paper has been unable to verify among orchestra players—perhaps for obvious reasons.

The story is that one spring the Philadelphia orchestra men were mystified at Stokowski's insistence on repeated rehearsals of the "Blue Danube," which was not programmed for the rest of the season. The mystery, Levant says, was cleared up some months later when Stokowski, seated in the audience at a concert in Robin Hood Dell, was summoned to the stage and asked to conduct.

"Stokowski resisted," according to Levant, "with gestures of unassuming modesty, listened to the applause, and finally indicated to the audience that he was powerless to deny its wish. He mounted the stage then and led an 'impromptu' performance of—'The Blue Danube'."

TOSCANINI
Was he responsible . . .

STOKOWSKI
. . . for his "unhappiest experience"?

THIS CLIPPING FROM WORCESTER, MASS.
GAZETTE
OCT 3 - 1939

AT FESTIVAL TONIGHT

Simon Barer, sensational Russian pianist, is shown practicing this morning for his Worcester debut at the second concert of the 80th Worcester Music Festival tonight at 8.15 in the Auditorium.

Famous Russian Pianist Festival Artist Tonight

Simon Barer to Play Concerto in E Flat Major by Liszt—Last Night's Opening Concert Starring Helen Jepson Marked Success

Opening an American tour of 35 appearances with tonight's Worcester Music Festival concert, Simon Barer, one of the world's leading pianists, will play the difficult and brilliant Concerto in E Flat Major by Franz Liszt, accompanied by the orchestra. It was the playing of this piece which won Mr. Barer the Rubinstein prize, highest award at Petrograd Conservatory of Music, just 20 years ago. He is now 42.

Besides the E Flat Concerto, which demands the flawless technique for which the Russian musician has received acclaim in Europe and more recently in South America, Mr. Barer will play piano solos from the fantasy "Don Juan."

Just returned from a series of concerts in Brazil, where he was, as he points out, "clever enough to go instead of Europe this Summer," Mr. Barer will play with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra in November, with the Boston Symphony in December and in January with the New York Philharmonic.

To Become Citizen

A native of Russia, he left that country in 1929 and has lived in Sweden, Paris and Berlin. His enthusiastic reception by New York critics two seasons ago and his admiration for the United States has led him to make application for citizenship in this country.

"Song of the Fates," by Johannes Brahms, opening number on tonight's program, is classed with best of the composer's productions. It affords the orchestra an opportunity for a wide range of effects. The English translation of Goethe's words is the work of John F. Kyes, Jr., of Worcester.

The orchestra will play Fountains of Rome, by Ottorino Respighi, who died in Rome in 1936. In this piece the composer has expressed the visions brought to him on contemplation of four Roman fountains.

"Songs of Conquest," by Harl McDonald. expressing the spirit of the pioneer and his will to dominate the New World, will be sung by the Festival chorus. The composer, at present director of music at University of Pennsylvania, describes the musical style as "neo-primitive," combining the spirit of primitive music with modern.

The final number on the program will be Polka and Fugue from the opera "Schwanda the Bag-piper," an orchestral piece by Jaromir Weinberger. The opera from which the polka and fugue are taken is a comedy based on Czech folk music and lore.

Successful Opening

Last night's opening concert, starring Helen Jepson, soprano, Robert Weede, baritone, the Festival chorus and orchestra, was a traditionally colorful event and attracted the largest first night audience in many years. Enthusiastic applause brought back Miss Jepson for three encores in addition to the scheduled arias in the second half of the program.

Worcester's own Festival chorus of 450 voices was highly complimented by Director Albert Stoessel, who considers this year's group the best chorus he has conducted in his 15 seasons with the Festival. Mr. Stoessel praised the orchestra, ninety-five per cent of whose members have played many times in the Festival orchestra.

Hamilton B. Wood, president of Worcester County Musical Association, stated the opening night was very satisfactory from the standpoint of attendance.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS

OCT 3 - 1939

Walter, Molinari, Defauw Will Conduct NBC Symphony

Performance of a new symphony by the well-known American composer Roy Harris; guest appearances by Bruno Walter, Bernardino Molinari and Desire Defauw, and a series of sixteen chamber music broadcasts in addition to the orchestra's Beethoven Festival, are outstanding events of the winter schedule announced for Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Symphony Orchestra.

Toscanini's opening broadcast, on Saturday, Oct. 14, from 9 to 10:30 p.m. over the NBC Blue Network, will feature works of Schubert, Strauss, Haydn and Respighi.

The Harris composition, a symphony in one movement, is the poser's third in this form. It will be given its initial radio performance on Toscanini's second broadcast, Saturday, Oct. 21. The symphony has been played in concert only twice before, both times by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony.

Toscanini's first series of concerts will conclude on Dec. 2, with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, probably to be heard from Carnegie Hall during the regular NBC Symphony Hour. He will be followed by Desire Defauw, Belgian conductor, making his first appearance in America, who will conduct the concerts of Dec. 9 to 30; Bernardino Molinari, to be heard Jan. 6 to Feb. 3, and Bruno Walter, guest conductor on the concerts of Feb. 10 to March 9.

On March 16, Toscanini will return for his second concert series, which will continue until May 4. His concluding concert of this series will feature Vladimir Horowitz, world-famous pianist, as soloist in Rachmaninov's Third Concerto.

A series of chamber music broadcasts, supplementing the Beethoven Festival planned by the NBC Symphony for the concerts of Oct. 28 to Dec. 2, will feature performance of all of Beethoven's string quartets in alternate weekly broadcasts by the American Art Quartet and the Primrose String Quartet, beginning Sunday, Oct. 8, from 9:30 to 10 p.m., Central standard time, over the NBC Red Network.

The two quartets, formed from the string section of the NBC Symphony, are headed by Carlton Cooley and William Primrose, the men who share the first viola desk in the Symphony.. Other members of the Primrose Quartet are Oscar Schumsky and Josef Gingold, violins, and Harvey Shapiro, cello. The American Art Quartet includes, besides Cooley, Max Hollander and Paul Winter, violins, and Carl Stern, cello.

The program for Toscanini's opening concert, Oct. 14, follows:

Symphony in B Minor, Unfinished..Schubert
Don Juan ....Strauss
Symphony No. 99, in E-Flat Major...Haydn
Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor......
.... Bach-Respighi

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

OCT 3 - 1939

N. Y. Hears Festival Of American Music

A giant free festival of American music, including performers ranging from the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra to Benny Goodman and other prominent swing band leaders, is being given as a gift to the American public by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers at Carnegie Hall in New York City this week. Seven nighttime concerts and a children's matinee will include the greatest names in American musical composition, appearing both in person and through their works

Programs range from a jitterbug evening featuring the bands of Paul Whiteman, Benny Goodman, Fred Waring and Glenn Miller, to two symphonic evenings of all-American music to be rendered by the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society under distinguished conductors, with Albert Spalding, violinist, and Abram Chasins, pianist, as soloists. All participating artists are being paid their full rates, but the members of the ASCAP are giving the concerts free to the American public.

During the week the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitsky will give two free concerts in tribute to American composers at Symphony Hall, Boston.

Gene Buck, president of the ASCAP, said: "Twenty-five years ago, a small group of composers, authors and publishers was led by the late great Victor Herbert in the foundation of ASCAP. In the quarter of a century which has elapsed since then, our society has grown to a position unequalled in the history of the world for the protection, advancement and encouragement of creative musical artists. The public has, of course, had a great part in this. The music loving public has supported us directly and indirectly, and this support has made possible the great growth of American music, both classical and popular. It is in recognition of this that ASCAP wants now to give to the American public, without cost, this series of concerts in which the best in American music, past and present, will be played and sung for the benefit of thousands of music lovers."

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES-DISPATCH

OCT 3 - 1939

Swift, Swiss Movement

Editor of The Times-Dispatch:

Sir,—Following the thought of your editorial in this morning's Times-Dispatch about the orchestra of Hastings, England, banning Wagner music, a searchlight backwards would focus on the practice of the Metropolitan Opera House the two years we were in the World War.

The irony of being deprived of their rare beauty is that some of Wagner's most exquisite works were created while he was a political exile from Germany. The bitterness toward him from his own German people magnifies and gives full value to the magnanimity of soul and colossal courage of Franz Liszt in introducing and conducting Wagner's works at Bayreuth during this critical time.

"Keep Art Out of It," would also have saved the spectacle which occurred upon our declaring war with Germany when Dr. Muck, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was adamant in refusing to open his concerts with "The Star Spangled Banner" upon the ground that it did not qualify musically to merit a place on the program.

When they called him pro-German, the situation became serious and Dr. Muck claimed Swiss citizenship. The incomparable James Huneker delightfully diagnosed it by saying: "Dr. Muck is a German conductor with Swiss movements."

F. L. R.

Richmond.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

OCT 4 - 1939

Boston Concert Seats All Taken

Popularity of Serious American Works Indicated

BOSTON, Oct. 3 (AP)—Evidence of public enthusiasm for the serious musical work of American composers was seen today by officials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an overwhelming demand for seats for two free concerts to be conducted by the world-famous organization as a tribute to the American composer.

The management announced today that thus far applications for seats at the two concerts, tomorrow and Friday, had exceeded the capacity of the hall by 5000.

The orchestra's Russian-born conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, for 15 years has insisted upon giving place on his symphonic programs to American composers. Similar tributes are being conducted by musical organizations in New York this week.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

OCT 4 - 1939

TOSCANINI TO PLAY BEETHOVEN MUSIC

Melody Festival Over WSGN; Fred Allen, Burns-Allen Back On Air Waves

BY TURNER JORDAN
Radio Editor, The Birmingham News

ARTURO TOSCANINI, considered the greatest figure in contemporary music, has programmed a musical event of first magnitude for his third season as conductor of the NBC Symphony Orchestra which begins over the network, including WSGN, Saturday, Oct. 14.

This column twice has scheduled Toscanini's return for this coming Saturday, but the event is definitely down for Oct. 14.

A Beethoven Festival, six weeks in duration, beginning Oct. 28, which will include performances of all Beethoven's nine symphonies, as well as other major orchestral works, is the musical innovation planned for the hour and a half concerts over WSGN-NBC.

The festival, six all-Beethoven concerts concluding with an elaborate presentation of Beethoven's loftiest musical achievement, the Ninth Symphony, by the orchestra, massed chorus, and soloists, will terminate the first series of concerts to be performed by the NBC Symphony Orchestra under Toscanini's direction. After a short leave of absence, he will return to NBC for a second series of weekly concerts which are to be heard later in the season.

The maestro spent August conducting at the International Music Festival in Lucerne, Switzerland, then boarded the United States liner Manhattan for America.

Performance of a new symphony by the well-known American composer, Roy Harris; guest appearances by Bruno Walter, Bernardino Molinari and Desire Defauw, and a series of 16 chamber music boadcasts in addition to the ochestra's Beethoven Festival, are outstanding events of the Winter schedule announced for Toscanini and the NBC Symphony Orchestra.

Toscanini's opening broadcast, Saturday, Oct. 14, from 9 to 10:30 p.m. over WSGN-NBC, will feature works of Schubert, Strauss, Haydn and Respighi.

The Harris composition, a symphony in one movement, is the composer's third in this form. It will be given its initial radio performance on Toscanini's second broadcast, Saturday, Oct. 21. The symphony has been played in concert only twice before, both times by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony.

Toscanini's first series of concerts will conclude Dec. 2, with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, probably to be heard from Carnegie Hall during the regular NBC Symphony hour. He will be followed by Desire Defauw, Belgian conductor, making his first appearance in America, who will conduct the concerts of Dec. 9 to 30; Bernardino Molinari, to be heard Jan. 6 to Feb. 3, and Bruno Walter, guest conductor on the concerts of Feb. 10 to March 9.

On March 16, Toscanini will return for his second concert series, which will continue until May 4. His concluding concert of this series will feature Vladimir Horowitz, world-famous pianist, as soloist in Rachmaninoff's Third Concerto.

The program for Toscanini's opening concert, Oct. 14, follows:

Symphony in B Minor, "Unfinished" (Schubert); Don Juan (Strauss); Symphony No. 99, in E-Flat Major (Haydn); Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor (Bach-Respighi).

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS

OCT 4 - 1939

SymphonyMay PresentFamous El Salon Mexico This Season

A local premiere of Aaron Copland's striking El Salon Mexico, the most popular orchestral composition since Ravel's Bolero, is contemplated by Jacques Singer, Dallas Symphony conductor, according to word sent by him from New York to Herbert Carpenter, orchestra manager. This work, created by the talented New York composer out of tunes and ryhthms heard in Mexico City honky-tonks, has been sensationally presented and later recorded by that old jazz combination known as the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Sergei Koussevitzky conducting.

Other modern American works under consideration are an Overture on an American Tune by Douglas Moore, Robert Sanders Barn Dance, possibly a first performance anywhere of the Song of the Nightingale by Bernard Rogers, the Third Symphony by Roy Harris, with whom Mr. Singer has visited at his home in Montclair, N.J.; a Negro Folk Symphony by William L. Dawson.

Relatively modern European novelties now being studied are La Calinda and the Two Acquarelles by the late Frederick Delius and Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree by the Czech composer, Jaromir Weinberger, whose Polka and Fugue from the opera Schwanda have been played successfully in Dallas.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle

OCT 4 - 1939

HANSON TO BE BOSTON GUEST

Dr. Howard Hanson, director of Eastman School of Music, left Rochester last night for Boston to be guest tonight of the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it will play Dr. Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony. This was commissioned by the Boston Symphony for performance in 1930, the orchestra's 50th anniversary year, and was performed for the first time in that year in Boston, Dr. Serge Koussevitsky conducting.

In a letter written by Dr. Koussevitsky to Dr. Hanson, the Boston conductor states that later in the season he will play Dr. Hanson's third symphony in Boston and asks that he be permitted also to give the work its New York premiere in a concert by the Bostonians in that city during the same week. Dr. Koussevitski also says that he plans to give all three of Dr. Hanson's symphonies in series form in Boston.

The "Romantic," Dr. Hanson's second symphony, was played in a series of American music programs performed in Europe with Dr. Herman Scherchen conducting and called by him in Musical America, "probably the most significant work of those played." It is familiar to Rochester hearers, but the third symphony has yet to be given a public performance in this city.

Saturday Dr. Hanson will conduct a performance of his tone poem, "Pan and the Priest," in Carnegie Hall by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra at the final concert of this week's Festival of American Music.

Record Oct 4-1939.

American Music at Symphony

First of two free concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with all-American programs, will be given at Symphony Hall tonight. Dr. Koussevitzky's program includes Arthur Foote's E major suite for strings, the "Angelus" movement from Henry Hadley's third symphony, John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers" ballet music, Deems Taylor's "Through a Looking Glass" suite and Howard Hanson's "Romantic" symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM JACKSONVILLE, ILL.
JOURNAL 36

OCT 4 - 1939

Concert Series For 1939-40 Announced

Musicians To Feature Programs To Be Presented In City

Joseph C. Clelland, director of the MacMurray College Conservatory, has announced the MacMurray College-Community Concert series for 1939-40. This series will again be presented in the Jacksonville high school auditorium and will include four outstanding concerts. Each of the four artists on the program are internationally famous.

Henry Jackson, a young Californian with an outstanding reputation as a brilliant pianist, will open the series with a concert on Friday evening, October 27, at 8:15. Mr. Jackson, who won an ovation with the symphony in Chicago this summer, has also been soloist with a number of the leading symphony orchestras on the continent.

Hertha Glatz, contralto, and Franz Rupp, pianist, will give a song recital the evening of November 17. In Hertha Glatz the musical world has an artist with the rare gift of being equally excellent in the fields of concert, oratorio and opera. Miss Glatz was born in Vienna and studied there at the State Academy of Music. At the age of 18 she made her debut in opera. She has been guest artist at all of the important festivals in Europe. In this country Miss Glatz is at present a member of the San Francisco, Chicago, and St. Louis operas. Many Jacksonville people will remember her as the leading contralto of the opera series given in St. Louis last spring.

The world's outstanding cellist, Emmanuel Feuerman, will give a recital in Jacksonville Tuesday evening, Jan. 9. Mr. Feuerman will appear this year as soloist with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, the Boston Symphony, the Cleveland Symphony, as well as with a number of other orchestras. The Chicago American on Jan. 25, 1939, writes about Mr. Feuerman's playing. "This performance has never been excelled in the history of cello playing." Olin Downes of the New York Times writes, "A sheer joy to the ear and understanding."

Arthur Rubenstein, world famous pianist, will conclude the series Friday evening, March 8. Mr. Rubenstein was born in Lodz, Poland. This city has been very much in the news of the recent war days. Rubenstein made his first public appearance at the age of seven in Warsaw, Poland. With the exception of his childhood teacher, Breithaupt, Rubenstein is largely self-taught. One Chicago paper writes, "Not only the greatest pianist but one of the greatest interpretative artists. Rubenstein is monumental."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

OCT 4 - 1939

CONSERVATORY ADDS BEDROSSIAN TO STAFF

Aram Bedrossian, Springfield flautist, has joined the faculty of the Springfield Conservatory of Music. Mr. Bedrossian is a graduate of Classical High and has studied flute with Paul Seiheneichen of New York and George Laurent, first flautist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

He has been a member of the Springfield Federal Orchestra and has been heard with numerous ensemble groups. He studied interpretation with the late Aurelio Giorni and harmony and composition with Charles Mackey. He is an active member of the Junior Extension of the Tuesday Morning Music Club and has been teaching for the past four years.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS

OCT 3 - 1939

Walter, Molinari, Defauw Will Conduct NBC Symphony

Performance of a new symphony by the well-known American composer Roy Harris; guest appearances by Bruno Walter, Bernardino Molinari and Desire Defauw, and a series of sixteen chamber music broadcasts in addition to the orchestra's Beethoven Festival, are outstanding events of the winter schedule announced for Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Symphony Orchestra.

Toscanini's opening broadcast, on Saturday, Oct. 14, from 9 to 10:30 p.m. over the NBC Blue Network, will feature works of Schubert, Strauss, Haydn and Respighi.

The Harris composition, a symphony in one movement, is the poser's third in this form. It will be given its initial radio performance on Toscanini's second broadcast, Saturday, Oct. 21. The symphony has been played in concert only twice before, both times by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony.

Toscanini's first series of concerts will conclude on Dec. 2, with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, probably to be heard from Carnegie Hall during the regular NBC Symphony Hour. He will be followed by Desire Defauw, Belgian conductor, making his first appearance in America, who will conduct the concerts of Dec. 9 to 30; Bernardino Molinari, to be heard Jan. 6 to Feb. 3, and Bruno Walter, guest conductor on the concerts of Feb. 10 to March 9.

On March 16, Toscanini will return for his second concert series, which will continue until May 4. His concluding concert of this series will feature Vladimir Horowitz, world-famous pianist, as soloist in Rachmaninov's Third Concerto.

A series of chamber music broadcasts, supplementing the Beethoven Festival planned by the NBC Symphony for the concerts of Oct. 28 to Dec. 2, will feature performance of all of Beethoven's string quartets in alternate weekly broadcasts by the American Art Quartet and the Primrose String Quartet, beginning Sunday, Oct. 8, from 9:30 to 10 p.m., Central standard time, over the NBC Red Network.

The two quartets, formed from the string section of the NBC Symphony, are headed by Carlton Cooley and William Primrose, the men who share the first viola desk in the Symphony.. Other members of the Primrose Quartet are Oscar Schumsky and Josef Gingold, violins, and Harvey Shapiro, cello. The American Art Quartet includes, besides Cooley, Max Hollander and Paul Winter, violins, and Carl Stern, cello.

The program for Toscanini's opening concert, Oct. 14, follows:

Symphony in B Minor, Unfinished..Schubert
Don Juan ....Strauss
Symphony No. 99, in E-Flat Major...Haydn
Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor......
.... Bach-Respighi

THIS CLIPPING FROM
MONTREAL, CAN.
GAZETTE

OCT 3 - 1939

N. Y. Hears Festival Of American Music

A giant free festival of American music, including performers ranging from the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra to Benny Goodman and other prominent swing band leaders, is being given as a gift to the American public by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers at Carnegie Hall in New York City this week. Seven nighttime concerts and a children's matinee will include the greatest names in American musical composition, appearing both in person and through their works.

Programs range from a jitterbug evening featuring the bands of Paul Whiteman, Benny Goodman, Fred Waring and Glenn Miller, to two symphonic evenings of all-American music to be rendered by the New York Philharmonic Symphony Society under distinguished conductors, with Albert Spalding, violinist, and Abram Chasins, pianist, as soloists. All participating artists are being paid their full rates, but the members of the ASCAP are giving the concerts free to the American public.

During the week the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will give two free concerts in tribute to American composers at Symphony Hall, Boston.

Gene Buck, president of the ASCAP, said: "Twenty-five years ago, a small group of composers, authors and publishers was led by the late great Victor Herbert in the foundation of ASCAP. In the quarter of a century which has elapsed since then, our society has grown to a position unequalled in the history of the world for the protection, advancement and encouragement of creative musical artists. The public has, of course, had a great part in this. The music loving public has supported us directly and indirectly, and this support has made possible the great growth of American music, both classical and popular. It is in recognition of this that ASCAP wants now to give to the American public, without cost, this series of concerts in which the best in American music, past and present, will be played and sung for the benefit of thousands of music lovers."

THIS CLIPPING FROM RICHMOND, VA.
TIMES-DISPATCH

OCT 3 - 1939

Swift, Swiss Movement

Editor of The Times-Dispatch:

Sir,—Following the thought of your editorial in this morning's Times-Dispatch about the orchestra of Hastings, England, banning Wagner music, a searchlight backwards would focus on the practice of the Metropolitan Opera House the two years we were in the World War.

The irony of being deprived of their rare beauty is that some of Wagner's most exquisite works were created while he was a political exile from Germany. The bitterness toward him from his own German people magnifies and gives full value to the magnanimity of soul and colossal courage of Franz Liszt in introducing and conducting Wagner's works at Bayreuth during this critical time.

"Keep Art Out of It," would also have saved the spectacle which occurred upon our declaring war with Germany when Dr. Muck, the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was adamant in refusing to open his concerts with "The Star Spangled Banner" upon the ground that it did not qualify musically to merit a place on the program.

When they called him pro-German, the situation became serious and Dr. Muck claimed Swiss citizenship. The incomparable James Huneker delightfully diagnosed it by saying: "Dr. Muck is a German conductor with Swiss movements."

F. L. R.

Richmond.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

OCT 4 - 1939

Boston Concert Seats All Taken

Popularity of Serious American Works Indicated

BOSTON, Oct. 3 (AP)—Evidence of public enthusiasm for the serious musical work of American composers was seen today by officials of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in an overwhelming demand for seats for two free concerts to be conducted by the world-famous organization as a tribute to the American composer.

The management announced today that thus far applications for seats at the two concerts, tomorrow and Friday, had exceeded the capacity of the hall by 5000.

The orchestra's Russian-born conductor, Serge Koussevitzky, for 15 years has insisted upon giving place on his symphonic programs to American composers. Similar tributes are being conducted by musical organizations in New York this week.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BIRMINGHAM, ALA.
NEWS

OCT 4 - 1939

TOSCANINI TO PLAY BEETHOVEN MUSIC

Melody Festival Over WSGN; Fred Allen, Burns-Allen Back On Air Waves

BY TURNER JORDAN
Radio Editor, The Birmingham News

ARTURO TOSCANINI, considered the greatest figure in contemporary music, has programmed a musical event of first magnitude for his third season as conductor of the NBC Symphony Orchestra which begins over the network, including WSGN, Saturday, Oct. 14.

This column twice has scheduled Toscanini's return for this coming Saturday, but the event is definitely down for Oct. 14.

A Beethoven Festival, six weeks in duration, beginning Oct. 28, which will include performances of all Beethoven's nine symphonies, as well as other major orchestral works, is the musical innovation planned for the hour and a half concerts over WSGN-NBC.

The festival, six all-Beethoven concerts concluding with an elaborate presentation of Beethoven's loftiest musical achievement, the Ninth Symphony, by the orchestra, massed chorus, and soloists, will terminate the first series of concerts to be performed by the NBC Symphony Orchestra under Toscanini's direction. After a short leave of absence, he will return to NBC for a second series of weekly concerts which are to be heard later in the season.

The maestro spent August conducting at the International Music Festival in Lucerne, Switzerland, then boarded the United States liner Manhattan for America.

Performance of a new symphony by the well-known American composer, Roy Harris; guest appearances by Bruno Walter, Bernardino Molinari and Desire Defauw, and a series of 16 chamber music boadcasts in addition to the ochestra's Beethoven Festival, are outstanding events of the Winter schedule announced for Toscanini and the NBC Symphony Orchestra.

Toscanini's opening broadcast, Saturday, Oct. 14, from 9 to 10:30 p.m. over WSGN-NBC, will feature works of Schubert, Strauss, Haydn and Respighi.

The Harris composition, a symphony in one movement, is the composer's third in this form. It will be given its initial radio performance on Toscanini's second broadcast, Saturday, Oct. 21. The symphony has been played in concert only twice before, both times by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony.

Toscanini's first series of concerts will conclude Dec. 2, with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, probably to be heard from Carnegie Hall during the regular NBC Symphony hour. He will be followed by Desire Defauw, Belgian conductor, making his first appearance in America, who will conduct the concerts of Dec. 9 to 30; Bernardino Molinari, to be heard Jan. 6 to Feb. 3, and Bruno Walter, guest conductor on the concerts of Feb. 10 to March 9.

On March 16, Toscanini will return for his second concert series, which will continue until May 4. His concluding concert of this series will feature Vladimir Horowitz, world-famous pianist, as soloist in Rachmaninoff's Third Concerto.

The program for Toscanini's opening concert, Oct. 14, follows:

Symphony in B Minor, "Unfinished" (Schubert); Don Juan (Strauss); Symphony No. 99, in E-Flat Major (Haydn); Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor (Bach-Respighi).

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS

OCT 4 - 1939

Symphony May Present Famous El Salon Mexico This Season

A local premiere of Aaron Copland's striking El Salon Mexico, the most popular orchestral composition since Ravel's Bolero, is contemplated by Jacques Singer, Dallas Symphony conductor, according to word sent by him from New York to Herbert Carpenter, orchestra manager. This work, created by the talented New York composer out of tunes and ryhthms heard in Mexico City honky-tonks, has been sensationally presented and later recorded by that old jazz combination known as the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Sergei Koussevitzky conducting.

Other modern American works under consideration are an Overture on an American Tune by Douglas Moore, Robert Sanders Barn Dance, possibly a first performance anywhere of the Song of the Nightingale by Bernard Rogers, the Third Symphony by Roy Harris, with whom Mr. Singer has visited at his home in Montclair, N.J.; a Negro Folk Symphony by William L. Dawson.

Relatively modern European novelties now being studied are La Calinda and the Two Acquarelles by the late Frederick Delius and Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree by the Czech composer, Jaromir Weinberger, whose Polka and Fugue from the opera Schwanda have been played successfully in Dallas.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle

OCT 4 - 1939

HANSON TO BE BOSTON GUEST

Dr. Howard Hanson, director of Eastman School of Music, left Rochester last night for Boston to be guest tonight of the Boston Symphony Orchestra when it will play Dr. Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony. This was commissioned by the Boston Symphony for performance in 1930, the orchestra's 50th anniversary year, and was performed for the first time in that year in Boston, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting.

In a letter written by Dr. Koussevitsky to Dr. Hanson, the Boston conductor states that later in the season he will play Dr. Hanson's third symphony in Boston and asks that he be permitted also to give the work its New York premiere in a concert by the Bostonians in that city during the same week. Dr. Koussevitski also says that he plans to give all three of Dr. Hanson's symphonies in series form in Boston.

The "Romantic," Dr. Hanson's second symphony, was played in a series of American music programs performed in Europe with Dr. Herman Scherchen conducting and called by him in Musical America, "probably the most significant work of those played." It is familiar to Rochester hearers, but the third symphony has yet to be given a public performance in this city.

Saturday Dr. Hanson will conduct a performance of his tone poem, "Pan and the Priest," in Carnegie Hall by the New York Philharmonic Orchestra at the final concert of this week's Festival of American Music.

Record Oct 4-1939.

American Music at Symphony

First of two free concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with all-American programs, will be given at Symphony Hall tonight. Dr. Koussevitzky's program includes Arthur Foote's E major suite for strings, the "Angelus" movement from Henry Hadley's third symphony, John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers" ballet music, Deems Taylor's "Through a Looking Glass" suite and Howard Hanson's "Romantic" symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM JACKSONVILLE, ILL.
JOURNAL
36

OCT 4 - 1939

Concert Series For 1939-40 Announced

Musicians To Feature Programs To Be Presented In City

Joseph C. Clelland, director of the MacMurray College Conservatory, has announced the MacMurray College-Community Concert series for 1939-40. This series will again be presented in the Jacksonville high school auditorium and will include four outstanding concerts. Each of the four artists on the program are internationally famous.

Henry Jackson, a young Californian with an outstanding reputation as a brilliant pianist, will open the series with a concert on Friday evening, October 27, at 8:15. Mr. Jackson, who won an ovation with the symphony in Chicago this summer, has also been soloist with a number of the leading symphony orchestras on the continent.

Hertha Glatz, contralto, and Franz Rupp, pianist, will give a song recital the evening of November 17. In Hertha Glatz the musical world has an artist with the rare gift of being equally excellent in the fields of concert, oratorio and opera. Miss Glatz was born in Vienna and studied there at the State Academy of Music. At the age of 18 she made her debut in opera. She has been guest artist at all of the important festivals in Europe. In this country Miss Glatz is at present a member of the San Francisco, Chicago, and St. Louis operas. Many Jacksonville people will remember her as the leading contralto of the opera series given in St. Louis last spring.

The world's outstanding cellist, Emmanuel Feuerman, will give a recital in Jacksonville Tuesday evening, Jan. 9. Mr. Feuerman will appear this year as soloist with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, the Boston Symphony, the Cleveland Symphony, as well as with a number of other orchestras. The Chicago American on Jan. 25, 1939, writes about Mr. Feuerman's playing. "This performance has never been excelled in the history of cello playing." Olin Downes of the New York Times writes, "A sheer joy to the ear and understanding."

Arthur Rubenstein, world famous pianist, will conclude the series Friday evening, March 8. Mr. Rubenstein was born in Lodz, Poland. This city has been very much in the news of the recent war days. Rubenstein made his first public appearance at the age of seven in Warsaw, Poland. With the exception of his childhood teacher, Breithaupt, Rubenstein is largely self-taught. One Chicago paper writes, "Not only the greatest pianist but one of the greatest interpretative artists. Rubenstein is monumental."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

OCT 4 - 1939

CONSERVATORY ADDS BEDROSSIAN TO STAFF

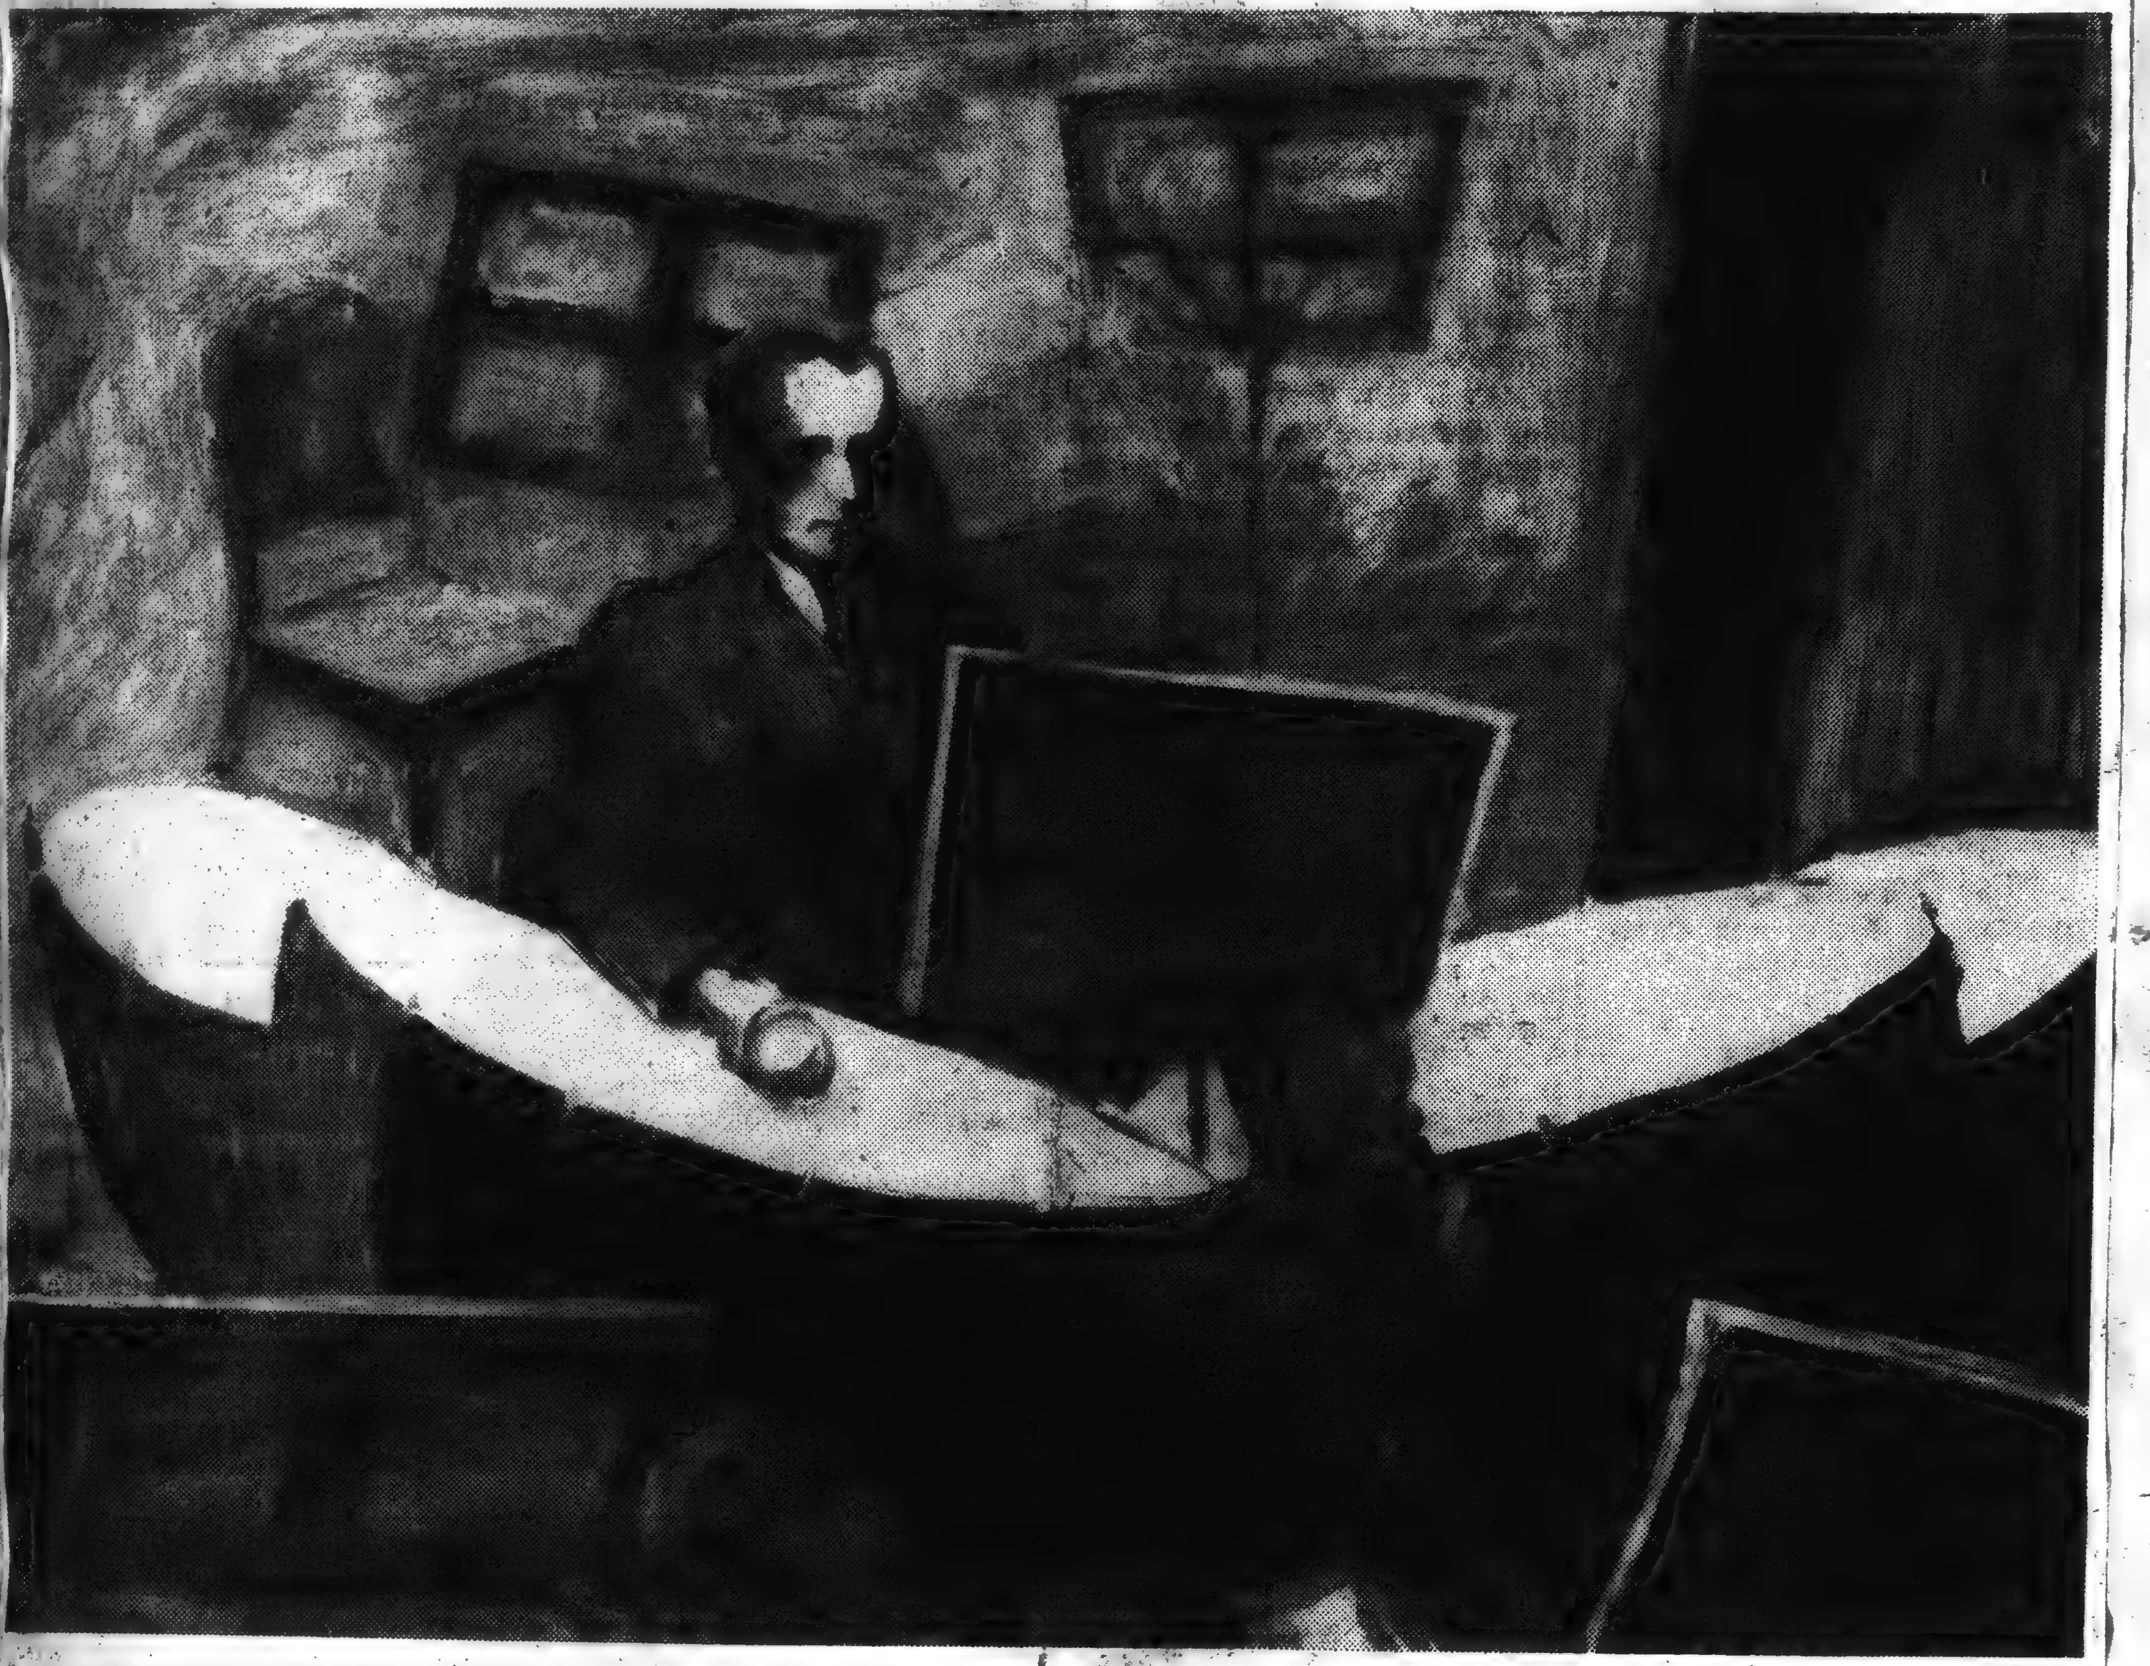
Aram Bedrossian, Springfield flautist, has joined the faculty of the Springfield Conservatory of Music. Mr. Bedrossian is a graduate of Classical High and has studied flute with Paul Seiheneichen of New York and George Laurent, first flautist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

He has been a member of the Springfield Federal Orchestra and has been heard with numerous ensemble groups. He studied interpretation with the late Aurelio Giorni and harmony and composition with Charles Mackey. He is an active member of the Junior Extension of the Tuesday Morning Music Club and has been teaching for the past four years.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR, BOSTON, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1939

The Young Folks' Page

A Thursday Page



The Drummer in the Symphony Orchestra Awaits His Entrance

Here is a portrait of the drummer of the Boston Symphony Orchestra watching his music intently as he awaits the moment of his entrance. This portrait was painted by Donald C. Greason, of Rockport, Massachusetts, who worked industriously for a whole season in the auditorium of the Symphony Hall, in Boston, making sketches of the symphony orchestra. In this portrait, he has tried to portray the drums and music stands, the chair and the drummer himself, with full broad brush strokes that manage to represent clearly this important member of a large symphony orchestra.

A large orchestra makes fine decoration with the players seated around the conductor. Mr. Greason did dozens and dozens of quick sketches as he watched the players and the conductor rehearsing. He is a very serious and conscientious artist. He made portraits of separate players performing on the fiddle, or French horn, or bassoon, or oboe, or cello; he made pictures of groups of players in the violin section, or woodwind section, or basses. And finally, after innumerable studies were made, he undertook a full complete portrait of the orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
OCT 5 - 1939

Music

American Composers Honored at Concert Given by Boston Symphony Orchestra.—Unusual Audience Fills Hall, Applauds John Alden Carpenter and Dr. Howard Hanson, Who Are Present

By G. Y. Loveridge

Boston, Oct. 4.—The American composer was heard tonight in Symphony Hall (and for miles around, one sometimes suspected). The program was American from beginning to end, a splendid gesture by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in honor of native talent. Another program of similar content and purpose will be given on Friday afternoon.

The composers represented were Deems Taylor, John Alden Carpenter and Dr. Howard Hanson and the late Arthur Foote and Henry Hadley. Mr. Carpenter and Dr. Hanson appeared on the stage after their works had been played. They were applauded with great warmth, as were Dr. Koussevitzky, the orchestra, and Dorothy Maynor, soprano, and Leonard Franklin, tenor, who were soloists in "Skyscrapers."

The audience filled the hall, but it was not the customary Boston Symphony audience. Apparently the American composer is not yet able to draw the tail-coat and dinner-jacket trade. Or perhaps the fact that the concert was free had a bearing on the absence of listeners in uniform.

Nevertheless, the American composer was heard, as he deserves to be, in the full glory of a peerless orchestra and with strict attention from hundreds of his countrymen. He proved that he has a sinewy grasp of orchestral resources—and also that he is ready to use them all at once, if necessary.

None of the music was much more than 30 years of age, and some of it was only eight. To most of it the orchestra had given first performance. The suite of E major, Op. 63, for string orchestra, by Foote, a work of widely recognized excellence several times played by the Bostonians, was first. The classic vein of the composition and the superb quality of string tone put the listener at ease and made him think, perhaps, that these Americans were not so outrageous, after all.

The "Dedication," "Garden of Live Flowers" and "Looking-Glass Insects" from Mr. Taylor's "Through the Looking-Glass" suite were equally pleasing, in their different way. They have charm, humor and descriptive eloquence.

From the symphony No. 3, in B minor, Op. 60, by Hadley, Dr. Koussevitzky chose the second movement, the "Angelus." Its peaceful, thoughtful mood was poetically conveyed. Attacks were not unfailingly precise, however.

The first genuinely hearty acknowledgement of the American scene in the music itself came with Mr. Carpenter's "Skyscrapers," a robust, jazzy, noisy, bouncing, wholly uninhibited little package. Everybody liked it. Mr. Carpenter is a businessman, and perhaps that is the kind of businessman this country needs more of.

Dr. Hanson's Symphony No. 2, the "Romantic," ended the program in lively and interesting fashion. It was written for the orchestra's 50th anniversary season and was first played, with the composer conducting, on Nov. 28, 1930.

Tonight's concert and Friday's were to have been given in New York as part of the 25th anniversary celebration of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. However, the New York unionists refused to take part if the non-union Boston orchestra was permitted to play. So the Boston orchestra stayed home, fortunately for many of us to honor the American composer by itself.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
OCT 5 - 1939

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Offers Works Composed By Americans

By G. Y. Loveridge

Boston, Oct. 4.—The American composer was heard tonight in Symphony Hall (and for miles around, one sometimes suspected). The program was American from beginning to end, a splendid gesture by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra in honor of native talent. Another program of similar content and purpose will be given on Friday afternoon.

The composers represented were Deems Taylor, John Alden Carpenter and Dr. Howard Hanson and the late Arthur Foote and Henry Hadley. Mr. Carpenter and Dr. Hanson appeared on the stage after their works had been played. They were applauded with great warmth, as were Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

The audience filled the hall, but it was not the customary Boston Symphony audience. Apparently the American composer is not yet able to draw the tail-coat and dinner-jacket trade. Or perhaps the fact that the concert was free had a bearing on the absence of listeners in uniform.

Nevertheless, the American composer was heard, as he deserves to be, in the full glory of a peerless orchestra and with strict attention from hundreds of his countrymen. He proved that he has a sinewy grasp of orchestral resources—and also that he is ready to use them all at once, if necessary.

None of the music was much more than 30 years of age, and some of it was only eight. To most of it the orchestra had given first performance. The suite of E major, Op. 63, for string orchestra, by Foote, a work of widely recognized excellence several times played by the Bostonians, was first. The classic vein of the composition and the superb quality of string tone put the listener at ease and made him think, perhaps, that these Americans were not so outrageous, after all.

The "Dedication," "Garden of Live Flowers" and "Looking-Glass Insects" from Mr. Taylor's "Through the Looking-Glass" suite were equally pleasing, in their different way. They have charm, humor and descriptive eloquence.

From the symphony No. 3, in B minor, Op. 60, by Hadley, Dr. Koussevitzky chose the second movement, the "Angelus." Its peaceful, thoughtful mood was poetically conveyed. Attacks were not unfailingly precise, however.

The first genuinely hearty acknowledgement of the American scene in the music itself came with Mr. Carpenter's "Skyscrapers," a robust, jazzy, noisy, bouncing, wholly uninhibited little package. Everybody liked it. Mr. Carpenter is a businessman, and perhaps that is the kind of businessman this country needs more of.

Dr. Hanson's Symphony No. 2, the "Romantic," ended the program in lively and interesting fashion. It was written for the orchestra's 50th anniversary season and was first played, with the composer conducting, on Nov. 28, 1930.

Tonight's concert and Friday's were to have been given in New York as part of the 25th anniversary celebration of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. However, the New York unionists refused to take part if the non-union Boston orchestra was permitted to play. So the Boston orchestra stayed home, fortunately for many of us, to honor the American composer by itself.

Dr. Koussevitzky Salutes the Composers of American Music

American Composers, Heard at Symphony Hall

Anticipating by nine days the normal opening of their 1939-1940 season, Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra last night gave the first two special concerts "in honor of the American composer." It was a generous gesture, especially so since the concerts were offered free to the interested musical public. If among the nine composers represented one missed (and who did not?) some names indubitably worthy of inclusion in the scheme, it could hardly have been otherwise, as becomes apparent when one glances at the list of 123 compositions by 46 American composers performed by this conductor and orchestra during the last 15 seasons. This record is all the more honorable in that it was achieved in face of the frequent resistance of an audience of which an important part preferred the repetition of established "classics" and disliked the unfamiliar.

* * *

Last night's program did not, for the most part, illustrate the most recent trends in American composition. Neither did it (to our relief) include any of those composers who imagined, during a dreary period of our home-grown music, that a truly American school of composition must be built upon aboriginal themes. What American music is—except music written as well as they know how by Americans—is still (fortunately) unsure; one can be very sure, however, that it is not necessarily permeated with folk music—Indian, Negro, or Tin-Pan-Alley.

The variety of moods and styles represented last night ranged widely. There were Arthur Foote's quiet and slightly sentimental grace, and the solid and tasteful scholarship that produced the splendid if ultimately Mendelssohnian fugue which ends his Suite in E major for strings, Opus 63. There was, at the other end of the scale of moods and perhaps of values, too, the essentially inarticulate romantic gesturings—in a frenzy of trumpet fanfares—of Howard Hanson's explicitly "Romantic" symphony—his second.

* * *

Between were excerpts from Deems Taylor's brilliantly and imaginatively scored suite "Through the Looking-Glass," witty music and inventive tone-painting by an unpretentiously intelligent critic and musician. The late Henry Hadley was represented, by the sentimentally illustrative movement entitled "Angelus" from his third symphony.

The only link with the more dissonant moderns was furnished by John Alden Carpenter's ballet music "Skyscrapers," which uses and apotheosizes the jazz idiom with a verve, a skill, and (most important) a motivation in the visual ballet that excused abundantly what in many other composers has been affectation or merely a desperate sterility. Mr. Carpenter and Mr. Hanson were both present to share in the applause of a very large and interesting audience.

S. S.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Apeda; Wide World

American Composers for Symphony Concerts

Top: (left to right) John Alden Carpenter, William Schuman, Deems Taylor.

Below: (left) Randall Thompson, (right) Roy Harris.

Their music is being played in the special pair of concerts arranged by Dr. Koussevitzky for last evening and tomorrow night.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ALBANY, N. Y.
Knickerbocker News

OCT 5 - 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIVES FREE CONCERT

Boston—(AP)—The non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was unable to participate in the music festival of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in New York this week, because of a union protest, staged a festival of its own last night to honor "the American composer."

A capacity audience of 2,631—admitted free to a Boston symphony concert for the first time in the orchestra's 59-year history—turned out, and approximately 12,000 more applications for seats were turned down, officials said.

Composers John Alden Carpenter and Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y., heard their own works, "Skyscrapers" and "Symphony No. 2," respectively, performed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BURLINGTON, VT.
FREE PRESS

OCT 5 - 1939

Non-Union Orchestra Stages Own Festival

BOSTON, Oct. 4. (AP)—The non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was unable to participate in the music festival of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in New York this week, because of a union protest, staged a festival of its own tonight to honor "the American composer."

A capacity audience of 2,631—admitted free to a Boston symphony concert for the first time in the orchestra's 59-year history—turned out, and approximately 12,000 more applications for seats were turned down, officials said.

Composers John Alden Carpenter and Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y., heard their own works, "Skyscrapers" and "Symphony No. 2," respectively, performed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Other composers represented on the program were Deems Taylor, and Arthur Foote and Henry Hadley, both deceased.

The concert also was marked by the symphony concert debut of Dorothy Maynor, negro soprano from Virginia, who was "discovered" by Dr. Koussevitzky at the Berkshire festival this summer and hailed as a "coming American Flagstad."

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

OCT 5 - 1939

Music and The Drama

BOSTON SYMPHONY, BARRED FROM MUSIC FESTIVAL IN NEW YORK, STAGES ITS OWN

BOSTON, Oct. 4-AP-The non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was unable to participate in the music festival of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in New York this week, because of a union protest, staged a festival of its own tonight to honor "The American Composer."

A capacity audience of 2,631—admitted free to a Boston Symphony concert for the first time in the orchestra's 59-year history—turned out, and approximately 12,000 more applications for seats were turned down, officials said.

Composers John Alden Carpenter and Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y., heard their own works, "Skyscrapers" and "Symphon No. 2," respectively, performed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Other composers represented on the program were Deems Taylor, and Arthur Foote and Henry Hadley, both deceased.

The concert also was marked by the symphony concert debut of Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano from Virginia, who was "discovered" by Dr. Koussevitzky at the Berkshire festival this summer and hailed as a "coming American Flagstad."

Miss Maynor and Leonard Franklin, Negro tenor protege of Roland Hayes, sang the solo parts in Carpenter's ballet of American life, "Skyscrapers," and won a rousing reception.

The two-day festival of American music—stressing the less frequently played works of native composers—will end Friday afternoon, when compositions of George Gershwin, William Schuman, Roy Harris and Randall Thompson will be heard.

BIRMINGHAM, MICH.
WEEKLY ECCENTRIC

OCT 5 - 1939

Ten Choral Union Concerts Planned For Current Year

Schedule of the concerts to be presented this season as part of the musical activities of the University Musical society was announced this week bv Charles A. Sink, president of the music school of the U. of M.

As in past years, 10 concerts will be presented on the Choral Union concert season, ranging from late October to the first of March.

A galaxy of musical artists is being arranged for the current concert season including Sergei Rachmaninoff, pianist; Fritz Kreisler, violinist; Alexander Kipnis, bass, the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra with John Barbirolli, conductor, Jussi Bjoerling, tenor; the Boston Symphony orchestra with Serge Koussevitzky, conductor; Kirsten Flagstad, soprano; Robert Virovai, violinist; Bartlett and Robertson, duo pianists, and Arthur Rubinstein, pianist.

The first of these concerts, which will be a piano recital by Rachmaninoff, will be held Tuesday evening, Oct. 24, at 8:30 at Hill Auditorium. Rachmaninoff's majestic personality has colored three fields of music, as pianist, composer and conductor. An exile from Russia, he spends his winters in the United States and his summers in Switzerland and in other European countries.

Globe Oct 5 1939

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

American Composers Concert

The first of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pair of free "special concerts in honor of the American composer" drew a full house at Symphony Hall last night. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra and the two composers present—John Alden Carpenter and Howard Hanson—received the plaudits of an audience whose interest and enthusiasm were as spontaneous as they were hearty. A curious fact about this audience was the balance between youth and middle age. Evidently there are many over 50 for whom modern music has no terrors. That is a sign of America's coming musically of age.

The programs of these two preseason concerts are devoted entirely to work by American composers, a goodly number of whom are members of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. As Dr. Koussevitzky would doubtless be the first to agree, they could not possibly be representative of this country's music as a whole, because American music is a large-sized proposition today. But they do furnish an interesting cross-section.

Last night's gathering heard pieces by three living composers and two who are dead — excerpts from "Through the Looking Glass," by Deems Taylor; John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers"; the "Romantic" Symphony, by Howard Hanson; the late Arthur Foote's E major Suite, Op. 63, and the "Angelus" movement from the Third Symphony by the late Henry Hadley.

There may still be some who would rush to the nearest cocktail lounge at the mention of American music. That is not to their credit. What American music needs is more performances and plenty of free discussion. All of it may not be good, but time and repetition contrive a sifting process that leaves behind compositions of durable nature.

Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony have done their share in furthering the cause over the past 15 seasons. A list in the program book gave 121 pieces by 46 composers, surely an impressive number.

American music is no longer the artistic step-child it once was. If the strict definition means music of a flavor, style and technic that could have been written nowhere else in the world, then many workers would be left outside the fold. One hundred years from now the definition may hold true. Today we are not yet sufficiently old and developed for that. But American composers have gone far in assimilating from European inheritance the things they can use. An American school is slowly but surely emerging.

The proof? Mr. Foote's Suite, as original and as nearly American a music as can be found, yet not of the modern jazzy type to be found in Mr. Carpenter's "Skyscrapers." The Symphony of Howard Hanson and the excerpts from Mr. Taylor's fanciful suite owe their technical derivation to European models. And yet there are passages—not to be fully described in few words—that show their creators to be American in temperament and mentality. The least American of all last night's list is probably the Hadley movement, in fact it is almost purely European.

American music has changed a good deal in 15 years and is constantly evolving. It was after the first performance of Antheil's noisy "Ballet Mechanique," I think, that a newspaper editorial smirked: "Someday we shall write a symphony for flutes and pile drivers." Those days, thank Heaven! are over. The year 1929 drew a heavy double-bar across American music just as it placed a period to an American economic phase. Nowadays the native composer has not the same faith in jazzy New York as the spring from which all American life and art must bubble up. "Skyscrapers" and the Americana it represents now seem quite dated, a relic of a period dead and gone.

The second concert will be given at 2:30 tomorrow. C. W. D.

Herald Oct 5 1939

MUSIC

AMERICAN SYMPHONY CONCERT

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The first of two special, preseason concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in honor of the American composer was given last night in Symphony hall. Serge Koussevitsky conducted. Assisting in one number were Dorothy Maynor, soprano, and Leonard Franklin, tenor. The progrem was a follows:

Arthur Foote
Suite in E major for strings op. 63
Deems Taylor
Excerpts from the Siute "Through the Looking Glass"
Henry Hadley
"Angelus," andante, from the Symphony No. 3 in B minor op. 60
John Alden Carpenter
"Skyscrapers," a ballet of American life
Howard Hanson
Symphony No. 2, "Romantic"

These two concerts of music by American composers constitute a timely and generous gesture on the part of the Boston Symphony and its management to a distinguished cause. It is not as though haste had been made to moke up for lost time, for few conductors have been as industrious as Dr. Koussevitzky in behalf of American music.

It is interesting, too, that there has been so spirited a response on the part of the public to these concerts. In part this is due to the chance to hear first class orchestral playing free of charge. But manifestly people are not going out of their way to listen to music for which they have only contempt.

The music chosen for the first concert represented a fairly conventional and derivative kind of American music.

Arthur Foot's Suite is good honest music, unpretentious and ably put together. It asked to and could be accepted on its own merits. Henry Hadley's "Angelus" might almost be described in the reverse of these terms. It was really too mawkish for the program that in any case leaned too far in that direction. Mr. Taylor's Suite has charm and skill to recommend it. Mr. Carpenter's "Skyscrapers" may be obvious, intentionally so; it is also an effective evocation of various feelings common to this country. It was in one part of this work that Miss Maynor and Mr. Franklin capably sang with the orchestra. Mr. Carpenter was in the audience and came forward to acknowledge the aplanse.

Mr. Hanson's Romantic Symphony—by which title he spiked the critical guns—would be more effective restatements of the thematic material and long for a change. Within the emotional limits which he bravely confessed Mr. Hanson succeeded in creating a very fair romantic symphony. It may in the future turn out to be merely prejudice that makes us regard it as a clever copy of a museum piece. Mr. Hanson also came forward at the end of the concert. Proof of the good will that has gone into these concerts was to be had in the excellent orchestral playing and Dr. Koussevitzky's sympathetic interpretations.

THIS CLIPPING FROM GREEN BAY, WIS.
PRESS-GAZETTE

OCT 5 - 1939

Templeton to Play Dec. 3

Although the current radio program of Alec Templeton, concert pianist, is devoted primarily to improvisations and impersonations his program at his appearance here Sunday, Dec. 3, will for the great part be made up of numbers by masters.

Mr. Templeton's concert is the second scheduled program of the Green Bay Concert league for the season. Memberships in the league are now being sold in the annual campaign which will continue for another week. All workers and chairmen will meet for a 6:30 dinner Monday evening in the Columbus club to hear reports. Reservations for it must be made by 5 o'clock Saturday afternoon with Mrs. Ellis Peterson, Adams 1128. Workers are also requested to turn in their money by the same hour Saturday at the Columbus club headquarters.

Born In Wales

The blind pianist, who has appeared on many national radio programs during the past season including the Ford Sunday evening hour and Kraft Music hall, will make a coast to coast concert tour this season and during that time will make appearances with the Boston, Detroit and San Francisco symphony orchestras.

He was born sightless on July 4, 1910, of Scottish parents on a farm near Cardiff, Wales, and at the age of 2 played the piano, imitating the notes of a nearby church bell. From then he received many musical honors and at 17 was awarded the performer's diploma at the Royal Academy of Music in London where he was a student. He later entered the Royal College of Music where he remained for five years, winning scholarships for piano and composition. After completing a tour of France, Holland and Germany he was asked by Jack Hylton, dance band conductor, to come to the United States and has since remained here.

Classic Program Here

The program which he will play at his concert to be given here is as follows, the first three parts being made up of classical numbers by famous composers and the fourth group of his own compositions, improvisations and a few impressions.

Part 1

Chromatic Fantasy and Fugue, D minor	J. S. Bach
Chorale Prelude	J. S. Bach
"Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring" (Arr. Myra Hess)

Part 2

Sonata, C minor, Pathetique	Beethoven
Grave—Allegro Adagio cantabile Rondo

Part 3

Prelude, E flat major ..	Rachmaninoff
La Cathedrale Engloutie (Engulfed Cathedral))	Debussy
Nocturne, D flat	Chopin
Scherzo, B flat minor	Chopin

Intermission

Part 4

Sonatina Ballade; Mendelssohn Mows 'em Down; Improvisations and Impressions; Idyll Caprice	Alec Templeton

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

OCT 5 - 1939

NEGRO SOPRANO "DISCOVERED" AT FESTIVAL SINGS

Miss Maynor, Heard by Koussevitzky in Berkshires, on Boston Program

BOSTON, Oct. 4 (AP) — The non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was unable to participate in the music festival of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in New York this week, because of a union protest, staged a festival of its own tonight to honor "the American composer."

Admitted Free

A capacity audience of 2631—admitted free to a Boston Symphony concert for the first time in the Orchestra's 59-year history—turned out, and approximately 12,000 more applications for seats were turned down, officials said.

Composers John Alden Carpenter and Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y., heard their own works, "Skyscrapers" and "Symphony No. 2," respectively, performed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Other composers represented on the program were Deems Taylor, and Arthur Foote and Henry Hadley, both deceased.

Makes Her Debut

The concert also was marked by the symphony concert debut of Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano from Virginia, who was "discovered" by Dr. Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Festival this summer and hailed as a "coming American Flagstad."

Miss Maynor and Leonard Franklin, Negro tenor protege of Roland Hayes, sang the solo parts in Carpenter's ballet of American life, "Skyscrapers," and won a rousing reception.

The two-day festival of American music—stressing the less frequently played works of native composers—will end Friday afternoon, when compositions of George Gershwin, William Schuman, Roy Harris and Randall Thompson will be heard.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

OCT 5 - 1939

More Than 10,000 Turned Away for Boston Concerts

Dorothy Maynor, Heard by Dr. Koussevitzky at Berkshire Festival, Participates in Opening Program

BOSTON. — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, unable to participate in the music festival of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in New York this week because of a Union protest, opened its own festival at Symphony Hall last night to honor American composers. More than 10,000 applications for seats for the two-day event have been turned down for lack of accommodations according to the orchestra's management.

Capacity Crowd

At last night's concert, a capacity audience of 2631—admitted free to a Boston Symphony concert for the first time in the orchestra's 59-year history, turned out.

Composers John Alden Carpenter and Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, Rochester, N. Y., heard their own works, "Skyscrapers" and "Symphony No. 2," respectively, performed by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. Other composers represented on the program were Deems Taylor, and Arthur Foote and Henry Hadley, both deceased.

Makes Her Debut

The concert also was marked by the symphony concert debut of Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano from Virginia, who was "discovered" by Dr. Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Festival this summer and hailed as a "coming American Flagstad."

Miss Maynor and Leonard Franklin, Negro tenor protege of Roland Hayes, sang the solo parts in Carpenter's ballet of American life, "Skyscrapers," and won a rousing reception.

The two-day festival of American music—stressing the less frequently played works of native composers— will end tomorrow afternoon, when compositions of George Gershwin, William Schuman, Roy Harris and Randall Thompson will be heard.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ROSINDALE, MASS.
Weekly Parkway
Transcript

OCT 5 - 1939

W. R. Man Co-Inventor of New Type of Violin Mute

Harry Van Ham of 29 Woodbrier road, West Roxbury, director of the Mountain View House concert ensemble at Whitefield, N. H., and talented violinist, is also out to make a name for himself as co-inventor of a new musical accessory, the "Presto" mute for violin and viola. This gadget, different from any in use to date, is hailed by leading symphony orchestra musicians as revolutionary and superior to other kinds, and the claim is made that possession of the new device will very shortly be a "must" with up-to-date violinists.

A mute, Mr. Van Ham states, can greatly soften the tone of violin or viola, performers often finding in their scores portions to be played softly and quietly. In the past, mutes were a separate item, carried in the pocket, and more often forgotten, lost or dropped, while making the muting process was embarrassingly slow, or impossible in the time available. With the new "Presto" mute, a single second is sufficient, either to mute or unmute the instrument, as it is an integral part of the violin or viola.

Mr. Van Ham has formed and is head of the Acoustical Research Company of Boston, which manufactures the new accessory from colorful plastics, leather, felt, and a clamping screw, attractive yet inconspicuous on any violin. Its operation is simple. It clamps lightly on the two middle strings back of the bridge, requiring but a flick of the thumb to slide it against the bridge. The contact of the fabric side of the mute immediately softens the tone, a similar brief movement sliding it out of operation toward the tailpiece, ready for the next moment of need.

Invention of the "Presto" came after a year of collaboration by Mr. Van Ham with Georges Fourel, noted violinist and member of the Boston Symphony. They tried out a variety of substances to find the ones with the desired acoustical properties and balance. Success crowned their efforts, and experimental use by members of the Mountain View String Ensemble, as well as members of the Boston, Curtis, Pittsburgh, and San Diego Symphonies, has encouraged the two men in the belief that they have something both practical and necessary to be shared with others in their profession.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

OCT 5 - 1939

'A Stone Refused By the Builders

Boston Symphony Delights By Its First Festival of American Composers

The loss to New York's musical public was proven last night in Symphony Hall, Boston, a happy gain for those who were fortunate holders of tickets for the first of two programs by the resident orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, played as a tribute to the American composer.

Or, employing another aphorism, the ill wind of New York's union rules blew definitely good for Boston. Its treasured orchestra with its conductor of 15 years' tenure stayed at home and gave Boston an unexpected free public festival of its own, already prepared for that of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers.

At 8:15, there was a long double line in the Huntington Avenue lobby, representing some of the 5,000 disappointed who hoped for a chance at returned seats.

The quality of the audience was interesting to study. Few of the life long subscribers of advanced age were noted. Most of the greater Boston composers, teachers and conductors were present and a large representation of serious advanced students.

It was a program felicitously ordered—opening delicately and gracefully with the suite for string orchestra of Arthur Foote, long honored as a Boston musician; following with excerpts from Deems Taylor's "Through the Looking Glass" suite wherein the flowers chattered volubly with definitely varied minds of their own while the fantastic insects were direct of objective; then taking up one movement, the "Angelus," from Henry Hadley's Symphony No. 3—an andante tranquillo inspired by distant church bells of an Italian town—wherein the composer seemed to dream warmly and with a refinement of means into a lingering sunset.

Rising gradations in tonal strength led to John Alden Carpenter's exhilarating "Skyscrapers." Dr. Koussevitzky gave this "Ballet of American Life" a performance of appreciative vigor. Here was the American scene in a series of sound pictures of ever-changing rhythms, culminating in some glorious jazz. First sung with orchestra by Dorothy Maynor, soprano (who sang at a Stockbridge rehearsal last Summer), and Leonard Franklin, tenor, the theme was taken up excitingly by orchestra alone. The two Negro voices led magnificently as they stood back among the players. If all jazz were Carpenter jazz and played with the Koussevitian relish!

Still the program rose in strength, culminating in Howard Hanson's "Romantic" Symphony No. 2. Its full, rich texture was given a presentation of lustre and clarity, of power and tenuous beauty, the climax in fanfare approach finely warmed by an orchestration using drums discreetly and pausing when sufficient was effectively said. Dr. Hanson has given American music something very much alive, with an atmosphere of growth in his expression of our composite life.

The audience rose at Dr. Koussevitzky's entrance—a usual tribute at his first appearance of the season, but last night felt also as a taken of appreciation for the generously offered, differing programs for Wednesday evening and next Friday afternoon.

Mr. Carpenter was brought out before the orchestra by the conductor and likewise the tall, distinguished Dr. Hanson after his symphony.

A. C. R.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

OCT 6 - 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY GIVES FREE CONCERT

BOSTON, Oct. 5—The non-union Boston Symphony Orchestra, which was unable to participate in the music festival of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers in New York this week because of a union protest, staged a festival of its own last night to honor "the American composer."

A capacity audience of 2,631—admitted free to a Boston symphony concert for the first time in the orchestra's 59-year history—turned out.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

OCT 6 - 1939

MUSIC

American Composers Are Guests of Trustees of Boston Symphony

Boston, Oct. 5.—A dinner in honor of American composers was given in the Harvard Club tonight by trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Ernest B. Dane, president and treasurer, was toastmaster.

The composers attending were Aaron Copland, George Foote, Dr. Howard Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music; Roy Harris; Walter Piston, William Howard Schuman, and Randall Thompson, head of the Curtis Institute.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, complimented the composers and expressed his faith in the musical progress of the country. Several of the composers acknowledged their indebtedness and that of American music in general to Dr. Koussevitzky.

Plans were outlined for the music academy at the Berkshire Festival, courses to be provided for both the general student and the advanced.

Richard Burgin, concertmaster and assistant conductor of the orchestra; George E. Judd, manager; John N. Burk, who writes historical and descriptive notes for the programs, and several New England music critics attended.

The orchestra gave a concert last night with an all-American program and will give another tomorrow afternoon.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

OCT 6 - 1939

Boston Symphony Appears Before Capacity Audience

Gives First of Two Concerts of American Music Under Baton of Dr. Koussevitzky Preceding Season

Symphony Hall in Boston was filled to capacity Wednesday for the first of two concerts of American music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Dr. Koussevitzky, offered free to the people of New England as a prelude to the regular season, which begins next week.

The box office had been snowed under with applications for tickets. The hall could have been filled five times over. Several hundred who had not been able to secure the coveted pasteboards waited patiently in line in the foyer on the chance that there might be a few vacant seats and a few were lucky enough to gain admission. There was the impression that it was not only the prospect of a free concert that caused the rush. Dr. Koussevitzky was presenting for the first time in the memory of this reviewer a full program of symphonic music by American composers. Always he has been generous in bringing such compositions to the fore in the course of a season. But the announcement of two programs devoted entirely to American works was proof, if any other were needed, that we have come of age musically. So that one believes that the chance to hear American music at its best was the magnet which accounted for the large attendance.

Young People Attend.

The audience, naturally was different from that which attends the reuglar concerts. There were many eager young people present not above giving expression sotto voce to an "Oh Gee!" when the orchestra made a stroke of exceptional virtuosity. But there was no mistaking general enthusiasm over the music. It was a jolly evening into which Dr. Koussevitzky and the men of orchestra joined with more than ordinary abandon. That was seen in the zest with which the conductor entered into tre jazz motives of John Alden Carpenter's American ballet "Skyscrapers," proving that he could throw himself into such music as whole-heartedly as he does in compositions by Beethoven or Sibelius. The modern American idiom does not elude him. Interest in this number was added by the singing in one of the episides by two young Negro musicians, Dorothy Maynor, soprano, and Leonard Franklin, tenor. Miss Maynor is the singer who was introduced informally by Dr. Koussevitzky at the Berkshire festival, when he noticed possibilities that might make her another Marion Anderson. Her really fine and ample voice rang out vibrantly above Mr. Carpenter's rather strident orchestration. The tenor's share in the episode was less prominent. He is a Boston man and a pupil of Roland Hayes. Mr. Carpenter, the composer, was brought to the platform again and again after a superb performance of his characteristically American work.

New Trend.

So also was Howard Hansan after a sparkling performance of his Symphony No. 2, the "Romantic" written for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is romanticism in modern garb, so to speak, suggesting a trend which the composer feels we are likely to develop here as a substitute for the current neoclassicism.

In quieter vein the beautiful "Angelus" from Henry Hadley's Third Symphony caught the fancy of the audience. For merriment and humor in the fantastic and imaginative style the excerpts from "Through the Looking-Glass" by Deems Taylor were hugely enjoyed. Because of seniority Arthur Foote's Suite for String Orchestra was fittingly given first place on the program, the piquant pizzicato movement, played in crisp and airy virtuosity, making an evident appeal.

It would be unfortunate, musically, if we stressed nationalism ordinarily to the exclusion of the fine music of other lands. But as was demonstrated on this occasion, American music has its merits. Would it be temerity on the part of this listener to suggest to the eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony the possibility of including a pair of such programs yearly in the regular season%

S. R. F.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
LEADER

OCT 6 - 1939

All-American Music Program Given by The Boston Symphony

Symphony Hall in Boston was filled to capacity Wednesday for the first of two concerts of American music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the baton of Dr. Koussevitzky, offered free to the people of New England as a prelude to the regular season, which begins next week.

The box office had been snowed under with applications for tickets. The hall could have been filled five times over. Several hundred who had not been able to secure the coveted pasteboards waited patiently in line in the foyer on the chance that there might be a few vacant seats and a few were lucky enough to gain admission. There was the impression that it was not only the prospect of a free concert that caused the rush. Dr. Koussevitzky was presenting for the first time in the memory of this reviewer a full program of symphonic music by American composers. Always he has been generous in bringing such compositions to the fore in the course of a season. But the announcement of two programs devoted entirely to American works was proof, if any other were needed, that we have come of age musically. So that one believes that the chance to hear American music at its best was the magnet which accounted for the large attendance.

The audience, naturally was different from that which attends the reuglar concerts. There were many eager young people present not above giving expression sotto voce to an "Oh Gee!" when the orchestra made a stroke of exceptional virtuosity. But there was no mistaking general enthusiasm over the music. It was a jolly evening into which Dr. Koussevitzky and the men of orchestra joined with more than ordinary abandon. That was seen in the zest with which the conductor entered into tre jazz motives of John Alden Carpenter's American ballet "Skyscrapers," proving that he could throw himself into such music as whole-heartedly as he does in compositions by Beethoven or Sibelius. The modern American idiom does not elude him. Interest in this number was added by the singing in one of the episides by two young Negro musicians, Dorothy Maynor, soprano, and Leonard Franklin, tenor. Miss Maynor is the singer who was introduced informally by Dr. Koussevitzky at the Berkshire festival, when he noticed possibilities that might make her another Marion Anderson. Her really fine and ample voice rang out vibrantly above Mr. Carpenter's rather strident orchestration. The tenor's share in the episode was less prominent. He is a Boston man and a pupil of Roland Hayes. Mr. Carpenter, the composer, was brought to the platform again and again after a superb performance of his characteristically American work.

So also was Howard Hansan after a sparkling performance of his Symphony No. 2, the "Romantic" written for the 50th anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is romanticism in modern garb, so to speak, suggesting a trend which the composer feels we are likely to develop here as a substitute for the current neoclassicism.

In quieter vein the beautiful "Angelus" from Henry Hadley's Third Symphony caught the fancy of the audience. For merriment and humor in the fantastic and imaginative style the excerpts from "Through the Looking-Glass" by Deems Taylor were hugely enjoyed. Because of seniority Arthur Foote's Suite for String Orchestra was fittingly given first place on the program, the piquant pizzicato movement, played in crisp and airy virtuosity, making an evident appeal.

It would be unfortunate, musically, if we stressed nationalism ordinarily to the exclusion of the fine music of other lands. But as was demonstrated on this occasion, American music has its merits. Would it be temerity on the part of this listener to suggest to the eminent conductor of the Boston Symphony the possibility of including a pair of such programs yearly in the regular season%

S. R. F.

41

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

OCT 6 - 1939

Festival Hears Philharmonic Play U.S. Music

Spalding Performs Jacobi Violin Concerto; Program Led by 3 Conductors

By Francis D. Perkins

Continuing the interesting survey of different aspects of American music which it is providing in its present free festival series in Carnegie Hall, the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers presented the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra under the direction of three American conductors and with Albert Spalding as the soloist in Frederick Jacobi's violin concerto. Alexander Smallens conducted Henry Hadley's overture, "In Bohemia," and Louis Gruenberg's "The Enchanted Isle" at the beginning of the program, and returned to the podium for the concerto. Macklin Marrow conducted Ernest Bloch's two early tone poems, "Winter" and "Spring," and Howard Barlow conducted the Legend, Love Song and Village Festival from Edward MacDowell's Indian Suite.

The program might have been announced as one of romantic American music, according to the prevailing atmosphere of much of the music, and did not concern itself with composers born after the turn of the century, but these will probably have their turn in the Philharmonic's second festival concert tomorrow night. Except for Mr. Jacobi's concerto, none of the works presented were new, but American symphonic music is as well served by a reinspection of previously played compositions, such as this, as by a search for novelties. Mr. Spalding has played the concerto before this in Chicago, but it has not previously been heard here, at least in one of the major concert halls.

The form, in three movements, without a pause between the first and second, is orthodox. The writing for the violin is generally very grateful, and the orchestral scoring skilful; there is considerable imagination realized in a liberal supply of appealing melody which sometimes shows nineteenth century trans-Atlantic influences. As drawbacks, a certain discursiveness and a lack of variety in themes and emotional atmosphere were to be noticed. Mr. Spalding was warmly applauded after a skillful and sympathetic performance.

"In Bohemia" is one of the late Dr. Hadley's most frequently played works, and, although its Germanic influences are apparent, it merits much respect for its form, its ideas and its vitality. "The Enchanted Isle" played by the Boston Symphony in 1929 and by [illegible]ilharmonic-Symphony in 1930, is a complete revision made by Mr. Gruenberg in 1927 from a tone poem composed twelve years before. The orchestral idiom, which is occasionally influenced by impressionistic methods has richness and color, and the imaginative implications of the title are borne out in the music itself But the objective of the work is partly defeated by its length; some of the impression is lost through diffuseness. The Bloch poems also seemed somewhat over-extended. while marked by sensitiveness and charm, and, composed early in Mr. Bloch's career, hardly characterize his music as represented in his major works.

There was warm applause for the conductors, and especially for Mr. Marrow after his interpretation of the Bloch tone poems. The orchestra, considering that it has not yet begun its regular season, was in laudable form. The festival continues tonight with two free concerts of swing and jazz, one in Carnegie Hall and the other at the 71st Regiment Armory.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

OCT 6 - 1939

Miss Edith Stearns Renders Piano Solos At Methuen Concert

By Walter F. Starbuck

Waltham was represented, both in performance and in attendance, at a concert given last evening under the auspices of the Skinner Association in the Skinner Organ Hall at Methuen.

This ornate hall, beautiful in its architecture, stands in the centre of the town, next the Skinner organ factory, and was built by the late Edward F. Searles to house the "Great Organ" that was erected in Boston Music Hall in 1863.

The "Great Organ"

This organ figured in four of the five numbers on last evening's program, and was an inspiration to behold and to hear. It was the two hundredth instrument built by E. F. Walcker and Company of Ludwigsburg, Wurtemburg, and was begun in 1857 and finished in 1863, at a cost of about $70,000, having four manuals, a pedal board of 30 keys, and a total of 5474 pipes.

After the introduction of the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra into the Music Hall, the organ occupied too much space upon the stage, and was accordingly taken down in 1884. In 1897 it was sold to a representative of Mr. Searles for $1500, as old metal and lumber, but Mr. Searles, as time went on, employed Mr. Skinner's company to set it up again and restore it with an improved console having an electric action. He has given to this country what should become a mecca for all organists.

Its Wood Carving

The case of the "Great Instrument" abounds in rich wood-carvings, most conspicuous of which are two colossal caryatids, each in front of a domed pipe-tower, his mighty arms crossed above his head, with swelling veins almost ready to burst in the effort, as the anguish of heavy labor depicts upon his face, of bearing up the grand cornice on which the tower rests. There is a fine portrait bust of Bach and there are elaborate bas-reliefs of musical instruments, ancient and modern. In the upper portion of the case, each of two life-size figures, a woman and a man, rests one of its hands upon a harp of golden strings.

Solos by Edith Stearns

The central number of last evening's program was a group of three piano solos by Miss Edith Stearns, of 110 Dale street, Waltham. She imparted appropriate liquid tone to Debussy's "Reflections in the Water," then played the Nocturne in C minor, not commonly heard, by Chopin, conspicuous for its warmth and the virtuosity of its many measures of rapid octaves in both hands. The intricacies of the Brahms Rhapsody in G minor were performed with contrasted tonal-coloring.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

OCT 6 - 1939

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL SIGNS 1800 MEMBERS

Stockbridge, Oct. 6—Eighteen hundred music lovers from many states in the Union have already become members of the Berkshire Symphonic festival in anticipation of the concerts to be given at Tanglewood next summer by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony orchestra. The deadline on memberships is November 1.

Many of the members are persons who attended this year's concerts and wish to take advantage of the membership privileges. These privileges include tickets to all the concerts at a substantially reduced cost, preference in seat locations in the music shed and attendance at a rehearsal of the orchestra with Dr Koussevitzky. Under the membership plan it is possible to attend concerts at a cost averaging less than a dollar per concert.

One hundred and eleven boxes have been sold for the 1940 season and the festival trustees expect all of them to be reserved long before the first concert next August.

At the annual meeting of the festival trustees, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge was reelected president; Norval H. Busey, Jr., of New York and Lee, vice-president; Henry W. Dwight of Stockbridge, treasurer, and George W. Edman of Pittsfield, clerk.

There will be another meeting of the trustees the 17th at which time a decision may be made as to whether the 1940 season will consist of two or three weeks of concerts.

Persons wishing memberships are requested to write to the Berkshire Symphonic festival office at Stockbridge, before November 1. After that date subscription prices will prevail.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWALK, CONN.
HOUR

OCT 7 - 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

OCT 6 - 1939

Five Concerts On Schedule Of Orchestra

Local Symphony Under Barzin Begins Season Oct. 24 at Bushnell; Programs Announced

Five concerts at the Bushnell Memorial instead of four, more lower priced seats and many new and interesting works are the outstanding features of the Hartford Symphony Orchestra's second season under the baton of Leon Barzin, it was announced by the Symphony Society of Connecticut, sponsoring group, on Thursday.

The orchestra, which has been in rehearsal for some time, opens its year on Tuesday evening, October 24, with Frank Sheridan, well known American pianist, as soloist. Mr. Sheridan will play the Fifth Beethoven Concerto for Piano and Orchestra, called "The Emperor." The composition has not been heard here for many seasons. The program will also include Mozart's Symphony No. 39 in E Flat, Brahm's Variations on a Theme by Haydn, and Jean Rivier's Symphony No. 3 in G Major for Strings, the most recent work of the French composer who took the place of the late Albert Roussel in the famous "Five." This will be the first American performance of the Rivier work.

The succeeding concert dates in the series will be November 14, December 19, January 23 and February 13. At the November concert, Ruth Posselt, young American violinist, will play a new concerto and in the second half, under the assistand conductor, George Heck, Miss Posselt and Mr. Barzin will combine forces in the performance of the Mozart Concertante for Violin and Viola. Ruth Posselt was presented to Boston audiences by Dr. Serge Koussevitsky a year or two ago [illegible] season she was featured by him as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York. Her playing was acclaimed by critics as sensational. Mr. Barzin, in addition to being a conductor, is a virtuoso artist of that rarely-heard solo instrument, the viola, and his playing of the Mozart work with Miss Posselt is of unusual interest.

Will Play New Symphony.

By an overwhelmingly popular demand, the third program will be entirely orchestral. Many new compositions as well as classics which Hartford has rarely if ever had an opportunity to hear, will be presented during the remainder of the season. Among them will be the world premiere of a new symphony by the distinguished Belgian composer, Francois De Bourgnignon. This extraordinary work, a full-length symphony, was written in memory of the late King Albert of Belgium. The first movement is a funeral march for brass only, the second a scherzo for woodwind only, the third an adagio for strings and the finale a fugue for the full orchestra based upon the themes of the first three. The score is captioned simply "Puzzle."

Through the cooperation of the Hartford Oratorio Society the first performance of a new Requiem by Guy Ropartz for orchestra, chorus and soloists will be given in February. The composer sent the score to Barzin last summer inviting him to conduct its initial performance.

Concerts in Other Towns.

Conducting the Society's policy of bringing the best in orchestral music to other towns which do not otherwise have it, a number of concerts in nearby localities have also been arranged, including Meriden, Danbury, Norwich, etc. The trustees feel that they cannot expect financial support from these localities unless the orchestra can do its part in furnishing concerts.

Seats for the Hartford concerts are on sale at the office of the Symphony Society of Connecticut, Room 215, Essex Building, 15 Lewis Street, Hartford. At this time only seats for the entire series are available.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BEAUMONT, TEX.
JOURNAL

OCT 6 - 1939

THe Boston Symphony orchestra and Serge Koussevitzky, its conductor, will open an Academy of Music at "Tanglewood" in July, 1940, offering advanced instruction to a limited number of students qualified by ability and training, and a general session for a larger school. The term will last six weeks, culminating in the Berkshire Symphonic festival.

HERBERT JANSSEN, Metropolitan opera baritone, will give his first American concert recital on Dec. 17 at Town hall. He has been heard here only in opera to date.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

DEDHAM, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
10/6/39

Hot Notes

by Frank H. Clarke, Jr.

Dr. Koussevitsky and Jazz

"Doctor Serge Koussevitsky not only listens frequently to jazz on the radio and enjoys it, but he believes it to be of greater importance to American composition than even Gypsy tunes have been to Hungarian serious music.

"And in listening to jazz, he often enjoys the performance more than the music itself. He told of being taken to a New York nightclub by the American composer, Aaron Copeland, and his amazement at the dexterity, phantasy and musical temperament of the seven Negros who improvised their swing music.

"After ten minutes, Koussevitzky said he could stand no more. Not because the music bored him. On the contrary, the terrific nervous stimulus of the jazz rhythms and the staggering vitality of the whole performance were almost too much to bear. Copeland, who was just as enthusiastic, told Koussevitzky he should listen not for ten minutes, but for two hours."

The above quotation from an article by Edward Downes in the Boston Transcript, I give to you in case there are still any doubters reading this column. If you're still not convinced of the merits of jazz, argue it out with Doctor Koussevitzky.

But the fact is that Koussevitzky, being a great musician, is very near the core of jazz when he says it has "staggering vitality." He could not have picked two better words to describe it. For in my opinion, it is this very vitality which makes jazz great, and different from any other music.

A NEW KING

I dropped in on Woody Herman at the Flamingo a few nights ago, and I was impressed. The Basic rhythm section has seemed to me to be without doubt the best section in the world, but now that I've heard the Herman Rhythm men, I think the Count has competition. To get an idea of what it's like, listen to Woody's recording of "Shiek of Araby," but better still, go hear it in person. I should like to go on record right now as predicting that Woody will occupy the mythical throne vacated by Goodman last winter, and for which there have been many pretenders. This is going to happen in the next six months, too. And here are my reasons for believing so. First, the band is technically perfect. Then, it contains a bunch of fine soloists. Finally, and most important, the band plays swing, sweet, and blues, with the same excellence, and no matter what it's playing, it's always easy to listen to. Go hear them.

WHO'S WHO RECORD

I found a really unusual record for you last week. It's Adrian Rollini's, of vibraharp fame, only this time he's performing on his first love, the bass sax. The titles are, "Sugar" and "Riverboat Shuffle." If you're not impressed yet, here's the personnel who played in the band: Bunny Berigan and Manny Klein, trumpets; Benny Goodman, clarinet; Jack Teagarden, trombone; Arthur Rollini, tenor sax; Adrian Rollini, bass sax; Fulton McGrath, piano; George Van Epps, guitar. Arthur Bernstein, bass; and Stan King, drums. Reads like Who's Who, no? The result is rather soft, but very good swing, with plenty of solos by every one. The amazing part is that it's on Decca 265, and won't cost you much.

OLD DISCS

Probably you've wondered where you could get hold of some of the old, out-of-print rocords by Red Nichols, Ben Pollack, Bix Biederbecke, and others of the history-making pioneers. Well, I know just the place you're looking for. It's in Boston, and if you'll drop me a line in care of the Transcript office, I'll see that every serious record collector is put on the mailing list. You can't lose much.

Once in a while I find myself getting sentimental about the wonderful sweet music which is no more. Ray Noble used to be able to play the perfect ballad. The Hudson-Delange combo was good in that respect, too. Now the two leading sweet bands are supposed to be T. Dorsey and Casa Loma. But listen to Terry Allen singing "My Love for You" and "You're So Desirable" with Red Norvo's orchestra. It's mighty fine. And you should see that Allen man, girls. Six feet, blonde and handsome! Ah - - -

THIS CLIPPING FROM BLACKWELL, OKLA.
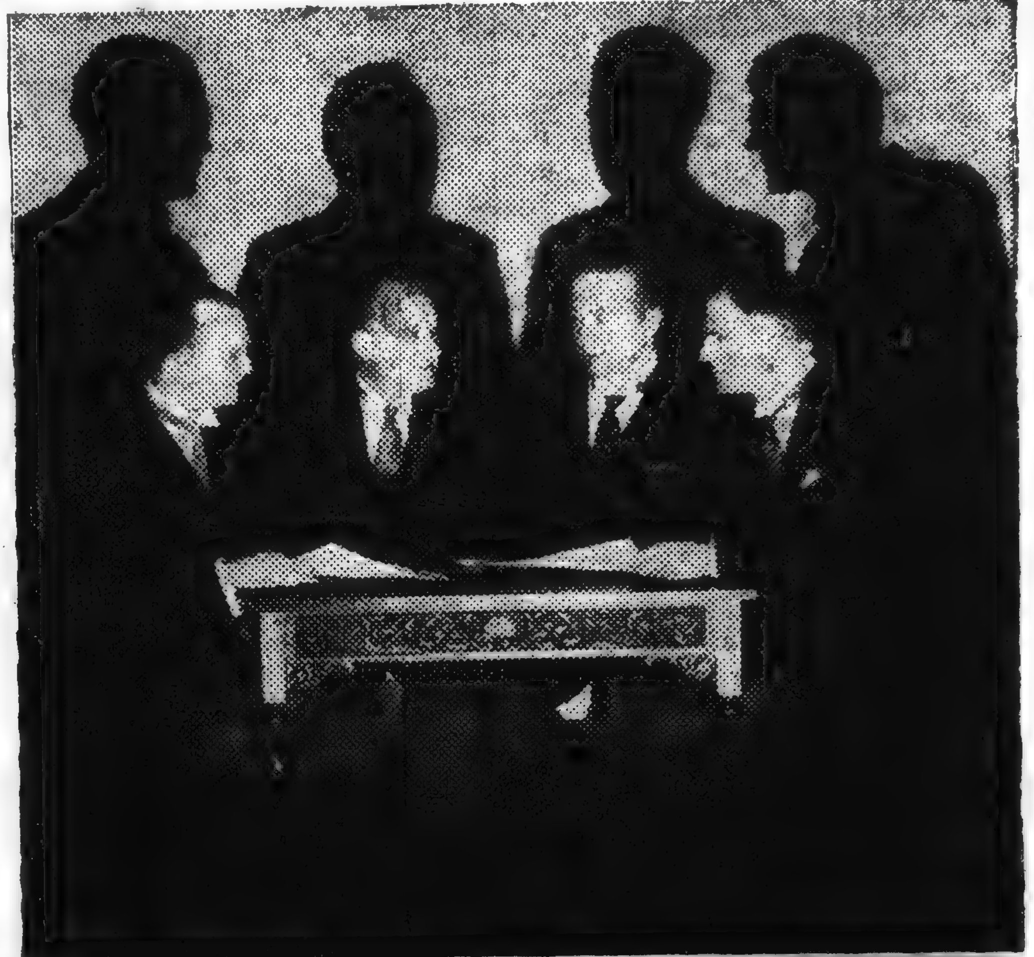
JOURNAL

OCT 6 - 1939

Some of Talent From Whom City Concert Series Artists Would be Picked



Members of the Blackwell Cooperative Concert association will have an opportunity to hear a varied program in the three concerts proposed to be brought here during the winter months, and among those discussed by the executive committee are shown above.

The artists are among a large number from which selection of the city series is to be made.

Above, at the right, are members of an all-American ensemble, the Ionian Singers, who will bring to their listeners their own arrangement of the best male quartette music, particularly some of the masterpieces of the past, which have nearly been forgotten.

Below, right, is the Coolidge Stringed quartette, the members having appeared as soloists for the Boston Symphony and Philadelphia orchestras. The name of the quartette is from the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation in the library of Congress in Washington, where the artists played 35 concerts the past season. They played at both the San Francisco and New York fairs.

At top, center, is Gaspar Cassado, Spanish cellist and composer, who has performed with leading symphonies in Europe and as soloist with the New York Philharmonic and Chicago orchestras. He is considered the leading cellist in the concert field today.

Top, left, is Muriel Dickson, formerly star with the Doly-Carte in London, foremost exponent of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas, who was with the Metropolitan opera the past season. She has sung with the Cincinnati Zoo opera and St. Louis municipal operas.

Below, center, is Ida Krehm, young pianist who was winner of the national Federal Music club award in 1937, and winner of the Schubert Memorial and Naumburg awards, the three foremost in this country today. She has been soloist with the Philadelphia orchestra.

Below, left, is John Carter, tenor, member of the Metropolitan opera, who is well known as soloist on the Chase and Sanborn radio hour, featuring Charley McCarthy, for 26 weeks. Three weeks ago, he sang to 120,000 in Soldier's field in Chicago, and in March, was heard three times over the Kellogg hour.

Three programs that will be presented at Ponca City, at which city memberships would be honored for admission, were announced Friday by Mrs. Earle Heckman.

Lucy Monroe, soprano sang on the American Album of Familiar Music program for two years and was the first concert star in television; a piano duo composed of Ethel Bartlett and Rae Robertson, Australian artists known as "The Lunts of the Keyboard"; and Lisa Parnova, dancer, who was formerly with the Fokine ballet and was premiere ballerina with the Cologne opera, are the three concerts selected.

The three programs here would be different from the Ponca City entertainment, as a means of giving maximum variety to local members, Eugene Alden, representative of the Columbia Concert corporation, said Friday.

Dates of the programs in Ponca City, Arkansas City and Wellington, would be printed on the backs of the city membership cards as a means of information to holders of the cards here.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, O.
PRESS

OCT 6 - 1939

Classical

By MILTON WIDDER

THE last word for a Brahms concerto recording in the violin department is the featured release this month by Victor. It is the re-creation of this masterful work by one of the greatest violinists of the present age, Jascha Heifetz, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as the accompanying group under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Even the recording company acknowledges that this is the "last word," for they foresee no new recording of this work for many years to come.

The Heifetz technique, known the world over for its perfection, is ever present in this recording. The delicacy and clarity of his bowing is unsurpassable and the surfaces and the mechanics of recordings reach a new height with the release.

Naturally the Koussevitzky accompaniment is as perfect as the soloist's performance to make it all in all one of the true highlights of the recording year. (Album 581, $9)

Sir Thomas Beecham and the London Philharmonic are presented once more this month in a two-record album by the Columbia Masterworks division, playing the very popular and scintillating music from Bizet's "Carmen." (Album X-144, $3.50)

In the album are recorded the prelude; the "Aragonaise"; the "Danse Boheme" and the very popular "Trobador" tune.

Undoubtedly this will prove a popular release for its subject is one of the outstanding operatic favorites of this generation. Sir Thomas and his men give their all for the lilting compositions, taking the fiery music in their full sweep.

What's New in Town Oct 6-13 1939

MUSIC

NOTES AND COMMENTS

SYMPHONY SEASON OPENING

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 59th season in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Serge Koussevitzky will then begin his 16th year as the Orchestra's conductor. The program will begin with Beethoven's Third Symphony, the "Eroica," and also include Vincent d'Indy's "Istar" Variations, and Debussy's three orchestral sketches, "La Mer."

CONCERT NOTES

The first of the two concerts in honor of "The American Composer", on last Wednesday, October fourth, was enthusiastically received by a capacity audience. Dr. Koussevitsky was of course welcomed joyfully, as were the two composers who were present to hear their works played, John Alden Carpenter and Howard Hanson.

The program opened with Arthur Foote's Suite in E major for String Orchestra, Op. 63, in three movements, a brief prelude of flowing melodic character; Pizzicato and Adagietto; and a briefly moving Fugue.

Three excerpts of Deems Taylor's suite, "Through the Looking-Glass" followed. The suite, based on Lewis Carroll's famous story, is very pleasant music.

"Angelus," the second movement from Henry Hadley's Symphony No. 3 in B minor, was wildly applauded. It is a rather heavily sentimental work, in sharp contrast to John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers," which followed on the program. "Skyscrapers" was first produced as a ballet at the Metropolitan Opera House in 1926. Dr. Koussevitsky introduced the music as an orchestral suite in 1927.

The program closed with Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 2, "Romantic". Mr. Hanson says of it—"My aim in this symphony has been to create a work young in spirit, romantic in temperament, and simple and direct in expression." He succeeded admirably, for the symphony is indisputably romance brought up to modern tempo.

SPAULDING

The shorter series of Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts will begin October 30 and 31. Three soloists of importance are announced to appear in the course of the season. They are Simon Barer and Webster Aitken, pianists who have been highly successful both in Europe and America, and each of whom is to make his debut in Boston at these concerts. Albert Spalding, the distinguished violinist, will appear for the first time in this series. The final pair of concerts will be devoted to the music of Tchaikovsky, becoming a part of the Festival in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of the composer's birth.

KREISLER

Aaron Richmond's concert series starts with Fritz Kreisler's only Boston appearance on Tuesday evening, October 18, in Symphony Hall. Kreisler will bring with him his own new arrangement of Tchaikovsky's Concerto for Violin, which he performed with great success last spring with the London Philharmonic Orchestra.

LEHMANN

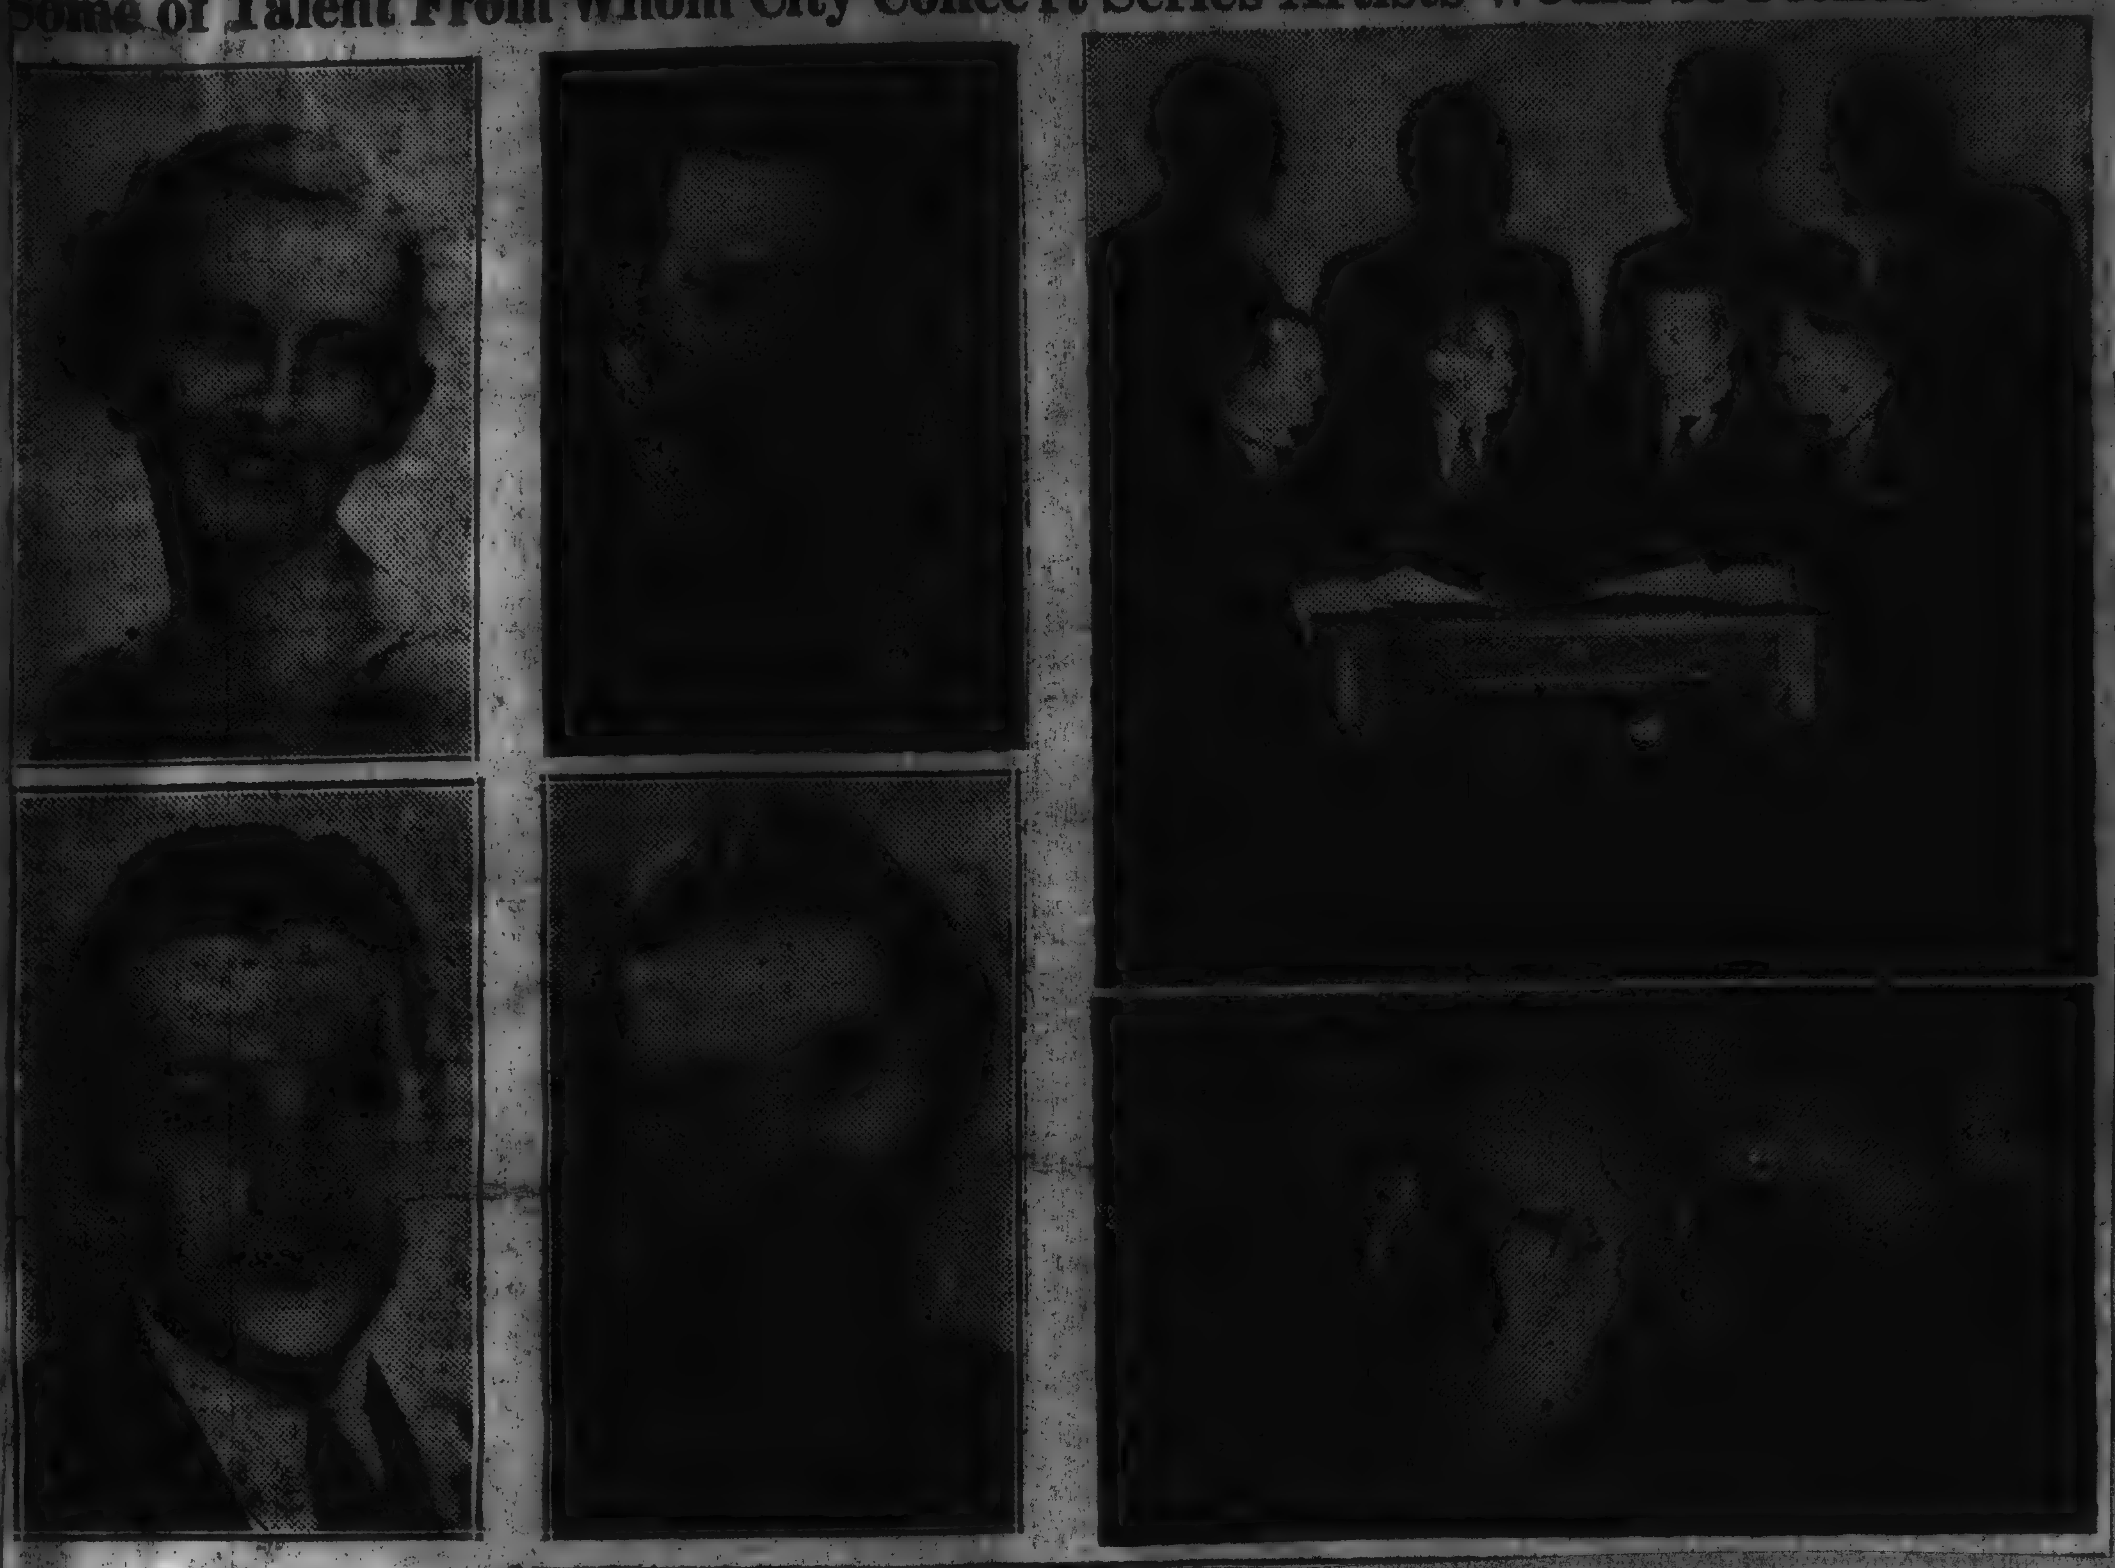
Lotte Lehmann will be the opening event of Aaron Richmond's vocal celebrity series. Her recital takes place Sunday afternoon, October 29, at Symphony Hall.

42

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BLACKWELL, OKLA.
JOURNAL

OCT 6 - 1939

Some of Talent From Whom City Concert Series Artists Would be Picked



Members of the Blackwell Cooperative Concert association will have an opportunity to hear a varied program in the three concerts proposed to be brought here during the winter months, and among those discussed by the executive committee are shown above.

The artists are among a large number from which selection of the city series is to be made.

Above, at the right, are members of an all-American ensemble, the Ionian Singers, who will bring to their listeners their own arrangement of the best male quartette music, particularly some of the masterpieces of the past, which have nearly been forgotten.

Below, right, is the Coolidge Stringed quartette, the members having appeared as soloists for the Boston Symphony and Philadelphia Orchestras. The name of the quartette is from the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge foundation in the library of Congress in Washington, where the artists played 35 concerts the past season. They played at both the San Francisco and New York fairs.

At top, center, is Gaspar Cassado, Spanish cellist and composer, who has performed with leading symphonies in Europe and as soloist with the New York Philharmonic and Chicago orchestras. He is considered the leading cellist in the concert field today.

Top, left, is Muriel Dickson, formerly star with the Doly-Carte in London, foremost exponent of the Gilbert and Sullivan operas, who was with the Metropolitan opera the past season. She has sung with the Cincinnati Zoo opera and St. Louis municipal operas.

Below, center, is Ida Krehm, young pianist who was winner of the national Federal Music club award in 1937, and winner of the Schubert Memorial and Naumburg awards, the three foremost in this country today. She has been soloist with the Philadelphia orchestra.

Below, left, is John Carter, tenor, member of the Metropolitan opera, who is well known as soloist on the Chase and Sanborn radio hour, featuring Charley McCarthy, for 26 weeks. Three weeks ago, he sang to 120,000 in Soldier's field in Chicago, and in March, was heard three times over the Kellogg hour.

Three programs that will be presented at Ponca City, at which city memberships would be honored for admission, were announced Friday by Mrs. Earle Heckman.

Lucy Monroe, soprano sang on the American Album of Familiar Music program for two years and was the first concert star in television; a piano duo composed of Ethel Bartlett and Rae Robertson, Australian artists known as "The Lunts of the Keyboard"; and Lisa Parnova, dancer, who was formerly with the Fokine ballet and was premiere ballerina with the Cologne opera, are the three concerts selected.

The three programs here would be different from the Ponca City entertainment, as a means of giving maximum variety to local members, Eugene Alden, representative of the Columbia Concert corporation, said Friday.

Dates of the programs in Ponca City, Arkansas City and Wellington, would be printed on the backs of the city membership cards as a means of information to holders of the cards here.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, O.
PRESS

OCT 6 - 1939

Classical

By MILTON WIDDER

THE last word for a Brahms concerto recording in the violin department is the featured release this month by Victor. It is the re-creation of this masterful work by one of the greatest violinists of the present age, Jascha Heifetz, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as the accompanying group under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky.

Even the recording company acknowledges that this is the "last word," for they foresee no new recording of this work for many years to come.

The Heifetz technique, known the world over for its perfection, is ever present in this recording. The delicacy and clarity of his bowing is unsurpassable and the surfaces and the mechanics of recordings reach a new height with the release.

Naturally the Koussevitzky accompaniment is as perfect as the soloist's performance to make it all in all one of the true highlights of the recording year. (Album 581, $9)

Sir Thomas Beecham and the London Philharmonic are presented once more this month in a two-record album by the Columbia Masterworks division, playing the very popular and scintillating music from Bizet's "Carmen." (Album X-144, $3.50)

In the album are recorded the prelude; the "Aragonaise"; the "Danse Boheme" and the very popular "Trobador" tune.

Undoubtedly this will prove a popular release for its subject is one of the outstanding operatic favorites of this generation. Sir Thomas and his men give their all for the lilting compositions, taking the fiery music in their full sweep.

What's New in Town Oct 6-13 1939

MUSIC

NOTES AND COMMENTS

SYMPHONY SEASON OPENING

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 59th season in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Serge Koussevitzky will then begin his 16th year as the Orchestra's conductor. The program will begin with Beethoven's Third Symphony, the "Eroica," and also include Vincent d'Indy's "Istar" Variations, and Debussy's three orchestral sketches, "La Mer."

CONCERT NOTES

The first of the two concerts in honor of "The American Composer", on last Wednesday, October fourth, was enthusiastically received by a capacity audience. Dr. Koussevitsky was of course welcomed joyfully, as were the two composers who were present to hear their works played, John Alden Carpenter and Howard Hanson.

The program opened with Arthur Foote's Suite in E major for String Orchestra, Op. 63, in three movements, a brief prelude of flowing melodic character; Pizzicato and Adagietto; and a briefly moving Fugue.

Three excerpts of Deems Taylor's suite, "Through the Looking-Glass" followed. The suite, based on Lewis Carroll's famous story, is very pleasant music.

"Angelus," the second movement from Henry Hadley's Symphony No. 3 in B minor, was wildly applauded. It is a rather heavily sentimental work, in sharp contrast to John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers," which followed on the program. "Skyscrapers" was first produced as a ballet at the Metropolitan Opera House in 1926. Dr. Koussevitsky introduced the music as an orchestral suite in 1927.

The program closed with Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 2, "Romantic". Mr. Hanson says of it—"My aim in this symphony has been to create a work young in spirit, romantic in temperament, and simple and direct in expression." He succeeded admirably, for the symphony is indisputably romance brought up to modern tempo.

SPAULDING

The shorter series of Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts will begin October 30 and 31. Three soloists of importance are announced to appear in the course of the season. They are Simon Barer and Webster Aitken, pianists who have been highly successful both in Europe and America, and each of whom is to make his debut in Boston at these concerts. Albert Spalding, the distinguished violinist, will appear for the first time in this series. The final pair of concerts will be devoted to the music of Tchaikovsky, becoming a part of the Festival in commemoration of the hundredth anniversary of the composer's birth.

KREISLER

Aaron Richmond's concert series starts with Fritz Kreisler's only Boston appearance on Tuesday evening, October 18, in Symphony Hall. Kreisler will bring with him his own new arrangement of Tchaikovsky's Concerto for Violin, which he performed with great success last spring with the London Philharmonic Orchestra.

LEHMANN

Lotte Lehmann will be the opening event of Aaron Richmond's vocal celebrity series. Her recital takes place Sunday afternoon, October 29, at Symphony Hall.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
RADIO GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

OCT 6 - 1939

43

Men Behind the Music

This Week: TAYLOR, FASSETT, ZACHARY

ONE started out to be a preacher. Another had strong urges to become an instructor of philosophy. And the last thought teaching English and dramatics was his chosen career. Not one is a professional musician. To their mutual surprise, all three landed at CBS and found themselves in charge of the music department.

They all have impressive titles, to which they pay little attention. Davidson Taylor is Assistant to the Vice-President in charge of Broadcasting. George Zachary is Acting Head of the Music Department. James Fassett is Assistant Head of the Music Department. Among them they have a thorough knowlege of all the problems presented by music on the radio and work together in perfect harmony.

—CBS Photographs

These three men run the CBS music department. George Zachary (right), former teacher, is acting head. Lean, slow-spoken Davidson Taylor (center) and quiet, scholarly James Fassett complete this CBS trio

Oldest in experience is Davidson Taylor—although none of them are old. Taylor and Fassett are in their early thirties, Zachary is twenty-eight. Taylor started life in a small Mississippi town. His father was a Baptist minister. His mother had been a brilliant kindergarten teacher. Both parents wanted their son to be a minister. He obliged to the extent of attending the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville. He wasn't there long before he realized that the ministry was not for him. But he stayed on and supplemented his religious training with improvement of his musical talents, consisting of a tenor voice, a bowing acquaintance with the banjo, ukulele, flute and baritone horn, and a great liking for directing choral groups.

Finally, one day a bass-fiddler pal suggested he try out as an announcer at a local radio station. Taylor liked the idea, applied for the job and got it. "How long," he wondered, "has this been going on? And if it's that easy, why not try for a big station?" He did. And was taken on immediately by the most important station in Louisville.

At about the same time, James Fassett, Dartmouth graduate, was discovering that his funds were not sufficient to continue his post-graduate studies in philosophy at Harvard. His musical background included an ability to play the piano and regular attendance at the Boston Symphony concerts, almost obligatory to a native of Massachusetts. He also wanted to be a music critic, and walked into the office of the late Philip Haleone, one of America's most brilliant and acidulous critics.

"Mr. Hale," blurted Fassett. "I want to be a music critic."

"All right," answered Hale, without lifting his head from the article he was writing. "I'll send you some tickets."

Fassett murmured a startled "Thanks." He was half-way out of the door when he turned and said, "But you don't even know my name and address." Hale laughed, looked up and said, "I like your courage." Fassett was hired. The next few years he eked out a living writing criticism, playing in stock, writing radio scripts and taking a flier in the piano-roll business as a salesman. He then became an announcer at NBC's Boston station, announcing the Boston Symphony programs. The Boston Symphony represents, for Bostonians (and some others), the epitome of culture in America. Fassett was fired for the strangest reason on record. He sounded too cultured.

Zachary, a New Yorker, was in the meantime teaching English and dramatics at a high school after graduating from New York University. He was a pretty good amateur violinist, but his chief hobbies were building radio sets and dreaming about radio production.

(Continued on Page 45)

He decided to see if his dreams were practical and applied for a position at CBS. He was taken on as an apprentice and allowed to try out some of his ideas. His chief feeling was that musical programs did not explore a broad enough field. He discovered, however, that radio has certain limitations, and acquired a healthy respect for a budget. Fassett arrived in New York about the same time and became announcer and then producer of the Philharmonic broadcasts. He followed Taylor, who had already been at Columbia for some years. Zachary was made nominal music-department head and Fassett his assistant when Taylor moved up to assist in general broadcasting. But all three continued to work together.

Taylor is tall, lean, slow-spoken, with a homespun sense of humor and an earnest enthusiasm for everything connected with radio. He is one of the best-liked men in radio and one of the easiest and most agreeable to work with. He is married to an Associated Press reporter.

Fassett is the quietest, most reserved of the three. His face is thoughtful, meditative, his manner deliberate. His approach to his work is scholarly and thoroughly conscientious.

Zachary is doing less and less musical work and more dramatic production. Two of his shows were the "Ellery Queen" broadcasts and "Men Against Death." Zachary is dark, wiry.

Accent on youth is a dominant note at CBS. In the case of Taylor, Zachary and Fassett, the results have been entirely successful. They are one of the main reasons why Columbia is a leader in new and daring ways to present music on the radio.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PLAINSFIELD, N. J.
COURIER-NEWS
OCT 7 - 1939

American Painter Collaborate s With Boston Symphony

Donald C. Greason, for many years a Plainfielder, son of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Greason of 940 Central Ave., and sister of Mrs. James H. Ackerman of Woodland Ave., is gaining ever increasing fame in an unusual field of art. He began the study of drawing and painting at the Art Students League in New York under Bridgman, Dumond, Mora, and Henri. His first exhibitions, in Boston, New York, and in the Addison Gallery were of landscapes, many of them scenes painted in Rockport, Mass., where he now resides with his family.

For the last few years he has devoted much time to a sympathetic study and sensitive interpretation (through pen and wash-drawings and oil paintings) of the conductor and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as he has observed them at rehearsals and when playing in concert. He has studied them in many lights and divers moods. The decorative contours of the instruments fascinate him. He claims that in all his work he "aims at order and hopes for beauty."

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky considers Mr. Greason an unofficial member of his orchestral family and the artist's presentations of these 100 men at work gives pleasure to all those who are interested in this group of outstanding musicians, and their magnificent contributions to American culture. The large printed folder announcing the concerts for the Boston Symphony Society's 59th season features on the first page a colored reproduction of one of Mr. Greason's oils showing Dr. Koussevitzky rehearsing his instrumentalists.

The Addison Gallery of American Art is at present sponsoring an exhibition at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., of 15 oil paintings and 30 preparatory sketches selected from the 150 or more made by Donald Greason during the last year and which make an important contribution to the records of this historic and contemporary New England organization. This exhibition opened on Sept. 23 and will continue through Oct. 29.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWOOD, MASS.
MESSENGER

OCT 7 - 1939

For example, there is Joseph Szigeti who will play as soloist with the Boston Symphony this winter. Mr. Szigeti, a Hungarian by birth, is a violinist of first importance and yet not a great deal is known concerning him as a most interesting person as well as a sincere and fine musician. Another great personality who will be heard in Boston this fall and who is given a place here is Kreisler. Much has been written of his artistry but here the author dwells on his work as a composer as well. There is Kirsten Flagsted, equally at home as the greatest of Wagnerian sopranos and as an interpreter of lighter music, whose greatest thrill came not from the applause of thousands of opera-goers, but when at a New York flower show they named an amaryllis after her. "I was never quite so touched in my life," she said

---

SECOND OF AMERICAN CONCERTS

Symphony Plays the Works of Schuman, Harris, Thompson

BY WARREN STORY SMITH

The second of the Symphony Orchestra's two free concerts "in honor of the American composer" took place yesterday afternoon. Whereas before we heard the music of some of the elder men and of the post-romantics, yesterday we were given the neo-classicists. The granddaddy of the group was Roy Harris, who was born in 1898, and the baby was William Howard Schuman, who came along in 1910.

HAS A GOOD FUGUE

Defying strict chronology, Dr. Koussevitzky placed Mr. Schuman at the beginning, bringing to its first performance his recently completed "American Festival Overture. Not everyone liked the Symphony of Mr. Schuman, which Dr. Koussevitzky gave us last season, but the new Overture is likely to win a host of friends. It is brilliant, vigorous, high-spirited, compact and contains a crackerjack fugue. Place for it should be found somewhere in the concerts of the regular series.

Mr. Schuman was on hand yesterday afternoon to receive the plaudits of the large audience, as were Roy Harris and sented, respectively, by their Third and Second Symphonies.

Gershwin's Concerts in F

But for his tragically early death, George Gershwin, too, might have been there, either to hear or to play his Piano Concerto in F major. To Abram Chasins fell the congenial task of performing the solo part in his former friend's composition. He acquitted himself bravely. Less consistent in style than the "Rhapsody in Blue," the Concerto was, accordingly, a less successful effort on Mr. Gershwin's part, straddling as it does the dance hall and the concert room. That it contains elements of popularity goes without saying, and there was much applause yesterday, both for the piece itself and for Mr. Chasins.

The Third Symphony of Mr. Harris is an arresting work, but not a completely satisfying one. The various sections of its single movement do not seem too well integrated. Too often music conveys a sense of striving, of wrestling with technical problems. And, as was suggested in these columns when the work was played here last season, the important subject of the fugue leans much too heavily upon a theme from Stravinsky's "Petrouchka."

Thompson's Symphony

Less original than Mr. Harris, that is to say, on this occasion, Mr. Thompson better succeeds in achieving unity of style and in a much longer symphony. In 1932, the year of its first performance, this Symphony, in a way, made history. With all his colleagues trying to outdo each other in complexity, abstruseness and cacophony, Mr. Thompson produced a work that was straightforward, clear and melodious.

There are suggestions here of the "New World" Symphony of Dvorak, while some of the melodic material derives from American folk music of the Stephen Foster and the "Chicken Reel" type. Fortunately, for the effect of the whole, the Scherzo and Finale are the strongest, most convincing of the four movements. Yesterday the broad, sonorous tunefulness of the end brought down the house.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
RADIO GUIDE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

x3

OCT 6 - 1939

Men Behind the Music

This Week: TAYLOR, FASSETT, ZACHARY

ONE started out to be a preacher. Another had strong urges to become an instructor of philosophy. And the last thought teaching English and dramatics was his chosen career. Not one is a professional musician. To their mutual surprise, all three landed at CBS and found themselves in charge of the music department.

They all have impressive titles, to which they pay little attention. Davidson Taylor is Assistant to the Vice-President in charge of Broadcasting. George Zachary is Acting Head of the Music Department. James Fassett is Assistant Head of the Music Department. Among them they have a thorough knowlege of all the problems presented by music on the radio and work together in perfect harmony.

Oldest in experience is Davidson Taylor—although none of them are old. Taylor and Fassett are in their early thirties, Zachary is twenty-eight. Taylor started life in a small Mississippi town. His father was a Baptist minister. His mother had been a brilliant kindergarten teacher. Both parents wanted their son to be a minister. He obliged to the extent of attending the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville. He wasn't there long before he realized that the ministry was not for him. But he stayed on and supplemented his religious training with improvement of his musical talents, consisting of a tenor voice, a bowing acquaintance with the banjo, ukulele, flute and baritone horn, and a great liking for directing choral groups.

Finally, one day a bass-fiddler pal suggested he try out as an announcer at a local radio station. Taylor liked the idea, applied for the job and got it. "How long," he wondered, "has this been going on? And if it's that easy, why not try for a big station?" He did. And was taken on immediately by the most important station in Louisville.

At about the same time, James Fassett, Dartmouth graduate, was discovering that his funds were not sufficient to continue his post-graduate studies in philosophy at Harvard. His musical background included an ability to play the piano and regular attendance at the Boston Symphony concerts, almost obligatory to a native of Massachusetts. He also wanted to be a music critic, and walked into the office of the late Philip Haleone, one of America's most brilliant and acidulous critics.

—CBS Photographs

These three men run the CBS music department. George Zachary (right), former teacher, is acting head. Lean, slow-spoken Davidson Taylor (center) and quiet, scholarly James Fassett complete this CBS trio

"Mr. Hale," blurted Fassett. "I want to be a music critic."

"All right," answered Hale, without lifting his head from the article he was writing. "I'll send you some tickets."

Fassett murmured a startled "Thanks." He was half-way out of the door when he turned and said, "But you don't even know my name and address." Hale laughed, looked up and said, "I like your courage." Fassett was hired. The next few years he eked out a living writing criticism, playing in stock, writing radio scripts and taking a flier in the piano-roll business as a salesman. He then became an announcer at NBC's Boston station, announcing the Boston Symphony programs. The Boston Symphony represents, for Bostonians (and some others), the epitome of culture in America. Fassett was fired for the strangest reason on record. He sounded too cultured.

Zachary, a New Yorker, was in the meantime teaching English and dramatics at a high school after graduating from New York University. He was a pretty good amateur violinist, but his chief hobbies were building radio sets and dreaming about radio production.

(Continued on Page 45)

He decided to see if his dreams were practical and applied for a position at CBS. He was taken on as an apprentice and allowed to try out some of his ideas. His chief feeling was that musical programs did not explore a broad enough field. He discovered, however, that radio has certain limitations, and acquired a healthy respect for a budget. Fassett arrived in New York about the same time and became announcer and then producer of the Philharmonic broadcasts. He followed Taylor, who had already been at Columbia for some years. Zachary was made nominal music-department head and Fassett his assistant when Taylor moved up to assist in general broadcasting. But all three continued to work together.

Taylor is tall, lean, slow-spoken, with a homespun sense of humor and an earnest enthusiasm for everything connected with radio. He is one of the best-liked men in radio and one of the easiest and most agreeable to work with. He is married to an Associated Press reporter.

Fassett is the quietest, most reserved of the three. His face is thoughtful, meditative, his manner deliberate. His approach to his work is scholarly and thoroughly conscientious.

Zachary is doing less and less musical work and more dramatic production. Two of his shows were the "Ellery Queen" broadcasts and "Men Against Death." Zachary is dark, wiry.

Accent on youth is a dominant note at CBS. In the case of Taylor, Zachary and Fassett, the results have been entirely successful. They are one of the main reasons why Columbia is a leader in new and daring ways to present music on the radio.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PLAINSFIELD, N. J.
COURIER-NEWS
OCT 7 - 1939

American Painter Collaborates With Boston Symphony

Donald C. Greason, for many years a Plainfielder, son of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Greason of 940 Central Ave., and sister of Mrs. James H. Ackerman of Woodland Ave., is gaining ever increasing fame in an unusual field of art. He began the study of drawing and painting at the Art Students League in New York under Bridgman, Dumond, Mora, and Henri. His first exhibitions, in Boston, New York, and in the Addison Gallery were of landscapes, many of them scenes painted in Rockport, Mass., where he now resides with his family.

For the last few years he has devoted much time to a sympathetic study and sensitive interpretation (through pen and wash-drawings and oil paintings) of the conductor and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra as he has observed them at rehearsals and when playing in concert. He has studied them in many lights and divers moods. The decorative contours of the instruments fascinate him. He claims that in all his work he "aims at order and hopes for beauty."

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky considers Mr. Greason an unofficial member of his orchestral family and the artist's presentations of these 100 men at work gives pleasure to all those who are interested in this group of outstanding musicians, and their magnificent contributions to American culture. The large printed folder announcing the concerts for the Boston Symphony Society's 59th season features on the first page a colored reproduction of one of Mr. Greason's oils showing Dr. Koussevitzky rehearsing his instrumentalists.

The Addison Gallery of American Art is at present sponsoring an exhibition at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass., of 15 oil paintings and 30 preparatory sketches selected from the 150 or more made by Donald Greason during the last year and which make an important contribution to the records of this historic and contemporary New England organization. This exhibition opened on Sept. 22 and will continue through Oct. 29.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWOOD, MASS.
MESSENGER

OCT 7 - 1939

For example, there is Joseph Szigeti who will play as soloist with the Boston Symphony this winter. Mr. Szigeti, a Hungarian by birth, is a violinist of first importance and yet not a great deal is known concerning him as a most interesting person as well as a sincere and fine musician. Another great personality who will be heard in Boston this fall and who is given a place here is Kreisler. Much has been written of his artistry but here the author dwells on his work as a composer as well. There is Kirsten Flagsted, equally at home as the greatest of Wagnerian sopranos and as an interpreter of lighter music, whose greatest thrill came not from the applause of thousands of opera-goers [illegible] York [illegible]

SECOND OF AMERICAN CONCERTS

Symphony Plays the Works of Schuman, Harris, Thompson

BY WARREN STORY SMITH

The second of the Symphony Orchestra's two free concerts "in honor of the American composer" took place yesterday afternoon. Whereas before we heard the music of some of the elder men and of the post-romantics, yesterday we were given the neo-classicists. The granddaddy of the group was Roy Harris, who was born in 1898, and the baby was William Howard Schuman, who came along in 1910.

HAS A GOOD FUGUE

Defying strict chronology, Dr. Koussevitzky placed Mr. Schuman at the beginning, bringing to its first performance his recently completed "American Festival Overture. Not everyone liked the Symphony of Mr. Schuman, which Dr. Koussevitzky gave us last season, but the new Overture is likely to win a host of friends. It is brilliant, vigorous, high-spirited, compact and contains a crackerjack fugue. Place for it should be found somewhere in the concerts of the regular series.

Mr. Schuman was on hand yesterday afternoon to receive the [illegible] large [illegible] sented, respectively, by their Third and Second Symphonies.

Gershwin's Concerto in F

But for his tragically early death, George Gershwin, too, might have been there, either to hear or to play his Piano Concerto in F major. To Abram Chasins fell the congenial task of performing the solo part in his former friend's composition. He acquitted himself bravely. Less consistent in style than the "Rhapsody in Blue," the Concerto was, accordingly, a less successful effort on Mr. Gershwin's part, straddling as it does the dance hall and the concert room. That it contains elements of popularity goes without saying, and there was much applause yesterday, both for the piece itself and for Mr. Chasins.

The Third Symphony of Mr. Harris is an arresting work, but not a completely satisfying one. The various sections of its single movement do not seem too well integrated. Too often music conveys a sense of striving, of wrestling with technical problems. And, as was suggested in these columns when the work was played here last season, the important subject of the fugue leans much too heavily upon a theme from Stravinsky's "Petrouchka."

Thompson's Symphony

Less original than Mr. Harris, that is to say, on this occasion, Mr. Thompson better succeeds in achieving unity of style and in a much longer symphony. In 1932, the year of its first performance, this Symphony, in a way, made history. With all his colleagues trying to outdo each other in complexity, abstruseness and cacophony, Mr. Thompson produced a work that was straightforward, clear and melodious.

There are suggestions here of the "New World" Symphony of Dvorak, while some of the melodic material derives from American folk music of the Stephen Foster and the "Chicken Reel" type. Fortunately, for the effect of the whole, the Scherzo and Finale are the strongest, most convincing of the four movements. Yesterday the broad, sonorous tunefulness of the end brought down the house.

BOSTON GLOBE—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1939

MUSIC
SYMPHONY HALL
American Composers Concert

A vivid idea of the accomplishments of American composers has been afforded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra's two pre-season concerts devoted to native music. At the second concert yesterday afternoon—like that of Wednesday evening—Symphony Hall was crowded and the audience enjoyed what they heard.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the first performance of William Schuman's "American Festival Overture (1939)," the Piano Concerto in F by George Gershwin (Abram Chasins, soloist), Roy Harris' Third Symphony and the Second Symphony by Randall Thompson.

Schuman wrote his Overture expressly for these concerts. Like his Second Symphony, heard here last Winter, the new work shows mental independence and technical aptitude. Schuman knows his own mind and writes accordingly, absorbing from what might be called the main stream of creative art in this country, just so much as he needs for his own purpose. With its constant bustle, interplay of instruments, peppery tone colors and rhythms, the Overture is extremely clever.

The one essential quality that Schuman has not shown in his Symphony or Overture is that of depth. The Overture rushes along on a surface of intellectual preoccupation. Its high spirits seem a bit strained.

If Schuman can muster emotional feeling to match the other aspects of his talent, his future should be unusually promising. He does possess enviable traits of technical ingenuity and a fresh point of view. But no enduring music was ever written that was not, first of all, an expression of something the composer felt in his heart.

The one masterpiece of the program was Mr. Thompson's beautifully constructed E minor Symphony. Here can be clearly discerned a fine balance of intellect, feeling and originality. And there can be no doublt of Mr. Thompson's artistic Americanism. Unless we are quite mistaken, no Europeon could have created the piece.

The melodic, harmonic and rhythmic idioms of jazz have apparently served as a leavening agent. His Symphony is not precisely "jazzy," but some of the best features of jazz are part of its blood and bone. Oddly enough, the introductory theme of the last movement has a fortuitous suggestion of the intermezzo in "Cavalleria Rusticana."

Mr. Thompson's art is an object lesson in good taste and proportion. He expresses himself clearly without waste of effect or energy, and he recognizes the blessed value of brevity. The variety of his rhythms is extraordinary.

Mr. Harris' Third Symphony sounded even better than it had last Winter. A new conclusion, building up a great climax, has been substituted since the first Boston performance. There are fine things in this Symphony; most of it shows a boldly individual hand. Yet one is duty-bound to observe, according to his faith, occasional monotony, a somewhat self-conscious desire for grandeur.

Primarily a gifted song writer, George Gershwin was on alien soil in creating a piano concerto. The requirements of form dammed the typical Gershwin flow of melody. The Concerto has nevertheless survived very well, and certainly gained by the crisply excellent performance of the solo part of Mr. Chasins.

Conductor and orchestra were, as usual, in peerless form from start to finish of the program. Mr. Schuman, Mr. Harris and Mr. Thompson all bowed from the stage. C. W. D.

THIS CLIPPING FROM METROPOLITAN HOST
NEW YORK, N. Y.

OCT 7 - 1939

Music

Carnegie Hall, 57th & 7th Avenue (CI. 7-7460). American Music Festival sponsored by American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. October 7th, 8:30, American Symphonic Music, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Oct. 9th, 8:30, Ossy Renardy, violinist. October 10th, 8:30, Havas Kato, violinist. Oct. 12th, 8:45, Philharmonic Symphony. Oct. 13th, 2:30, Philharmonic Symphony. Oct. 15, 2:30, Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra.

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

2ND AMERICAN CONCERT

The second pre-season concert of American music was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Abram Chasins, pianist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

William Schuman
American Festival Overture (1939)
George Gershwin......Piano Concerto in F
Roy Harris .... Symphony No. 3
Randall Thompson
Symphony No. 2 in E minor

If the first of these concerts honoring the American composer represented that animal as romantic and sentimental, the second, with the exception of Gershwin, showed the neo-classical side. That this side has many facets was proved by the wide difference between the sturdy academicism of Mr. Thompson and the more sharply individual idioms of Mr. Schuman and Mr. Harris.

There is probably little use in beating about the bush as far as opinion on these composers goes, out of courtesy to the spirit that has brought about these concerts. To us, then, by far the most interesting, indeed the really valuable, music of the two programs was found in the overture by William Schuman, which had its first performance yesterday, and the Third Symphony of Roy Harris, which was heard and generally approved at the Boston Symphony concerts last season.

Mr. Thompson's symphony was something of a disappointment, for we recall having liked it very much some years ago. It now appears as a very much too conventional work, with a good deal that is merely competent padding. The slow movement, however, is a charming piece of writing.

Mr. Schuman's overture is a robust and exuberant work, which seemed to us the reverse of the qualities he displayed in his short symphony, heard here last season. It is straightforwardly worked out and is both fresh and stimulating to hear. All this sounds as though we were writing to recommend a summer resort, but it is one of the handicaps of musical criticism. Take it that the overture is good.

Mr. Harris's symphony was written about at length last winter; and there is not much to add, except that a second hearing at this time increases one's respect for it. The composer's peculiar program notes, if that is what you call them, are really most helpful. They are in the best sense a guide to the music. There was gratifying applause for all three of these works, and all three composers were present to acknowledge it.

Possibly the late George Gershwin was so popular a figure in American music, that a festival such [illegible] this would be unthinkable without something by his pen. This rather flat and obvious piano concerto, however, fitted singularly badly into the program. We cannot own to any admiration for it, since it is painfully neither good, vulgar jazz nor interesting, refined classic. Mr. Chasins played it with taste and precision, but the performance did not convince us that the concerto belonged here.

We have said little about Dr. Koussevitzky's and the orchestra's role in these concerts, because the occasion has properly belonged to the composers. Yet, without their care in rehearsal and their skill and intelligence in performance, where would that occasion have been? As it is we have had the reassuring spectacle of a public enthusiastic over American music. This is the place where editorials begin on "standing on our own artistic feet" and so forth. For once let the reader write it and draw the conclusion for himself!

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

OCT 7 - 1939

53 Concerts Arranged For B'klyn

By GRENA BENNETT.

Brooklyn musical activities will play an unusually important part in the schedule of metropolitan events this season.

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences announces 53 concerts already arranged and many more to come. The season will commence Wednesday evening with a special concert festival at the Academy of Music, the program to compromise performances by a symphony orchestra, a large chorus and a group of ballet dancers. The announcement states that the Boston Orchestra, conducted by Serge Kussevitzky, will perform Nov. 24, Jan. 12, Feb. 15, March 15 and April 5.

Ballets on Schedule

A popular series will be devoted to "Music and the Dance" in which eight concerts and four ballet programs will be given by artists of internatilonal repute. Among the important details in the schedule are the recitals of Lotte Lehmann, Vladimir Horowitz, Emanuel Feuermann, Josef and Rosina Lhevinne, Jascha Heifetz, Lauritz Melchior and programs by the Jooss Ballet, Ted Shawn and his Men Dancers, Bali and Java Dancers with Devi Dja, New Friends of Music, Negro Folk Festival, the Mozart Boys' Choir and a number of specially devised chamber music events.

* * *

A group of singers, some of which are members of the Metropolitan Opera Association, are at present on the way to inaugurate a season of opera in Havana under the management of Giorgio D'Andria. Listed in the cast of 80 principal artists are Anna Roselle, Robert Weede, Lucille Browning, Sydney Rayner, Annunciata Garotto, Jesus Gaviria, Arthur Anderson, Nino Ruisi, Mario Cozzi, Arturo D'Amico, Mario Fiorella, Jovita Fuentes, Fidelia Campigna, Lillian Marchetto, Nina Doriani and Florence Weightman.

* * *

Herbert Janssen, baritone, who made his American debut at the Metropolitan last season, will give his first recital in this country at Town Hall Dec. 17. Mr. Janssen is at present in Switzerland, but will return in time for the event.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, O.
PRESS

OCT 7 - 1939

Six Other Concerts

THE Cleveland Concert course will open on Nov. 10 with the first appearance here of the Bali Ballet with Devi Dja and her company in native costume, including 30 dancers and native musicians. Their forte is Oriental music and dancing.

A debut, Zino Francescatti, new wonder of the violin world who has been compared by friends to Paganini, Ysaye and Heifetz, will be here on Nov. 24th.

On Dec. 15 the return engagement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be featured with Serge Koussevitzky as director.

Walter Gieseking, the sincere and fine pianist who has been one of the featured Columbia recording artists, will be here on Feb. 23.

On Jan. 26 Gregor Piatigorsky, one of Cleveland's favorite solo 'cellists, will appear on a program with Beryl Rubinstein and Arthur Loesser, featured as duo-pianists.

The course will close with another return engagement, that of the famous and exciting Jooss Ballet on March 15. "The Green Table," which is apropos again this year, will be repeated by the company as well as some new numbers.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

OCT 7 - 1939

Boston Symphony Gives Second American Concert

Works of Contemporary Composers Heard in Free Program--Local Reviewer Finds Music Too Modern

The second free concert of American music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon carried the listeners further along the road to the works of contemporary American composers. All of those represented on the program, except the late lamented George Gershwin, were present and were called to the fore after the performance of their respective works. This reviewer took frank enjoyment in the music on Wednesday evening's program, most of it, save the suite by Arthur Foote, of comparatively recent vintage. At times yesterday he felt that he had not quite caught up with the procession. But maybe there is hope for him yet, given a few more years for absorbtion of modern ways with the muse.

Thompson Symphony Best.

Speaking for his own taste in music, there was for him the most satisfaction in the Second Symphony in E minor by Randall Thompson. This definitely was not old hat. But it did seem to suggest a happy compromise between the classic symphonies and the ultra modern. Witness the grateful Largo movement in which there was melodic charm and restraint. That is not to imply that the work lacked vigor and force. It was richly colored instrumentally and well constructed. There was the word of Dr. Koussevitzky for it that it was also extremely difficult. This reviewer is disposed to rate it as the finest American work in this pair of concerts.

Next to it yesterday he would place Roy Harris's Symphony No. 3 in one movement. Though it was in the modern idiom, it had a certain unity and was not without its impressive moments.

Definitely Gershwin.

The Gershwin Concerto in F for piano and orchestra is one of his larger compositions that is less frequently heard. There would be no mistaking the composer: All the Gershwin characteristics were there. But as a vehicle for the solo pianist—in this case Abram Chhasins—it is doubtful that it is going to figure conspicuously in the artistic repertoire. Deft and in the veing as was the pianist's playing, the orchestral score evoked more interest. The snatches of pianism so frequently interrupted by the orchestra lent a choppy effect to the whole, giving a feeling of lack of continuity. To the younger generation such a comment will seem like treason. But one must be honest with oneself, even though forced to admit that music, like time, marches on. The old Abbe Liszt stoutly defended himself against sharp criticism of the use of the triangle in the orchestral score of his Second Piano Concerto in E flat major. In the Gershwin work the blocks and the sandpaper gadgets of the percussion department are heard against the solo piano. Liszt, though daring, did not venture so far.

Up-to-Date Dissonance.

For up-to-date dissonance and acrid stringency, young William Schuman's Festival Overture, composed for these concerts, took the palm. It was the youngest composition on the list. And gave evidence of the fact. Which is not to deny that it showed gleams of originality, a youthful zest, with few inhibitions and some ingenuity in handling the timbres of an orchestra. Its leading motive was a call to play used by the children in New York. It evoked lusty echoes of a rough and tumble festival in which the carnival crowd casts off all restraint. Needless to say, among the instruments listed on the score there were no harps. In fact, those ladylike instruments were missing from the platform throughout the entire program. And that throws a sidelight on its content. S. R.F.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

OCT 7 - 1939

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Gives Second Program of American Music

By G. Y. Loveridge

Boston, Oct. 6.—The second of two programs of American music was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon in Symphony Hall. As on Wednesday evening, there was a large audience.

Works by William Schuman, Roy Harris, Randall Thompson and the late George Gershwin were performed. Abram Chasins was soloist in the Bershwin work, the piano concerto in F.

Mr. Thompson's symphony, No. 2, in E minor, seemed to us the finest work on either of the two programs. It has substance, inventiveness, force, charming impudence, gaiety. It is excellently expressed, and its flavor is decidedly American throughout. One feels the sincerity and genuineness of it in every measure. Unlike too much other recent music, it does not try to convince by knocking one down; its persuasiveness is lyric and logical. The composer, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, and the orchestra received deafening congratulations from the audience. If this symphony could be pried into one of the Providence programs this season, a major benefit would be conferred.

Mr. Schuman's "American Festival Overture" was the first piece played. It is written with unquestionable skill, but it is a rather cold exercise, and very noisy.

The Gershwin concerto was delivered very ably by Mr. Chasins, and the orchestra ventured into jazz with gratifying determination. The concerto, although interesting in many parts, does not sustain the attention consistently.

The third symphony by Mr. Harris—which was first performed by the Boston Symphony, on Feb. 24 of this year—is in one movement. Although it is an impressive demonstration of the composer's control of the orchestra, we did not find it particularly stimulating.

Mr. Schuman and Mr. Harris were liberally rewarded by the enthusiastic listeners.

A reception for the composers represented on the program and for several others was given after the concert.

Florence Waters, professor of music at Trinity College, Hartford, will give an organ recital in All Saints Memorial Church at 8:15 o'clock Monday night, under the auspices of the Rhode Island Chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

Prof. Arlan R. Coolidge, head of the Brown University Music Department, and Prof. Renato Poggioli, head of the Italian Department, will be guests of honor at a reception to be held by the New England Opera Company committee in the Aurora Club on Tuesday night.

Giuseppe Martino-Rossi, New York baritone, formerly of this city, and Mrs. Harriet Eden, a member of the opera company, will sing.

Danilo Sciotti is director of the company. The committee comprises: Judge Luigi De Pasquale, chairman; Mrs. Ada Holding Miller, vice chairman; John F. D'Errico, vice chairman; Charles H. Eden, treasurer; Anthony Cimino, secretary, and Mrs. Minnie C. Carpenter, Judge Stephen J. [illegible] and Nathan Perlman.

44

BOSTON GLOBE—SATURDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1939

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

American Composers Concert

A vivid idea of the accomplishments of American composers has been afforded by the Boston Symphony Orchestra's two pre-season concerts devoted to native music. At the second concert yesterday afternoon—like that of Wednesday evening—Symphony Hall was crowded and the audience enjoyed what they heard.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted the first performance of William Schuman's "American Festival Overture (1939)," the Piano Concerto in F by George Gershwin (Abram Chasins, soloist), Roy Harris' Third Symphony and the Second Symphony by Randall Thompson.

Schuman wrote his Overture expressly for these concerts. Like his Second Symphony, heard here last Winter, the new work shows mental independence and technical aptitude. Schuman knows his own mind and writes accordingly, absorbing from what might be called the main stream of creative art in this country, just so much as he needs for his own purpose. With its constant bustle, interplay of instruments, peppery tone colors and rhythms, the Overture is extremely clever.

The one essential quality that Schuman has not shown in his Symphony or Overture is that of depth. The Overture rushes along on a surface of intellectual preoccupation. Its high spirits seem a bit strained.

If Schuman can muster emotional feeling to match the other aspects of his talent, his future should be unusually promising. He does possess enviable traits of technical ingenuity and a fresh point of view. But no enduring music was ever written that was not, first of all, an expression of something the composer felt in his heart.

The one masterpiece of the program was Mr. Thompson's beautifully constructed E minor Symphony. Here can be clearly discerned a fine balance of intellect, feeling and originality. And there can be no doublt of Mr. Thompson's artistic Americanism. Unless we are quite mistaken, no Europeon could have created the piece.

The melodic, harmonic and rhythmic idioms of jazz have apparently served as a leavening agent. His Symphony is not precisely "jazzy," but some of the best features of jazz are part of its blood and bone. Oddly enough, the introductory theme of the last movement has a fortuitous suggestion of the intermezzo in "Cavalleria Rusticana."

Mr. Thompson's art is an object lesson in good taste and proportion. He expresses himself clearly without waste of effect or energy, and he recognizes the blessed value of brevity. The variety of his rhythms is extraordinary.

Mr. Harris' Third Symphony sounded even better than it had last Winter. A new conclusion, building up a great climax, has been substituted since the first Boston performance. There are fine things in this Symphony; most of it shows a boldly individual hand. Yet one is duty-bound to observe, according to his faith, occasional monotony, a somewhat self-conscious desire for grandeur.

Primarily a gifted song writer, George Gershwin was on alien soil in creating a piano concerto. The requirements of form dammed the typical Gershwin flow of melody. The Concerto has nevertheless survived very well, and certainly gained by the crisply excellent performance of the solo part of Mr. Chasins.

Conductor and orchestra were, as usual, in peerless form from start to finish of the program. Mr. Schuman, Mr. Harris and Mr. Thompson all bowed from the stage. C. W. D.

THIS CLIPPING FROM METROPOLITAN HOST
NEW YORK, N. Y.

OCT 7 - 1939

Music

Carnegie Hall, 57th & 7th Avenue (CI. 7-7460). American Music Festival sponsored by American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. October 7th, 8:30, American Symphonic Music, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Oct. 9th, 8:30, Ossy Renardy, violinist. October 10th, 8:30, Havas Kato, violinist. Oct. 12th, 8:45, Philharmonic Symphony. Oct. 13th, 2:30, Philharmonic Symphony. Oct. 15, 2:30, Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra.

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

2ND AMERICAN CONCERT

The second pre-season concert of American music was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. Abram Chasins, pianist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

William Schuman
American Festival Overture (1939)
George Gershwin......Piano Concerto in F
Roy Harris .... Symphony No. 3
Randall Thompson
Symphony No. 2 in E minor

If the first of these concerts honoring the American composer represented that animal as romantic and sentimental, the second, with the exception of Gershwin, showed the neo-classical side. That this side has many facets was proved by the wide difference between the sturdy academicism of Mr. Thompson and the more sharply individual idioms of Mr. Schuman and Mr. Harris.

There is probably little use in beating about the bush as far as opinion on these composers goes, out of courtesy to the spirit that has brought about these concerts. To us, then, by far the most interesting, indeed the really valuable, music of the two programs was found in the overture by William Schuman, which had its first performance yesterday, and the Third Symphony of Roy Harris, which was heard and generally approved at the Boston Symphony concerts last season.

Mr. Thompson's symphony was something of a disappointment, for we recall having liked it very much some years ago. It now appears as a very much too conventional work, with a good deal that is merely competent padding. The slow movement, however, is a charming piece of writing.

Mr. Schuman's overture is a robust and exuberant work, which seemed to us the reverse of the qualities he displayed in his short symphony, heard here last season. It is straightforwardly worked out and is both fresh and stimulating to hear. All this sounds as though we were writing to recommend a summer resort, but it is one of the handicaps of musical criticism. Take it that the overture is good.

Mr. Harris's symphony was written about at length last winter; and there is not much to add, except that a second hearing at this time increases one's respect for it. The composer's peculiar program notes, if that is what you call them, are really most helpful. They are in the best sense a guide to the music. There was gratifying applause for all three of these works, and all three composers were present to acknowledge it.

Possibly the late George Gershwin was so popular a figure in American music, that a festival such as this would be unthinkable without something by his pen. This rather flat and obvious piano concerto, however, fitted singularly badly into the program. We cannot own to any admiration for it, since it is painfully neither good, vulgar jazz nor interesting, refined classic. Mr. Chasins played it with taste and precision, but the performance did not convince us that the concerto belonged here.

We have said little about Dr. Koussevitzky's and the orchestra's role in these concerts, because the occasion has properly belonged to the composers. Yet, without their care in rehearsal and their skill and intelligence in performance, where would that occasion have been? As it is we have had the reassuring spectacle of a public enthusiastic over American music. This is the place where editorials begin on "standing on our own artistic feet" and so forth. For once let the reader write it and draw the conclusion for himself!

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
JOURNAL AMERICAN

OCT 7 - 1939

53 Concerts Arranged For B'klyn

By GRENA BENNETT.

Brooklyn musical activities will play an unusually important part in the schedule of metropolitan events this season.

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences announces 53 concerts already arranged and many more to come. The season will commence Wednesday evening with a special concert festival at the Academy of Music, the program to compromise performances by a symphony orchestra, a large chorus and a group of ballet dancers. The announcement states that the Boston Orchestra, conducted by Serge Kussevitzky, will perform Nov. 24, Jan. 12, Feb. 15, March 15 and April 5.

Ballets on Schedule

A popular series will be devoted to "Music and the Dance" in which eight concerts and four ballet programs will be given by artists of internatilonal repute. Among the important details in the schedule are the recitals of Lotte Lehmann, Vladimir Horowitz, Emanuel Feuermann, Josef and Rosina Lhevinne, Jascha Heifetz, Lauritz Melchior and programs by the Jooss Ballet, Ted Shawn and his Men Dancers, Bali and Java Dancers with Devi Dja, New Friends of Music, Negro Folk Festival, the Mozart Boys' Choir and a number of specially devised chamber music events.

* * *

A group of singers, some of which are members of the Metropolitan Opera Association, are at present on the way to inaugurate a season of opera in Havana under the management of Giorgio D'Andria. Listed in the cast of 80 principal artists are Anna Roselle, Robert Weede, Lucille Browning, Sydney Rayner, Annunciata Garotto, Jesus Gaviria, Arthur Anderson, Nino Ruisi, Mario Cozzi, Arturo D'Amico, Mario Fiorella, Jovita Fuentes, Fidelia Campigna, Lillian Marchetto, Nina Doriani and Florence Weightman.

* * *

Herbert Janssen, baritone, who made his American debut at the Metropolitan last season, will give his first recital in this country at Town Hall Dec. 17. Mr. Janssen is at present in Switzerland, but will return in time for the event.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CLEVELAND, O.
PRESS

OCT 7 - 1939

Six Other Concerts

THE Cleveland Concert course will open on Nov. 10 with the first appearance here of the Bali Ballet with Devi Dja and her company in native costume, including 30 dancers and native musicians. Their forte is Oriental music and dancing.

A debut, Zino Francescatti, new wonder of the violin world who has been compared by friends to Paganini, Ysaye and Heifetz, will be here on Nov. 24th.

On Dec. 15 the return engagement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be featured with Serge Koussevitzky as director.

Walter Gieseking, the sincere and fine pianist who has been one of the featured Columbia recording artists, will be here on Feb. 23.

On Jan. 26 Gregor Piatigorsky, one of Cleveland's favorite solo 'cellists, will appear on a program with Beryl Rubinstein and Arthur Loesser, featured as duo-pianists.

The course will close with another return engagement, that of the famous and exciting Jooss Ballet on March 15. "The Green Table," which is apropos again this year, will be repeated by the company as well as [illegible] new numbers.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

OCT 7 - 1939

Boston Symphony Gives Second American Concert

Works of Contemporary Composers Heard in Free Program—Local Reviewer Finds Music Too Modern

The second free concert of American music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony hall yesterday afternoon carried the listeners further along the road to the works of contemporary American composers. All of those represented on the program, except the late lamented George Gershwin, were present and were called to the fore after the performance of their respective works. This reviewer took frank enjoyment in the music on Wednesday evening's program, most of it, save the suite by Arthur Foote, of comparatively recent vintage. At times yesterday he felt that he had not quite caught up with the procession. But maybe there is hope for him yet, given a few more years for absorbtion of modern ways with the muse.

Thompson Symphony Best.

Speaking for his own taste in music, there was for him the most satisfaction in the Second Symphony in E minor by Randall Thompson. This definitely was not old hat. But it did seem to suggest a happy compromise between the classic symphonies and the ultra modern. Witness the grateful Largo movement in which there was melodic charm and restraint. That is not to imply that the work lacked vigor and force. It was richly colored instrumentally and well constructed. There was the word of Dr. Koussevitzky for it that it was also extremely difficult. This reviewer is disposed to rate it as the finest American work in this pair of concerts.

Next to it yesterday he would place Roy Harris's Symphony No. 3 in one movement. Though it was in the modern idiom, it had a certain unity and was not without its impressive moments.

Definitely Gershwin.

The Gershwin Concerto in F for piano and orchestra is one of his larger compositions that is less frequently heard. There would be no mistaking the composer. All the Gershwin characteristics were there. But as a vehicle for the solo pianist—in this case Abram Chhasins—it is doubtful that it is going to figure conspicuously in the artistic repertoire. Deft and in the veing as was the pianist's playing, the orchestral score evoked more interest. The snatches of pianism so frequently interrupted by the orchestra lent a choppy effect to the whole, giving a feeling of lack of continuity. To the younger generation such a comment will seem like treason. But one must be honest with oneself, even though forced to admit that music, like time, marches on. The old Abbe Liszt stoutly defended himself against sharp criticism of the use of the triangle in the orchestral score of his Second Piano Concerto in E flat major. In the Gershwin work the blocks and the sandpaper gadgets of the percussion department are heard against the solo piano. Liszt, though daring, did not venture so far.

Up-to-Date Dissonance.

For up-to-date dissonance and acrid stringency, young William Schuman's Festival Overture, composed for these concerts, took the palm. It was the youngest composition on the list. And gave evidence of the fact. Which is not to deny that it showed gleams of originality, a youthful zest, with few inhibitions and some ingenuity in handling the timbres of an orchestra. Its leading motive was a call to play used by the children in New York. It evoked lusty echoes of a rough and tumble festival in which the carnival crowd casts off all restraint. Needless to say, among the instruments listed on the score there were no harps. In fact, those ladylike instruments were missing from the platform throughout the entire program. And that throws a sidelight on its content. S. R. F.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

OCT 7 - 1939

MUSIC

Boston Symphony Gives Second Program of American Music

By G. Y. Loveridge

Boston, Oct. 6.—The second of two programs of American music was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon in Symphony Hall. As on Wednesday evening, there was a large audience.

Works by William Schuman, Roy Harris, Randall Thompson and the late George Gershwin were performed. Abram Chasins was soloist in the Bershwin work, the piano concerto in F.

Mr. Thompson's symphony, No. 2, in E minor, seemed to us the finest work on either of the two programs. It has substance, inventiveness, force, charming impudence, gaiety. It is excellently expressed, and its flavor is decidedly American throughout. One feels the sincerity and genuineness of it in every measure. Unlike too much other recent music, it does not try to convince by knocking one down; its persuasiveness is lyric and logical. The composer, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, and the orchestra received deafening congratulations from the audience. If this symphony could be pried into one of the Providence programs this season, a major benefit would be conferred.

Mr. Schuman's "American Festival Overture" was the first piece played. It is written with unquestionable skill, but it is a rather cold exercise, and very noisy.

The Gershwin concerto was delivered very ably by Mr. Chasins, and the orchestra ventured into jazz with gratifying determination. The concerto, although interesting in many parts, does not sustain the attention consistently.

The third symphony by Mr. Harris—which was first performed by the Boston Symphony, on Feb. 24 of this year—is in one movement. Although it is an impressive demonstration of the composer's command of the orchestra, we did not find it particularly stimulating.

Mr. Schuman and Mr. Harris were liberally rewarded by the enthusiastic listeners.

A reception for the composers represented on the program and for several others was given after the concert.

Florence Waters, professor of music at Trinity College, Hartford, will give an organ recital [illegible] Saints Memorial Church at [illegible] o'clock Monday night, under the auspices of the Rhode Island Chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

Prof. Arlan R. Coolidge, head of the Brown University Music Department, and Prof. Renato Poggioli, head of the Italian Department, will be guests of honor at a reception to be held by the New England Opera Company committee in the Aurora Club on Tuesday night.

Giuseppe Martino-Rossi, New York baritone, formerly of this city, and Mrs. Harriet Eden, a member of the opera company, will sing.

Danilo Sciotti is director of the company. The committee comprises: Judge Luigi De Pasquale, chairman; Mrs. Ada Holding Miller, vice chairman; John F. D'Errico, vice chairman; Charles H. Eden, treasurer; Anthony Cimino, secretary, and Mrs. Minnie C. Carpenter, Judge Stephen [illegible] Perlman.

45

MUSIC

Contemporaries

Modern American Composers Honored With Boston Symphony Gala Program

By EDWARD DOWNES

The second of two pre-season programs of American music "in honor of the American composer" was presented to a large and enthusiastic audience yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky. It included a symphony by Randall Thompson that has worn extremely well, a piano concerto by George Gershwin that has worn not so well, an "American Festival Overture" composed especially for this occasion by William Howard Schuman and Roy Harris' Third Symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky has a cunning hand in putting a program together and yesterday he must have succeeded in making American serious music palatable, even to its most die-hard opponents.

The popular success of the afternoon was Randall Thompson's Second Symphony in E minor which came last on the program. There was actually cheering and stamping of feet when Mr. Thompson appeared to acknowledge applause and Koussevitzky beamed at the success of the American music which he has so discerningly and effectively sponsored since his arrival among us.

Composed 1930-31, Mr. Thompson's symphony has been frequently repeated since its first performance seven years ago by the Rochester Philharmonic under Howard Hanson. The reason is not far to seek, for it is skillfully constructed and frankly popular in its manner. Its themes are pregnant, the invention is fertile and ideas seem to flow easily.

Many of the melodies have a jaunty American inflection without, however, the slightest suggestion of cheapness. And "popular" here does not mean shallow.

The first movement has a vigorous rhythmic theme that adapts itself extremely well to the form and is at times distantly reminiscent of the technique used in the first movement of Beethoven's C minor Symphony. The second movement is broadly lyric, strongly flavored with "blue" sentiment. The scherzo suits its title, for its close is a witty prank, and the last movement, more monumental in style than any of the three preceding, is a fitting close to the work.

The center of curiosity on the program was the opening number, for Mr. Schuman's Overture was having its first performance anywhere. It is, as its title suggests, a festive composition, and aside from a certain apparent diffuseness of form, an entertaining piece. Its first and principal theme is, according to the composer, the "call to play" of the New York streets, yelled on the syllables, "Wee-Awk-Eee."

This makes an excellent theme for symphonic composition, and it is tossed about in virtuoso fashion by the young composer's orchestra, in which the brasses play a mighty role. The middle section of the overture is a modern fugue first for strings alone, then woods alone and finally both combined. The end brings a restatement and re-emphasis of the principal theme of the overture, and the whole ends most effectively. Almost too effectively—for the score is not quite free of a certain impression of straining for brilliance. This results in what at times seemed somewhat superfluous fuss and noise, but it is quite possible a second hearing would entirely alter this impression.

George Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F, ingratiating as it undoubtedly is, appeared yesterday more interesting than significant. The solo part was played with fleetness and authority by Abram Chasins, who was a boyhood friend of Gershwin. There are enchanting moments in the concerto that could have been written only by Gershwin, but they remain moments, and one came away with the renewed impression that Gershwin's greatest work was done in his glorious musical comedies.

Such programs as the two that Dr. Koussevitzky's men have given us this week are, aside from their purely entertainment value, an excellent thing to bring the worth of our own music to the attention of our own audiences. They are probably excellent also for the morale of the struggling American composers. Dr. Koussevitzky, through his constant preoccupation with American music, is peculiarly fitted to arrange them.

Would it be possible to make such a pair of concerts the prelude to each Boston Symphony Orchestra season? Certainly they would accrue greatly to the prestige of the orchestra and even of our city itself.

Marshaling His Forces

Fl.
Ob.
Cl.
Fg.
Cor.
Timp.
Vl.I
Vl.II
Vla.
Vlc.
Cb.
1.
1.2.
2. p pp
30
235

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

After a brilliant excursion into the field of modern American music, he will open the Boston Symphony season next Friday afternoon with the classic of classics, the Beethoven "Eroica."

Wanted: Unmusical Backers for Symphony

In Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 59th season. Serge Koussevitzky will then begin his 16th year as the orchestra's conductor with Beethoven's Third Symphony, the "Eroica," Vincent d'Indy's "Istar" variations and Debussy's three orchestral sketches, "La Mer."

Does that seem a routine announcement? In any case, it is of the utmost importance that we keep ourselves from regarding it as such. For that announcement means that on Friday next there opens, in our city, the most brilliant season of symphony concerts to be heard in any concert hall in the world today.

The possession of such an orchestra alone would suffice to raise Boston to a position of national and international prominence, if it had no other claim to fame. This in turn makes the Boston Symphony the direct concern of all citizens, whether they have a specific interest in music or not.

Last Thursday, a Transcript editorial discussed the problem of the Symphony's annual deficit of $1000. Up to now a large part of this deficit has been met by the association of Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who, naturally enough, has been composed of music lovers, many of them subscribers to the Symphony concerts. But in these troublous times the base of support of the Symphony needs to be broadened.

The Boston Symphony is a great civic undertaking, as important as our museums, hospitals, libraries, schools and in no better position than these completely to support itself. It contributes as much to the prestige and welfare of the city as do these organizations and should have, therefore, the support of all citizens, even those who have no direct interest in music.

For, to be quite materialistic, a symphony orchestra has not only a cultural, but a financial value to its community. "The experience of Philadelphia," said a vice president of the Philadelphia Orchestra the other day, "is that the two things for which Philadelphia is best known, not only all over America, but all over the world, are the Liberty Bell and the Philadelphia Orchestra. We get untold thousands of dollars of valuable and favorable publicity every day in the year from reading matter and broadcasting in which concerts, records or personalities of the Philadelphia Orchestra are mentioned. We have no way of measuring it, yet we know definitely that thousands of people of the best type mentally and financially are attracted to our town as visitors and residents every year by this unrivalled civic attraction."

If that is true of Philadelphia and its orchestra, it must be true of Boston with its superb body of musicians.

In New York, for instance, the popularity and esteem in which the Boston Symphony is held, is the envy of other orchestras. This department can testify from personal experience to the fame of our Symphony Orchestra all over Europe. Europeans who have been fortunate enough to hear it here, recordings of the Boston Symphony and reports of European musicians who have had professional contacts with our orchestra have fed this fame. But the renown of our orchestra is by no means limited to Europe and America.

A close friend of ours, in Cairo soon after the year 1900, mentioning quite casually to a Egyptian acquaintance that she was from Boston, was greeted by the (to her) amazing reply: "Oh yes, Boston—the city that has the greatest symphony orchestra in the world!"

In the travel diary of his latest American tour, "Etats-Unis '39," Paul Morand writes with astonishment and admiration of American orchestras as being one of the highest manifestations of our culture.

We know that from time immemorial the prestige and attractive power of cities has stood in direct relation to its artistic activities and organizations.

It is unnecessary further to emphasize the services that the Boston Symphony Orchestra with its Berkshire Festival, its "Pop" Concerts, Esplanade Concerts, regular subscription series and out-of-town concerts, is rendering its community locally, nationally and internationally.

The appeal to musical and non-musical citizens to join the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra should meet with a wide response.

EDWARD DOWNES

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

OCT 7 - 1939

Unity Concerts

Kreisler to Launch Montclair Institute's 20th Season

Unity Institute of Montclair will start its 20th concert season October 27 by presenting in Montclair High School the same artist who launched the series. It was October 28, 1920, that Fritz Kreisler, violinist, was heard in Montclair in the first of four concerts under the auspices of Unity Institute founded by the late Rev. Edgar Swan Wiers.

Giovanni Martinelli, tenor of the Metropolitan, will be heard November 17. A joint concert by Kerstin Thorberg, Metropolitan contralto, and Emanuel Feuermann, cellist, will take place January 19, while the season will close March 15, when Anton Rubinstein, Polish pianist, will be heard.

As in previous seasons there will be an extra event. The Boston Symphony under Serge Koussevitzky will play Wednesday, January 10. This orchestra was heard in the same capacity a few seasons ago.

In addition, Unity will sponsor two chamber music recitals Friday mornings, November 10 and December 8, at 10:30 at Montclair Art Museum. Two string ensembles will be heard. The Coolidge String Quartet will play at the first concert and the Griller String Quartet of London will be heard at the second event.

46

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

OCT 7 - 1939

Music

Boston Symphony Orchestra Gives Second of Two Programs of American Music in Symphony Hall.—Large Audience Enthusiastic. Composers Attend Reception Held Following Concert.

By G. Y. Loveridge

Boston, Oct. 6.—The second of two programs of American music was given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this afternoon in Symphony Hall. As on Wednesday evening, there was a large audience.

Works by William Schuman, Roy Harris, Randall Thompson and the late George Gershwin were performed. Abram Chasins was soloist in the Bershwin work, the piano concerto in F.

Mr. Thompson's symphony, No. 2, in E minor, seemed to us the finest work on either of the two programs. It has substance, inventiveness, force, charming impudence, gaiety, It is excellently expressed, and its flavor is decidedly American throughout. One feels the sincerity and genuineness of it in every measure. Unlike too much other recent music, it does not try to convince by knocking one down; its persuasiveness is lyric and logical. The composer, Conductor Serge Koussevitzky, and the orchestra received deafening congratulations from the audience. If this symphony could be pried into one of the Providence programs this season, a major benefit would be conferred.

Mr. Schuman's "American Festival Overture" was the first piece played. It is written with unquestionable skill, but it is a rather cold exercise, and very noisy.

The Gershwin concerto was delivered very ably by Mr. Chasins, and the orchestra ventured into jazz with gratifying determination. The concerto, although interesting in many parts, does not sustain the attention consistently.

The third symphony by Mr. Harris—which was first performed by the Boston Symphony, on Feb. 24 of this year—is in one movement. Although it is an impressive demonstration of the composer's control of the orchestra, we did not find it particularly stimulating.

Mr. Schuman and Mr. Harris were liberally rewarded by the enthusiastic listeners.

A reception for the composers represented on the program and for several others was given after the concert.

Florence Waters, professor of music at Trinity College, Hartford, will give an organ recital in All Saints Memorial Church at 8:15 o'clock Monday night, under the auspices of the Rhode Island Chapter of the American Guild of Organists.

Prof. Arlan R. Coolidge, head of the Brown University Music Department, and Prof. Renato Poggioli, head of the Italian Department, will be guests of honor at a reception to be held by the New England Opera Company committee in the Aurora Club on Tuesday night.

Giuseppe Martino-Rossi, New York baritone, formerly of this city, and Mrs. Harriet Eden, a member of the opera company, will sing.

Danilo Sciotti is director of the company. The committee comprises: Judge Luigi De Pasquale, chairman; Mrs. Ada Holding Miller, vice chairman; John F. D'Errico, vice chairman; Charles H. Eden, treasurer; Anthony Cimino, secretary, and Mrs. Minnie C. Carpenter, Judge Stephen J. Casey and Nathan Perlman.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW KENSINGTON, PA.
DISPATCH

OCT 7 - 1939

Pianists Appearing Here Have Interesting Careers

Luboshutz and Nemenoff Learned Ensemble Playing At Early Age; Met In Paris.

One is not surprised that Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff take naturally to the duo form of piano recital which they will present here on Monday, October 16, under the auspices of the of the Civic Music association. Both of them have been playing ensemble music since they were children.

Pierre Luboshutz was one of a family of three gifted children who played together as a trio first privately at home and later on concert tours in their native Russia. Their grandfather was a well known opera singer, and their father a talented amateur violinist who operated a piano factory in Odessa.

At the age of four, Pierre began to study violin with his father. But his sisters soon put an end to this. The older of them, Lea Luboshutz (now well known as a concert artist) played the violin and the younger, Ana, the cello. The daughters decided there were enough stringed instrument players in the family without Pierre. They needed a pianist to accompnay them. So they united their efforts to induce the father to switch their younger brother from violin to piano.

Thus was Pierre's career determined. He progressed rapidly on the piano and at twelve was sent to the Conservatory in Moscow, from which he was graduated with the highest honors. Indeed so highly was he thought of that when Kreisler visited Moscow for a series of concerts, arriving without an accompanist, fourteen year old Pierre Luboshutz was chosen to meet the need. Later the boy was sent to Paris, where he continued his studies under the distinguished Edouard Risler and Professor Blumenfeld.

In 1912 Luboshutz made an important and auspicious debut in Moscow as guest soloist with the Koussevitzky Orchestra, Koussevitzky himself conducting. Then deferring to the wishes of his gifted sisters, he toured with them as a trio throughout Russia until the revolution.

Luboshutz first visited the United States twelve years ago and in the intervening period has toured annually through the country in collaboration with such artists as Eide Norena, and Piatigorsky. He also has given numerous recitals of his own and has played with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony orchestra under Arturo Toscanini.

Marries Pupil

Luboshutz's attractive partner in his joint recitals. Genia Nemenoff, is in private life Mrs. Pierre Luboshutz. She too had the advantage of a highly musical background

Her first teacher was her mother, who began giving her piano lessons at the age of four. When she was six the great composer Moszkowski heard her play some of his works and was so impressed that he arranged for her to be enrolled at the Paris Conservatory. There she studied with Isidor Philipp. She made her recital debut in Paris and not long afterwards played in joint recital with the brilliant cellist, Pablo Casals. Later she toured through Algeria, Holland, Belgium, Spain and Germany.

Ten years ago Pierre Luboshutz was conducting a master class in Paris, and Genia Nemenoff enrolled as his pupil. A romance ensued and two years later they were married. She kept up her music, however, and the two formed the habit of playing together regularly for their own amusement. It was out of this practice that their joint recital tours grew.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PHILADELPHIA, PA.
Evening Public Ledger

OCT 7 - 1939

THE CHORAL SOCIETIES, which were probably more severely affected by the depression than any other single group of performing musicians, have apparently taken on a new lease of life, perhaps due to the constantly increasing interest taken in the choral works of Sebastian Bach, and several of them have announced impressive programs for the season, especially the Bach Festival Chorus, which is largely increasing its singing membership. Other singing groups which will give public concerts are the Mendelssohn Club, the Choral Art Society, the Philadelphia Choral Society and a number of others. For several seasons past there has not been the interest shown in this form of musical art which is now being manifested.

Naturally only a small number of solo recitals have been announced so far, for these artists usually wait until a few weeks before their recitals to announce their dates and programs. However, Emma Feldman's annual list of five All-Star Concerts has been given out, and contains, as always, five of the greatest concert attractions. There will be, as usual, a number of ballet performances, the first, late this month by the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo under Miss Feldman's management, and the following evening a performance "on their own." The Philadelphia Forum has also announced its customary excellent list of musical events, including the annual concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the Curtis String Quartet will present four public concerts late in October and early in November, this being the principal chamber-music organization thus far to announce a Philadelphia series.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

OCT 8 - 1939

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which has long had the reputation of being the busiest orchestra in the country, will, it seems, be still busier this year. The season to begin this Friday afternoon and Saturday night will run right into the middle of the dog days—in August, to be exact—during which time the orchestra will take care of its regular concerts at Symphony Hall, its "pops" season, the Esplanade concerts on the Charles River, the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass., and the new Tanglewood School. So much for the public season. The men have been rehearsing since Monday.

Returning from vacation recently, Serge Koussevitzky told newspaper men that American composers are writing the best music of the day. Now, of course, such a statement from such a source must have been particularly gratifying to Ameri- composers, whose notorious fate it has been to receive brickbats rather than bouquets. But Dr. Koussevitzky himself must have been gratified to be able to make such a statement, for the facts behind the words have justified his long interest and faith in the American composer. This interest is now presented in concrete, visible form in a list of American works played by Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony in the past fifteen seasons—since, that is, he has been regular director. It contains the names of forty-three composers, who are represented by some 120 works, many of them introduced by the Boston orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SCRANTON, PA.
SCRANTONIAN

OCT 8 - 1939

Which world-famous orchestra played, at one concert, Haydn's Farewell Symphony in period costume, with candle snuffing, and Gruenberg's Daniel Jazz attired in white pea-jackets?

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, dressed as Haydn.

B. Herald Oct 8, 1939

The Boston Symphony Starts Its 59th Season This Week

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

We probably have in some part the Berkshire festival to thank for the fact that the Boston symphony orchestra starts its 59th season in such excellent shape. Although we can personally testify that it is easy to get from Europe to America, the public might have taken alarm if half the orchestra had been scattered on the other side of the ocean. As it is, the high standard of our annual orchestral season is assured.

The facts of the changes in the orchestra's personnel are as follows. The greatest change comes in the double bass and cello sections where of the former the first desk, Mr. Kunze, has died, and Mr. Lemaire retired. Two new men have been engaged for these posts. In the same section Mr. Juht has managed the feat of returning home from Estonia, arriving last week in America. Among the cellos Mr. Chardon is with the French army, but Mr. Tortellier has been excused from military service and will return here. Karl Zeise, the Boston cellist, has been engaged to play in the orchestra. It is not positively known whether the viola player, Mr. Bernard, will be able to leave France or not.

In the wind instruments there are fewer changes, and none at all in the brass. Mr. Mimart, the justly celebrated bass clarinet of the orchestra, has retired; and Mr. Mazzeo will move from the E flat clarinet position to take his place. Pasquale Cardillo of North Adams has been engaged to fill Mr. Mazzeo's desk. Mr. Rateau, the second flute of last season, was not returning in any event; and Phillip Kaplan has been added to the flute section.

From this it can readily be seen that the orchestra has suffered hardly at all from the war, with the important exception of Mr. Chardon, who took such an active part in the musical season here. Most of the changes are the normal ones that occur through death and retirement in any season. Certain ridiculous stories have apparently been circulated in other parts of the country, and these in turn can lead to idle gossip. It is, consequently, well to learn the facts before the formal opening of the season.

As a public, we have every reason to be jealous of the reputation and success of the Boston symphony. As an institution, it is one of the chief cultural ornaments of the community. Without it our musical life could hardly be said to exist at all. Of course, there is no question of that. But in such times as these we shall do well to guard its prestige with even greater energy and care.

What effect the war will have on visiting artists and other aspects of the musical season is open to more doubt. This writer, having been in Europe himself through September, is obviously not in a position just now to make any sensible predictions.

Glancing at the list of solosits with the Boston symphony, one can make a few guesses. Whether Prokofieff can get out of Russia would seem the chief concern. Mr. Smeterlin we can give our personal assurance will be available, since he was on the Nieuw Amsterdam and showed us the score of the Szymanowski concerto which he will play in February. There should be no trouble either about the other soloists, with the conceivable exception of Gieseking.

It is certainly possible that the availability of new scores from Europe will be affected, especially in the matter of parts. On the other hand this may be a blessing in disguise, since we shall get the chance to hear second and third performances of unfamiliar music which has been shelved after the premiere. It is known, by the way, that the Danish saxophone virtuoso, Sigurd Rascher will play at the second pair of concerts not only Debussy's Rhapsody but in addition to Jacques Iberts' concertino.

All in all it looks like an interesting season to take our minds off transatlantic problems. Already the two pre-season concerts of American music have constituted a significant and public spirited gesture in the artistic field. We are all of us well aware through 15 years of experience that Dr. Koussevitzky is not one to let the grass of conventionality grow under his feet. We may look forward, then, to this season as fully up to the standards and interest of the past.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BUFFALO, N. Y.
COURIER EXPRESS

OCT 8 - 1939

* * *

War Takes Few of Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has suffered few changes in personnel due to the war in Europe, according to Mrs. Zorah B. Berry, under whose management the orchestra will play in Buffalo, December 12th.

Most of the members of the orchestra who are foreign-born have become citizens of the U. S. Foremost among those is Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, celebrated Russian-born conductor of the symphony.

Paul Tortelier, young 'cellist who joined the orchestra in 1937, is a French citizen and is believed to have joined his regiment in Paris. Jeane Devergie, second oboeist, is also a native of France and is thought to have returned to France to serve in the army.

Mrs. Berry's series of concerts will open October 31st in Consistory auditorium with the concert of Grace Moore, noted soprano star of concert, opera, radio and screen. All the concerts of the eight-concert series will be on Tuesday evenings. Other dates: November 14th, Trio of New York; November 28th, Yehudi Menuhin; December 12th, Boston Symphony Orchestra; January, 23d, Richard Crooks; February 6th, Alexander Brailowsky; February 20th, Helen Jepson; April 9th, Lawrence Tibbett.

LOWELL, MASS., SUNDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1939

MONDAY-TUESDAY SYMPHONY SERIES

The shorter series of six Monday evening and six Tuesday afternoon concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra will begin October 20 and 31. Serge Koussevitzky will make the six programes, as he has in previous seasons, representative of the greatest music of the orchestral repertory, whether old or new. Three soloists of importance are announced to appear in the course of the season. They are Simon Barer and Webster Aitken, pianists who have each attained a high degree of success both in Europe and in America, and each of whom is to make his debut in Boston at these concerts. Albert Spalding, the distinguished violinist, will appear for the first time in this series. The final pair of concerts will be devoted to the music of Tchaikovsky, becoming a part of the festival to conclude the orchestra's season, in commemoration of the hundred anniversary of the birth of the Russian composer.

The dates of the six pair of concerts will be October 30-31, December 4-5, January 1-2, January 29-30, March 4-5, April 29-30.

SYMPHONY SEASON OPENS NEXT WEEK

The Boston Symphony orchestra will open its 59th season in Symphony hall, next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Serge Koussevitzky will then begin his 16th year as the orchestra's conductor. The programme will begin with Beethoven's Third Symphony, the "Eloica," and also include Vincent d'Indy's "Istar" Variations and Debussy's three orchestral sketches "La Mer."

47

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1939 ★ GREEN MAGAZINE ★ BOSTON SUNDAY ADVERTISER—Page [illegible]

SYMPHONY BEGINS SEASON

American Music Has A Field Day

By LEO GAFFNEY

SHOUTS, whistles, stamps and such extra-applausive sounds usually reserved for triumphal rallies climaxed the two-concert festival of purely American music at the hands of Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The demonstration was chiefly for Randall Thompson, New Yorker by birth, New Englander by heritage, whose Second Symphony had achieved its second hearing in Symphony Hall—thereby fulfilling the old wheeze, "What the American composer needs is more second performances."

Apparently feeling with Dr. Kousśevitzky — whose enthusiasm is boundless — that the Yanks are coming, coming along grandly in the rare realm of the symphony, Friday's audience seemed to accept the fact that their countrymen had at last arrived.

Listening to American works was no longer a duty—to be patiently borne on odd occasions during the formal concert season; it could be a delight.

It is.

Beginning with the warm dignity of the late Arthur Foote's String Suite—now secure in the literature of the land—the Boston festival of All-American music traversed the years of its development down to the throbbing present when jazz stands forth unashamed.

If the general complexion of Henry Hadley's "Angelus," from the Somerville, Mass., composer's Third Symphony, has gone sallow with time, there was the flaming color of John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers" ballet to compensate.

And if the charm and levity of Deems Taylor's "Through The Looking Glass" Suite seemed insubstantial to graver listeners, there was the thunderous Second Symphony of Howard Hanson, who seems to have done it all through gritted teeth.

The dramatic—one is tempted to say the melodramatic—mood in the second program was sustained by "American Festival Overture" (first performance) of the youthful William Howard Schuman, not yet thirty, and the Third Symphony of Roy Harris.

Mr. Schuman's Overture is begun on three notes of a street cry on the sidewalks of New York. But right there its allusion to program music ceases. Nothing scenic about it. The three notes are developed forthwith in symphonic fashion, only good and fast nearly all the way.

It was a "second performance," too, for Mr. Harris' Third Symphony. Though he hurled fewer thunderbolts than Mr. Hanson, Mr. Harris in his Third was profoundly affected by grandeur and gloom. All in one movement, the music rushed along to inevitable tragedy, culminating in crash of cymbals and "loud-resounding trumpet's dreadful bray."

In retrospect, the All-American festival highlights, as you might have expected, were the George Gershwin Piano Concerto in F and the Thompson Symphony.

Abram Chasens, at the piano, proved again not only that the Concerto is a livelier work than ever, but that also Mr. Chasens is an eloquent performer. He was recalled again and again.

The Thompson symphony has neither big moments nor dull moments; it is full of sustained song: always gay, witty, capricious, and so studded with joyous jazz that even the Koussevitzkean toe tapped on the podium.

Next Symphony Program

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 59th regular season in Symphony Hall next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. Serge Koussevitzky will then begin his 16th year as the orchestras conductor. The program will begin with Beethoven's Third Symphony, the "Eroica," and also include Vnicent d'Indy's "Istar" Variations and Debussy's three orchestral sketches "La Mer."

Globe

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

Oct 8, 1939

Boston Symphony's 59th Season Begins Friday

The 59th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin at Symphony Hall Friday afternoon at 2:30. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, entering his 16th year as conductor, will present three familiar masterpieces—the "Eroica" Symphony of Beethoven, D'Indy's "Istar" Variations, and the three oceanic sketches by Debussy which he collectively titled "La Mer." The program will be repeated at 8:15 Saturday.

The shorter series of six Monday evening and six Tuesday afternoon concerts by the Boston Symphony will start Oct. 30 and 31. As in the past few seasons, these concerts will fall into pairs, the same program serving each series. Dr. Koussevitzky will continue his policy of making these programs representative of the greatest music in the orchestral repertory, old and new. The final pair, a part of the Tchaikovsky Festival, will be devoted to music by the Russian composer. Dates for these series are: Oct. 30 and 31, Dec. 4 and 5, Jan. 1 and 2, Jan. 29 and 30, March 4 and 5, April 29 and 30.

Two pianists, Simon Barer and Webster Aitken, will make their Boston debuts as soloists in these series. A third important soloist will be Albert Spalding, the distinguished American violinist.

The beginning of the 59th season finds but few changes in the personnel of the orchestra. The following are newcomers: Pasquale Cordillo of North Adams, E-flat clarinet; Phillip Kaplan, Boston, second flute; Karl Zeise, Boston, cellist; Henry Greenberg, New York, double-bass; Paul Prose, Boston, double-bass; Eugene Lehner, viola (formerly of the Kolisch quartet), and Emil Kronsand, viola.

Rosario Mazzeo replaces Paul Mimart, who has retired, as bass clarinet. Of the orchestra members who were in Europe when the war broke out, all but three have returned. Yves Chardon, cellist, is in the French infantry. Mr. Tortelier, cellist, and Mr. Bernard, viola, are, on the other hand, returning here.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
OCT 8 - 1939

MUSIC and MUSICIANS

BY JOHN W. TEBBEL

WITH Mrs. Barbirolli presumably surveying the Carnegie Hall scene from her customary Box 1 chair, husband John will unveil the New York orchestral season Thursday night. The men of the Philharmonic are scheduled to perform such old favorites as Berlioz' "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, the C major (No. 34) symphony of Mozart and Cesar Franck's symphony.

On the side of novelty, Mr. Barbirolli says he will offer the world premiere of Jaromir Weinberger's seven variations and a fugue, scored for full orchestra, on the old English tune, "Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree."

If you can't get down to New York to hear these items, the entire ensemble complete with Mr. Barbirolli will obligingly offer another program in Boston on Nov. 1 at Symphony Hall, as part of the orchestra's first extensive tour since the season of 1928-29.

Mrs. Barbirolli's part in all this is uncertain—when last heard from, she was doing her bit in London, driving a truck.

◆ ◆ ◆

Koussevitzky Ready

On the other end of the Eastern front, Dr. Koussevitzky is ready to fire his big guns Friday afternoon and Saturday night. Divided, without a nod to politics, between French and German composers, the program for the first pair of Boston Symphony concerts lists Beethoven's "Eroica," Vincent D'Indy's too-seldom-heard symphonic variations titled "Istar," and Debussy's "La Mer," for whose interpretation Dr. Koussevitzky is justly celebrated.

◆ ◆ ◆

"Chestnut Tree" Opus

People who are fond of Weinberger's Polka and Fugue from his folk opera "Schwanda"—and that includes most concert-goers—will want to know more about his new "Chestnut Tree" opus. Pitts Sanborn, who succeeds the late Lawrence Gilman as annotator of the Philharmonic's programs, supplies the information.

Weinberger got the idea, Mr. Sanborn reports, when he saw a news reel last summer in which King George joined with a boys' camp in singing the familiar English tune, already exploited by Tin Pan Alley. Each of the variations has a title. The first, Her Majesty's Virginal, an elaborate canon; second, the Madrigalists; third, a tribute to the Dark Lady of Shakespeare's sonnets; fourth, The Highlanders, based on the music of massed bagpipes; fifth, A Pastorale, inspired by English landscape; sixth, a discussion about widows between the Wellers, Senior and Esq., as related in Pickwick Papers, Chapter 23; seven, a Sarabande for the Princess Elizabeth Stuart, daughter of James I. Then comes the fugue.

◆ ◆ ◆

American Music to Fore

A rash of American music already upon us appears likely to become the season's fashion. War-inspired patriotism though this may be, no one will regret the opportunity to hear music which has been unjustly neglected. Both the Boston and New York orchestras played all-American concerts last week. Moreover, Mr. Barbirolli announces that some time during the season he will perform a new dramatic cantata, "Moby Dick," composed by Bernard Hermann for orchestra, chorus and soloists.

◆ ◆ ◆

Treat for Bostonians

Aaron Richmond, the Boston impresario, announces an astonishing collection of top-ranking performers to be heard in four different series at the Hub. Lumped together, they make an imposing calendar from month to month. This month, for example, the lineup reads: Oct. 18, a recital by Fritz Kreisler in Symphony Hall; Oct. 24, violin-piano recital of three sonatas (Brahms, Bloch and Turina) by Harriette and Jules Wolffers in Jordan Hall; Oct. 26, two-piano program in Jordan Hall by Celius Dougherty and Vincenz Ruzicka; Oct. 29, Lotte Lehmann singing at Symphony Hall, and Oct. 21, the eminent pianist, Jan Smeterlin, at Jordan Hall.

◆ ◆ ◆

Hope It Won't Happen Here Note: The municipal orchestra of Hastings, England, has banned the works of Wagner, who happens to be Hitler's favorite composer. To make sure Der Fuehrer gets the point, Hastings will continue to play music by Haydn, Mozart and Beethoven.

◆ ◆ ◆

Tomorrow night in Carnegie Hall an amazed audience will hear Ossy Renardy, the young violinist, whip off all 24 of Paganini's finger-breaking caprices. Renardy is 18; Paganini would be 100 if he had lived to witness the unique tribute.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
OCT 8 - 1939

New Symphony

A Third Symphony by Roy Harris will be given initial radio performance on Toscanini's second broadcast, Oct. 21. This symphony by Southern California's composer has been played in concert by the Boston Symphony, Koussevitzky directing.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
MORNING TRIBUNE
OCT 8 - 1939

TOSCANINI SET FOR NEW SERIES

Performance of a new symphony by the well-known American composer, Roy Harris, guest appearances by Bruno Walter, Bernardino Molinari and Desire Defauw, and a series of 16 chamber music broadcasts in addition to the orchestra's Beethoven festival, are on the winter schedule announced for Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Symphony orchestra.

Toscanini's opening broadcast, next Saturday at 9 p. m. over WTCN(NBC), will feature works of Schubert, Strauss, Haydn and Respighi.

The Harris composition, a symphony in one movement, is the composer's third in this form. It will be given its initial radio performance on Toscanini's second broadcast, October 21. The symphony has been played in concert only twice before, both times by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
OCT 8 - 1939

Like the Chicago Symphony, the other major orchestras of this nation are opening their 1939-'40 seasons at this time. The Boston Symphony orchestra led off last Wednesday night and Friday afternoon with two nonsubscription programs devoted exclusively to American composers. Serge Koussevitzky, of course, was conducting. In Philadelphia, Eugene Ormandy led that city's ensemble in a much more conventional program for its first three concerts—Friday afternoon, Saturday evening and next Monday evening. Three items, representing the "three B's," were listed: Bach's Suite in D major, No. 3; Beethoven's Symphony in C major, No. 1, and Brahms' Symphony in D major, No. 2. As for the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, it opens its new season the same night as the Chicago orchestra, next Thursday. John Barbirolli continues as the conductor. For his opening program, he has chosen the Franck and a Mozart symphony, a Berlioz overture, and Weinberger's Variations and Fugue on "Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree," receiving its world première at this time.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle
OCT 8 - 1939

Gardner Read Visits City

GARDNER READ, graduated from the Eastman School with Bachelor of Music and Master of Music degrees, winner in 1937 of the prize given by the New York Philharmonic for the best American symphony, winner the next year of the Cromwell Award for European Travel and Study which award he was given again in 1939, was a visitor at the Eastman School last week.

Mr. Read just managed to get an emergency passage on a freighter that made a ten-day run to New York. He was in Copenhagen, Denmark, when war was declared and had his passage booked on the Bremen. This was transferred to Scanyork, an American line boat and Mr. Read was thankful to get a cot to sleep on and occasional meals.

In his second Cromwell year in Europe Mr. Read spent two months in Sweden, Finland, Norway and Denmark. He was entertained for an afternoon at Sibelius' home in Jarvenpan, just outside Helsingfors. In Oslo he met Issay Dobrowen, once guest conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic, and has Debrowen's promise to include some of Mr. Read's music on programs of his European orchestral tour.

Now Mr. Read will settle down for a season's hard work in his home in Evanston, Ill. He says he has absorbed a lot, has plenty of ideas and an eager desire to see what he can make of them. While he was in Europe Koussevitski played his Suite for String Orchestra at the Boston Symphony concerts on Dec. 30-31 of last year. Before leaving for his second Cromwell tour Mr. Read conducted his Passacaglia and Fugue at a concert given in Chicago by the Illinois Symphony Orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
MIRROR
OCT 8 - 1939

Music OF THE WEEK

The music season gets under way "officially" with the opening of the Philharmonic - Symphony Orchestra's 98th season Thursday evening, Oct. 12, in Carnegie Hall. The visiting Philadelphia Orchestra follows on Tuesday of next week, and the Boston Symphony, also a traditional visitor, rounds out the Symphonic "Big Three" later.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

OCT 8 - 1939

SEASON OF SERIES

FIFTY-THREE events are scheduled for the elaborate musical and dance program to be presented this season by the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences at the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The program opens Wednesday with a special concert festival including performances by orchestra, chorus and a ballet group, details of which will be made public later. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, will offer a series of concerts on Nov. 24, Jan. 12, Feb. 15, March 15 and April 5. Participants in the "Music and Dance" series will comprise Josef and Rosina Lhevinne, Oct. 18; Bali and Java Dancers, with Devi Dja, Nov. 1; Lotte Lehmann, Nov. 14; Emanuel Feuermann, Dec. 4; New Friends of Music Orchestra, Dec. 20; Jascha Heifetz, Jan. 3; Jooss Ballet, Jan. 16; Lauritz Melchior, Jan. 29; Mozart Boys' Choir, Feb. 21; Ted Shawn Dancers, March 4 Vladimir Horowitz, March 18, and Negro Folk Festival, April 10. There also will be a new series of recitals by young artists from the metropolitan area and numerous lectures by Jonathan Schiller, Aaron Copland, Dr. Felix Guenther and others.

The New Friends of Music announce that the war will not affect their program of Sunday afternoon chamber music concerts, which begin Oct. 29 in Town Hall. Forty-one of the fifty-seven solo and ensemble performers scheduled as participants are now in this country and those still abroad are said to be in no danger of missing their engagements here.

Mrs. Julian Olney's tenth anniversary series of concert attractions will open Oct. 20 at the Westchester County Center, White Plains, N. Y., with a program by the Java Dancers with Devi Dja. Other participants in the series include the Philadelphia Orchestra, under Eugene Ormandy; Yehudi Menuhin, John Charles Thomas, Simon Barer and Marian Anderson.

Participants in this season's Sunday night subscription series of the Ninety-second Street Y. M. H. A. include Emanuel Feuermann, Nov. 12; the New Friends of Music Orchestra, Dec. 10; Moriz Rosenthal, Jan. 7; Lauritz Melchior, Jan. 28; Nathan Milstein, Feb. 18; Josef and Rosina Lhevinne, March 3, and Artur Schnabel, April 7. The Budapest String Quartet will give its series Wednesday nights, Nov. 8, 15, 22 and 29.

Constitution Hall in Washington D. C., will house three series of concerts and recitals in the season 1939-40 under the direction of Mrs. Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey. The first Sunday series will offer John Charles Thomas, Robert Virovai, Grace Moore, Mischa Levitzki, Nelson Eddy and the Mozart Boys' Choir. All except Mr. Eddy's recital will take place in the afternoon.

The other Sunday series will present Helen Jepson, Sergei Rachmaninoff, Yehudi Menuhin, Richard Crooks, Bidu Sayao, Igor Gorin and the Don Cossack Russian Male Chorus. These artists will perform in the afternoon. Fritz Kreisler, Kirsten Flagstad, Lily Pons, Lawrence Tibbett and Vladimir Horowitz will appear in the evening series.

The Orchestra of the New Friends of Music, under Fritz Stiedry, will give three concerts, Nov. 16 and 17, at Oberlin College, Oberlin, Ohio.

The Adult Education Council of Chicago announces six artists for the fourth season of the Musical Arts Piano Series in that city. They include Gitta Gradova, Nov. 7; Rudolf Serkin, Dec. 5; Artur Rubinstein, Jan. 2; Thaddeus Kozuch, Feb. 6; Alexander Brailowsky, March 5, and Walter Gieseking, March 19.

Many new works are scheduled for performance this season by the National Symphony Orchestra, which begins, under the direction of Hans Kindler, at Constitution Hall, Washington, D. C., on Oct. 29. Moriz Rosenthal will be piano soloist.

The new works will include "Castellano," concerto for two pianos and orchestra, by Mary Howe; "Seven Visions," by La Salle Spier, to be played by the two-piano team of Luboschutz and Nemenoff on Nov. 8; "Offrandes Oubliées," by Olivier Messiaen; "Uriel Acosta," by Karol aRthaus, and the "Smetana Suite," based on dances of the Czech composer, by the Spanish refugee, Gunter Raphael. Dr. Kindler will also play for the first time in this country the Haydn symphony, in B major, No. 46. The work will be played from parts copied from the manuscript.

Soloists for the season will include Albert Spalding, Nino Martini, Marcel Maas, Myra Hess, René LeRoy, Kirsten Flagstad, Maurice Marechal, Marjorie Lawrence and Ossy Renardy. Carlos Chavez and Edwin McArthur will appear as guest conductors.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEWARK, N. J.
CALL

OCT 8 - 1939

Samuel Antek
Resumes Rehearsals—

Samuel Antek, conductor of the String Orchestra of the Glen Ridge Women's Club, promises an unusual program early in January. The Russell Kingmans of Orange will be soloists with the orchestra, Mr. Kingman playing a group on his cello and Mrs. Kingman a harpsichord concerto. Mr. Kingman, one of the leading lights of the New Jersey Symphony Orchestra who brought Mr. Antek here as concertmaster several years ago, owns an unusual collection of antique intruments.

The Glen Ridge group rehearses Monday evenings and Mr. Antek extends an invitation to "good amateurs" to try out for the orchestra. Applications may be made to Mrs. J. M. Phillips of 22 Wildwood terrace, Glen Ridge.

Mr. Antek is a member of the string section of Toscanini's NBC Symphony Orchestra, which resumes its concerts next Saturday night. The work of a Montclair composer, Roy Harris' Third Symphony, will be played at Toscanini's second concert the following week. The symphony was first played last spring by the Boston Symphony

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
STANDARD-TIMES

OCT 8 - 1939

THE REV. RAYMOND W. HIBBARD, pastor of the Community Church at Osterville for the past 11 years, has been named minister of the Centenary Methodist Church in Attleboro and will preach his first sermon there next Sunday. Mrs. Hibbard was formerly Miss Gladys Harrison of Fall River.

Mr. and Mrs. Roger L. Genest (Jeannette Corneau) of Sherbrooke, P. Q., Canada, announce the birth of a son, Roger Francois Louis, on Thursday, Sept. 28.

The Boston Salon Orchestra, consisting of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will give a concert at the open meeting of the Catholic Women's Club Tuesday night in the Sacred Heart School Auditorium, assisted by Helene Wiedemann, lyric coloratura soprano. Samuel Seiniger, accomplished violinist will conduct the orchestra, which was the one chosen to broadcast to Admiral Byrd in Little America. Mrs. John T. Higgins is hostess for the evening, assisted by Mrs. John E. Brady, Mrs. James A. Cooney, Mrs. Thomas Daley, Mrs. Henry J. Duffy, Mrs. Henry J. Holtham, Mrs. John J. Neilan, Mrs. Raymond F. Powers, Miss Genevieve C. Duffy, Miss Alida F. Hart, Miss Mary Little, Miss Irene F. Stratton and Miss Margaret M. Sullivan. Miss Dorothy C. Sullivan is president of the club.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM MONTGOMERY, ALA.
ADVERTISER

OCT 8 - 1939

Orlando Barera, Noted Violinist To Be Heard Here On Jan. 15

Orlando Barera, internationally famous violinist, will be heard in Montgomery on Jan. 15 in joint recital with Rosalyn Tureck, pianist, under the auspices of the St. John's Concert Course.

Born Feb. 6, 1908, at Ferrara, Italy, Mr. Barera is the first Italian in recent years to come into this international prominence as a violinist. His ascendency challenges the Russians in the matter of tonal and technical mastery of the instrument.

Barera studied under his father at the Conservatoire in Bologna, graduating at the age of 15 with diplomas for piano and composition as well as winner of the Grand Prix in violin. A two-year interval followed during which he devoted himself to further studies and composition; then, his first recitals in Italy, Paris and Berlin lifted him immediately into world prominence. In February of 1936 he made his highly successful New York debut, returning to Town Hall the following December to create another favorable impression—this time playing on the famous "Ward" Stradivarius from the Whittall collection of the Library of Congress.

A few of his important engagements recently have been as soloist with the Boston Symphony under Koussevitsky, soloist with the Philharmonic Orchestras in Berlin, Budapest, Moscow and the New York Philharmonic Symphony.

Besides his music, Mr. Barera has made exhaustive studies in old Italian paintings and is the author of numerous learned articles in this field.

The concert by Orlando Barera and Rosalyn Tureck will be the second in the series to be presented by the St. John's Concert Course during the season 1939-40 in Montgomery. Other artists to be presented are Alexander Kipnis, operatic basso; Jeanette MacDonald, soprano and newly elected movie queen of 1938; Zinka Milanov, dramatic soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company; and Carin Carlsson, Swedish contralto. Tickets are now on sale at St. John's Church office, 214 North Perry Street.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

OCT 8 - 1939

THE ORCHESTRAS

THE Philadelphia Orchestra, which began its home season last Friday, will begin its New York series of ten concerts in Carnegie Hall on Tuesday night, Oct. 17, when Eugene Ormandy will conduct a Russian program including an entr'acte from Moussorgsky's "Khovantchina," Scriabin's "Divine Poem," Prokofieff's "Lieutenant Kije" suite and Stravinsky's "The Fire Bird."

The Philadelphia Orchestra Association has organized a New York division with headquarters at 29 East Sixty-sixth Street, under the management of "Your Secretary, Inc." Inquiries and requests for subscriptions for the Carnegie Hall series may be made at this address. Mrs. Kermit Roosevelt, chairman of the advisory board for the New York division, and its committee will hold a tea next Tuesday at the River Club as a tribute to the orchestra, with Mr. Ormandy and Orville H. Bullitt, president of the orchestra association, as guests of honor. In his opening Philadelphia program last Friday and Saturday, which will be repeated tomorrow, Mr. Ormandy honored Lawrence Gilman's memory with a performance of the funeral music from Wagner's "Götterdämmerung."

New Philharmonic Cellist

Most of the information pertinent to the opening of the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra's regular season can be found elsewhere in this section. The only change in the orchestra's personnel is in the arrival of a new cellist, Rudolph Sims, to fill the vacancy caused by the death last summer of Henry Van Praag. Mr. Sims was born here in 1902, and studied here with the late Leo Schulz, who was long this orchestra's first cellist, and with Paul Bazelaire in Paris.

Subscriptions are still available in all the orchestra's series, although the balcony for the odd Thursday series, and the parquet for the odd Friday series, which both begin this week, are nearly sold out.

Marion Rous will give preparatory readings in the Carnegie Chamber Music Hall next Wednesday and Thursday mornings on Weinberger's variations and fugue on "Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree," the novelty of the opening program.

N. B. C. Symphony

Arturo Toscanini will conduct the N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra in the first concert of its fourth season of broadcasts from the National Broadcasting Company's Studio 8H next Saturday night, from 10 o'clock until 11:30. The program to be heard over the N. B. C. blue network, consists of Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, Strauss's "Don Juan," Haydn's 99th Symphony, in E flat, and Respighi's transcription of Bach's Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor.

In his second program, Saturday night, Oct. 21, Mr. Toscanini will include an American work, Roy Harris's third symphony. His next six programs will be devoted to Beethoven's music, closing on Dec. 2 with the Ninth Symphony, which will probably be played in Carnegie Hall instead of the NBC Studios. Guest conductors will follow: Desiré Defauw, of the Brussels Philharmonic, in his first visit to this country, Dec. 9 to 30; Bernardino Molinari, Jan. 6 to Feb. 3, and Bruno Walter, Feb. 10 to March 9. Mr. Toscanini will then return for eight more concerts, March 16 to May 4. In the last concert, his son-in-law, Vladimir Horowitz who has already arrived here, will be the soloist in Rachmaninoff's third piano concerto.

For his stay in New York this season, Mr. Toscanini has taken a house in Riverdale. For many years, during his visits here, he had stayed at the Hotel Astor.

Out of Town

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its fifty-ninth season, which is its sixteenth under Serge Koussevitzky's conductorship, next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening in Symphony Hall with Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, d'Indy's "Istar" Variations and Debussy's "La Mer." The second program, Oct. 20 and 21, offers Bruckner's seventh symphony, Debussy's saxophone rhapsody and Ibert's saxophone concertino, with Sigmund Rascher as soloists, and Saint-Saens's ballet music for "Henry VIII."

Frederick Stock will begin his thirty-fifth year as conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra next Thursday night and Friday afternoon in Orchestra Hall, offering Brahms's Academic Festival Overture, Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, Debussy's "Iberia" and Strauss's "Till Eulenspiegel." Artur Rodzinski's opening program for the Cleveland Orchestra next Thursday and Saturday nights consists of Weber's overture to "Oberon," Brahms's first symphony, Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico," for the first time in Cleveland, and the second suite from Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe."

The New Haven Symphony Orchestra, sponsored by the New Haven Orchestra Association and the Yale University School of Music, will give its opening program tomorrow night in Woolsey Hall, Yale University. David Stanley Smith will conduct Richard Donovan's "Wood-Notes" for strings, flute and harp, with Frances Blaisdell and Lois Bannerman as soloists; a Mozart concerto for flute and harp, Brahms's second symphony and Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" overture.

MUSIC AND THE WAR

Post 10-8-39

Should Be No National Rivalries

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

AGAIN the passions of war are intruding upon the peaceful pursuit of making music. In Hastings, England, the conductor of the Municipal Orchestra, Julius Harrison, announced that during the coming season he would play no music by Wagner. Immediately he found himself the object of a storm of criticism. And Sir Adrian Boult counters by saying that in the programmes of the BBC Orchestra the worth of the music, not the nationality of the composer, will be the criterion.

Yet, incredible as it seems, some busybody has already asked Edward Johnson if the Metropolitan would revert this year to its practice of the last years of the first World war, and sing the Wagner operas in English. The nature of the manager's reply may be assumed.

Before this sort of thing gets any further, it would be well for everyone to ponder the words of Romain Rolland, addressed to the members of the American Musicological Society, which met in New York city during the week of Sept. 11-17. Said the author of "Jean Christophe," who was prevented by age and ill health from attending this, the society's First International Congress: "In the field of art, there is not—there should not be—any rivalry among nations. The only combat worthy of us is that which is waged, in every country, and in every hour, between culture and ignorance, between light and chaos. Let us save all the light that can be saved! There is none more refulgent than music. It is the sun of the inner universe."

* * * *

Pressure of other matters has deferred comment here on the recent passing of Lawrence Gilman, the last representative of a brilliant epoch in American musical journalism. Such men as Henderson, Krehbiel, Finck, Huneker, Hale and Gilman were distinguished figures in the field of letters, as well as musical scholars; yet they all had mastered the special technique of journalism. It was their good fortune to have been able to ply their trade in a period when masterpieces were still being produced in something approaching quantity—although they did not always recognize them as such. Even Gilman, who made an especial effort to be open-minded and tolerant, had his moments of blindness. Sometimes, too, in his anxiety to be just, he discovered excellence where it did not exist, a far less harmful practice.

* * * *

The programmes for the first two pairs of Symphony Concerts display, on the whole, a commendable avoidance of routine. That for the concerts of this Friday afternoon and Saturday evening traverses Beethoven's "Eroica" Symhony, D'Indy's Symphonic Variations, "Istar" and Debussy's "The Sea." If the pieces by Beethoven and Debussy are sufficiently familiar, the noble work of D'Indy's is not. And the programme for the concerts of the following week is refreshingly unhackneyed. On it stand Bruckner's Seventh Symphony, Debussy's Rhapsody for Saxophone and Orchestra, Ibert's Chamber Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra and the Ballet Suite, from Saint-Saens' opera, "Henry VIII." The saxophone soloist will be the Dane, Sigurd Rascher. Of him and his much abused instrument, more anon.

* * * *

On top of Dr. Koussevitzky's two programmes of American music, heard at Symphony Hall last week, there will come at Jordan Hall on Tuesday evening a concert of American compositions, given by Alpha Chapter of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia Fraternity.

On Thursday evening at Symphony Hall the group of 45 colored singers, known as "Wings Over Jordan," will be heard for the first time in Boston.

49

Times Oct 8, 1939

A FESTIVAL LOOKS TO 1940

Despite Uncertainties Caused by War, Berkshire Fete Makes Plans for Next Summer—Season Extension Discussed

By OLIN DOWNES

THE recently completed plans of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for the year 1940 have an importance to the world of music which could not have been anticipated at the time of the festival's beginning, under the musical leadership of Henry Hadley and the presidency, then as now, of Gertrude Robinson Smith, six seasons ago. This is due first of all to the unique artistic achievements of the festival and the reputation it already enjoys throughout the land, and secondly to the circumstances of a hemisphere disrupted by war, and a world which must look to America for leadership and the maintenance of the highest standards in art.

Since Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra (following the two last active years of Henry Hadley's career) accepted the festival's invitation to carry on its project, that institution has leaped to a position in the forefront of all the important music festivals given in America. It is the youngest of the festivals of this class, the least pretentious in its proportions and the most distinguished in the nature of its offerings. It has been sparing of promises and prodigal of accomplishments for the public. It has proved again that musical offerings of the finest character, properly developed and set forth, especially in surroundings of such outdoor beauty as those of Tanglewood, may reckon in this country upon generous support. From the status of an admirable local activity the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has become an artistic asset of the nation. Its rapidly won prestige, thanks to the distinguished leader and the unsurpassed orchestra that Dr. Koussevitzky has made the perfect instrument of his will, gives it a power for good and for the constant elevation of musical standards which must be infinitely rewarding to those who have brought these things to pass.

* * *

The festival now faces problems consequent upon its own growth and the catastrophic changes that are taking place in whole sections of the modern society of which, in common with all other great American institutions, it is a part.

When the war overseas with its myriad possibilities of national involvement became an established fact, it was faced with the question of continuance. Should there be a Berkshire Symphonic Festival next season? Should it be postponed to years more propitious for works of peace and less likely to bring with them distractions, disturbances and financial tensions that might have the most serious effect upon the festival's development and fortunes?

Miss Robinson Smith represented not only her own sentiments but those of the festival board and the business and artistic management when she said that it was, if anything, more necessary to continue the festival in a period of war than of peace, and that it was particularly America's mission and local responsibility of the backers of the organization to do this.

* * *

"This is something that America has produced," she said, "that was never more in demand and more imperatively needed than today. There was never such a demand for great art, I am convinced, by a great majority of the people as there is today. There was never such a creative opportunity, in times of stress, presented before. It is not only our wish but our duty to meet that need with every power that we can bring to bear.

"We did not plan the Berkshire Symphonic Festival for a day or a season. We have tried to build solidly, conservatively if you like, for a future greater than we can know. Up to the present time we have been wonderfully successful. It must be our concern to buttress the incomparable work of Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony with a practical policy that will give their work the enduring support and security that it requires. We must not be flattered and led to too sudden expansion by success, and we must not hesitate to go forward with a predetermined plan despite obstacles."

Each season—and each of the last four seasons of the festival has ended with a financial surplus above expenses—the festival has proceeded to solidify the ground won in the last advance. Each Summer the wonderful grounds for the festival which represent the gift of Mrs. Gorham Brooks to the Boston Symphony Orchestra are further improved for the benefit of the musicians and their patrons. Next season, for example, comfortable seats will replace the serried rows of wooden benches which now stand back of the boxes. Storm shutters, of which the imperative need is self-evident, will be provided against inclement weather. These are details of a plan, very broad, which aspires to neglect neither detail nor grand lines of development. Extension of the orchestral repertory for next season is now discussed, with the question of the number of weeks that the Symphonic Festival will run a matter of most serious debate pro and con.

Thus, while it is evident that the festival is well out of its swaddling clothes, the question of the length of its season has been the subject of prolonged debate. Of the end of the two weeks' season of last August The Berkshire Eagle remarked editorially that "if the ovation accorded to Dr. Koussevitzky had been given the benefit of a decibel reading, there is little doubt that it would have rated in intensity and fervor with the great acclamations to music and musicians of all time. The record-breaking audience of 7,000 people which gathered, however, was more than acclaiming a superb leader and a great orchestra, although that was the immediate motivation. The audience was applauding and shouting its approval of the consummation of a great idea. It was the applause of confidence and joy of a nationally conscious audience which sensed that in six years' time there had been planted firmly on American soil a musical undertaking of world importance, not merely a community-sponsored and supported endeavor which coincidentally attracted music-lovers from outside the immediate region."

* * *

Then the question was asked: Did the acclaim of the last concert, and the attendance which had grown so rapidly from year to year, and brought out the festival, in each of four successive seasons, "in the black"—did this betoken unmistakably that the festival would "continue to gather the momentum of public appeal over a national musical radius?" If a season of three weeks and nine concerts in place of two weeks and six is determined upon, would the numbers of native music-lovers diminish in proportion to the number of additional concerts given? If so, the decrease in local attendance for the nine concerts must be made up by outside attendance to replace the home audience.

Then the question, Was it desirable, under whatever circumstances, that this home audience should be replaced? One of the charms of the concerts has been their atmosphere of something simple, unpretentious, local, if anything, in manner and flavor. And would it be better to have six sell-outs as against the possibility of nine houses but partially filled?

On a later occasion there will be opportunity to speak at length of the "academy," or Music Center, which opens next Summer for a term of six weeks under Dr. Koussevitzky's direction, the last weeks to be coincident with the weeks of the concerts by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. This school will give no marks or diplomas. It will deal less with practical technical accomplishment and routine wadings through textbooks than it will insist on actual experience and understanding, by professional and amateur alike, of music.

But of that more anon. Sufficient here to record the moment when the Berkshire Symphonic Festival, which promises to remain one of the few institutions that have developed in a spirit of genuine idealism and worship of beauty, has become of institutional age and looks to a future of effort commensurate with its brief but glorious past.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TOLEDO, O.
TIMES

OCT 8 - 1939

Boston Symphony

The Boston Symphony orchestra, with Serge Koussevitsky conducting, will appear Thursday evening, Dec. 14. The orchestra, now in its 59th season, has been under the baton of this conductor for the last 12 years.

Born in Russia he became recognized as its most distinguished conductor. Under his leadership his orchestra was renowned in all music centers. The depth of feeling which he draws from the great Boston organization has brought him numerous American laurels.

The lovely voice of Kirsten Flagstad, soprano, will be heard in the concert Monday evening, Jan. 15. Entering her sixth season in the United States, this singer has been singing to packed houses throughout the country. Since her memorable debut at the Metropolitan in February, 1935, thousands have flocked to hear her scheduled concerts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

OCT 8 - 1939

Recitals at Brown

Brown University announces several music events, the first of which is a recital by Bruce Simonds, pianist, in Alumnae Hall the night of Oct. 26. Tickets will be given to the university students upon request and will be sold to the general public.

Mr. Simonds, who is a concert pianist and a member of the Yale music faculty, will tour under the auspices of the concert project of the Association of American Colleges. The day after the concert here, he will visit the university music classes, to play and lecture.

A pupil of Tobias Matthay of London and a graduate of Yale, Mr. Simonds has appeared with the Philadelphia, Boston and other symphony orchestras and has given recitals in many cities. Recently he performed all the Beethoven sonatas, in a highly-praised series of recitals.

His program will include the Bach Fantasy and Fugue in A-minor, the Beethoven Sonata op. 109, a Schumann group, and pieces by Dohnanyi, Albeniz and others.

Trends in contemporary music will be explained and illustrated by Ernst Krenek, composer and pianist, in a recital in Alumnae Hall on Nov. 22. This event is free to the public.

Mr. Krenek, who wrote "Jonny Spielt Auf" and other operas, is now a member of the faculty at Vassar. Among his works are several atonal string quartets, three symphonies, a concerto grosso and a violin concerto. He will play some of his own works.

Mme. Irma La Bastille will give a lecture and recital devoted to Latin-American culture, in Alumnae Hall on Dec. 5.

Another Association of American Colleges artist, Sandor Vas, pianist, will be heard at the university on Feb. 22, and will remain to visit classes on the next day.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TOLEDO, O.
BLADE

OCT 8 - 1939

Concerts Begin Next Saturday

Two String Quartets, in All-Beethoven Series, Start Programs Today

Performance of a new symphony by the well-known contemporary American composer, Roy Harris, guest appearances Bruno Walter, Bernardino Molinari, and Desire deFauw, and a series of 16 chamber music broadcasts in addition to the orchestra's Beethoven festival, are outstanding events of the winter schedule announced for Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Symphony orchestra.

Toscanini's opening broadcast on Saturday, Oct. 14, from 10 to 11:30 p. m., over the NBC-Blue network, will feature works of Schubert, Strauss, Haydn and Respighi.

Symphony in One Movement

The Harris composition, a symphony in one movement, is the composer's third in this form. It will be given its initial radio performance on Toscanini's second broadcast, Saturday, Oct. 21. The symphony has been played in concert only twice before, both times by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston symphony.

Toscanini's first series of concerts will conclude on Dec. 2, with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth symphony hour. He will be followed by Desire deFauw, Belgian conductor making his first appearance in America, who will conduct the concerts of Dec. 9 to 30; Bernardino Molinari, to be heard Jan. 6 to Feb. 3, and Bruno Walter, guest conductor on the concerts of Feb. 10 to March 9.

On March 16, Toscanini will return for his second concert series which will continue until May 4. His concluding concert of this series will feature Vladimir Horowitz, world-famous pianist, as soloist in Rachmaninoff's Third concerto.

Beethoven Series

A series of chamber music broadcasts, supplementing the Beethoven festival planned by the NBC symphony for the concerts of Oct. 28 to Dec. 2, will feature performance of all the Beethoven's string quartets in alternate weekly broadcasts by the American Art quartet and the Primrose String quartet, beginning today from 10:30 to 11 p. m. over the NBC-Red network.

The two quartets, formed from the string section of the NBC symphony, are headed by Carlton Cooley and William Primrose, the men who share the first viola desk in the symphony. Other members of the Primrose quartet are Oscar Shumsky and Josef Gingold, violins, and Harvey Shapiro, cello. The American Art quartet includes, besides Cooley, Max Hollander and Paul Winter, violins, and Carl Stern, cello.

The program for the opening Toscanini concert Saturday, Oct. 14, is: Symphony in B minor, "Unfinished," Schubert; "Don Juan," Strauss; Symphony No. 99, in E flat major, Haydn, and Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor, Respighi-Bach.

THIS CLIPPING FROM HUDSON, N. Y.
DAILY STAR

OCT 9 - 1939

FESTIVAL HAS 107 BOXES SOLD FOR 1940 SEASON

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival has announced that 107 boxes had been sold for next season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. More than 1700 memberships have been received. One more month remains for members to send in applications. The number of memberships will be limited to 3,000.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

OCT 9 - 1939

Berkshire Festival Already Enrolls 1800 Members

Eighteen hundred music lovers from many states have already become members of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in anticipation of the concerts to be given at Tanglewood next summer by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Many are persons who attended this year's concerts and wish to take advantage of the membership privileges. These privileges include tickets to all concerts at a substantially reduced cost, preference in seat locations and attendance at a rehearsal of the orchestra with Dr. Koussevitzky. Under the membership plan it is possible to attend concerts at a cost averaging less than a dollar per concert.

One hundred and eleven boxes have been sold for the 1940 season and the Festival trustees expect all of them to be reserved long before the first concert next August.

At the annual meeting of the trustees, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of New York and Stockbridge was re-elected president; Norval H. Busey Jr. of New York and Lee, vicepresident; Henry W. Dwight of Stockbridge, treasurer; and George W. Edman of Pittsfield, clerk.

There will be another meeting of the trustees Oct. 17, when a decision may be made as to whether the 1940 season will consist of two or three weeks of concerts.

Persons wishing memberships are requested to write to the Berkshire Symphony Festival office at Stockbridge, Mass., before Nov. 1. After that date subscription prices will prevail.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

OCT 8 - 1939

Upper, left to right—Jascha Heifetz, violinist par excellence, who will appear on the program for the coming year of the Brooklyn Institute at the Academy of Music. Grace Alberti, who makes her debut as Gilda in Rigoletto at the Academy of Music on Columbus Day night. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who will conduct five concerts for the Brooklyn Institute, waving his baton over the Boston Symphony, during the coming season. Lower, left to right—John Barbirolli, who will open the Philharmonic Symphony Society's season at Carnegie Hall next Thursday night. Ossy Renardy, violinist, in recital tomorrow night at Carnegie Hall. Alexander Kipnis, baritone, singiing at the Town Hall next Tuesday night.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CINCINNATI, OHIO
TIMES-STAR

OCT 9 - 1939

Overtones

By HOWARD W. HESS

Music, like all arts, has passed through periods in which the emphasis was placed either on mechanics or on expression. Some contemporary composers are much more interested in discovering new ways of employing the materials of music than they are in seeking to express personal feelings. Stravinsky goes so far as to say that expression is no part of music and criticized Koussevitsky for playing his "Symphonies of Wind Instruments" expressively; Koussevitsky replied that "so far from playing expressively, his performers, having only received the parts just before the concert, had all their work cut out to play the mere motes!" Pedantic teachers and students often become more interested in music as a science than as an art and seek to perfect interpretation by establishing arbitrary laws of expression; their discoveries are an aid to the novice who must imitate, but are of no great value to the talented artist who instinctively feels what is best. The only safe way to achieve a right interpretation would seem to be that of making one's self thoroughly familiar with the composer, the period in which he lived, his ideals, his personality, his nationality, his religion, and to pay close attention to notes, time values and all the printed mechanical and technical details until they are perfectly mastered, not forgetting to discount personal habits and frailties of the publisher and the engraver who often change original expression marks to suit their own needs—after which one should play or sing the composition to suit one's self. Since music is a language the effective interpretations of the great artists vary as widely as do the many different yet correct interpretations of Shakespeare.

AKRON, O.
BEACON-JOURNAL

OCT 9 - 1939

Red Suede Gas Mask On Star Appears In New York Dock

By ALICE HUGHES

New York, Oct. 9, 1939

OF ALL the ships which have scuttled into this port crammed to the gunwales with refugees from the madness overseas, I naturally took the warmest interest in the Dutch liner Neiuw Amsterdam, for she carried my sister, niece and brother-in-law, who had spent one of those "happy summers abroad." Barbara, the niece, was fretted at missing the first week of her junior year at Cornell—Pierre, the brother-in-law, was no end put out at missing the first engagement of the Boston Symphony orchestra, in which he fiddles.

Only my sister was completely happy—home again, after a worried wait of eight days in the harbor of Rotterdam, with her family intact, and the soil of the United States again under her feet. But the most joyous reunion I saw was when Ernst Lubitsch, the great movie director, who was aboard, clasped his wife to his buzzim. Their little baby, with its nurse, was among the survivors of the Athenia—so it was a three-way parting finally made one. It was really a beautiful sight to see.

Merle Oberon, the lovely movie star—no doubt with an eye to the cameras, wore a gas mask right into New York harbor—a very handsome one of red suede it was, the gift of her director-husband, Alexander Korda, still making films in England. She wore a very tailored black and white suit, with a brown felt hat, and upheld the movie reputation for beauty and smartness. Incidentally, Oberon had no less than 27 pieces of baggage, which is also in the great tradition. It included one jammed with gems, which nearly blinded the poor customs man who looked at it.

Attracting no attention at all, seemingly, was Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, widow of the famous steelmaster, who had been spending the summer at Skibo, as usual. But then, she's only rich. She was never in

Boston Symphony's 59th SEASON

IN THE YOUNGER GENERATION of pianists, few command a greater versatility than Jan Smeterlin, or more brilliantly display the inherently Polish qualities of the music of his compatriot, Chopin.

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY begins his own sixteenth consecutive season as its conductor — longest, and, musical authorities say, most brilliant term ever served by one man in that capacity in the history of the orchestra.
(Underwood & Underwood)

AT THE AGE OF 44, Walter Gieseking, French-born German pianist, has a lofty reputation for special pianistic excellences, notably in his interpretations of Debussy.
(Leon Elzin)

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

OCT 10 1939

Music Views

Boynet Engaged

BY EUGENE STINSON

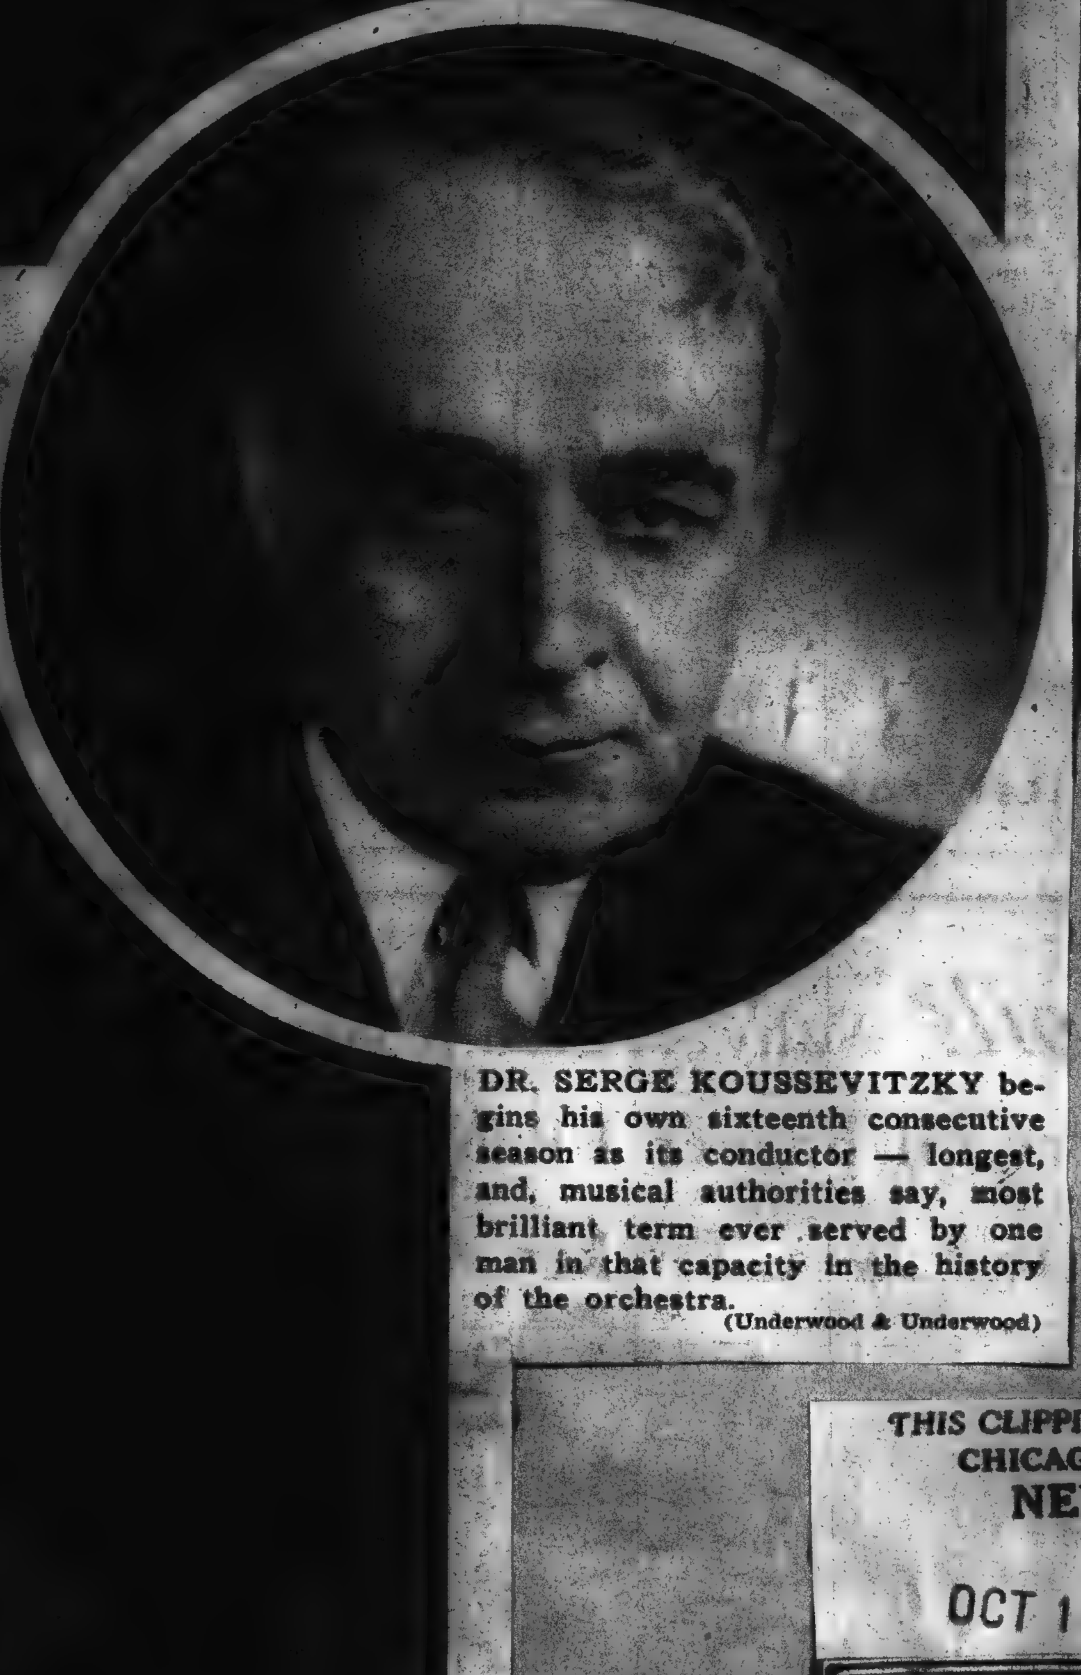
EMMA BOYNET, one of the most distinguished of French pianists, has been engaged to open the Adult Education Council's musical arts piano series in Orchestra Hall Nov. 7 in place of Gitta Gradova, originally announced for this recital. Miss Gradova has been obliged to cancel her appearance because of illness following upon the sudden death of her mother.

Mme. Boynet, like Guiomar Novaes, is a pupil of Isidor Philippe. A well-known figure in music abroad, she is little known here, and this will be her first Chicago appearance. She is known in the United States for her phonographic recordings, however, and she has also appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The series which she opens includes recitals by Rudolf Serkin, Dec. 5; Artur Rubinstein, Jan. 2; Thaddeus Kozuch, Feb. 6; Alexander Brailowsky, March 5, and Walter Gieseking, March 19.

Boston Symphony's
59th SEASON

IN THE YOUNGER GENERATION of pianists, few command a greater versatility than Jan Smeterlin, or more brilliantly display the inherently Polish qualities of the music of his compatriot, Chopin.



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY begins his own sixteenth consecutive season as its conductor — longest, and, musical authorities say, most brilliant term ever served by one man in that capacity in the history of the orchestra. (Underwood & Underwood)

AT THE AGE OF 44, Walter Gieseking, French-born German pianist, has a lofty reputation for special pianistic excellences, notably in his interpretations of Debussy. (Leon Elzin)

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

OCT 10 1939

Music Views
Boynet Engaged

BY EUGENE STINSON

EMMA BOYNET, one of the most distinguished of French pianists, has been engaged to open the Adult Education Council's musical arts piano series in Orchestra Hall Nov. 7 in place of Gitta Gradova, originally announced for this recital. Miss Gradova has been obliged to cancel her appearance because of illness following upon the sudden death of her mother.

Mme. Boynet, like Guiomar Novaes, is a pupil of Isidor Philippe. A well-known figure in music abroad, she is little known here, and this will be her first Chicago appearance. She is known in the United States for her phonographic recordings, however, and she has also appeared as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The series which she opens includes recitals by Rudolf Serkin, Dec. 5; Artur Rubinstein, Jan. 2; Thaddeus Kozuch, Feb. 6; Alexan[illegible], March 5, and Wal[illegible] March 19.

ROTOGRAVURE SECTION

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its 59th season next Friday afternoon. Some of the brilliant soloists who will appear with the great organization are pictured here. Above is the wizard of all pianists, Josef Hofmann, whose recent Boston appearances have been exclusively as recitalist. Now he is to be heard as soloist with the orchestra after a long lapse from such ensemble playing in Symphony Hall. Here he is practicing another art in which he excels—puppetry.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

OCT 11 1939

Boston Musicians Give Concert For Fall River Catholic Women

Since the Boston Symphony Orchestra is one of the peerless units, 10 of its musicians, the Salon Orchestra of Boston, is perfection on a smaller scale, but just as potent, members of the Catholic Woman's Club of Fall River found last evening in the initial meeting of the year.

Conducted by Samuel Seiniger, the nine musician artists were Julius Theodorewicz, and Rolland Tapley, violinists; Charles Van Wynbergen, viola; Carl Barth, 'cello; Irving Frankel, double bass; Louis Speyer, oboe; Manuel Valerio, clarinet; James Papoutsakis, flute, and Leo Litvin, piano.

Helene Wiedemann, soprano, proved to have a poignant, rich voice, well suited to the aria from Donizetti picturing the Mad Scene from Lucia; Tosti's "Canzona," Dunn's "Bitterness of Love" and Strauss-Liebling's "Beautiful, Blue Danube." In the operatic aria, the flutist was an able second as he played the obligato.

Miss Dorothy C. Sullivan presided and announced Miss Jean Marshall, historian; Chairman of Drama—Miss Ursula M. Lynch; Chairman of Music—Miss Agnes C. V. Downs; Chairman of Literature—Miss Mary R. Dwyer; Chairman of Community Service—Mrs. Daniel M. Coughlin; Press Relations—Miss Christine V. Chippendale and Mrs. Earl W. Heathcote; Auditing Committee—Miss Isabelle O'Neill and Miss Leonora Sullivan.

Miss Sullivan announced the Harvest Supper and pivot bridge which will be held in the Sacred Heart auditorium Oct. 24 under the auspices of the Community Service Department. Study groups will meet for organization on Thursday, Oct. 19, at the Catholic Welfare House, under the literature department.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MOORESTOWN, N. J.
NEWS
10/11/39

FORUM PROGRAM INCLUDES WORLD FAMOUS ARTISTS

For its nineteenth season The Philadelphia Forum has announced an extensive program by the most distinguished men and women in public life, exploration, literature, drama, science and music.

The musical events will include the annual Philadelphia concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitsky conducting; a performance by the Philadelphia Opera Company and recitals by Kirsten Flagstad and Marporie Lawrence, Metropolitan Opero sopranos; Alexander Kipnis, world-famous basso; George Enesco in his farewell tour as a violinist, assisted by Virginia Johnson, soprano; Walter Gieseking and Robert and Gaby Casadesus, pianists; Robert Virovai, the new Hungarian violinist, and the first Philadelphia appearance of the Comedian Harmonists, Viennese singing sextet.

Among those who will discuss the international scene are Ambassador Bullit; former Ambassador Hugh Gibson; Jan Masaryk, son of the founder of Czechoslovakia and for fourteen years Czech ambassador at London; "Augur," the world-famous London journalist; George Earle Raiguel, authority on international affairs, and others. "America's Town Meeting of the Air," with George V. Denny, moderator, and speakers to be decided, will make its first and only Philadelphia appearance for The Forum. In addition, a further series of town meetings will be held, with speakers and subjects to be arranged later.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

OCT 11 1939

Boston Symphony.

After the two extraordinary concerts of American music last week the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its regular season at home with the program arranged for Friday afternoon and Saturday evening this week. As is usual, familiar items have been chosen including the Beethoven symphony, No. 3 in E flat major, the Eroica; the "Istar" variations, D'Indy and Debussy's orchestral sketches "La Mer" which Dr. Koussevitsky interprets so imaginatively.

After the concert of American music last Friday afternoon there was an informal tea and reception for the composers. It gave a pleasant opportunity to meet William Schuman, Roy Harris and Randall Thompson, whose compositions had been heard just previously, and for a brief word with Dr. Koussevitzky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

OCT 12 1939

Develop Plans For Concerts By Toscanini

Saturday Night Symphony Programs Start October 14

NEW YORK, Oct. 12—For the first broadcast concert of his third season with the N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra, on Saturday, from 10 to 11:30 p. m., Arturo Toscanini will conduct Schubert's "Unfinished Sympyhony," Richard Strauss' "Don Juan," Haydn's Symphony No. 99 in E Flat and Ottorino Respighi's transcription of Bach "Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor."

Mr. Toscanini's second program on the following Saturday will include an American work, Roy Harris' "Third Symphony," which was introduced here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last March.

The N. B. C. Symphony's regular series of Saturday broadcasts will consist of 30 concerts. Mr. Toscanini, as in 1938-'39, will conduct 16 of these, but the second half of his engagement will be in the last eight weeks of the season, instead of immediately after the Christmas holidays. Three guest conductors, Desire Defauw, Barnardino Molinari and Bruno Walter, will conduct between December and mid-March.

As already announced, six of Mr. Toscanini's programs this Fall, beginning on October 28, will be devoted to Beethoven's music, including all of the symphonies and overtures. The "Ninth Symphony" will be performed in the last concert of the first half of Mr. Toscanini's season, December 2, probably in Carnegie Hall, since the stage in the National Broadcasting Company's Studio 8H cannot accommodate comfortably a large chorus, in addition to the 94 members of the orchestra.

Mr. Dafauw, conductor of the Brussels Philharmonic Orchestra, will make his New York debut December 9, and will also conduct the concerts on December 16, 23 and 30. Both Mr. Molinari and Mr. Walter have conducted in previous seasons of these broadcasts. The former, who is the musical director of the principal series of symphony concerts in Rome, will conduct five concerts, January 16 to February 3, and Mr. Walter will also conduct five concerts February 10 to March 9.

Mr. Toscanini will begin the second part of his season with the concert of March 15. One of his Spring programs will be devoted to Debussy's music. In his last concert of the season, May 4, his son-in-law, Vladimir Horowitz, will be the soloist in Rachmaninoff's third piano concerto, in D minor, and Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony will probably be the other major number in a Russian list.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME
OCT 12 1939

Sigurd Rascher, Saxophone Soloist, Plays At School

John Kirkpatrick, Pianist, Accompanies Swedish Philharmonic Star

Sigurd Rascher, Swedish saxophonist, who is in this country on invitation of the New York Philharmonic Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is giving a recital this afternoon at 2:30 at the Edgewood School. Mr. Rascher is playing a Sonatina by Wolfgang Jacobi and three compositions by Flemish contemporaries of Bach.

Mr. Rascher, who is a professor at the Danish Royal Conservatory of Music in Copenhagen, played for Edgewood students on Tuesday evening and discussed the saxophone and the music written or adapted to it.

John Kirkpatrick, well-known solcist, is accompanying on the piano. With these two artists, a most unusual and delightful afternoon has been added to the holiday meeting of the Edgewood Luncheon Club.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
METUCHEN, N. J.
WEEKLY RECORDER

OCT 12 1939

Rutgers Concert Series Features Two Orchestras

For the first time in its twenty-four year history, the Rutgers Concert Series will feature two symphony ochestras. The Philadelphia Orchestra, under the baton of Eugene Ormandy, will open the series Monday evening, October 23 when it comes to the Rutgers Gymnasium, and the Boston Symphony, with Serge Koussevitsky conducting, will close the series on April 3. The engagement of the latter organization marks its fifth annual appearance on the Rutgers Series.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ROCKLEDGE, PA.
BREEZE
10/12/39

FORUM OPENS FOR 19TH SEASON IN PHILADELPHIA

For its nineteenth season The Philadelphia Forum has announced an extensive program by the most distinguished men and women in public life, exploration, literature, drama, science and music.

The musical events will [illegible] the annual Philadelphia concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting; a performance by the Philadelphia Opera Company and recitals by Kirsten Flagstad and Marjorie Lawrence, Metropolitan Opera sopranos; Alexander Kipnis, world-famous basso; Georges Enesco, in his farewell tour as a violinist, assisted by Virginia Johnson, soprano; Walter Gieseking and Robert and Gaby Casadesus, pianists, Robert Virovai, the new Hungarian violinist, and the first Philadelphia appearance of the Comedian Harmonists, Viennese singing sextet.

Among those who will discuss the international scene are Ambassador Bullitt; Former Ambassador Hugh Gibson; Jan Masaryk, son of the founder of Czechoslavakia and for fourteen years Czech Ambassador at London; "Augur," the world-famous London journalist; George Earle Raiguel, authority on international affairs, and others. "America's Town Meeting of the Air," with George V. Denny, moderator, and speakers to be decided, will make its first and only Philadelphia appearance for The Forum. In addition, a further series of town meetings will be held, with speakers and subjects to be arranged later.

The Jooss European Ballet, after a year's absence from America, returns with new ballets and Argentinita and her Spanish Ensemble will be presented again.

In addition to a series of plays, Elissa Landi, noted stage and screen star, returns this season, as does William Lyon Phelps in his series of talks on the new books and plays.

52

ROTOGRAVURE SECTION

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its 59th season next Friday afternoon. Some of the brilliant soloists who will appear with the great organization are pictured here. Above is the wizard of all pianists, Josef Hofmann, whose recent Boston appearances have been exclusively as recitalist. Now he is to be heard as soloist with the orchestra after a long lapse from such ensemble playing in Symphony Hall. Here he is practicing another art in which he excels—puppetry.

THIS PROVIDE
JOURNAL

OCT 11 1939

Boston Musicians Give Concert For Fall River Catholic Women

Since the Boston Symphony Orchestra is one of the peerless units, 10 of its musicians, the Salon Orchestra of Boston, is perfection on a smaller scale, but just as potent, members of the Catholic Woman's Club of Fall River found last evening in the initial meeting of the year.

Conducted by Samuel Seiniger, the nine musician artists were Julius Theodorewicz, and Rolland Tapley, violinists; Charles Van Wynbergen, viola; Carl Barth, 'cello; Irving Frankel, double bass; Louis Speyer, oboe; Manuel Valerio, clarinet; James Papoutsakis, flute, and Leo Litvin, piano.

Helene Wiedemann, soprano, proved to have a poignant, rich voice, well suited to the aria from Donizetti picturing the Mad Scene from Lucia; Tosti's "Canzona," Dunn's "Bitterness of Love" and Strauss-Liebling's "Beautiful, Blue Danube." In the operatic aria, the flutist was an able second as he played the obligato.

Miss Dorothy C. Sullivan presided and announced Miss Jean Marshall, historian; Chairman of Drama—Miss Ursula M. Lynch; Chairman of Music—Miss Agnes C. V. Downs; Chairman of Literature—Miss Mary R. Dwyer; Chairman of Community Service—Mrs. Daniel M. Coughlin; Press Relations—Miss Christine V. Chippendale and Mrs. Earl W. Heathcote; Auditing Committee—Miss Isabelle O'Neill and Miss Leonora Sullivan.

Miss Sullivan announced the Harvest Supper and pivot bridge which will be held in the Sacred Heart auditorium Oct. 24 under the auspices of the Community Service Department. Study groups will meet for organization on Thursday, Oct. 19, at the Catholic Welfare House, under the literature department.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

MOORESTOWN, N.J.
NEWS
10/11/39

FORUM PROGRAM INCLUDES WORLD FAMOUS ARTISTS

For its nineteenth season The Philadelphia Forum has announced an extensive program by the most distinguished men and women in public life, exploration, literature, drama, science and music.

The musical events will include the annual Philadelphia concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting; a performance by the Philadelphia Opera Company and recitals by Kirsten Flagstad and Marjorie Lawrence, Metropolitan Opero sopranos; Alexander Kipnis, world-famous basso; George Enesco in his farewell tour as a violinist, assisted by Virginia Johnson, soprano; Walter Gieseking and Robert and Gaby Casadesus, pianists; Robert Virovai, the new Hungarian violinist; and the first Philadelphia appearance of the Comedian Harmonists, Viennese singing sextet.

Among those who will discuss the international scene are Ambassador Bullit; former Ambassador Hugh Gibson; Jan Masaryk, son of the founder of Czechoslovakia and for fourteen years Czech ambassador at London; "Augur," the world-famous London journalist; George Earle Raiguel, authority on international affairs, and others. "America's Town Meeting of the Air," with George V. Denny, moderator, and speakers to be decided, will make its first and only Philadelphia appearance for The Forum. In addition, a further series of town meetings will be held, with speakers and subjects to be arranged later.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
GREENWICH, CONN.
TIME
OCT 12 1939

Sigurd Rascher, Saxophone Soloist, Plays At School

John Kirkpatrick, Pianist, Accompanies Swedish Philharmonic Star

Sigurd Rascher, Swedish saxophonist, who is in this country on invitation of the New York Philharmonic Society and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is giving a recital this afternoon at 2:30 at the Edgewood School. Mr. Rascher is playing a Sonatina by Wolfgang Jacobi and three compositions by Flemish contemporaries of Bach.

Mr. Rascher, who is a professor at the Danish Royal Conservatory of Music in Copenhagen, played for Edgewood students on Tuesday evening and discussed the saxophone and the music written or adapted to it.

John Kirkpatrick, well-known soloist, is accompanying on the piano. With these two artists, a most unusual and delightful afternoon has been added to the holiday meeting of the Edgewood Luncheon Club.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

OCT 11 1939

Boston Symphony.

After the two extraordinary concerts of American music last week the Boston Symphony Orchestra opens its regular season at home with the program arranged for Friday afternoon and Saturday evening this week. As is usual, familiar items have been chosen including the Beethoven symphony, No. 3 in E flat major, the Eroica; the "Istar" variations, D'Indy and Debussy's orchestral sketches "La Mer" which Dr. Koussevitsky interprets so imaginatively.

After the concert of American music last Friday afternoon there was an informal tea and reception for the composers. It gave a pleasant opportunity to meet William Schuman, Roy Harris and Randall Thompson, whose compositions had been heard just previously, and for a brief word with Dr. Koussevitzky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM SCHENECTADY, N. Y.
UNION-STAR

OCT 12 1939

Develop Plans For Concerts By Toscanini

Saturday Night Symphony Programs Start October 14

NEW YORK, Oct. 12—For the first broadcast concert of his third season with the N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra, on Saturday, from 10 to 11:30 p. m., Arturo Toscanini will conduct Schubert's "Unfinished Sympyhony," Richard Strauss' "Don Juan," Haydn's Symphony No. 99 in E Flat and Ottorino Respighi's transcription of Bach "Passacaglia and Fugue in C Minor."

Mr. Toscanini's second program on the following Saturday will include an American work, Roy Harris' "Third Symphony," which was introduced here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra last March.

The N. B. C. Symphony's regular series of Saturday broadcasts will consist of 30 concerts. Mr. Toscanini, as in 1938-'39, will conduct 16 of these, but the second half of his engagement will be in the last eight weeks of the season, instead of immediately after the Christmas holidays. Three guest conductors, Desire Defauw, Barnardino Molinari and Bruno Walter, will conduct between December and mid-March.

As already announced, six of Mr. Toscanini's programs this Fall, beginning on October 28, will be devoted to Beethoven's music, including all of the symphonies and overtures. The "Ninth Symphony" will be performed in the last concert of the first half of Mr. Toscanini's season, December 2, probably in Carnegie Hall, since the stage in the National Broadcasting Company's Studio 8H cannot accommodate comfortably a large chorus, in addition to the 94 members of the orchestra.

Mr. Defauw, conductor of the Brussels Philharmonic Orchestra, will make his New York debut December 9, and will also conduct the concerts on December 16, 23 and 30. Both Mr. Molinari and Mr. Walter have conducted in previous seasons of these broadcasts. The former, who is the musical director of the principal series of symphony concerts in Rome, will conduct five concerts, January 16 to February 3, and Mr. Walter will also conduct five concerts February 10 to March 9.

Mr. Toscanini will begin the second part of his season with the concert of March 15. One of his Spring programs will be devoted to Debussy's music. In his last concert of the season, May 4, his son-in-law, Vladimir Horowitz, will be the soloist in Rachmaninoff's third piano concerto, in D minor, and Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony, will probably be the other major number in a Russian list.

THIS CLIPPING FROM ROCKLEDGE, PA.
BREEZE
10/12/39

FORUM OPENS FOR 19TH SEASON IN PHILADELPHIA

For its nineteenth season The Philadelphia Forum has announced an extensive program by the most distinguished men and women in public life, exploration, literature, drama, science and music.

The musical events will include the annual Philadelphia concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Serge Koussevitzky conducting; a performance by the Philadelphia Opera Company, and recitals by Kirsten Flagstad and Marjorie Lawrence, Metropolitan Opera sopranos; Alexander Kipnis, world-famous basso; Georges Enesco, in his farewell tour as a violinist, assisted by Virginia Johnson, soprano; Walter Gieseking and Robert and Gaby Casadesus, pianists, Robert Virovai, the new Hungarian violinist, and the first Philadelphia appearance of the Comedian Harmonists, Viennese singing sextet.

Among those who will discuss the international scene are Ambassador Bullitt; Former Ambassador Hugh Gibson; Jan Masaryk, son of the founder of Czechoslavakia and for fourteen years Czech Ambassador at London; "Augur," the world-famous London journalist; George Earle Raiguel, authority on international affairs, and others. "America's Town Meeting of the Air," with George V. Denny, moderator, and speakers to be decided, will make its first and only Philadelphia appearance for The Forum. In addition, a further series of town meetings will be held, with speakers and subjects to be arranged later.

The Jooss European Ballet, after a year's absence from America, returns with new ballets and Argentinita and her Spanish Ensemble will be presented again.

In addition to a series of plays, Elissa Landi, noted stage and screen star, returns this season, as does William Lyon Phelps in his series of talks on the new books and plays.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
METUCHEN, N. J.
WEEKLY RECORDER
OCT 12 1939

Rutgers Concert Series Features Two Orchestras

For the first time in its twenty-four year history, the Rutgers Concert Series will feature two symphony ochestras. The Philadelphia Orchestra, under the baton of Eugene Ormandy, will open the series Monday evening, October 23 when it comes to the Rutgers Gymnasium, and the Boston Symphony, with Serge Koussevitsky conducting, will close the series on April 3. The engagement of the latter organization marks its fifth annual appearance on the Rutgers Series.

SATURDAY, THE BOSTON GLOBE OCTOBER 14. 1939

Traditional Pomp Marks Opening of 59th Symphony Season in Boston

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, beginning his 16th year as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is shown above in a few of the characteristic poses which are so familiar to the music lovers of Boston, and which distinguish him so eminently as a master of his art. These photos were snapped during the opening concert in Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon by Arthur Griffin, Globe staff cameraman.

Herald Oct 14, 1939

MUSIC

SYMPHONY CONCERT

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The first concert of the 59th season by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Symphonic Variations, "Istar, Op. 42 ... d'Indy
"La Mer," Three Symphonic Sketches ... Debussy
Symphony No. 3 in E flat major, Op. 55, "Eroica" .... Beethoven

The disturbed conditions of the world had no effect on the traditional opening of the Boston Symphony's season yesterday. Everything was conventionally in order, the orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky in splendid form, the capacity audience eager to hear a program of unusual beauty. The concerts of American music last week had, of course, taken some of the pleasant thrill of the first concert away. At a guess, however, a majority of the audience yesterday were in fact beginning the season. That the season began brilliantly would be futile to deny.

D'Indy's "Istar" Variations seem to have been more in favor with Dr. Koussevitzky than any other of this composer's work. "Istar" is a remarkable and beautiful score. It has intellectual distinction that can be studied and admired at the same time that one's emotional nature responds to its feeling. In some ways it is the least personal or, if you like, least French of d'Indy's music. The Symphony on a Mountain Air, for example, is intensely national music.

Now that Dr. Koussevitzky has once again so successfully projected this work at a symphony concert, can he not be induced to revive more of d'Indy's considerable and impressive output? The time is past when the rise of Debussy, Ravel and other French composers to popularity relegated d'Indy to some extent to the academic shade. His music has not dated, so that there is no reason why it should not be played more frequently. After all there are many composers who appear much more regularly on programs and have less right to be there.

A list of critical opinions, such as Mr. Burk compiled for the program notes on Debussy's "La Mer," is invariably discouraging, if often rather amusing. Why any one bothers to read criticisms after such an experience is hard to understand. And the silly part of it is that, no matter what work you picked about which to form your list, the collection of opinion would inevitably produce some gems of arrant nonsense.

Take, for example, in the present grab-bag Pierre Lalo's notion about La Mer's being a marvelous reproduction of nature and finding mild fault with it on that account. What did he expect it to be? Strict realism, with a wind machine and a barrel of sand to roll about behind the scenes? Indeed, it is sometimes easy to think that the entire function of criticism is merely to provide future critics and scholars with fantastic nuggets of nonsense!

After thus inveighing against the are of criticism, we can hardly venture so soon to practice it. Suffice it to say that for many people "La Mer" is Debussy's greatest orchestral score and that in performance yesterday its magical qualities were magnificently realized. It is by no means an easy score to set forth. As often as not its beauty is somehow missed. Yesterday the orchestra under Dr. Koussevitzky did not so fail to capture its spirit.

The concert ended triumphantly with Beethoven's Third Symphony, with the marvels of which one can never tire. The performance was warmly emotional, not classical or severe. On the other hand it did not fall into the trap of sounding over-emotional. The concert as a whole was eloquent proof of what a season with the Boston Symphony and Dr. Koussevitzky can be, and that is an experience we have come to feel—not without a reasonable degree of smugness—is incomparable.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week Sigud Rascher, saxophonist, will be the soloist in Debussy's Rhapsody and Ibert's Concertino. Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture and Bruckner's 7th Symphony will also be heard.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

OCT 13 1939

• • •

Smith college with a fine concert series puts its tickets on sale the week of the 23d. Starting with Marian Anderson on November 22, the slate includes the Rochester, Cleveland and Boston orchestras, Brailowsky, and a joint recital by Busch and Serkin.

• • •

THIS CLIPPING FROM
THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

OCT 13 1939

Along Atlantic Seaboard

By CASPAR WEINBERGER

BOSTON, OCT. 11, 1939.

THE war, gradually developing into the predicted stalemate, passed through its dullest week from a news point of view, and Americans, for the first time since mid-summer, showed a revival of interest in domestic events. The World's Series, always a matter of the greatest possible moment to millions of citizens, drew capacity crowds all last week and headlines blazoned the results in far larger type than war communiques. The opening of the football season, coinciding for once with warm weather, also took the East's mind away from Europe to a large extent.

But despite these diversions, it must not be thought that the war has been forgotten to any great extent. There is just a general realization now that it will be a long drawn out affair, with both sides sparring for an opening in the gigantic lines of fortifications and the Allies relying on their naval blockade eventually to turn the tide. The day-to-day story of such a war, despite the immensity of the issues involved, cannot be made sensational or spectacular, except on rare occasions, and unless a series of bold thrusts, as yet unmentioned by any of the correspondents in the field, are carried out, it is more than likely that at least half the front pages of the metropolitan newspapers will return to domestic coverage.

However, the people's interest in local politics has waned to a point approaching actual apathy, and any statement issued by a politician or prospective candidate relative to the presidential election of 1940 meets with either actual boredom, or positive opposition to "dragging politics in at a time like this." To this extent the chances for President Roosevelt's re-election, should he decide to run again, have been materially increased, although it is difficult to account for this trend. Public opinion appears to be that experience in foreign affairs is the sole thing the people consider necessary in their 1940 President; it is unexplained why a President whose sense of the dramatic is as strongly developed as Mr. Roosevelt's, and whose firm belief in his own destiny as a man able to solve the world's problems is so widely known, should be considered a safe leader for war years.

* * *

Meanwhile things move on about as normal in the East. A few more weeks of warm, hazy Indian summer are predicted before a relatively early winter. New York City is waiting rather impatiently for the beginning of the new theatrical season, although only two revivals and one rather slapstick revue comprise the extent of the new season to date. There are several highly successful plays held over from last season which still draw capacity crowds.

The musical season opens in another week with the Boston Symphony, as firm a New England tradition as sailing or cod-fishing, beginning its fifty-ninth season. John Barbirolli returns to lead the New York Philharmonic, and Arturo Toscanini takes up the baton again for the nationwide series of broadcasts organized by NBC.

* * * *

Additional fireworks on the international scene are certain to be provided by any situation involving Hitler and King Carol of Rumania. Carol, ex-playboy and ladies' man, has become a cynic, a realist, a man without scruples. As the defender of his small monarchy against Nazi aggression, he appears ready to give Hitler a taste of his own medicine.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

OCT 13 1939

By G. Y. L.

"THEY SHALL HAVE MUSIC"

Loew's State Theatre presents "They Shall Have Music," a screen play by John Howard Lawson, from a story by Irmgard von Cube, directed by Archie Mayo and produced by United Artist with the following cast:

Jascha Heifetz	Himself
Andrea Leeds	Ann Lawson
Joel McCrea	Peter
Gene Reynolds	Professor Lawson
Porter Hall	Flower
Terry Kilburn	Limey
Walter Tetley	Rocks
Chuck Stubbs	Fever
Tommy Kelly	Willie
Jacqueline Nash	Betty
Alfred Newman	Musical Director
Mary Ruth	Suzie
John St. Polis	Davis
Alexander Schonberg	Menken
Marjorie Main	Mrs. Miller
Arthur Hohl	Miller
Paul Harvey	Heifetz's Manager
"Zero" ....a	"Sucker"

and the Peter Meremblum California Junior Symphony Orchestra.

Larger and louder than life, Jascha Heifetz steps into the movies herewith, in one of the most interesting of Hollywood's recent efforts. There are thousands who consider Mr. Heifetz the world's leading violinist, and he supports the claim in splendid fashion, triumphing over a story that is quite ordinary and, in all, showing what one can do with a little practice, if one is a genius.

"Rondo Capriccioso," by Saint-Saens; "Hora Staccato," Dinicu-Heifetz; "Estrellita," Ponce-Heifetz; a Tchaikovsky melody and the second movement of the Mendelssohn concerto are his offerings. The camera arranges matters so that one can be awed not only by the aural evidences of the master's superb technique but by the visual evidences as well. The means by which the movie avoids the impression of a photographed concert are uncommonly effective.

Besides the Heifetz fiddling, there is much other fine music, from voice, orchestra and piano. Apparently there is some gifted, and probably legitimate, faking, especially in the performance of the children's orchestra. If the Lawson School can turn out such a crew, it ought certainly to be rescued from bankruptcy, and furthermore the Boston Symphony Orchestra ought to rush over and take a few lessons.

CSM 10-13

Saxophone Virtuoso To Play With Symphony

For the first time at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a virtuoso of the saxophone will appear in numbers written especially for the instrument, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 20 and 21. The artist is the Danish musician, Sigurd M. Rascher. He has played with the symphony orchestras of the principal European cities, and in recitals in Berlin, Paris, London, Amsterdam, Milan, Warsaw, Prague, Stockholm and Geneva.

At the coming concerts he will present for the first time, with the instrument for which it is written, Debussy's Rhapsody for Orchestra and Saxophone. The Rhapsody, composed for Mrs. Richard J. Hall in the early years of the present century, was performed at these concerts in 1932 with English horn. The other number is a Chamber Concertino for Saxophone and Eleven Instruments by Jacques Ibert. The Concertino was dedicated to Mr. Rascher and has been performed by him in Paris and London. He will introduce the work to America.

Dr. Koussevitzky will open the program with Berlioz's Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini." The concerts will conclude with the Seventh Symphony of Anton Bruckner, last heard here two seasons ago.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

OCT 13 1939

The Music Box

By JOHN D. DONOGHUE

The Music Box starts its second year today, after a vacation that was as enjoyable as it was brief. Music begins to look up hereabouts. East of us, Worcester has just finished the 80th anniversary of the founding of its grand festival, and those of us who were fortunate to see and hear parts of it regret that Springfield has nothing comparable. Plans are astirring for a banner season, composed of varied and unrelated events. Though we have no sustained sweep of program such as Worcester proudly boasts, we do have quite a bit over which we can rejoice.

* * *

The summer, as far as our own personal tastes were concerned, was made notable by the Berkshire Music festival at Stockbridge. Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston orchestra were never in better form and plans for the academy next year at the Stockbridge site sound almost too good to be true. A chance to hear the very talented and promising young Negro soprano, Dorothy Maynor, during the week of the festival, was one of the biggest treats of the summer.

* * *

Just when a music season starts is a moot point. Tonight's concert at the Auditorium by the famous "Wings Over Jordan" radio choir for the benefit of the Bethel A. M. E. church assumes the proportion of a major event for those who like choral work and spirituals. The museum concert last Sunday by Cora Claiborne, Marlyn Crittendon and Prescott Barrows pried off some kind of lid, and tiny, appealing Sylvia Zaremba jammed Charles Mackey's studios last week with a private audition for what Charles hoped was going to be a few friends.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

DEDHAM, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
10/13/39

Mrs. John H. Harwood, Mrs. Nelson Bigelow, Westwood, are members of the sustaining commitee of the Youth Concerts association which conducts and promotes the "Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc. Youth Concerts" again this season. The concerts will begin in November and be presented monthly through April. There will be six low cost symphony concerts for young people of junior high or high school age.

C S Monitor, Sat, Oct. 14/39

—New England News—

Symphony Season Opens

The Arts in Boston

The music season in Boston is now formally opened. Yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra rose as one man in its customary initial recognition of its conductor's entrance, and the greeting was continued by the audience which not only stood, but also clapped vociferously. These rites concluded, Dr. Koussevitzky began a program that listed: d'Indy, Symphonic Variations, "Istar," Op. 42; Debussy, "La Mer," Trois Esquisses Symphoniques; Beethoven, Symphony No. 3 in E flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55.

With its personnel almost intact despite the war, the orchestra played with the smoothness and suavity which distinguishes it in mid-season. After all, there are some advantages in a schedule which keeps an orchestra active very nearly the year round. The sense of awareness is not lost through lack of rehearsals; and it was this characteristic which came to the fore with considerable emphasis in the performance of "Istar" and "La Mer."

"Istar" is probably the most pretentious of d'Indy's output, everything considered; it at least has been accorded more performances by this orchestra than any other of his works, although the Symphony in B flat is a close second. It requires a nice sense of proportion in the conductor who essays it, since the work, as students of orchestral scores know, begins at the end and proceeds backward to the beginning—musically speaking. It is comparatively easy for a conductor to overplay the opening and thus have little left in reserve for the end; but Dr. Koussevitzky is seldom guilty of this mistake, and yesterday afternoon he gave a performance which compelled admiration.

Persons interested in such things have of late been exposed to various sorts of compositions inspired by the sea. Works for orchestra alone and in company with well trained voices have been offered. Aside from the music itself, the listener discovers an interesting thesis in the methods employed by the different composers. Debussy, of course, leans heavily upon his own style of writing, though in "La Mer" his tonal idiosyncrasies are not so apparent as in "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune" or "Nocturnes." He contrives to picture the sea in its varying moods although his orchestration is never obvious nor do his measures smite the ear, even though his sea thunder may roar. "La Mer" is another opus in which a conductor may easily miss the point. Dr. Koussevitzky comes directly to it, and with admirable results.

The performance of the "Eroica" stirred enormous enthusiasm. Especially impressive was the playing of the second movement, Marcia funebre.

G. M. S.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
THE ARGONAUT
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

OCT 13 1939

Along Atlantic Seaboard

By CASPAR WEINBERGER

BOSTON, OCT. 11, 1939.

THE war, gradually developing into the predicted stalemate, passed through its dullest week from a news point of view, and Americans, for the first time since mid-summer, showed a revival of interest in domestic events. The World's Series, always a matter of the greatest possible moment to millions of citizens, drew capacity crowds all last week and headlines blazoned the results in far larger type than war communiques. The opening of the football season, coinciding for once with warm weather, also took the East's mind away from Europe to a large extent.

But despite these diversions, it must not be thought that the war has been forgotten to any great extent. There is just a general realization now that it will be a long drawn out affair, with both sides sparring for an opening in the gigantic lines of fortifications and the Allies relying on their naval blockade eventually to turn the tide. The day-to-day story of such a war, despite the immensity of the issues involved, cannot be made sensational or spectacular, except on rare occasions, and unless a series of bold thrusts, as yet unmentioned by any of the correspondents in the field, are carried out, it is more than likely that at least half the front pages of the metropolitan newspapers will return to domestic coverage.

However, the people's interest in local politics has waned to a point approaching actual apathy, and any statement issued by a politician or prospective candidate relative to the presidential election of 1940 meets with either actual boredom, or positive opposition to "dragging politics in at a time like this." To this extent the chances for President Roosevelt's re-election, should he decide to run again, have been materially increased, although it is difficult to account for this trend. Public opinion appears to be that experience in foreign affairs is the sole thing the people consider necessary in their 1940 President; it is unexplained why a President whose sense of the dramatic is as strongly developed as Mr. Roosevelt's, and whose firm belief in his own destiny as a man able to solve the world's problems is so widely known, should be considered a safe leader for war years.

* * *

Meanwhile things move on about as normal in the East. A few more weeks of warm, hazy Indian summer are predicted before a relatively early winter. New York City is waiting rather impatiently for the beginning of the new theatrical season, although only two revivals and one rather slapstick revue comprise the extent of the new season to date. There are several highly successful plays held over from last season which still draw capacity crowds.

The musical season opens in another week with the Boston Symphony, as firm a New England tradition as sailing or cod-fishing, beginning its fifty-ninth season. John Barbirolli returns to lead the New York Philharmonic, and Arturo Toscanini takes up the baton again for the nation-wide series of broadcasts organized by NBC.

* * * *

Additional fireworks on the international scene are certain to be provided by any situation involving Hitler and King Carol of Rumania. Carol, ex-playboy and ladies' man, has become a cynic, a realist, a man without scruples. As the defender of his small monarchy against Nazi aggression, he appears ready to give Hitler a taste of his own medicine.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

OCT 13 1939

By G. Y. L.

"THEY SHALL HAVE MUSIC"

Loew's State Theatre presents "They Shall Have Music," a screen play by John Howard Lawson, from a story by Irmgard von Cube, directed by Archie Mayo and produced by United Artist with the following cast:

Jascha Heifetz	Himself
Andrea Leeds	Ann Lawson
Joel McCrea	Peter
Gene Reynolds	Professor Lawson
Porter Hall	Flower
Terry Kilburn	Limey
Walter Tetley	Rocks
Chuck Stubbs	Fever
Tommy Kelly	Willie
Jacqueline Nash	Betty
Alfred Newman	Musical Director
Mary Ruth	Suzie
John St. Polis	Davis
Alexander Schonberg	Menken
Marjorie Main	Mrs. Miller
Arthur Hohl	Miller
Paul Harvey	Heifetz's Manager
"Zero"	"Sucker"

and the Peter Meremblum California Junior Symphony Orchestra.

Larger and louder than life, Jascha Heifetz steps into the movies herewith, in one of the most interesting of Hollywood's recent efforts. There are thousands who consider Mr. Heifetz the world's leading violinist, and he supports the claim in splendid fashion, triumphing over a story that is quite ordinary and, in all, showing what one can do with a little practice, if one is a genius.

"Rondo Capriccioso," by Saint-Saens; "Hora Staccato," Dinicu-Heifetz; "Estrellita," Ponce-Heifetz; a Tchaikovsky melody and the second movement of the Mendelssohn concerto are his offerings. The camera arranges matters so that one can be awed not only by the aural evidences of the master's superb technique but by the visual evidences as well. The means by which the movie avoids the impression of a photographed concert are uncommonly effective.

Besides the Heifetz fiddling, there is much other fine music, from voice, orchestra and piano. Apparently there is some gifted, and probably legitimate, faking, especially in the performance of the children's orchestra. If the Lawson School can turn out such a crew, it ought certainly to be rescued from bankruptcy, and furthermore the Boston Symphony Orchestra ought to rush over and take a few lessons.

C.S.M. 10-13

Saxophone Virtuoso To Play With Symphony

For the first time at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a virtuoso of the saxophone will appear in numbers written especially for the instrument, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 20 and 21. The artist is the Danish musician, Sigurd M. Rascher. He has played with the symphony orchestras of the principal European cities, and in recitals in Berlin, Paris, London, Amsterdam, Milan, Warsaw, Prague, Stockholm and Geneva.

At the coming concerts he will present for the first time, with the instrument for which it is written, Debussy's Rhapsody for Orchestra and Saxophone. The Rhapsody, composed for Mrs. Richard J. Hall in the early years of the present century, was performed at these concerts in 1932 with English horn. The other number is a Chamber Concertino for Saxophone and Eleven Instruments by Jacques Ibert. The Concertino was dedicated to Mr. Rascher and has been performed by him in Paris and London. He will introduce the work to America.

Dr. Koussevitzky will open the program with Berlioz's Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini." The concerts will conclude with the Seventh Symphony of Anton Bruckner, last heard here two seasons ago.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

OCT 13 1939

The Music Box

By JOHN D. DONOGHUE

The Music Box starts its second year today, after a vacation that was as enjoyable as it was brief. Music begins to look up hereabouts. East of us, Worcester has just finished the 80th anniversary of the founding of its grand festival, and those of us who were fortunate to see and hear parts of it regret that Springfield has nothing comparable. Plans are astirring for a banner season, composed of varied and unrelated events. Though we have no sustained sweep of program such as Worcester proudly boasts, we do have quite a bit over which we can rejoice.

* * *

The summer, as far as our own personal tastes were concerned, was made notable by the Berkshire Music festival at Stockbridge. Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston orchestra were never in better form and plans for the academy next year at the Stockbridge site sound almost too good to be true. A chance to hear the very talented and promising young Negro soprano, Dorothy Maynor, during the week of the festival, was one of the biggest treats of the summer.

* * *

Just when a music season starts is a moot point. Tonight's concert at the Auditorium by the famous "Wings Over Jordan" radio choir for the benefit of the Bethel A. M. E. church assumes the proportion of a major event for those who like choral work and spirituals. The museum concert last Sunday by Cora Claiborne, Marlyn Crittendon and Prescott Barrows pried off some kind of lid, and tiny, appealing Sylvia Zaremba jammed Charles Mackey's studios last week with a private audition for what Charles hoped was going to be a few friends.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

DEDHAM, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
10/13/39

Mrs. John H. Harwood, Mrs. Nelson Bigelow, Westwood, are members of the sustaining commitee of the Youth Concerts association which conducts and promotes the "Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc. Youth Concerts" again this season. The concerts will begin in November and be presented monthly through April. There will be six low cost symphony concerts for young people of junior high or high school age.

C.S. Monitor, Sat. Oct. 14/39

—New England News—

Symphony Season Opens

The Arts in Boston

The music season in Boston is now formally opened. Yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, the Boston Symphony Orchestra rose as one man in its customary initial recognition of its conductor's entrance, and the greeting was continued by the audience which not only stood, but also clapped vociferously. These rites concluded, Dr. Koussevitzky began a program that listed: d'Indy, Symphonic Variations, "Istar," Op. 42; Debussy, "La Mer," Trois Esquisses Symphoniques; Beethoven, Symphony No. 3 in E flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55.

With its personnel almost intact despite the war, the orchestra played with the smoothness and suavity which distinguishes it in mid-season. After all, there are some advantages in a schedule which keeps an orchestra active very nearly the year round. The sense of awareness is not lost through lack of rehearsals; and it was this characteristic which came to the fore with considerable emphasis in the performance of "Istar" and "La Mer."

"Istar" is probably the most pretentious of d'Indy's output, everything considered; it at least has been accorded more performances by this orchestra than any other of his works, although the Symphony in B flat is a close second. It requires a [illegible] orchestral scores know, begins at the end and proceeds backward to the beginning—musically speaking. It is comparatively easy for a conductor to overplay the opening and thus have little left in reserve for the end; but Dr. Koussevitzky is seldom guilty of this mistake, and yesterday afternoon he gave a performance which compelled admiration.

Persons interested in such things have of late been exposed to various sorts of compositions inspired by the sea. Works for orchestra alone and in company with well trained voices have been offered. Aside from the music itself, the listener discovers an interesting thesis in the methods employed by the different composers. Debussy, of course, leans heavily upon his own style of writing, though in "La Mer" his tonal idiosyncrasies are not so apparent as in "L'Apres-midi d'un Faune" or "Nocturnes." He contrives to picture the sea in its varying moods although his orchestration is never obvious nor do his measures smite the ear, even though his sea thunder may roar. "La Mer" is another opus in which a conductor may easily miss the point. Dr. Koussevitzky comes directly to it, and with admirable results.

The performance of the "Eroica" stirred enormous enthusiasm. Especially impressive was the [illegible]

55

SYMPHONY OPENS 58TH MUSIC YEAR

Stage and Musical Celebrities Among Hearers

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

With orchestra and conductor at the top of their form in a programme with which few could quarrel, it seems a bit forced to say that the Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon was primarily an "audience" story. Yet, in a sense, that is what it was; for whereas the orchestra has been publicly assembled twice this season, the audience was gathering for the first time.

STRAVINSKY IN AUDIENCE

And the Symphony audience, the body of subscribers which alters only slightly from season to season, is an integral factor in the concerts. It was a pleasure to see in Symphony Hall last week the non-subscribers who flocked there to hear the two free concerts of American music; but it is not such casual listeners who support the orchestra and make possible its concerts, which gain, rather than lose, prestige as the years go on.

There were celebrities present, too; an eminent actress, Katharine Cornell, a famous composer, Igor Stravinsky. And to go on in the manner of the society reporters, one could note the presence of another conductor of an American orchestra, Fabien Sevinsky, once of Boston, now of Indianapolis. It seems that Mr. Stravinsky, whose lectures at Harvard begin next Wednesday, came over on the Manhattan, along with Mr. Toscanini, but his presence attracted less attention in the public prints.

To get back to the concert, Dr. Koussevitzky's original programme ultimately found itself being heard wrong-end-to. Instead of beginning with Beethoven's "Eroica" and concluding with D'Indy's "Istar" and Debussy's "La Mer," he decided at about the 10th hour to put the French pieces first. Mr. Burk's notes still read the other way, since the programme book had already gone to press.

There is something to be said for putting the "Eroica" first and something to be said for putting it last, but we listeners had to take things as the conductor willed it. One result was that the season began, both more romantically and more richly, tonally speaking, than would have been the case had the classic and orchestrally soberer Beethoven had the first say.

Penetrates Heart of "The Sea"

For those who cherish the music of D'Indy, this beginning a season with his superbly imagined and as superbly wrought Symphonic Variations was a happy augury. Mr. Burk's notes reminded us that the "Summer Day on the Mouutain" had not been heard in Symphony Hall since 1924; the Second Symphony since 1932; the "Symphony on a Mountain Air" since 1933. "Istar" has been of late a fairly frequent experience in the Hall, with performances in '34 and '37, while "La Mer" has been even more in evidence. However, one could hardly hear the present Koussevitzky on version of these Symphonic sketches too often. In the past two or three performances of "La Mer" the conductor has seemed to divine the composer's precise intention, to penetrate to the very heart of the music, keeping its musical and programatic qualities in perfect balance. Thus the listener may forget the sea altogether—something fairly easy to do in the first two movements—and heed only the marvelous play of harmonies, timbres and rhythms. Or he may hear this music both for what it is intrinsically and for what in some of its pages it so forcefully suggests, and feel with Walt Whitman that music is that which is awakened in us when we are reminded by the instruments.

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1939

Audience Rises in Greeting To Dr. Serge Koussevitzky

Mrs. Robert F. Herrick, Jr., Attends With Her Daughter, Miss Romaine Pierce

By ALISON ARNOLD

No occasion so definitely marks the beginning of the winter season in town as the first Friday afternoon Symphony concert. Yesterday afternoon Symphony hall was thronged with members of society who came from the seashore and mountains and travels far and wide to be present at this gala opening. There is always a thrill about this first concert. Photographers' bulbs flash brightly as some particularly distinguished person arrives. The hum of conversation dies down as the orchestra begins to tune up, and then the applause is deafening as the vast audience rises loyally in one great body to greet Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The program included Debussy's "Le Mer," always a favorite, and Symphonic Variations, "Istar," by d'Indy. When the last strains of Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony died down and Dr. Koussevitzky at long last was allowed to leave the stage, Bostonians departed to their motors waiting outside and felt that, in spite of wars and devastation, their beloved Symphony would continue to enrich their lives.

Many in the large audience have had the same seats for years, and will pass them on with the family portraits and silver to future generations. Sitting in her usual seat was Mrs. Charles Goddard Weld, looking very patrician in black with which she wore luxurious sables. With her was her niece, Mrs. Thomas N. Dabney (Elizabeth Soule). Nearby was Mrs. S. Huntington Wolcott, all in black.

With Mrs. Robert F. Herrick, Jr., in smart tan tweeds, was her attractive sub-debutante daughter, Miss Romaine Pierce, who wore a cunning striped turban with her green wool frock. Mrs. William B. Long, in a platinum gray ensemble, was accompanied by her daughter, Miss Polly Long, in black with silver foxes. In one of the front rows was Mrs. William E. Ladd and her blonde post-debutante daughter, Miss Katharine Ladd.

Chatting with Mrs. Charles F. Woodard (Gwendolen Livermore) were Miss Mary Pentecost and her twin sister, Mrs. Browning Endicott Marean, Jr. (Cornelia Pentecost) a recent bride. Another recent bride present was Mrs. Edward W. Lawrence (Rosalind Rogers) in slate gray wool, and still another was Mrs. James L. Coombs (Barbara Bassett). With Mrs. George Swift was her daughter, Mrs. Lawrence Lowell Reeve, who topped her red frock with a black coat. Also combining black and red were Mrs. Alfred Kidder, 2d, whose black frock had a row of metal buttons marching down the front and whose tiny black hat was trimmed with gay red feathers, and Miss Faith Kidder, who wore a stop red jacket with her black skirt and had tiny ostrich tips adorning her hat.

Mrs. Robert Treat Paine was as chic as usual in black with which she wore a sumptuous silver fox cape. With her was Mrs. Robert T. P. Storer. Mrs. Moses Williams, Jr., wore gray, and with her was her sister-in-law, Miss Eleanor Williams. Miss Nancy Burrage was extremely pretty in a violet wool frock with which she wore a fur jacket and a wee hat which boasted a snood and a rosette of purple velvet atop her golden hair.

A distinguished member of the audience was Miss Katharine Cornell, in black, who attended with Mrs. Robert H. Stevenson, who wore a sable stole with her olive green ensemble. Also in the audience was Igor Stravinsky, famous composer, who was a guest conductor with the orchestra in 1935. Mr. and Mrs. Edward Jackson Holmes, who seldom miss a Friday afternoon concert, were in their usual seats as was Mrs. Edwin S. Webster, who had with her Mrs. Charles F. Hovey.

Chatting together in the lobby during the intermission were Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller, her two daughters, Miss Lydia and Miss Mary, her niece, Miss Hope Halsey, and Mrs. John T. Bottomley and Miss Ellen Bottomley. Mrs. Alfred R. McIntyre wore slim black and Miss Elizabeth C. Leland had a wax gardenia pinned to her black frock. With her yellow and black plaid wool Mrs. Wallace McIlvaine Scudder, Jr., wore a silver fox scarf.

It would be like reading the social register from cover to cover to tell you every one present, so we will end with a few of the many others we glimpsed. They included Mrs. Howard Turner, Miss Pauline McKean, Miss Lucy Cochrane, Mrs. B. A. G. Thorndike, Mrs. Walter Clifford, Mrs. John G. Palfrey, Mrs. Robert Cushman, Mrs. Arthur Grannis, Mrs. Samuel Morison, Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Mrs. Horatio Lamb, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Metcalf, Mrs. Hugh Ogden, Mrs. William Dana Orcutt, Mrs. William Ellery, Miss Grace Collier, Miss Jane Megrew, Mrs. Robert C. Terry, Mrs. Horace Arnold, Mrs. William T. Glidden, Jr., Mrs. Roswell Parish, Miss Eleanor Lawson, Miss Lucy Pope, Mrs. Charles Gaston Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Howard S. Hayward, Miss Anne Blake, Mrs. Jaffray de Hauteville Bell, Mrs. Roland Baker and Mrs. Malcolm Bradley French.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

OCT 14 1939

* * *

For Montclair music lovers the season will begin a few days earlier. The first concert in the Unity Institute course there will take place October 27, with Fritz Kreisler, violinist, who opened the series 20 years ago, as soloist. Also listed are Giovanni Martinelli, tenor of the Metropolitan Opera, to sing November 17; the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in an extra event, January 10; Kerstin Thorborg, "Met" contralto, and Emanuel Feuermann, cellist, in a joint concert January 19, and Artur Rubinstein, pianist, March 15.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES

OCT 14 1939

Boston Symphony to Give Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which opened its 59th season in Symphony Hall, Boston, last Friday and Saturday, will come to Providence to begin a series of five concerts under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky in the Metropolitan Theatre on Tuesday evening, Oct. 24. The remaining concerts will be given on Nov. 28, Jan. 23, Feb. 20 and April 16.

THIS CLIPPING FROM LEWISTON, ME.
SUN

OCT 14 1939

Music and The Drama

NBC CONCERT SEASON BEGINS OCT. 14

The NBC Symphony Orchestra will have a thirty-week season, with Arturo Toscanini conducting the first and the last eight weeks, it was announced recently by Samuel Chotzinoff, one of the National Broadcasting Company's directors of music. The guest conductors will be Desire deFauw, Belgian leader; Bernardino Molinari and Bruno Walter.

Mr. Toscanini, who is on his way to this country on board the Manhattan, will open the third annual series of Saturday night broadcast concerts on Oct. 14. He will lead the NBC Symphony Orchestra every Saturday night until Dec. 2. Then he will return on March 16 and conduct through May 4.

During Mr. Toscanini's midseason rest Mr. deFauw will direct from Dec. 9 to 30; Mr. Molinari will be in charge from Jan. 6 to Feb. 3, and Mr. Walter will conduct from Feb. 10 to March 9. Mr. Molinari and Mr. Walter have directed the NBC Symphony in past seasons.

Mr. deFauw's appearances at the head of the NBC Symphony Orchestra will mark his American debut. He is the conductor of the deFauw concerts in Brussels and directs opera at the Theatre de la Monnaie in the Belgian capital. Mr. deFauw, who was born in Ghent in 1885, began as a violinist, and during the World War organized the Allied Quartet.

Mr. Toscanini's opening program will be Schubert's "Unfinished" Symphony, Strauss's "Don Juan," Haydn's E flat Symphony, B & H. No. 99, and the Bach-Respighi Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor.

For the second concert, on Oct. 21, the maestro plans an American work, the Third symphony by Roy Harris. This composition was played last season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Serge Koussevitzky in Boston and New York. Mr. Chotzinoff indicated that Mr. Toscanini would present several other contemporary works in the second half of his season.

During the final six concerts of the first half, Mr. Toscanini will direct a Beethoven cycle, which will embrace the nine symphonies most of the overtures and several other works. The Ninth symphony will probably be presented at Carnegie hall, on or about Dec. 2.

In the second half of his season Mr. Toscanini will direct an all-Debussy program and he will end the series with a Russian program On the latter schedule will be Tchaikovsky's "Pathetique" Symphony and Rachmaninoff's Third Piano Concerto with Vladimir Horowitz, the maestro's son-in-law, as soloist.

During his midseason vacation Mr. Toscanini may take the orchestra on tour for several out-of-town engagements, but these plans will await his arrival here.

Mr. Chotzinoff will continue as commentator during the intermissions of the orchestra's programs.

It was also announced that two string quartets made up of members of the NBC Symphony—the Primrose Quartet and the American Art Quartet—will give a Sunday evening series of broadcasts playing all the Beethoven quartets.

Mr. Chotzinoff said that the NBC Symphony Orchestra was largely the same as last year. The only changes are in the 'cello section which has been augmented from ten to twelve men and which has two new first-desk men, Frank Miller, formerly of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra, and Isidore Gusikoff, formerly of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Transcript Oct 14, 1939

MUSIC

Saxophone Opus

A New One by Ibert an Unfamilar One By Debussy on Symphony Program

By EDWARD DOWNES

Jacques Ibert's Concertino for Saxophone and Eleven Instruments, dedicated to the eminent Danish saxophonist, Sigurd Rascher, will be given its American premiere at the second pair of Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts next week Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, with Mr. Rascher himself as soloist and Serge Koussevitzky directing the ensemble. The program will be further enlivened with the Debussy Rhapsody for Saxophone and Orchestra, which forms an amusing chapter of Boston musical history, the overture to Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" and Anton Bruckner's Seventh Symphony.

In Paris and London the Concertino as well as Mr. Rascher's playing of it pleased. Of the Paris premiere, which took place on May 2, 1935, M. Roger Vinteuil wrote in the "Menestrel": "This score of Jacques Ibert, sprightly and impetuous in its movement, sweeps along with a profusion of ingratiating thematic idea which, never weighting down the music, allowed M. Sigurd Rascher to exhibit a velocity, a rhythmic precision, an evenness of breath and a charm of tone that left no ground for cavil. A bis was demanded with enthusiasm, but not accorded. This allegro, effervescent as a spring morning, will make a place for itself, but it requires an executant of high ability."

"The saxophone has received a brilliant consecration as a solo instrument, thanks to Jacques Ibert," wrote Roger Bernard in the Revue Musicale. "Ibert has confided to this supple yet powerful, alternately brilliant and nostalgic instrument a dazzling concerto, an ingeniously written concerto of transcendental difficulty and a seductiveness that roused real enthusiasm.

"The soloist, M. Sigurd Rascher, though he lacks the purity of tone, the softness, the perfect distinction of our French saxophonists, has in exchange, an agility and a variety of tone color and a range that are astounding. Incidentally, the composer has made a separate version of his opus, specially designed for the amazing technical equipment of his interpreter."

It is to be supposed that Mr. Rascher will use for his Boston performances this specially difficult version.

The Therapeutic Saxophone

Debussy's saxophone work dates from the beginning of this century when the instrument carried few of the connotations it has today. The late Mrs. Richard J. Hall of this city, for example, took up the saxophone for her health. This on the testimony of Mr. Leon Vallas.

Today medical authorities are cautious about endorsing the therapeutic value of the saxophone, in spite of the fact that the brother of the inventor, Alphonse Sax, published in 1865, a pamphlet, "Gymnastics of the Lungs; Instrumental Music from the Point of View of Hygiene and the Creation of Women's Orchestra's."

One may assume, however, that Mrs. Hall was also moved by musical considerations in her choice, for she was an amateur musician of some standing and one of the chief backers of the Boston Orchestral Society which was conducted by Georges Longy.

A Boston Commission

In any case, up to 1900, saxophone literature had been seriously neglected and Mrs. Hall, sparing no expense, set about about remedying that lamentable state of affairs. Since the saxophone had been invented in France and its use largely confined to that country, she very appropriately went to the recognized French composers of her day whom she commissioned to write works for her to perform.

It was in this way that Debussy became saddled with a commission though he detested writing to order and knew next to nothing about the saxophone. As a consequence Mrs. Hall's composition took a decade to write, though the money had been paid down, a fact which might seriously have burdened the conscience of a lesser man than Debussy.

After waiting for a reasonable time for her saxophone composition, it seems that Mrs. Hall made a surprise and none too welcome descent upon Debussy in his Paris home, to inquire about the progress of what was to be the Rhapsody.

American Tenacity

"The Americans are proverbially tenacious," wrote Debussy to Durand, his publisher. "The 'femme-saxophone' landed in Paris at 58 rue Cardinet eight or nine days ago and is enquiring about her piece. Of course I assured her that with the exception of Rameses II, it is the only subject that occupies my thoughts. All the same, I have had to set to work on it. So here I am, desperately searching for novel combinations calculated to show off this aquatic instrument. . . . I have been working as hard as in the good old days of 'Pelleas' . . ."

About the same time he wrote to Pierre Louys, the author of "Aphrodite": "Considering that this 'fantaisie' was ordered and paid for and eaten more than a year ago, I realize that I am behindhand with it. . . . The saxophone is a reed instrument with whose habits I am not very well acquainted. I wonder whether it indulges in romantic tendernesses like the clarinet?"

Some observers may see a result of Debussy's tentative feelings about the saxophone in the fact that it took him nearly a decade to finish the work and that when he did, he left the instrument silent during the better half of a composition that was written ostensibly to show it off, entitling it not Rhapsody for solo saxophone but for "saxophone principal."

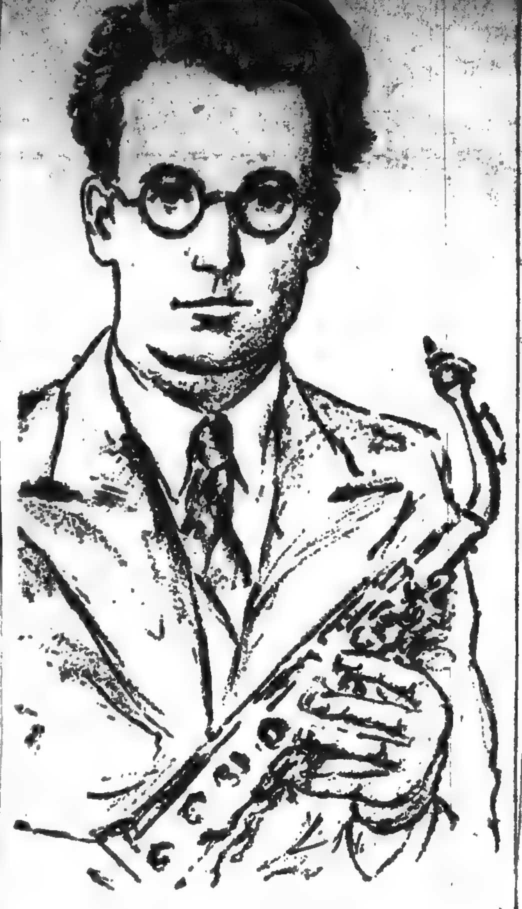
Others will see here merely Debussy's frightened reaction to a concert of the Societe Nationale at which he heard Mrs. Hall play one of the new pieces of her repertory: Vincent D'Indy's "Choral Varie." Debussy thought the sight of a lady in a pink gown playing such an ungainly instrument preposterous and he had no desire to let a work of his provide a similar spectacle.

In any case we find him writing Durand again in 1905: "Mrs. Elisa Hall, the 'saxophone lady' is politely demanding her 'fantaisie'; I should like to satisfy her, for her patience deserves to be rewarded.

But it was another six years before the composer seriously thought of satisfying the 'saxophone lady.'" In 1911 he set to work in earnest on an orchestral sketch. He finally sent the work in this form to Mrs. Hall, and it was left to M. Roger-Ducasse, to complete the orchestral score after Debussy's death.

Manuscript at Conservatory

Debussy's original manuscript sketch has been deposited by Mrs. Hall's heirs in the library of the New England Conservatory of Music where it may be consulted by application to the librarian. It will be on exhibit at Symphony Hall at the time of Mr. Rascher's performances with the Boston Symphony. It is inscribed in Debussy's hand: "Esquisse d'une Rapsodie Mauresque pour orchestre et saxophone principal. A Madame E. Hall avec l'homage respectueux de Claude Debussy, 1901-1908."



SIGURD RASCHER
Mettlesome saxophonist from Denmark who plays French works with a Boston orchestra this Friday and Saturday.

It is complete from start to finish and at various points the composer has made notes concerning the working out of the orchestration. These were followed with the greatest exactitude by Roger-Ducasse. However, after Ducasse came Ansermet, who has revised the Rhapsody to the form in which it will be heard next week. His changes however are not radical and consist merely of taking certain woodwind passages from the score and giving them to the solo saxophone to fill out some of the long moments of silence to which Debussy had condemned that instrument.

"Rapsodie Mauresque" was the title of the final sketch by Debussy, the original title was to have been "Rapsodie Orientale" but in the final edition, which was posthumous, there is no adjective to the Rhapsody at all.

The Rhapsody was performed in Paris as soon as the orchestration was finished in 1919 at a concert of the Societe Nationale with the saxophonist Mayeur as soloist. It was never performed by the Boston Orchestral Society for the sketch arrived in America several years after the dissolution of that body. And since no other records have been found, it is reasonable to assume that the first performance in this country was by the Boston Symphony in 1932 when Louis Speyer performed the solo part on the English horn.

Thus this work of Debussy written for Boston will be heard in its original form for the first time in Boston 20 years after its first performance in Paris and 28 years after the composer laid it aside.

Sanders Concerts To Begin Thursday

The first of this season's Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts at Sanders Theater, Harvard University, will be given next Thursday evening, beginning at eight. The program, conducted by D. Koussevitzky, will consist of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, No. 3; D'Indy's Symphonic Variations, "Istar"; and Debussy's "La Mer."

SYMPHONICS

56

Boston Symphony Opening Directed by Koussevitzky

Yesterday in Symphony Hall the first of the regular Friday afternoon subscription concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was presented under the baton of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky who thus formally inaugurated the 1939-40 Boston music season.

Probably many members of yesterday's audience had assisted at the concerts of American music given last week by the Symphony. Nevertheless, when the fuss and bustle of finding one's new seats (or one's old ones) was over and Dr. Koussevitzky emerged upon the platform, audience and orchestra stood to honor him in the manner that has become traditional at the opening of each Boston Symphony season.

As befitted the occasion Koussevitzky had chosen a conservative program: Debussy's "La Mer," d'Indy's symphonic variations, "Istar," and Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony.

A personal experience perhaps, but one which we suspect is shared by many concert-goers is the purely physical pleasure, the sensuous delight afforded us by the sonorities of a great symphony orchestra when first we hear it after a long abstinence from orchestral music. The finer, more intelligent enjoyment of the melodic line, the thematic development the evolution of harmonies—these things follow. But at the beginning is an aural intoxication that may last through one number, through one or more complete concerts.

This is a factor to be reckoned with. Thus a man of Dr. Koussevitzky's ability to judge his audiences as well as purely musical values acted wisely when he reversed the order of his program, giving us d'Indy and Dbussy for the first half, reserving Beethoven for the conclusion.

A Babylonian Aphrodite

D'Indy's symphonic depiction of the descent into Hades of the Babylonian goddess, Istar, shimmers in a thousand orchestral colors as did the goddess in her veils and jewels. Since our fresh ears would have occupied themselves anyway with color and sonority, here was an orchestral fabric to satisfy even the most jaded taste.

The "Istar" variations are of a novel construction. They begin where most variations end, for at the outset the theme appears decked out, like the goddess, in gorgeous, complicated raiment. Then at each of the seven gates; as we descend to "the abode whence none may return," the theme is stripped of some of its orchestral clothing until at the very end it passes unadorned before us in a unisonous melody for the entire orchestra of great power and brilliance. The goddess enters "the immutable land."

Koussevitzky's "La Mer"

Debussy's symphonic sketches, "La Mer," have been familiar to Boston audiences since they were introduced at the Symphony concerts by Karl Muck in 1907. "La Mer" is also, and quite justly so, one of the best known of Koussevitzky's interpretations. He gave us yesterday a performance of nervous detail, incisive climaxes and great tonal splendor.

In the oh-so-musical Vienna of Beethoven's day, that composer found necessary to advise conductors against putting such a long and heavy work as the "Eroica" at the end of a program since in that position it would prove too tiring for the audience. Yesterday one naturally felt the symphony to be the musical climax of the day, and as such it came appropriately at the end.

Beethoven in Gray

In speaking of Beethoven's symphony we return to a line quoted in these columns last Saturday in which Debussy describes the Beethoven orchestra as working only with black and white and thus obtaining an exquisite (if sober) gamut of grays.

Indeed after d'Indy's dazzling canvas and Debussy's glowing seascape with its whispering winds and garrulous waves, Beethoven's music made the impression of an art reduced to sober essentials. It was a return to the eternal verities of music.

The first movement in spite of the drive and dynamism with which Koussevitzky invested it, seemed objectivity itself. Here the orchestration was no glowing garment thrown effectively over the musical idea, but part of the idea itself. The noble dirge of the second movement had the grand line it demands and the pathetically broken phrases of the violins at the end were deeply touching. They supplied the most subjective note of the whole symphony.

The scherzo was taken at a rapid pace, taut and delicate to the point of fastidiousness. Rhythms danced and the sudden dynamic contrasts were most effective. The last movement was elemental in its utterance.

E. D.

HERALD, SUNDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1939

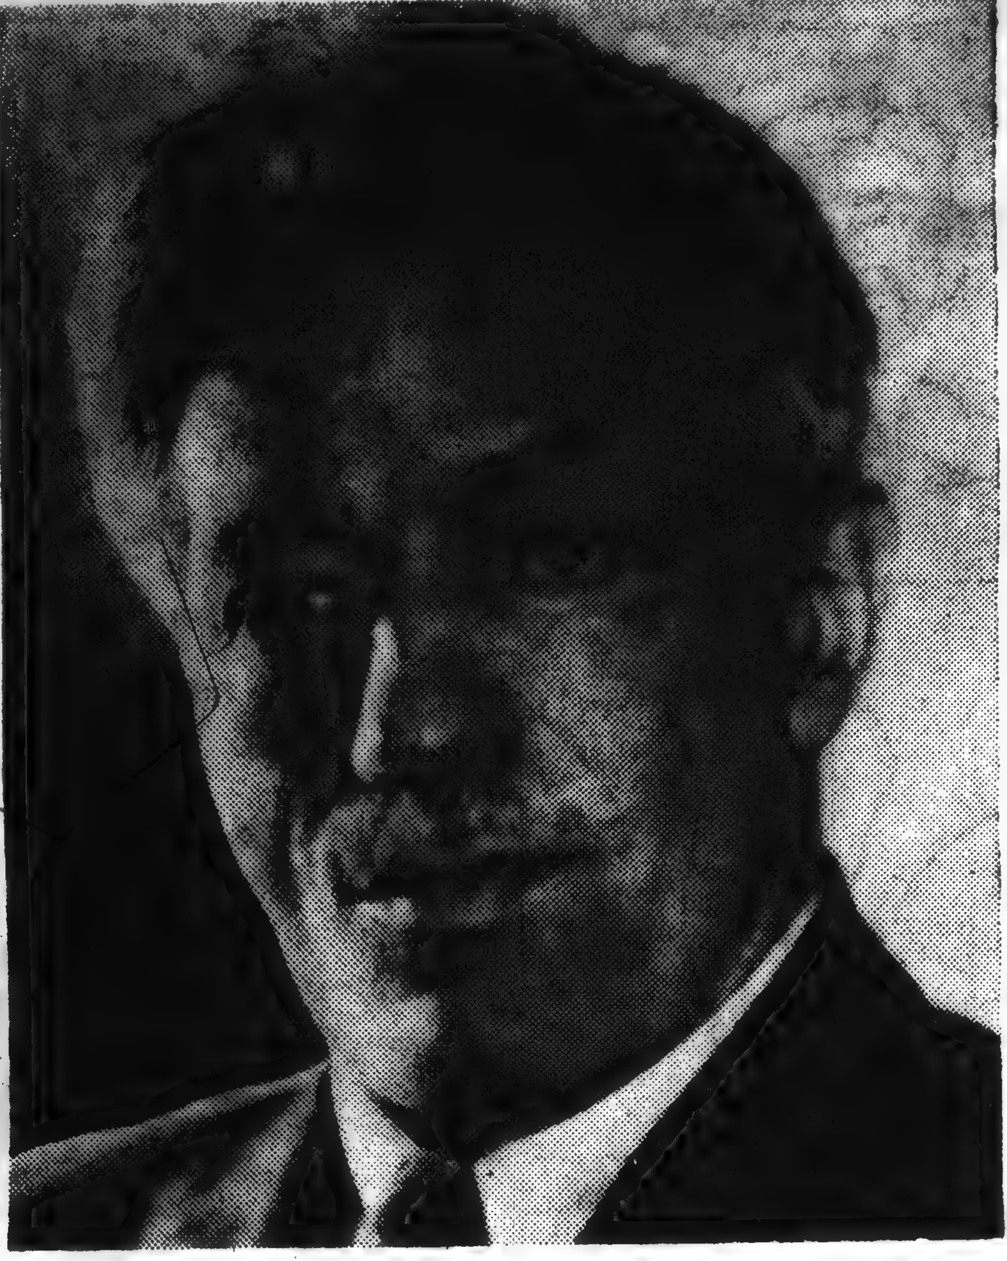
DISTINGUISHED MUSICIANS—Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, left, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Igor Strawinsky, Russian composer, at the opening of the 59th season at Symphony Hall.

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1939

Composer-Conductor Faces Player-Composer

IGOR STRAVINSKY

Who gives his first lecture at the Fogg Museum Wednesday, will be with us this winter giving further lectures at the Fogg, conducting his "Oedipus Rex" with the Boston Symphony and contributing a new symphony to our orchestral repertory.



FRITZ KREISLER

Also back on Wednesday, will give a recital that evening in Symphony Hall, at which he will remind us that if great composers are sometimes distinguished interpreters (see Stravinsky), great interpreters often are distinguished composers.

Glamour Girl at Horse Show

Globe Oct 14, 1939

Post-debutante Lucy Douglas Cochrane (left), daughter of Mrs. Dudley L. Pickman of Commonwealth av. and the North Shore's No. 1 Glamour Girl, found time to attend both the opening of the Boston Horse Show and yesterday's opening Symphony concert of the season. With her is Miss Louisa Barbour, debutante of a season ago and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Barbour of Clarendon st. and Beverly Farms.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES
OCT 15 1939

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, gives its second pair of concerts of the season Friday afternoon and Saturday night in Boston, when for the first time in its history it will have a saxophonist as soloist. Sigurd Rascher, Swedish virtuoso on that instrument, will be heard in Debussy's Saxophone Rhapsody and Jacques Ibert's Chamber Concertino for saxophone and a small accompanying group. This will be the first performance in America of the latter work. Bruckner's Seventh symphony completes the program.

10-15

BOSTON SUNDAY ADVERTISER—Page 13

Symphony Gloriously Begins 59th Season

By LEO GAFFNEY

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, probably the most eloquent musical instrument in the world, is now embarked upon its 59th season of formal concerts, the 16th under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

The inaugural program, given on Friday afternoon and last night, was chosen with the nicest regard, not only for the occasion, but also, it seems, for the darkling aspect of the present day world.

It might be accounted a prayer. In imagination the "Istar" Variations of D'Indy, telling of the ancient goddess of fertility's disappearance from and reclamation by the earth, might be taken as a petition to the Creator to once more restore the ravaged land.

Similarly, if one's imagination were so addressed, there was the worshipful rapture of Debussy contemplating the vast beauty and bounty of "The Sea."

And for climax: The triumphant "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven, greatest of all symphonists, who in this massive structure of sound conquered the despair occasioned by his deafness, "took a new road" and touched the stars.

Dr. Koussevitzky and his men were equal to the demands. In faultless musical speech they accomplished, in "Istar," the descent into and ascent from Hades and the humiliation and triumph of the maiden—while they unravelled the intricacies of an ingeniously reversed symphonic pattern.

Then, in the Debussy, was disclosed the overwhelming grandeur of the waters: Not so much the booming boisterousness that assails the eye in direct view, but rather the shimmering beauty that returns to the mind in a vision when, too far inland, one yearns again for the limitless sweep and the good wet winds.

It is better that as time goes on the connection of Napoleon with the "Eroica" weakens—and the inscription To The Memory Of a Great Man has little or nothing to do with the Emperor who died in defeat.

We can look on the "Eroica" now as purely "absolute music," an expression of monumental will power capable of surmounting the bitterest trials, the worst obstacles life may impose; a deathless acknowledgement of light shining in darkness, of joy vanquishing despair.

Grant this, O Lord, unto us all!

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
OCT 15 1939

Holograph Sketch by Debussy on Exhibit

Rhapsody for Saxophone Now Shown in Boston

The New England Conservatory of Music possesses the three-line holograph sketch by Claude Debussy for the "Rhapsody for Orchestra and Saxophone" to be played at the Boston Symphony Concerts Oct. 20 and 21. Although not published until 1919 the work was commissioned by the late Mrs. Richard J. Hall, of Boston, whose heirs have deposited the manuscript in the Library of the New England Conservatory. The work is the completed sketch from which the orchestration was made and is inscribed in Debussy's hand: "Esquisse d'une 'Rhapsodie Mauresque' pour orchestre et saxophone principal—à Madame E. Hall avec l'homage respectueux de Claude Debussy, 1901-1908."

Debussy evidently took his time in executing the commission, and at various points in the sketch are notations in his handwriting regarding the orchestration. Mrs. Hall was the president of the Boston Orchestral Society. The Boston Symphony Orchestra performed it in February, 1932. The manuscript, but one of a number of orchestral scores in possession of the conservatory library, will be on exhibition at Symphony Hall at the time of its performances, and at all times may be consulted by application to the librarian at the New England Conservatory.

SYMPHONIC SAXOPHONY

B. Post — 10-15

First Time in 59 Years Here

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

THIS week the Symphony Concerts will offer, and for the first time in their 59 seasons, a solo saxophonist. The virtuoso who will present this jazz-ridden stepchild of the orchestra as a legitimate musical instrument is a Dane, Sigurd M. Rascher. He will assist in the first American performance of a Chamber Concertino for Saxophone and Eleven Instruments, by Jacques Ibert, which bears a dedication to him, and in the first American performance with saxophone of the Rhapsody of Debussy, previously heard at the Symphony Concerts (in 1932) with English horn.

This rhapsody has had a curious history, the first chapter of which was written in Boston. Early in the present century Mrs. Richard J. Hall, who had taken up the saxophone for medical rather than for musical reasons, commissioned several French composers to write works for her use. Mrs. Hall became president of the Boston Orchestral Club, of which Georges Longy was conductor, and pieces for saxophone and orchestra from the pens of D'Indy, Sporck, Caplet, Loeffler and Longy were heard at its concerts.

In 1903 Mrs. Hall approached Debussy, and he agreed to compose a piece for her collection. On June 8 of that year he wrote to Messager, as quoted in the English translation of Leon Vallas' "Claude Debussy": "The Americans are proverbially tenacious. The saxophone lady landed in Paris at 58 rue Cardinet, eight or 10 days ago, and is inquiring about her piece. Of course, I assured her that with the exception of Rameses II., it is the only subject that occupies my thoughts. All the same, I have had to set to work on it. So here I am, searching desperately for novel combinations calculated to show off this aquatic instrument . . . I have been working as hard as in the good old days of 'Pelleas' . . ." And in another letter addressed to Pierre Louys he wrote: "Considering that this 'Fantaisie' was ordered, and paid for, and eaten more than a year ago, I realize that I am behindhand with it . . . The saxophone is a reed instrument with whose habits I am not very well acquainted. I wonder whether it indulges in romantic tenderness like the clarinet?"

"In spite of all his efforts," as Vallas goes on to say, "the 'Rapsodie' remained unfinished. The following year, at the Societe Nationale, Mrs. Hall played one of the pieces of her new repertoire, the 'Choral Varie' by Vincent d'Indy. But this performance did not expedite the work of the dilatory composer. In fact, he was anything but encouraged. He thought it ridiculous to see a lady in a pink frock playing on such an ungainly instrument; and he was not at all anxious that his work should provide a similar spectacle. The composition still remained in an unfinished state. On the 11th of September, 1905, he wrote as follows to his publisher, Durand: 'Mrs. Elise Hall, the saxophone lady, is politely demanding her "Fantaisie"; I should like to satisfy her, for her patience deserves to be rewarded.' But Debussy did not satisfy her, yet. In 1911, he again set to work on the instrumentation. But he wrote nothing more than a rough draft on three or four staves, and in this form the work was delivered to Mrs. Hall. He had not the courage to finish the score: he even left some bars blank, and some of the 'bridges' incomplete."

It is interesting to know that, together with the original draft of "Pelleas" in "close score," this draft of the rhapsody is now in the library of the New England Conservatory and will be on exhibition at Symphony Hall this week. In 1919 the score was completed by Roger-Ducasse and it is his, rather than Debussy's manuscript, which forms part of the collection of Debussy holographs in the library of the Paris Conservatoire.

* * * *

Among the first composers to make use of the saxophone as an orchestral instrument was Bizet, who wrote an important solo for it in his "L'Arlesienne" music. The story is told that Wilhelm Gericke, when about to programme the First "L'Arlesienne" Suite in Boston, wished to make use of the saxophone and found that none was obtainable, either in Boston or New York. Nothing daunted, the conductor had one imported from France and when it arrived it was found to be out of kilter. The job of repairing it was entrusted to Eustache Strasser, the first clarinetist, who requested and received this sample of a rare and curious instrument as a reward for his labors!

* * * *

On Wednesday evening Fritz Kreisler will open the Symphony Hall recital season. Accompanied by Carl Lamson, the eminent violinist will play works by Mozart, Bach, Chausson and himself.

HENRY THE ORIGINAL ROMEIKE PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU NEW YORK

220 WEST 19th ST., NEW YORK
Tel. CHelsea 3-8860

THIS CLIPPING FROM TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD

AUG 18 1940

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By G. W. BAXTER

THE FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES of the Tulsa Symphony association, difficulties shared by every such organization in the United States, in no way reflect upon the orchestra's musical accomplishment which reached its peak this season.

Neither are there any reflections on the interest of the public at large, for ticket sales and attendance also broke records.

What they do indicate is that these uncertain times render more and more precarious the promotion and maintenance of new orchestras by private contributions.

Whether Tulsa can afford an independent unsubsidized orchestra is a question out of my province and decidedly out of my power to determine. What I do feel privileged to say is that for the last two seasons the Tulsa symphony orchestra has made the most important contribution to the city's musical life.

* * *

I WISH to say this unequivocally because some have misunderstood my criticism of the orchestra. On the one hand are those who thought that mention even of the most obvious shortcomings was deprecatory and discouraging; on the other are those who were patronizing toward the excellences I praised, because their comparisons were with thoroughly established orchestras.

Both these attitudes are unfair to the orchestra and to the public, I do not credit the Tulsa symphony with anything like perfection and indeed the orchestra does not pretend to it. But its prograss has been in that direction, and its excellence is already such that I should not care to have missed a single one of the concerts this summer.

A major share of the orchestra's artistic success is due to Jerzy Bojanowski. He is an admirable musician and his repertory is not the wearisome stock-in-trade that is stagnating even some of the best orchestras in the country. I sincerely hope that his abilities will be given the scope they deserve.

* * *

KOUSSEVITSKY - SANROMA recording of the Stravinsky Capriccio reviewed last week (Victor M-685) requires only four record sides and is priced at $4.50 instead of $7 as quoted. I am happy to make another correction; the French H. M. V. recording of Ravel's "Introduction and Allegro" septet including Lily Laskine and Marcel Moyse, mentioned as unavailable, is being repressed by Victor and will be released late this month at a very low price.

Haydn is certainly coming into his own on records. At last there is an up-to-date edition of the splendid "Oxford" symphany (No. 92 in G) by Bruno Walter and the Paris Conservatory orchestra (Victor M-139, three discs, $5). The music is inexhaustibly fresh and original; the hilarious last movement is surely one of the most irresistible Haydn or anybody ever wrote.

* * *

SPARKLING music of a different stripe is the overture to "The Diamonds of the Crown," an opera-comique by Auber who, you know, wrote "Fra Diavolo." The conductor is Constant Lambert, author of that lively and provoking book "Music Ho" from which one might have expected him to record Sibelius instead of light opera. But his dapper and spirited approach here is just what is needed; the Auber disc (Victor 12806, $1.50) is one of the few records of its type for which I have a sincere enthusiasm.

* * *

VICTOR also offers the best available version of the suite No. 2 from Bizet's incidental music to "L'Arlesienne," done by Arthur Fiedler and the Boston "Pops" (M-683, two discs, $3.50). It contains the Pastorale, Intermezzo, Minuetto No. 2, and Farandole.

One of the best buys in the Victor "Black Label Classics" series is Bruno Walter's reading of the "Siegfried Idyll," which is better than Toscanini's and costs half as much. It is on discs 36319 and 39320, $1 each. You may have an album for it for 25c but if you order the complete set (No. G-12) you get an additional record of Wagner's early "Fairies" overture (36321) which is worth another dollar only to the curious.

Particularly desirable for schools is the "Song of Faith," by John Alden Carpenter, whose fine violin concerto was heard at a local stadium concert this summer. It was written in 1932 for the celebration of the 200th anniversary of the birth of Washington, so it is not a product of the current last-minute patriotic surge and lacks the desperate note of present compositions of its nature. It is sung by the Chicago "a capella" choir with orchestra organ, directed by Noble Cain (Victor 26529-30, 75c each).

* * *

THE BEST "pops" music album in the black label series is "Violin Favorites" played by Frederic Fradkin, an excellent violinist formerly with the Boston symphony. In Victor P-22 (3 discs, $2.50) he includes "The Swan," "Valse Bluette," the Fibich "Poeme," "Frasquita Serenade," "The Old Refrain," and Drdla's "Souvenir."

For dinner music I should prefer for myself the Decca album called "Dancing in the Dark," (No. 122, five records, $2.25) containing 10 popular pieces like "Night and Day" and "Cocktails for Two" played by Carmen Cavallaro, a young Italian pianist who veered to night club entertainment after a sound training for concert music. He now has his own band in America, but in these recordings his accompaniment is confined to guitar, string bass and drums which merely provide the rhythmic emphasis for his piano filigree. This sort of thing won't stand the cold light of examination by either "serious" or "swing" fans, but as background for midnight rendezvous, or as dance music that won't wake up the folks it's the thing.

58

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

OCT 15 1939

All-American Concerts Presented In Boston

Two Programs Given Under Direction of Dr. Koussevitsky Feature Works of Native Composers; New Trend Finds Favor Among Music Lovers; Yaffe in Recital

By H. EARLE JOHNSON

NOT a few were jolted out of a long-standing complacency when two concerts of American music were given with sensational success last week in Boston. Many persons, confronted with such a situation, would look quizzically at the prophet and ask if there is enough American music to make up an evening's program. Yes, my friends, there is, and one need not go to hear it as though he were paying a duty call on his wife's poor relations!

While the list of composers selected by Dr. Koussevitsky for performance at these concerts seems representative enough, one immediately [illegible] the names of others who belong there too, and the conclusion is inevitable that a substantial group is waiting to be heard, not only for the first time, but for the third or tenth time on programs of orchestras throughout the country. Foote, Hadley, Hanson, Gershwin, Taylor, Harris, Thompson, and Carpenter are names long since included in the encyclopedic dictionaries of creative musicians, but how rarely are they heard in the concert hall! With the exception of Gershwin—an exception which almost proves too much—they are held in respectful silence, the one kind of tribute quite unacceptable to any [illegible]. The two conecrts given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra attracted nationwide attention, not because they exhausted the promise made by so unusual an idea, but because they suggested a trend which may well become a highroad for others to follow.

There are doubtless conscientious objectors to many of the scores, both home-made and imported, played by this orchestra under Dr. Koussevitsky, but none can challenge the alertness to contemporary trends, nor discount the high percentage of winners which he has sponsored in the 16 years of his American sojourn, a residence, one might add, which is now permanent and attested by citizenship. Stravinsky, Ravel, Prokofieff, Sibelius, Copland, Harris, Carpenter—how much we are in his debt for repeated hearings of their works! Dr. Koussevitsky discovered none of them, but he has made them famous, given them the encouragment necessary to continue development and has been, in fact, a guiding hand in bridging the deep gulf between the composer and the listener; with their scores he has consistently stormed the doors of our prejudices and torn away the veil which shrouded our misconceptions of the art of our own day.

That the time is ripe for recognition of the American composer was shown by the tremendous reception of each work by capacity audiences; some pleased more than others, as certain are finer than others, but the nine scores presented on their own merits and without apology showed the array in a more favorable light than ever before. Debatable as the claim may seem to be, none has yet contradicted the fact that these comprised the first two all-American programs given by a major symphony orchestra in this land. (Note: America was discovered in 1492, and received her political independence in 1776!)

New England Stuff

Arthur Foote's "Suite in E. Major" for string orchestra opened the festival; the work of a composer among the first to capture the unmistakable quality of a New England background freed from European slavishness and yet stand securely on his own merits as a creative talent of high order. The suite might have been written by any great master, but Mr. Foote's life was spent, for the most part, between Salem and Cambridge.

"With the "Skyscrapers" by John Alden Carpenter, one recalls the racy and acrid harmonies which shocked the conservative minds of 1926 when "An American Tragedy", H. L. Mencken, Scott Fitzgerald, and as final movement, the crash of 1929, were subjects of pith and moment. Alas, how much water has flowed under the bridge since those remote days, and how accustomed we have become to tall buildings! Today, "Skyscrapers" still packs a wallop; it is noisy, jazzy, but authentic, holding its age well, like a grandmother who smokes and drinks.

Deems Taylor of the same generation chose to be less American and has fared better with his innocent "Through the Looking Glass" in that it has been performed more often than any other native work excepting Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue". The talented Gershwin was here represented by an earlier work, his Concerto, written in 1925; once again the limited rhythmic and melodic talent and the transference of jazz to the concert hall had their moments of promise, with Abram Chasins tossing off the piano part most capably. Thereafter, Roy Harris' Third Symphony, introduced only last year, confirmed the favorable impression made at that time.

This column frequently makes mention of Randall Thompson (perhaps in the faint hope that the New Haven Orchestra might find time for his Second Symphony) and will not here further praise the merits of that work which seems to the writer to embody more of the finer qualities of American tonal art than any other extant. Doctor Koussevitsky concluded the pair of concerts with it, whether as a logical conclusion, as a 'summing up of the whole matter', I do not know; with Mr. Harris' work it seemed that two major trends in American music were sounded within the same hour. And in this hour, both in respect to the playing of these scores and on the part of the delighted audience, the long-neglected cause of the American composer received one of its major boosts to date.

Concerts in Prospect

Prof. Ellsworth Grumman of the School of Music in Yale University returns to his public in annual recital on October 23rd in Sprague Hall. No program comes to hand.

Walter West, the talented New Haven pianist, opens his season on the same evening with a recital in Milford Town Hall; selections by Brahms, Beethoven, Chopin, and Schumann comprise the excellent program.

The Faculty of the School of Music inaugurates a season of recitals devoted to chamber music on Tuesday, the 24th in Sprague Hall. A program, more contemporary in aspect than any prepared heretofore within memory suggests a heightening of interest, and a claim for enlarged public response. Works by Franck, Fasch, Richard Donovan, and Paul Hindemith comprise the list of composers.

Two interesting musical events are designed for this week as attraction to large audiences.

Samuel Yaffe, one of the most accomplished pianists residing in New Haven, appears in annual recital on Tuesday evening. The program contains selections by Haydn, Scarlatti, Beethoven, Chopin, and Liszt, all to be played in Trinity Parish House beginning at 8:30 o'clock.

Marcel Dupre, world-famous organist, and his daughter, Marguerite Dupre, will play in Woolsey Hall on Wednesday evening.

THIS CLIPPING FROM OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.
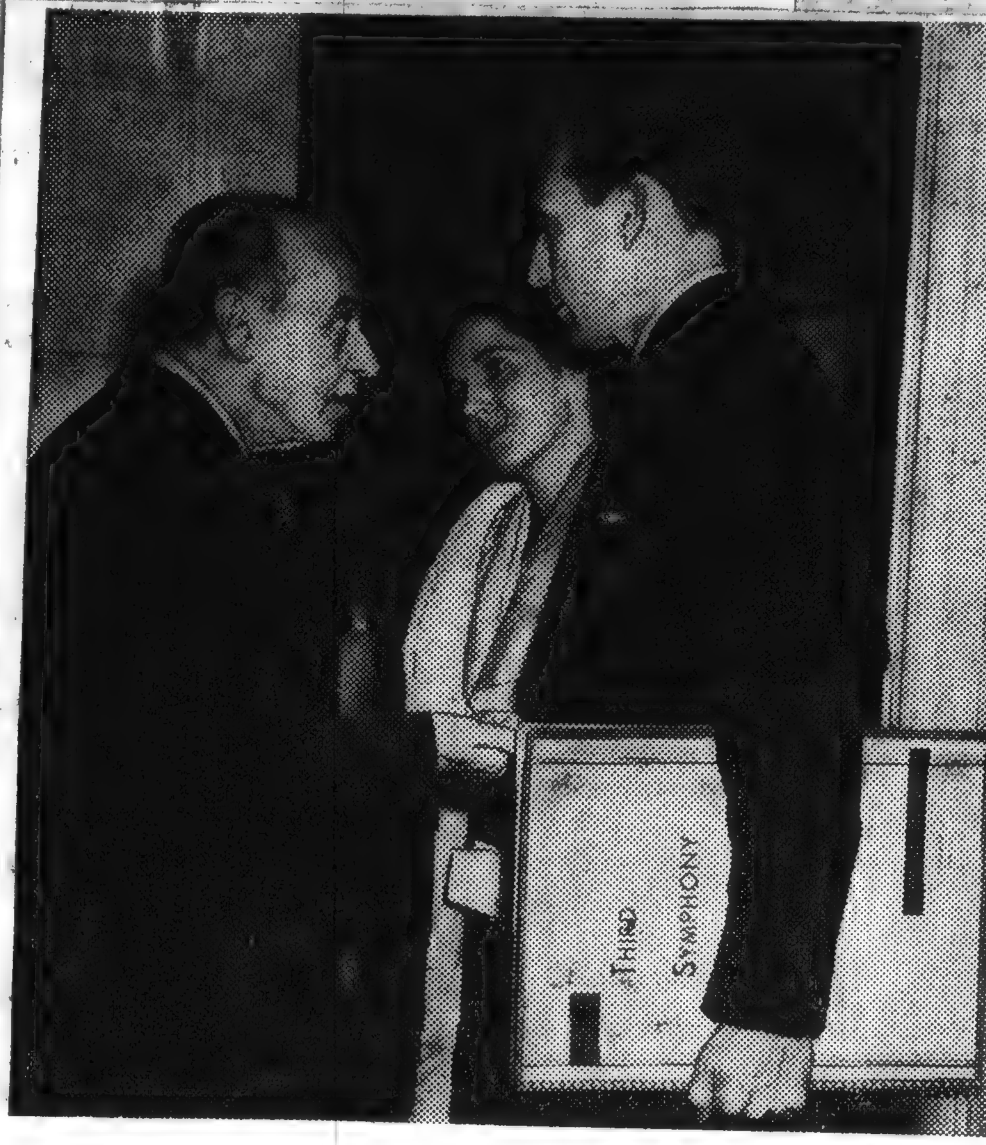
OKLAHOMAN

OCT 15 1939



Roy Harris, one of America's distinguished composers, and Mrs. Harris, her head tilted, listen attentively as Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, argues a point after the recent performance of Harris' "Third Symphony" in Boston. Two previous symphonies by the Oklahoma-born composer also were introduced by Koussevitzky in Boston. (Associated Press photo.)

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

OCT 17 1939

Festival Board Considers Next Year's Concerts

Trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival met this afternoon to consider further the proposal of extending next season from two to three weekends.

Meeting with the Berkshire group was a committee from the board of trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra including Jerome D. Greene, M. A. DeWolfe Howe and Richard C. Paine. The meeting was at the home of Mrs. Charles Robinson Smith in Glendale.

The Boston group and George E. Judd, manager of the orchestra are registered at the Red Lion Inn.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
OCT 17 1939

FESTIVAL OF SIX CONCERTS LIKELY TO BE VOTED TODAY

Trustees to Meet at Stockbridge — Three-Week Affair Had Been Talked — Other Berkshire Doings

Special Dispatch to The Republican

Berkshire Hills, Oct. 16—It is expected that the trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic festival at a special meeting tomorrow afternoon will vote to hold six concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood, Stockbridge, next August, the same as for the past two years. On account of the very large attendance and great success of the festival two months ago there was talk at the time of having nine concerts over three weeks in 1940. It is known, however, that a number of the trustees, probably a majority, do not favor a three weeks' festival because of the larger budget involved and next year's business uncertainties. Tomorrow's meeting will be held at the Dugway, the Stockbridge summer home of Mrs Charles Robinson Smith, mother of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president of the festival corporation.

THIS CLIPPING FROM STILLWATER, OKLA.
PRESS

OCT 18 1939

Boston Symphony Folder Lists Concerts

The latest folder announcing the 1939-40 season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra comes with an impressive photograph of the eight-pillared Huntington Avenue portico of Symphony Hall as cover decoration.

Under the heading, The World's Great Music in Six Programs, it is stated:

"Programs of engrossing interest, selectively drawn from the larger repertory of the season, are promised for the six pairs of concerts of the Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon series. The soloists will include two pianists of brilliant and outstanding powers who are to make their first appearance with the orchestra. They are Simon Barer and Webster Aitken, both of high European and American reputation, both to make their first appearance in Boston.

"Albert Spalding, the distinguished American violinist, will appear for the first time in this series. The final pair of concerts will be devoted to the music of Tschaikovsky, becoming a part of the festival to conclude the orchestra's season, commemorating the 100th anniversary of the composer's birth."

THIS CLIPPING FROM BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
POST

OCT 16 1939

Original Debussy Sketch On Exhibition in Boston

The New England Conservatory of Music, Boston possesses the three-line holograph sketch by Claude Debussy for the "Rhapsody for Orchestra and Saxephone" to be played at the Boston Symphony concerts Friday and Saturday.

Although not published until 1919 the work was commissioned by the late Mrs. Richard J. Hall of Boston, whose heirs have deposited the manuscrpit in the library of the New England Conservatory. The work is the completed sketch from which the orchestration was made and is inscribed in Debussy's hand "Esquisse d'une 'Rhapsodie Mauresque' pour orchestre et saxophone principal—a Madame E. Hall avec l'homage respectueux de Claude Debussy, 1901-1908." Debussy evidently took his time in executing the commission, and at various points in the sketch are notations in his handwriting regarding the orchestration. Mrs. Hall was the president of the Boston Orchestral society, the Boston Symphony orchestra performed it in February 1932. The manuscript, but one of a number of orchestral scores in possession of the conservatory library, will be on exhibition at Symphony Hall at the time of its performances.

OCTOBER 18, 1939

MUSIC

B. Trans.

Note on Rascher—Symphony Program

The eminent Danish saxophonist, Sigurd Rascher, announced as soloist for the coming pair of Friday afternoon-Saturday evening concerts by the Boston Symphony, is, it appears, almost anything but Danish. His father was Swiss, his mother English, he himself was born in Germany, in Elberfeld, to be exact, and he had his first systematic music instruction in a school in Stuttgart.

Why he calls himself a Dane is likely to remain a riddle, until he arrives in Boston. Of course, in these days, when a person's nationality does not necessarily correspond either to his parentage or his birthplace, or even to the country of his choice, it is quite possible that Mr. Rascher simply travels on a Danish passport.

He played the saxophone in popular orchestras all over Europe from the ages of 21 to 24, when he returned to Stuttgart and serious studies, graduating with the highest honors. He left jazz to prove that "the saxophone deserves as honorable place in music as any other instrument." He has succeeded so well in this that Glazounov, Coates, Ibert, Larsson and Hindemith have all written concertos for him.

He appears with the Boston Symphony for the first time in this country.

Third Symphony Program

Serge Koussevitzky has announced that Sibelius' tone poem, "Tapiola," will open the third pair of concerts of the Boston Symphony on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 27 and 28. Two symphonies are also listed: Roy Harris's Third and Robert Schumann's First in B flat, known as the "Spring" Symphony. The program will be rounded out with two short Rimsky-Korsakoff numbers: his setting of the revolutionary song, "Dubinushka," and the entr'acte, "The Battle of Kerjenetz" from his opera "The Invisible City of Kitej."

First Monday-Tuesday

The first of the series of six Monday afternoon and Tuesday evening programs of the Boston Symphony will be presented in Symphony Hall on Oct. 30 and 31. The first program comprises Arthur Foote's Suite for String Orchestra in E major, Debussy's three symphonic sketches, "La Mer," and Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony.

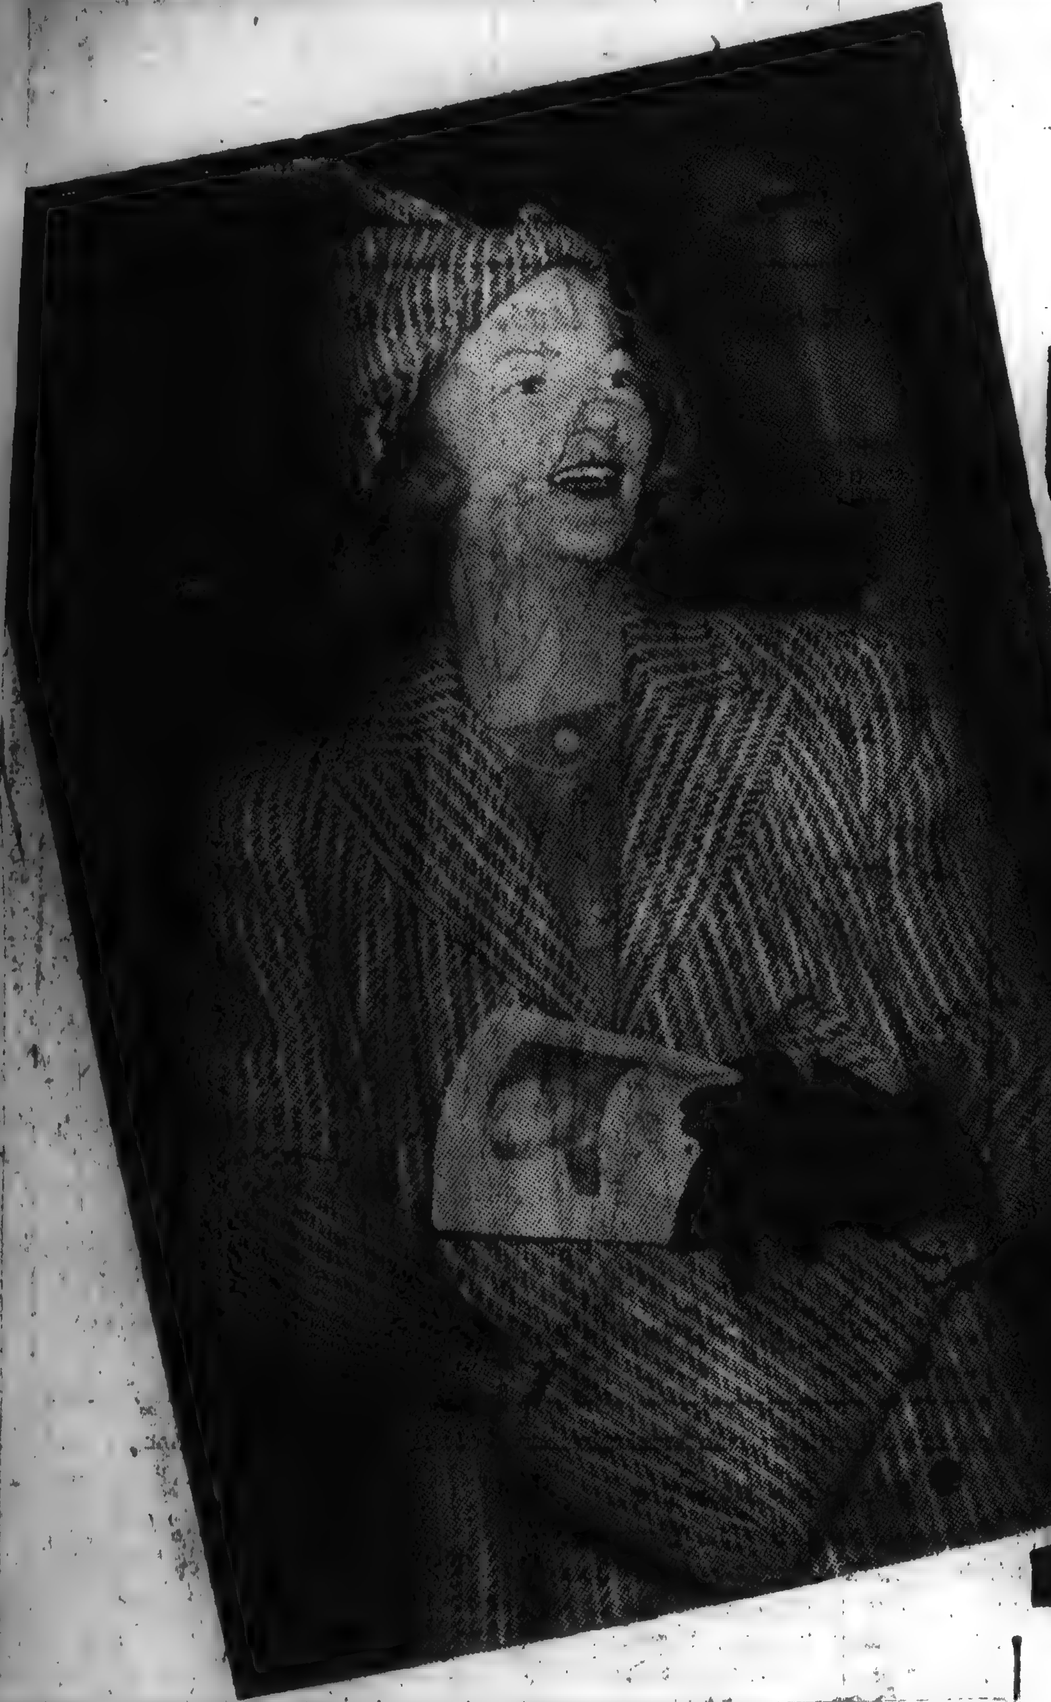
Soloists to appear in the course of the series are Webster Aiken, pianist; Simon Barer, pianist, and Albert Spalding, violinist.

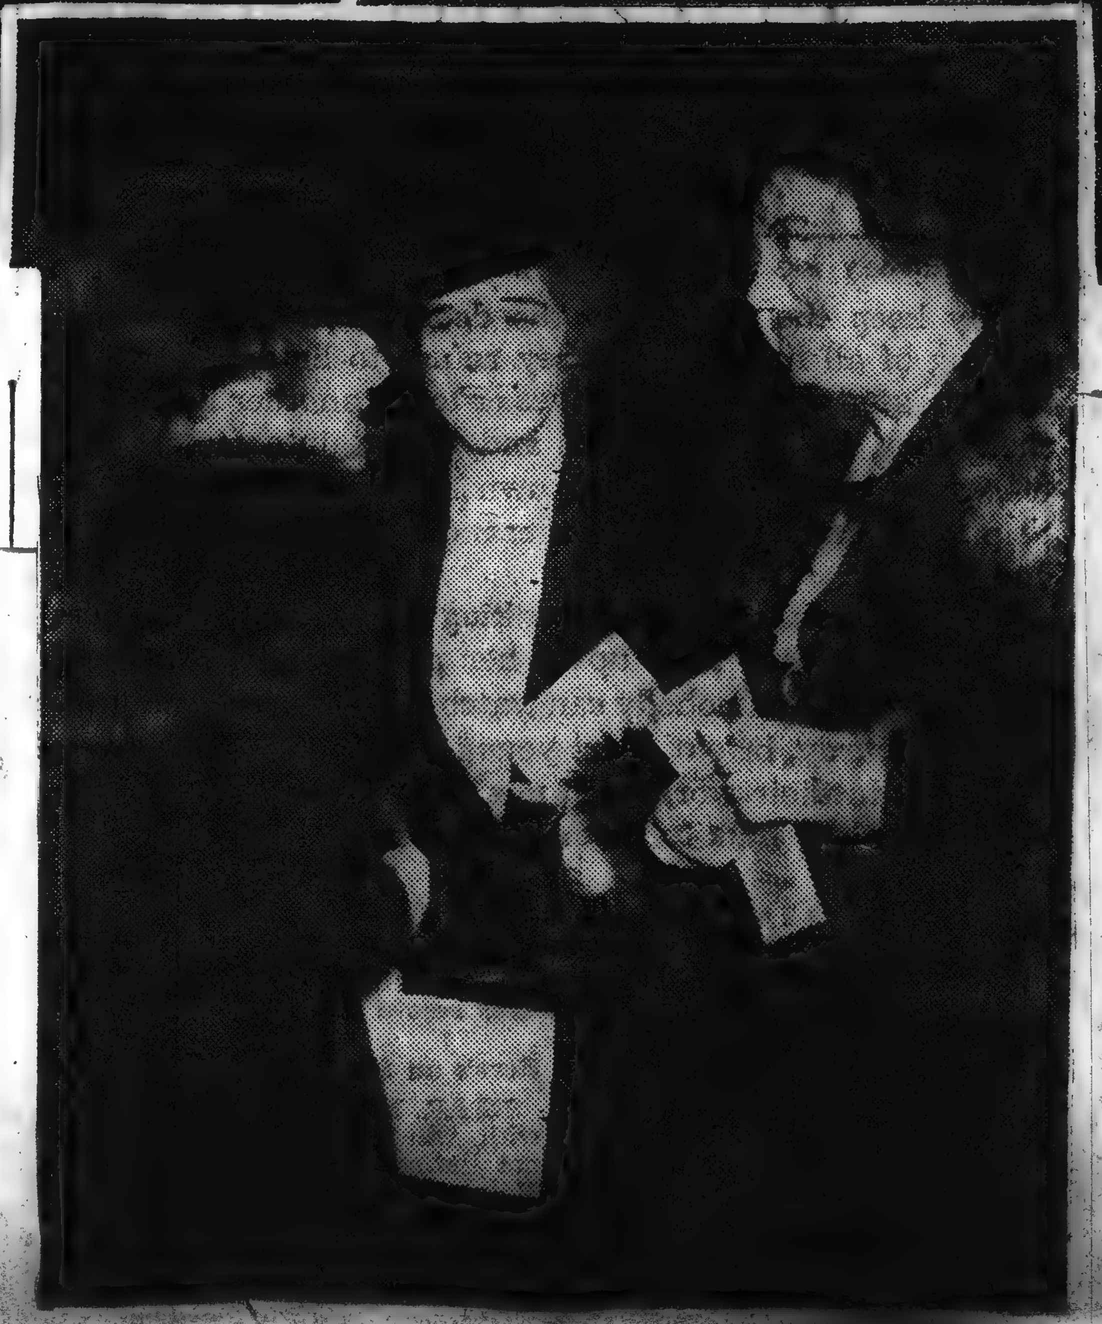
SOCIETY

(Photos by Charles McCormick)

Five "first ladies" attend the first Friday Symphony of Boston's 59th season. Left—Massachusetts' first lady, Mrs. Leverett Saltonstall of Chestnut Hill, wife of Governor Saltonstall, mounts the familiar curving stairway whose rail was brought from the famous old Music Hall where Boston listened to its first symphonies. Above—A distinguished "first lady" of both Boston and Baltimore, Mrs. Robert H. Stevenson, brings as her guest the stage's lovely first lady, Katharine Cornell. Top, Right—A former first lady of Massachusetts who rarely misses a Friday concert, Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller of 150 Beacon st., wife of former Governor Fuller. Right—The North Shore's "first lady" and glamour girl, Miss Lucy Cochrane of Commonwealth av.

SOCIETY





(Photos by Charles McCormick)

Arriving for the first Friday Symphony of the season were Mrs. Charles F. Hovey (left), her smart tweeds matched with a little tweed cap, debutante Elizabeth Jenney of Brookline; Mrs. Robert C. Terry of Chestnut Hill, and top, right, two Pentecosts, Mrs. Browning E. Marean Jr. (Cornelia Pentecost) and Miss Catherine Pentecost talk over music and Fall plans with Mrs. Thomas Jefferson Davis Jr. (Nancy Whitman) of Cambridge. Right—Mrs. Francis Lee Higginson and Mrs. Augustus Goodwin, North Shore neighbors, exchange Symphony greetings.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
OCT 19 1939

61

SUBJECT: MUSIC

At 8 O'Clock Sunday Evening at Agawam Hunt, Under the Auspices of the Junior League of Providence, Madame Avis Bliven, Charbonnel, Above, Will Discuss the Concert Program to be Given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra Next Tuesday Evening at the Metropolitan Theatre. The Talk, Which She Will Illustrate at the Piano, Will be the First of a Series of Five.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
OCT 19 1939

WILL GIVE MUSIC TALKS

Mme. Avis Bliven Charbonnel, under the auspices of the Junior League of Providence, Inc., will give a series of talks on the highlights of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts each Sunday evening preceding the Tuesday concert.

The talks, illustrated by Mme. Charbonnel at the piano, will be given at the Agawam Hunt at 8 o'clock. The first will be presented Sunday evening and the other dates follow: Nov. 26, Jan. 21, Feb. 18 and April 14.

THIS CLIPPING FROM QUINCY, MASS.
PATRIOT LEDGER

OCT 20 1939

Symphony Concerts

The strains of the Boston Symphony orchestra are again coming near to the ears of some of the students at Quincy High school.

Under the direction of Wheeler Beckett of the Boston Symphony orchestra, 70 men will play. The concerts are given by the Youth Concert association of Boston.

Directors of the association are Charles H. Hovey, Edwin Webster, Edward A. Taft and Wheeler Beckett, secretary and treasurer, as well as director.

It was necessary for the Boston Symphony orchestra to have such a venture assured of success financially, so Mr. Beckett had to raise a fund of several thousand dollars before the young people were offered this opportunity.

There will be a series of six monthly concerts from November to April. Nov. 8, Dec. 6, Jan. 17, Feb. 7, Mar. 7 and April 10 or 24 are the dates.

The Youth Concerts are not open to the general public but only to the young people of junior high and high school age.

The concerts will be in Symphony hall in Boston.

The opening program is as follows:

Overture "The Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Water Musick Suite	Handel
Pictures at an Exhibition, arranged by Moussorgsky
Les Preludes	Liszt

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.
REPORTER
OCT 20 1939

Sax Players in Symphony Solo

BOSTON (INS)—The Saxophone, about as popular with classical musicians as a crooner in grand opera, makes its debut today in a solo with the Boston Symphony orchestra.

But it's the virtuoso more than the instrument who has gained recognition of the upper strata of music. He is Sigurd Rascher, 32-year-old former dance band player.

Most enthusiastic admirer of the sweet and moanin' low tones as played by Rascher is Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra.

This afternoon's symphony saxophone solo was born last spring when Rascher stopped off in Boston while enroute to Denmark from Australia, and had the audacity to ask Koussevitzky for a symphonic audition.

The conductor tolerantly lent an ear and when it was over the dignified maestro jumped from his chair, rushed out and gathered his staff and had them all listen. Then he made the date for October 20.

Rascher's specialties are playing a full octave higher than was believed possible, cross-fingering, and exceptional lip and breath control.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS
OCT 20 1939

Serge Prokofieff, he who provided the Boston Symphony orchestra audiences the past season with a great deal of musical fun through his "Lieutenant Kije" and "Peter and the Wolf" will be guest soloist with the orchestra at Boston this season in a performance of his own piano concerto. Stravinsky will conduct his own "Oedipus Rex" with the Boston group.

* * *

~~Transcript~~ Oct 20

MUSIC

Boston Symphony At Sanders Theater

Dr. Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra played the first concert of the new season's Cambridge series last night in Sanders Theater. The program, consisting of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, D'Indy's "Istar" Variations and Debussy's "La Mer," was the same as that of last week's opening concerts in Symphony Hall, except that the evening began with the "Eroica" and was concluded with "La Mer."

The audience, which, with that grace that marks a concert at Sanders Theater cheerfully allows itself to forego a liqueur six evenings during the winter so that it may collect in the hall by eight o'clock, was overjoyed with the "Eroica," polite to the Variations and intrigued by "La Mer." There were many who would have responded more warmly at the finish of the first movement of "La Mer" than they did when the whole work was completed. De l'aube a midi sur la mer is by a Debussy familiar to them. But the Dialogue du Vent et de la Mer is not. They are not sure that it wasn't edited by Sibelius and re-orchestrated by the ghost of Rimsky-Korsakov. So their applause was for an orchestra that tendered them the thousand little and big messages, muted or eloquent.

In the Variations, the orchestra achieved some of the finest playing of the concert. Bright strings and an ideal complement of brass sung the unisons resonantly; the wood winds, particularly the flutes and clarinets, made their figures emphatic; while Dr. Koussevitzky, aloof and wrapt, molded the legend dramatically.

J. G.

SIGURD RASCHER
Swings Sax With Symphony

American

Saxophone Star With Symphony

For the first time at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, an eminent virtuoso of the saxophone will appear in numbers written especially for the instrument, next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

The artist is Sigurd M. Rascher, the Danish musician who has brought about an increased interest in the possibilities of the saxophone by the quality of his musicianship.

At the coming concerts he will present for the first time, with the instrument for which it was written Debussy's Rhapsody for Orchestra and Saxophone. This rhapsody, composed for Mrs. Richard J. Hall in the early years of the present century, was performed at these concerts in 1932 with English horn. The other number is a Chamber Concertino for Saxophone and instruments, by Jacques Ibert.

Record — Home Edition — Oct. 20/39 (Fri.) Issued 19th (Thurs.)

'Sax' Soloist in Symphony Today

Musical history will be made in Symphony Hall today. A saxophone solo, by the world's greatest virtuoso of this instrument, will be for the first time in the history of the great Boston Symphony Orchestra the feature of its regular Friday afternoon concert.

The soloist, who has come all the way from Denmark on invitation of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the orchestra, is Sigurd Rascher, instructor in the Royal Danish Conservatory in Copenhagen.

Throughout the European world Rascher has been acclaimed as the greatest of all exponents of an instrument, associated witht he blare of jazz and swing bands rather than with symphonic music. Yet it has been Rascher's contention that the saxaphone deserves serious consideration as an instrument adapted to concert music as well as to popular band music.

Rascher will be soloist in two symphonic works, one of which was written especially for him.

Rascher had a private audition with Dr. Koussevitzky last spring. After Rascher had returned to Denmark, Dr. Koussevitzky wired him and offered him any available date when he could appear with the orchestra.

Globe Oct. 20, 1939

Saxophone Soloist to Make Debut in Symphony Hall Concert Today

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Friday concerts have produced some pretty startling stuff, but this afternoon's bids fair to outstartle them all

It's a saxophone solo—the first time that instrument has ever made its prima donna bow at a regular symphony concert.

The performer who will appear today is Sigurd Rascher of Copenhagen, Denmark, who, when he first played for Koussevitzky, caused the august and suave gentleman to jump up from his chair, rush out from his room in Symphony Hall and call to his staff, "Come and hear this man! He's marvelous!"

Once a dance band player, Rascher now is famous all over Europe as a virtuoso of the saxophone. The 32-year-old player dumbfounded Conductor Koussevitzky last Spring when, en route to Denmark from Australia, Rascher stopped off in Boston and asked the maestro for an audition.

Koussevitzky remonstrated that Rascher must have gotten his men mixed, that he was a symphonic conductor, no leader of either sweet or swing tunes. When that little matter was straightened out, Koussevitzky's polite listening was changed to eager excitement, and the first thing Rascher knew he and the famous conductor had a date all fixed for Oct. 20. Rascher plays one full octave higher than was believed possible, has specialized in lip and breath control, and cross-fingering.

62

OCTOBER 21,

SAXOPHONE SOLO WITH SYMPHONY

Boston Post

Virtuoso Rascher Discloses Beauties of Instrument

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

The Symphony Concert of yesterday afternoon was one of extremes. Before the intermission came Bruckner's Seventh Symphony, still formidable after 55 years, while the remainder of the concert offered two diverting works for saxophone and orchestra and the three familiar excerpts from Berlioz' "The Damnation of Faust" that are about as untaxing as any symphonic music can be.

SOLOIST A SAXOPHONIST

Since the saxophone soloist, Sigurd Rascher, was new to Boston and likewise one of his pieces, Ibert's Concertino, it is he and it which should first be discussed. The son of a Swiss father and an English mother, Mr. Rascher was born in Germany (in 1907) but prefers to consider himself a Dane. Beginning his professional career as a performer in popular orchestras, he soon aspired to higher things and returned to the Stuttgart Hochschule, which he had left three years before, and graduated with honors.

Concertos and sonatas have been written for him by Glazounov, Coates, Larsson and Hindemith, and also the Concerto of yesterday. This last, of no great musical import, exhibits the skilled workmanship and facile charm which we have come to associate with its composer and leaves no word in the saxophone's legitimate vocabulary unsaid.

Brings Out Colors

Both in this deliberate virtuoso piece and in the more substantial, less displayful Rhapsody of Debussy, previously heard here only as a piece for orchestra and English horn, Mr. Rascher proved himself worthy of the praise that has been written and spoken of him. Since the more characteristic voice of the "sax" is not—in some ears—wholly alluring, it is to Mr. Rascher's credit that he draws from his much-abused instrument a variety of other sounds, some of them of exceeding beauty. The listener finds himself being reminded now of the flute, now of the clarinet and now of the horn and ever and anon notes tone-colors at once novel and attractive.

Since Mr. Rascher's technical facility is no less remarkable than his command of tonal resource, he may be set down as a virtuoso of the first rank and, withal, a musician of taste and sensibility. Small wonder that he was so enthusiastically received.

Debussy's Rhapsody

The story of the Rhapsody that Debussy wrote for Mrs. Richard J. Hall of Boston has been told in these columns. Roger-Ducasse who made the orchestration, on the basis of Debussy's suggestions, has perfectly aped the latter's orchestral style. The music itself, when heard in a performance such as that of yesterday, seems of the better Debussy, if not exactly of the best. It may be added that, for Mr. Rascher's benefit, Ernest Ansermet has added to the saxophone part measures given by Roger-Ducasse to various woodwind instruments.

Bruckner's Great Work

Not yet can one write of a Bruckner performance without mention of the music itself, so baffling is the combination of strength and weakness that these extraordinary symphonies present. But this much may be said: if the Finale of the Seventh comes as an anticlimax, after the Adagio, it is difficult to imagine a movement that would not have made that unfortunate impression. The Scherzo, one of the few really superlative scherzi since Beethoven, is perfectly in place as foil to the preceding movements; but the Finale is mere superfluity. Moreover, yesterday Dr. Koussevitzky lessened rather than increased its effectiveness by eliminating the repeat of the chorale-like second subject.

It was possible to feel that the incomparable Adagio was hurried, if ever so little, in yesterday's performance and so lost a fraction of its impressiveness, but Dr. Koussevitzky's reading of the first movement was masterly to a degree, while, throughout, the ear was ravished by the orchestral sound. Here was the wonderful Bruckner brass at its finest.

Saxophone at Symphony Hall

C.S.M.
Oct 21, 1939

The Arts in Boston

The first novelty of the Boston Symphony Orchestra season was heard yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, when the saxophone appeared as a solo instrument in the capable hands of Sigurd Rascher. For program Dr. Koussevitzky had arranged as opening item, the Bruckner Symphony No. 7, in E major, and to close, he chose excerpts from "The Damnation of Faust," Op. 24, by Berlioz. Between these, were set a pair of numbers for the solo instrument, the first of which was Debussy's Rhapsody for Orchestra and Saxophone, followed by Ibert's Chamber Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra, in what is believed to be the first performance in the United States.

It can be no small task to assemble a program which shall provide an appropriate setting for a solo saxophone. Dr. Koussevitzky revealed his skill in program making by selecting the Bruckner item. The chief difficulty with Bruckner is, that he becomes so verbose and so involved in trivialities, along with the really worth-while message he has to give, that we are likely, upon an occasion of this sort, to miss the real point of his performance, which to one listener at least was that of offering an excellent study in contrasts.

Of course, as every student of orchestral scores is aware, remove Bruckner's name from the program and substitute Wagner's and you have what might easily pass for a Wagnerian symphony . . . if that master had ever exerted his talent in that direction; but the point upon this occasion, as we see it, is that Bruckner made extraordinarily clever use of the brass section of the orchestra. And the saxophone is a reed-brass instrument. Thus if we were listening as carefully as we should we received the impressions which we should regarding the real and entirely legitimate quality of the tone of the saxophone. Just why Debussy should have referred to it as "an aquatic instrument" is not easily discernible, although the reference is amusing.

Yesterday we heard the saxophone played with virtuosity and with a wholly sympathetic instinct for its best qualities. We heard the mellow, lingering tone, with an expert vibrato, which is the true tone of the instrument.

Of the two works heard yesterday, the Ibert opus revealed the largest number of tonal possibilities while the Debussy was the more inherently poetic. Each was well chosen. Mr. Rascher has won a distinctive position for himself and his performance yesterday afternoon sustained the reputation which preceded him. A few little theatrical mannerisms might be dispensed with to advantage, but they in no wise affect the quality of his performance. The audience was generous with applause, but it was obviously a little puzzled. This commentator found the hall too vast for the intimate quality of the saxophone at its best, which placed the artist at a slight disadvantage.

Throughout the afternoon Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra were at the top of their bent and during the Debussy and Ibert numbers, they gave an especially expert account of themselves. In all, it was an illuminating concert.

G. M. S.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

OCT 21 1939

Sax Makes Debut In Boston Symphony

Boston, Oct. ~~20.—(AP)~~—The saxophone, almost synonymous with jazz, appeared as solo instrument today in a regular concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the first time in the 58 years of the organization's existence.

The soloist was Sigurd Rascher of Copenhagen. He played in two symphonic works, Debussey's "Rhapsody for Orchestra and Saxophone" and Jacques Ibert's "Chamber Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra," the latter written for Rascher.

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky engaged the former dance band player after an audition last spring.

THIS CLIPPING FROM BURLINGTON, VT.
FREE PRESS

OCT 21 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE

OCT 21 1939

Festival Meeting

Another meeting of trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has been held, and still no decision on the proposal to extend next summer's series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to three weeks. At the meeting this week, we read that three members of the board of the orchestra attended and that the spokesman was Jerome Greene.

No doubt Mr. Greene presented convincing arguments to give the Berkshire trustees pause in their decision. There are many arguments why the 1940 season should continue at two weeks, such as the inability of Berkshire music lovers to absorb more than two weeks of six concerts; discomfort and inconvenience to residents because of the influx of hundreds of visitors, not to mention the financial risk involved in further expansion.

On the other hand, there must be pretty convincing arguments in favor of three weeks—opening of the academy as outlined by Dr. Koussevitzky and his associates and the part the Festival concerts will play in the academy development; the possibility of attracting music lovers from an even wider area than ever before; but most important of all, perhaps, the opportunity of establishing once and for all, Tanglewood as the outstanding music center in America.

This last argument, and we assume it was presented, places a terrific responsibility on the Berksire board. That it is not taking this responsibility lightly is indicated by further postponement of a decision.

* * *

Globe Oct 21

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

There was a saxophone soloist at the Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon—the first in all 58 years of the orchestra. He was Sigurd Rascher, European virtuoso of considerable fame, who appeared for the first time in America playing the Debussy Rhapsody and Ibert's "Chamber Concertino" (new to the United States). Dr. Serge Koussevitzky began the program with the Seventh Symphony of Bruckner, and ended with three familiar excerpts from Berlioz' "The Damnation of Faust." These last, by the way, replaced Dr. Koussevitzky's original choice, the same composer's "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture.

The carved name of Beethoven over the proscenium march did not wither in flames at the sight of a solo saxophone upon the stage, nor were the plaster figures above the second balcony visibly distressed. The saxophone is, after all, quite respectable by itself. In the hands of Mr. Rascher it is agile as a coloratura soprano and more accurately pitched, producing a silken tone that varies from a horn quality in the lower register to a flageolet sweetness at the top. The smoothness and speed of Mr. Rascher's extraordinary technic, and his musicianly phrasing, must have been a revelation to most of the audience.

The late Mrs. Richard J. Hall of Boston commissioned Debussy to write the Rhapsody. She played the instrument and was the benevolent angel of the Boston Orchestral Club which gave many notable premieres of French music here many years ago. Debussy was not partial to the saxophone, took more than a reasonable amount of time in fulfilling the commission and finally delivered to Mrs. Hall a manuscript, the notes intact but only suggestions for orchestration. The latter was done by Roger-Ducasse. Further alterations were made by French conductor Ernest Ansermet. Louis Speyer played the solo portion on the English horn at Boston Symphony concerts in 1932. Yesterday's performance must have been the first here with saxophone.

SIGURD RASCHER

Danish musician who presented saxophone solos at regular concert by Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday.

Despite this remarkable history, the Rhapsody is third-rate Debussy, uninspired and prevailingly dull. Mr. Rascher had better opportunity in Jacques Ibert's lively trifle, expertly written, jazzy but not a bit cheap. Ibert is a clever composer. He knows how to create music that will show off the capabilities of a solo instrument and yet be enjoyable for its own sake. The Friday audience seemed pleased all around.

We in Boston are indebted to Dr. Koussevitzky for comparatively frequent performances of two or three symphonies each by Bruckner and Mahler. No lack of appreciation is intended in the observation that their other symphonies would find ready welcome.

Lyrically, harmonically, and in its brave orchestration, the Bruckner Seventh is great music. Bruckner was inspired; he had noble visions. Proof exists in the distinguished nature of his themes. But as a technician he was not bestowed with the organizing powers of Beethoven, Brahms or Sibelius. His symphonies (at least those which this reviewer knows) are not organically unified. His first movements and finales, instead of winging their way upward through logical development to a last inevitable climax, go along in sections. Bruckner would use a theme, repeat it with decorations of counterpoint, reach a towering climax and then begin over again. When the sheer living beauty of his music is considered, however, strict analysis is shown up as whiskered pedantry.

While the Bayreuth tubas and the trumpets had their less-than-excellent moments during the symphony, the whole orchestra played magnificently Berlioz' "Minuet of the Will-o'-the-Wisps," "Dance of the Sylphs" and "Rakoczy March." The march, to be exact, received an old-fashioned rousing interpretation that made your spine tingle. The program will be repeated tonight.

C. W. D.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY CONCERT

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The second regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony hall. The soloist was Sigurd Rascher, saxophonist. The program was as follows:

Symphony No. 7 in E major.... Bruckner
Rhapsody for orchestra and saxophone .... Debussy
Chamber Concertino for saxophone and orchestra .... Ibert
Excerpts from "The Damnation of Faust" .... Berlioz

The curiosity as well as the novelty of yesterday's concert centered in the music for saxophone; and Mr. Rascher was the first soloist of this instrument to appear so prominently with the orchestra. Debussy's Rhapsody had been heard before, when Mr. Speyer played the solo part on the English horn. It may be admitted at once that the music sounds better in that arrangement.

It is not entirely the trouble that the saxophone connotes a jazz band to our ears, for Mr. Rascher produces a singularly clear and beautiful tone. But, say what you will, the saxophone is a "sore thumb" instrument in the character in which it protudes itself on our notice. We can't get away from it, as it were; and it does not blend with the other instruments, except when Debussy has obligingly swamped it in an orchestral climax.

Debussy's Rhapsody, as a matter of fact, is really an orchestral piece in which the saxophone, or the English horn, has an unusually prominent role. As such it is far too infrequently heard, for it is a fine work, even if its composition was grudgingly undertaken and the orchestration done by another.

Ibert's Concertino, which was pleyed for the first time in America, was clearly designed to show the saxophone to best advantage. The music itself is bright and attractive. The theme of the finale is rollicking in the manner of a Brandenburg concerto. Ibert has taken care to display the instrument in daring technical passages, and you always feel that this has at the same time been musically, not speciously accomplished.

The cadenza is an astonishing feat of virtuosity, even requiring the stops at one point to be hit, while the breath is stayed, in order to produce a percussive effect. The instrument is also obliged to play a higher note, with, we assume, trick fingering, than a normal player could possibly get out of it. Mr. Rascher is no ordinary player. He is indeed a virtuoso who is also musical and plays with a fine quality of tone. We merely wish that he would not sway about so, especially in the Debussy, for such movement is distracting and surely not necessary.

Bruckner's 7th Symphony shows both his genius and his febbleness as a composer. That he had genius is not to be doubted for a moment. He wrote beautiful melodies, though they did not always turn out to be good material for development in a long symphony. In spite of the passages of padding, and his naivete, which is often the trio, for example—rather endearing, you realize that the composer had authentic inspiration. He had genuine feeling and imagination. The adagio may be immensely over-long, but it has beauty worth enduring a great deal of tedium for. The scherzo is masterly, and only the finale is practically a total loss.

The performance of the symphony yesterday was nervous. It was not always together, and there was not the usual feeling with the Boston Symphony of absolute certainty, the sure marshaling of musical forces. It can not always be so; and neither Dr. Koussevitzky nor the orchestra itself is necessarily to blame when the phenomenon rarely occurs. Tonight's performance will very likely tell another story.

Berlioz's familiar excerpts from "The Damnation of Faust" provided a popular end to the concert. The march is so hackneyed that it cries out for daring treatment. This it received yesterday, and with brilliantly effective results.

—Symphony Season Opens Friday

Sketches by Martha Burnham

Dr. Koussevitzky as an Artist Sketches Him in Action on the Eve of a New Season at Symphony Hall

With the concerts of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, the conductor will begin the fifty-ninth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Saxophone Premiere for Symphony Concerts

Symphony Hall to Greet A Saxophone Virtuoso

By Alfred H. Meyer

Symphony Hall, it has long been known, likes anniversaries. The blossoming forth of Friday and Saturday's Boston Symphony programs with saxophone solos comes very near to marking a centennial. For in 1840, so the lexicons tell us, Antoine Joseph Sax, generally known as Adolpe Sax, invented the saxophone. Sax was a member of a distinguished family and firm of instrument makers who specialized in refinements upon wind and brass instruments, and who made several notable additions to this group. Witness the family of saxhorns (similar to tubas) in addition to the saxophones.

By 1844, M. Sax had completed a model of a saxophone which he played at a concert conducted by no less a person than Hector Berlioz. The following year saxophones were officially included in the instrumentation of French army bands. In 1846 the house of Sax patented the new instrument.

The reaction of contemporary composers to the saxophone was highly enthusiastic. Berlioz himself devotes a paragraph of high praise to it in his treatise on instrumentation. Meyerbeer, at work upon "The Prophet" when the new instrument appeared, lamented that it was too late to use it in the first four acts, and promptly inserted it in the last act. It was later withdrawn for reasons of expediency. Auber exclaimed, "What a lovely tone and what advantage could be derived from this instrument in a duet with the human voice." It remained for Rossini to hail its timbre humorously as "the most beautiful tone-paste that I know (la plus belle pâte de son que je connaisse)."

* * *

More recently, many Bostonians will recall that the late Charles Martin Loeffler was an ardent champion of the beauties of this instrument and that upon every possible occasion this most fastidious of composers enhanced his orchestrations by its use. It has remained only for the jazzists, more aware than other moderns of the latent potentialities of wind instruments, to bring it the reputation which it holds at present.

In 1935, Jacques Ibert, clever at the sparkling use of modern idioms, wrote a Concertino for Alto Saxophone and Eleven Instruments, for the Danish virtuoso, Sigurd Rascher. Mr. Rascher has played the Concertino variously in Europe, notably at the concerts of the International Society for Contemporary Music in Barcelona. It has been well received by the press.

On Friday and Saturday, Mr. Rascher, Dr. Koussevitzky, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give this work its first performance in the United States. It is fitting that a virtuoso piece for saxophone should have its American première in Boston, for Boston is also the native city of that early enthusiast for the saxophone, Mrs. Richard Hall. Mrs. Hall, in the first decade of the present century commissioned Claude Debussy (and others) to write for the saxophone. This work has not yet been performed at a concert of the Boston Symphony in its intended timbres. In 1932, M. Speyer played it with the orchestra upon the English horn. But when Mr. Rascher adds it to the piece by Ibert this week end, he will bring to pass at long last another "first time at these concerts."

Sigurd Rascher
Danish saxophone virtuoso to be heard with Boston Symphony Orchestra.

* * *

M. Ibert's Concertino runs in three relatively short terse movements: Allegro con moto; Larghetto; Animato molto. The orchestra tentatively preludes with an introduction of eight measures. The solo saxophone enters with a theme lightly syncopated—as though the composer wanted to present his solo timbre in the idiom with which it is principally associated. There is a subsidiary theme slightly more melodic. The principal contrast section of the movement is broadly melodic.

The second movement, Larghetto, begins with a recitative-like introduction for the saxophone alone. A broadly sustained melody in the saxophone floats above slowly moving chords partly in the Ravel technique of major sevenths and diminished octaves, partly in the Stravinsky technique of chords with both major and minor thirds. A second theme is heard in the orchestra in sweetish thirds. The movement proceeds without break to the third movement, Animato molto. This is a toccata-like flow of sixteenth notes in both the solo instrument and the orchestra. There are two slightly more melodic subsidiary themes. There is a displayful cadenza for the saxophone, the original difficulties of which are said to have been increased expressly for Mr. Rascher.

When Mrs. Hall commissioned Debussy to write for the saxophone, she probably did not realize that she had hit upon a composer who knew next to nothing about the instrument and cared less. Thus while Debussy might have been writing the piece, he spent his time wondering whether the saxophone "indulges in romantic tendernesses like the clarinet," most likely ignorant of the more pertinent consideration that its technique more nearly resembles that of the oboe than of the clarinet. Thus the composition of the piece dragged on for years after it had been ordered. When Mrs. Hall finally received it, the Boston Orchestral Society, of which she was a chief sponsor and with which she had wanted to play it, had disbanded. The manuscript of the original sketch is now in the possession of the New England Conservatory of Music and will be on exhibition at Symphony Hall Friday and Saturday.

Through the years, Debussy's intentions concerning the piece obviously changed. It was first to have been an Oriental Rhapsody. Then it was to have been a "Rhapsodie Mauresque." It still contains suggestions of Spanish (or Moorish?) rhythms. It was finally published merely as "Rhapsody." Like the Lisztian rhapsodies, it begins at a moderate tempo and continues at a more rapid pace. Unlike the Lisztian rhapsodies, it eschews brilliance and glitter and indulges in the subtleties so dear to Debussy. It was written while the composer was at the height of his powers, after "Pelléas et Mélisande," the general period of such a masterpiece as "La Mer."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
COURIER
Rockland Me
OCT 21 1939

REALM OF MUSIC

by Gladys St. Clair Heistad

The New England Conservatory of Music possesses the 3-line holograph sketch by Claude Debussy for the "Rhapsody for Orchestra and Saxophone" to be played at the Boston Symphony Concerts Oct. 20 and ~~21.~~ Although not published until 1919 the work was commissioned by the late Mrs. Richard J. Hall of Boston, whose heirs have deposited the manuscript in the Library of the New England Conservatory. The work is the completed sketch from which the orchestration was made and is inscribed in Debussy's hand, "Esquisse d'une 'Rhapsodie Mauresque' pour orchestre et saxaphone principal—a Madam E. Hall avec l'homage respectueux de Claude Debussy. 1901-1908." Debussy evidently took his time in executing the commission, and at various points in the sketch are notations in his handwriting regarding the orchestration. Mrs. Hall was president of the Boston Orchestral Society. The Boston Symphony performed the sketch in February, 1932. The manuscript, but one of a number of orchestral scores in possession of the Conservatory Library, will be on exhibition at Symphony Hall at the time of its performance and at all times may be consulted by application to the Librarian.

The Curtis Institute of Music radio programmes opening Monday, Oct. 16, presented The Curtis String Quartet paying Haydn's Quartet, Opus 64, No. 5, in D major, known as The Lark, and the Second Movement from Schubert's Quartet in A minor, Opus 29. The broadcast came in very clearly, and it was delightful to hear again this ensemble which holds a very important place in chamber music organizations today. As usual exquisite work was done, the Adagio cantabile and Menuetto movements of the Haydn Quartet and the Schubert Andante being particularly moving in their beauty. It is of interest to know that these broadcasts will be presented each Monday afternoon, 4 to 4.30, over the Columbia Broadcasting System. I did not catch in detail next Monday's broadcast but did get the name of Vladimir Sokoloff as one of the artists—Mr. Sokoloff was a member of the Rockport summer music colony and was heard in concert with Ralph Berkowitz, you will recall.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
OCT 21 1939

Music

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, begins its Providence season of five concerts with a program in Metropolitan Theatre on Tuesday night.

The program:

Arthur Foote.....Suite in E major for String Orchestra, Op. 63
I. Prelude
II. Pizzicato and Adagietto
III. Fugue
John Alden Carpenter......"Skyscrapers," a Ballet of American Life.
Soprano: Dorothy Maynor.
Tenor: Leonard Franklin.
Beethoven.....Symphony No. 3 in E-flat major, "Eroica," Op. 55.
I. Allegro con brio
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace; trio
IV. Finale: Allegro

• • •

Third Symphony Program

Oct 22

THE third pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitsky, conductor, in Symphony Hall, will be given next Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Oct. 27 and 28.

Dr. Koussevitsky announces "Tapiola," the tone poem of Sibelius, to open the program. Two pieces by Rimsky-Korsakov, his setting of the revolutionary song "Dubinushka," and the entr'acte, "The Battle of Kerjenetz" from his opera "The Invisible City of Kitej," will be played; likewise the Third Symphony of Roy Harris. The closing number will be the First Symphony of Schumann in B-flat, known as the "Spring" Symphony.

Monday, Tuesday Symphonies

THE opening program is announced for the series of six Monday evening and six Tuesday afternoon concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in Symphony Hall. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the following program at the opening pair of concerts, which will be given on Oct. 30-31: The Suite for String Orchestra in E major, by Arthur Foote; Debussy's "Th Sea," three symphonic sket and Beethoven's Third Syr the "Eroica."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL
OCT 22 1939

Symphony Season Will Open Tuesday

Koussevitzky to Direct Boston Orchestra at Metropolitan Theatre Here — Bruce Simonds, Pianist, to Give Program

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY and the Boston Symphony Orchestra come to Providence for their first concert of the season in the Metropolitan Theatre, Tuesday night at 8:30 o'clock. On Thursday evening, at 8:15 o'clock, Bruce Simonds, pianist, who for some years has been connected with the Yale School of Music, will give the first of the series of events arranged by the department of music in Brown University.

Two American composers, Arthur Foote and John Alden Carpenter, will share Dr. Koussevitsky's program with Beethoven whose "Eroica" will be the symphony of the concert. The Foote composition will be his Suite for String Orchestra in E-major. Carpenter will be represented by his "Skyscrapers" Suite.

In connection with the concert, John B. Archer will resume his series of lectures on the music this afternoon, at 4 o'clock, under the auspices of the Monday Morning Musical Club. Instead of being held in the Providence Public Library, as in former years, the lectures will be given in the Providence Art Club on Thomas street. They are free to the public. Edith Gyllenberg Waxberg will assist with illustrations on the piano.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PAWTUCKET, R. I.
TIMES
OCT 21 1939

First Saxophone Solo In History Is Given By Hub Symphony

BOSTON, Oct. 21 (AP)—For the first time in the 58-year history of the Boston Symphony orchestra a saxophonist appeared as soloist yesterday. The soloist is Sigurd Rascher of Copenhagen, who played two symphonic works. Director Serge Koussevitzky engaged Rascher last spring, he said, after an audition convinced him the saxophonist was a true virtuoso.

THIS CLIPPING FROM WESTERLY, R. I.
SUN
OCT 23 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSFIELD, MASS.
EAGLE
OCT 21 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ST. ALBANS, VT.
MESSENGER
OCT 21 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
EVENING UNION
OCT 21 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
N. ADAMS, MASS.
TRANSCRIPT
OCT 21 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER
OCT 21 1939

6

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

OCT 23 1939

MUSIC

Works By Americans to Be Presented Here By Koussevitzky

Two works by Americans will appear on the program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Metropolitan Theatre tomorrow night. This is an unusual and gratifying change in the nature of the programs commonly presented here by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, showing something of the fondness for adventure that characterizes his work in presumably more open-minded communities.

Not that there is any wild and reckless evening threatening the local audience, for Beethoven's familiar "Eroica" (once viewed with dismay) will be present to reassure those who fear the worst; and the American music itself is not horrifying to contemplate. One item is the string suite in E major, Op. 63, by the late Arthur Foote, of Boston. It consists of a prelude, pizzicato and adagietto, and fugue, after a conservative pattern. It was composed in 1907; at that time it had a different second movement, the present one having been written a year later.

The other American piece is "Skyscrapers, a Ballet of American Life," by the Chicago businessman, John Alden Carpenter. Here, indeed, is something of different flavor, although not by any means unfamiliar to many listeners. The ballet was produced in the Metropolitan Opera House on Feb. 19, 1926, and the music has been heard many times as an orchestral suite. The composer expresses, in hearty rhythms and engaging tunes, the work and play of American city life. A soprano and a tenor are added to the orchestral voices.

The six scenes of the ballet are: 1—Symbols of restlessness; 2—An abstraction of the Skyscraper; the work that produces it; the crowds passing it; 3—The transition from Work to Play; 4—Any amusement park of the Coney Island type, and its varied, restless activities; a "flashback" to the idea of work, and back again to play; 5—The return from Play to Work; 6—Skyscrapers.

The "Eroica" seems to be enjoying a fair success, even at the age of more than a century. It was played here last year by Toscanini and will be played by him on the air again this week, besides being on the programs of the Boston and other orchestras this season. It is the third by Beethoven and is in E-flat. Originally, we are told, it was dedicated to Napoleon, but when the hero accepted a job as Emperor, the democratic Beethoven was so angry that he tore off the dedication. The title read, when it was published, "Heroic symphony, for the celebration of the memory of a great man."

Among other features, the symphony is very long, has an extraordinarily ponderous funeral march, and boasts a complicated final movement of curious form. It is generally considered one of the mightiest of all musical creations.

G. Y. L.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

OCT 23 1939

MUCK, 80, AWARDED PLAQUE BY HITLER

Conductor Gets German Eagle for Cultural Attainments

BERLIN, Oct. 23 (AP).—Karl Muck, for more than three decades an outstanding interpreter of German music, was awarded the Plaque of the German Eagle yesterday by Adolf Hitler on the occasion of Muck's eightieth birthday.

This is one of the highest honors accorded Germans for cultural services. Muck now lives in Stuttgart in retirement.

Muck was interned as an enemy alien in the United States in 1918. He was twice conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, from 1906 to 1908 and from 1912 to 1918. Anti-German sentiment in the United States made him the target for many bitter attacks, especially when he conducted the Boston symphony concerts in Carnegie Hall, New York.

Muck's last noteworthy public appearance was at the Wagner memorial exercises in Leipzig in the spring of 1933 in the presence of Hitler.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CAPE GIRARDEAU, MO.
Southeast Missourian

OCT 24 1939

Famed Organist to Give Concert Here

Porter Heaps, internationally famed organist, will be heard in a recital Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock at the First Baptist Church. He is now making his second transcontinental tour of the principal music centers of the United States and Canada and his Cape Girardeau appearance will be one of the important musical events of the year. The recital will be complimentary, and the public is invited to attend.

In his appearances with the Symphony Orchestras of Boston, Detroit and Chicago, as well as in literally hundreds of recitals, music critics have been moved to use extravagant terms in characterizing his performances.

THIS CLIPPING FROM WAKEFIELD, MASS.
ITEM

OCT 24 1939

H. S. Happenings

By KENDALL DOLBEARE

Fire Drill Notice

Principal Peterson has sent a notice to the pupils that when the fire bell rings all pupils should move along as rapidly as possible and stop talking and laughing on the stairs and in the hallways. This is in the hope that the students will take the practice drill more seriously.

Goal Posts Over

Several school authorities are trying to find the group that gently lifted the Wakefield goal posts out of their respective settings. It is generally thought that the Watertown victors were displaying their lifting power by uprooting the posts. However, no other severe damage was done to Walton Field or the school property.

Boys' Glee Club

Members of the High School Boys' Glee Club are now preparing to donate to the "Y" the customary $5, because the club uses the building during the school months without paying a rental fee. Richard Sheaff is the acting treasurer of the club.

Symphony Tickets

Members of either boys' or girls' clubs will have the unusual privilege this year of being present at the six concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Boston in the coming months. Miss Vivian Dix, music supervisor, has several tickets which she has reserved for the interested members.

School Paper Named

The recently-elected staff of the new school publication has chosen the name "Lookout." The first publication is due within a few days.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

OCT 25 1939

Who's News Today

Hitler Award to Muck Recalls Musician's World War Internment

By LEMUEL F. PARTON.

After Beethoven had dedicated his heroic symphony to a leader of the people, he tore the dedication in two. He had learned that the leader had proclaimed himself Emperor. Dr. Karl Muck, before he was driven from leadership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and interned as a dangerous enemy alien, had invoked "the great idea of democracy and freedom for all the people" as the spirit of American music of the future. But, returning to Germany, he placed his talent at the disposal of Adolf Hitler, and, at the celebration of his eightieth birthday, accepts from Hitler the award of the German Eagle, one of the highest honors of the Reich.

Dr. Muck has been an invalid since 1934, able to stand only with great difficulty. His infirmity is said to be caused by nicotine poisoning, due to his smoking daily an average of 100 cigarettes of an unusually strong blend of tobacco. His last imperious flourish of his baton was in February, 1933, at the fiftieth anniversary of Wagner's death. He has been living quietly at his old home, in Stuttgart, deeply immersed in Oriental philosophy, which has been his lifetime interest.

When in world war days, charges were made that Dr. Muck had refused to play the "Star-Spangled Banner," there was a surge of bitter animosity against him, but he found many defenders, among them Major Henry L. Higginson, founder and patron of the orchestra. It was clearly evident, though, that Dr. Muck had been tactless and the storm grew in intensity. Many distinguished clerics fanned its fury, among them Bishop William T. Manning.

It was an untoward incident that sent him to Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., for internment. A brief statement from the Department of Justice announced that a letter from Dr. Muck to a young woman of Boston had been intercepted and that justified his internment.

With nothing more to go on sensational newspapers flailed this into long and lurid narratives of the love-life of the austere Dr. Muck. He did not answer, and the name of the young woman was never published. She had been identified as of the Back Bay social caste. Looking back over the files, this reporter finds countless yellowing pages of bilge and intemperate ravings about Dr. Muck—a clinical showing of the emotional distortion of war days.

Dr. Muck, Germany's great conservator of the Wagner tradition, conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1906 to 1908 and from 1912 to 1918. He was born at Wuerzberg, a child prodigy, making his debut at the age of 11 and taking his diploma at Heidelberg at 16.

Writers, more than all others, seem to be infuriated by Col. Lindbergh's radio addresses. The latest to swing the spiked fountain pen or nightstick is W. H. Shepardson, author of a year book on "The United States and World Affairs," covering the years from 1933 on. He characterizes the Colonel's speeches as "arrogant, irresponsible words."

Mr. Shepardson, director and treasurer of the Council of Foreign Relations, was a Rhodes scholar at Oxford, after his graduation from Colgate University in 1910, and was assistant to Col. Edward M. House at the 1919 peace conference. His various books have been informed, cogent and plausible statements of the British case, and his discernment seems to have reached far ahead of that of the British foreign office. In his book of 1937, charting the trend of 1936, he showed that he knew Herr Schickelgrueber's real name and intent.

He is a New York business man, in a valve-making company, and interested in Central American railways. Holding a Harvard law degree, he was an assistant in the United States Shipping Board in the world war.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

OCT 25 1939

Music

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Under Dr. Koussevitzky, in First of Five Scheduled Providence Concerts, Presents One of Most Interesting Programs Heard in a Long Time

By G. Y. Loveridge

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, long may he wave, brought some American music to his Providence public last night in Metropolitan Theatre. It was the first of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's five concerts for this season, and was one of the most interesting we have heard in a long time, presenting, as it did, something different from the customary pronouncements of the long-reigning gods.

The American team, Foote and Carpenter, had to play against Beethoven, which is a major contest for anybody. If they didn't precisely win, they nevertheless showed that this time and this country have skillful contenders in the field, and foreshadowed greater things. Neither the Foote suite nor the Carpenter suite is new, the former being more than 30 and the latter more than 13 years of age, which disqualifies them as examples of current writing but also indicates that they have some staying power.

The suite in E major, Op. 63, by New Englander Arthur Foote, is workmanlike and engaging music. Given the benefit of the magnificent Boston Symphony strings, it holds the attention charmingly and is an agreeable introduction to weightier matters. Since the strings are one of the chief splendors of the Boston orchestra and the suite is not difficult to follow, the choice would seem to support Dr. Koussevitzky's reputation for shrewd program making.

In "Skyscrapers," John Alden Carpenter speaks for himself and for certain phases of American life in vigorous and boisterous fashion. If it seems noisy, it is expert noise and for a purpose, and if it seems crude and blatant, so is much of what it purports to depict. Mr. Carpenter feels cramped in the limits of the pre-jazz symphony orchestra and brings to his work banjo, saxaphones and percussive pianos, besides all available brass. He is discordant and he is brutal, but he does convey the splendid vigor of the American people, as well as intimate that a good deal of that vigor is misdirected or purposeless.

Through this ingenious and complicated score, Dr. Koussevitzky led the way with enthusiasm, stirring the orchestra to brilliant efforts. Unquestionably there were listeners who didn't like this music, but we are certain that nobody paid it the peculiar tribute (often accorded the works of the old masters) of sleeping through it. Conductor, orchestra and the two soloists—Dorothy Maynor, soprano, and Leonard Franklin, tenor—were applauded long and sincerely.

After intermission, the Beethoven "Eroica" was performed with thrilling virtuosity and deep emotional fervor. The orchestra gave the two sudden opening chords such athletic impetus that the effect was like that produced by a boxer leaping from his corner, and throughout the first movement and the third and fourth the impression of life and energy guided to an aesthetic goal, controlled by an imperious imagination provided excitement of the rarest kind. The orchestra, in transparency of tone and in beauty of tonal coloring, was at its best. Even the second movement, a beautful, but far too long, detour to the graveyard, was more supportable than usual.

A fine outburst of applause rewarded the extraordinary performance.

The program contained an "urgent request" that nobody smoke at the rear of the auditorium. Let it be said, to the credit of the audience, that there was very little more smoking than usual.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

OCT 25 1939

Music and Musicians

Classics and moderns make up the program for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Friday afternoon and Saturday evening at Symphony Hall in Boston.

The program will open with the Sibelius tone poem, "Tapiola," followed by Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Dubinushka" and "The Battle of Kerjenetz." Roy Harris' Symphony No. 3 in one movement will close the first half and the rest of the program will be devoted to Schumann's Symphony No. 1 in B flat, Op. 38.

* * *

Also announced is the program for the opening Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon series of the orchestra. The music to be played will consist of Arthur Foote's Suite in E major for String Orchestra, Op. 63; Debussy's "La Mer" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 3 in E flat major (Eroica), Op. 55.

66

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

OCT 25 1939

MUSIC

Dr. Koussevitzky Supports Reputation for Shrewd Program Making in First of Five Concerts Given by Boston Symphony Orchestra

By G. Y. Loveridge

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, long may he wave, brought some American music to his Providence public last night in Metropolitan Theatre. It was the first of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's five concerts for this season, and was one of the most interesting we have heard in a long time, presenting, as it did, something different from the customary pronouncements of the long-reigning gods.

The American team, Foote and Carpenter, had to play against Beethoven, which is a major contest for anybody. If they didn't precisely win, they nevertheless showed that this time and this country have skillful contenders in the field, and foreshadowed greater things. Neither the Foote suite nor the Carpenter suite is new, the former being more than 30 and the latter more than 13 years of age, which disqualifies them as examples of current writing but also indicates that they have some staying power.

The suite in E major, Op. 63, by New Englander Arthur Foote, is workmanlike and engaging music. Given the benefit of the magnificent Boston Symphony strings, it holds the attention charmingly and is an agreeable introduction to weightier matters. Since the strings are one of the chief splendors of the Boston orchestra and the suite is not difficult to follow, the choice would seem to support Dr. Koussevitzky's reputation for shrewd program making.

In "Skyscrapers," John Alden Carpenter speaks for himself and for certain phases of American life in vigorous and boisterous fashion. If it seems noisy, it is expert noise and for a purpose, and if it seems crude and blatant, so is much of what it purports to depict. Mr. Carpenter feels cramped in the limits of the pre-jazz symphony orchestra and brings to his work banjo, saxaphones and percussive pianos, besides all available brass. He is discordant and he is brutal, but he does convey the splendid vigor of the American people, as well as intimate that a good deal of that vigor is misdirected or purposeless.

Through this ingenious and complicated score, Dr. Koussevitzky led the way with enthusiasm, stirring the orchestra to brilliant efforts. Unquestionably there were listeners who didn't like this music, but we are certain that nobody paid it the peculiar tribute (often accorded the works of the old masters) of sleeping through it. Conductor, orchestra and the two soloists—Dorothy Maynor, soprano, and Leonard Franklin, tenor—were applauded long and sincerely.

After intermission, the Beethoven "Eroica" was performed with thrilling virtuosity and deep emotional fervor. The orchestra gave the two sudden opening chords such athletic impetus that the effect was like that produced by a boxer leaping from his corner, and throughout the first movement and the third and fourth the impression of life and energy guided to an aesthetic goal, controlled by an imperious imagination. provided excitement of the rarest kind. The orchestra, in transparency of tone and in beauty of tonal coloring, was at its best. Even the second movement, a beautful, but far too long, detour to the graveyard, was more supportable than usual.

A fine outburst of applause rewarded the extraordinary performance.

The program contained an "urgent request" that nobody smoke at the rear of the auditorium. Let it be said, to the credit of the audience, that there was very little more smoking than usual.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

OCT 25 1939

The Boston Symphony Orchestra hit a double note last night when it opened its Providence season and also marked the curtain time for the city's winter social season. The jam at the Metropolitan Theatre indicated that the season is off to a brilliant start with lovers of music and lovers of social functions filling the theatre to capacity.

As always, an inventory of the throng gave a pre-vue of what Providence society will favor in the realm of fashions for the winter. The older women showed a prediliction for full evening regalia with sumptious furs, while many of the younger women and girls went nonchalant in tweeds and gadgetry. Conspicuously absent were the minks of former seasons, while many fashionable women seemed to prefer to snuggle into chubby jackets of long-haired furs.

Beautiful Furs Seen

Two who chose beautiful furs were Mrs. Samuel M. Nicholson, who wore an intricately worked silver fox coat, and her sister, Mrs. Henry S. Lanpher, whose black velvet wrap was collared in white fox. Mrs. Arthur M. Allen topped her deep green gown with a feathery brown fur jacket. Mrs. Clarke F. Freeman's black wrap was accented with a white fur collar.

Mrs. Frank L. Hinckley wore a moleskin jacket over her black gown, which was gayly dotted in red and white. Mrs. Frederick S. Peck and Mrs. Colt Anthony, who were noted together, were both dressed in black. Mrs. Anthony wore a very long black fur wrap over her gown and had a corsage of orchids.

Mrs. Howard Huntoon, who arrived with her husband, complemented her blonde hair with an all-black ensemble, complete from her black gown and fox jacket to the tiny black velvet bow in her hair. Black was also chosen for her gown and velvet wrap by Mrs. Lawrence Lanpher, who attended the concert with Mr. Lanpher.

Young Set Arrives

The White sisters, Miss Elizabeth G. and Miss Kate M. White, were similarly dressed in long black velvet cloaks collared in deep rose velvet. A chic black tweed wrap was chosen by Miss Carol Metcalf, while Miss Mary Louise Bartlett was noted in a swirling black military cape. Miss Dimity Davis, another member of the younger set, was chic in gray kidskin.

During the intermission, many of the audience gathered in the lobby for a quick cigarette and chat. In one group were Mr. and Mrs. Louis M. Ream and Dr. Reuben C. Bates. Mrs. Ream had doffed her white fox-trimmed wrap to reveal a black crepe gown trimmed with scroll-work of gold kid.

Another small group was composed of Mrs. Robert H. Whitmarsh, her daughter, Miss Marjorie Anne Whitmarsh, and Mr. J. D. E. Jones. Mrs. Whitmarsh was attired in a gown of brown crepe ornamented with brown beads, and her daughter wore a smart shirt-waist evening frock combining a pleated black skirt and light blue satin blouse.

Mrs. J. Coles Hegeman, who chatted with Dr. Eric Stone, was up to the minute in her perriwinkle colored frock which she topped with a white evening sweater-jacket studded with gold and silver sequins.

Wears Sports Tweed

A very short black velvet quilted bolero was worn by Miss Doris Briggs with her satin gown of vintage shade. Miss Janet Chace Williams, who was escorted by a Brown student, Mr. Richard Bates, of Salem, Mass., was one of the many younger women who selected a sports tweed coat for the concert.

Among others noted were Mrs. Albert H. Miller, whose black gown was topped with a long black sealskin wrap; Mrs. Rufus C. Fuller, Jr., who was gowned in black taffeta; Mrs. W. Ray Lucas, who was accompanied by her debutante daughter, Miss Helen C. F. Lucas; Mrs. Byron A. Pierce, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson G. Wing and their debutante daughter, Miss Sally Ann Wing; Mrs. I. Harris Metcalf; Mrs. Edward L. Johnson and Miss Loraine Johnson; Mrs. Alexander R. Fritz; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hale Goss; Dr. and Mrs. Ernest A. Charbonnel; Mrs. George Hail, Mr. and Mrs. John B. Archer, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Clarke, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest E. Chase and Miss Ruth Tripp.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PITTSBURGH, PA.
POST-GAZETTE

OCT 25 1939

Conduct Visiting Orchestras

SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

JOHN BARBIROLLI

The Philadelphia, Boston and New York Philharmonic or chestra will perform in Pittsburgh this season under sponsorshi of the Pittsburgh Orchestra Association, managed by May Beegle The Philadelphia Orchestra, conducted by Eugene Ormandy, wil open the season November 4 and close it May 4. Dr. Koussevitzky will bring the Boston Orchestra here for two concerts December 16 and 17 and John Barbirolli will conduct the Philharmonic in a single performance November 23.

SOCIETY ATTENDS OPENING CONCERT

Providence Journal

Preview of Winter Fashions Noted as Boston Symphony Plays at Metropolitan.

BRILLIANT SEASON SEEN

Oct 25

Older Women Wear Sumptious Furs While Younger Set Favors Nonchalant Garb

The Boston Symphony Orchestra hit a double note last night when it opened its Providence season and also marked the curtain time for the city's winter social season. The jam at the Metropolitan Theatre indicated that the season is off to a brilliant start with lovers of music and lovers of social functions filling the theatre to capacity.

As always, an inventory of the throng gave a pre-vue of what Providence society will favor in the realm of fashions for the winter. The older women showed a prediliction for full evening regalia with sumptious furs, while many of the younger women and girls went nonchalant in tweeds and gadgetry. Conspicuously absent were the minks of former seasons, while many fashionable women seemed to prefer to snuggle into chubby jackets of long-haired furs.

Beautiful Furs Seen

Two who chose beautiful furs were Mrs. Samuel M. Nicholson, who wore an intricately worked silver fox coat, and her sister, Mrs. Henry S. Lanpher, whose black velvet wrap was collared in white fox. Mrs. Arthur M. Allen topped her deep green gown with a feathery brown fur jacket. Mrs. Clarke F. Freeman's black wrap was accented with a white fur collar.

Mrs. Frank L. Hinckley wore a moleskin jacket over her black gown, which was gayly dotted in red and white. Mrs. Frederick S. Peck and Mrs. Colt Anthony, who were noted together, were both dressed in black. Mrs. Anthony wore a very long black fur wrap over her gown and had a corsage of orchids.

Mrs. Howard Huntoon, who arrived with her husband, complemented her blonde hair with an all-black ensemble, complete from her black gown and fox jacket to the tiny black velvet bow in her hair. Black was also chosen for her gown and velvet wrap by Mrs. Lawrence Lanpher, who attended the concert with Mr. Lanpher.

Young Set Arrives

The White sisters, Miss Elizabeth G. and Miss Kate M. White, were similarly dressed in long black velvet cloaks collared in deep rose velvet. A chic black tweed wrap was chosen by Miss Carol Metcalf, while Miss Mary Louise Bartlett was noted in a swirling black military cape. Miss Dimity Davis, another member of the younger set, was chic in gray kidskin.

During the intermission, many of the audience gathered in the lobby for a quick cigarette and chat. In one group were Mr. and Mrs. Louis M. Ream and Dr. Reuben C. Bates. Mrs. Ream had doffed her white fox-trimmed wrap to reveal a black crepe gown trimmed with scroll-work of gold kid.

Another small group was composed of Mrs. Robert H. Whitmarsh, her daughter, Miss Marjorie Anne Whitmarsh, and Mr. J. D. E. Jones. Mrs. Whitmarsh was attired in a gown of brown crepe ornamented with brown beads, and her daughter wore a smart shirt-waist evening frock combining a pleated black skirt and light blue satin blouse.

Mrs. J. Coles Hegeman, who chatted with Dr. Eric Stone, was up to the minute in her perriwinkle colored frock which she topped with a white evening sweater-jacket studded with gold and silver sequins.

Wears Sports Tweed

A very short black velvet quilted bolero was worn by Miss Doris Briggs with her satin gown of vintage shade. Miss Janet Chace Williams, who was escorted by a Brown student, Mr. Richard Bates, of Salem, Mass., was one of the many younger women who selected a sports tweed coat for the concert.

Among others noted were Mrs. Albert H. Miller, whose black gown was topped with a long black sealskin wrap; Mrs. Rufus C. Fuller, Jr., who was gowned in black taffeta; Mrs. W. Ray Lucas, who was accompanied by her debutante daughter, Miss Helen C. F. Lucas; Mrs. Byron A. Pierce, Mr. and Mrs. Wilson G. Wing and their debutante daughter, Miss Sally Ann Wing; Mrs. I. Harris Metcalf; Mrs. Edward L. Johnson and Miss Loraine Johnson; Mrs. Alexander R. Fritz; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hale Goss; Dr. and Mrs. Ernest A. Charbonnel; Mrs. George Hail, Mr. and Mrs. John B. Archer, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas F. Clarke, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest E. Chase and Miss Ruth Tripp.

Schumann's

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

67

OCT 25 1939

Furs Come Out of Storage for Music Season Opening

The chubby jacket for evening wear is tops this year if a survey of the subscribers at the last night's concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is any criterion. Here are three of many women who chose the shorter wrap: left, Mrs. Arthur M. Allen, in brown marabou, arriving with her husband; right, Mrs. Wilson G. Wing, and her debutante daughter, Miss Sally Ann Wing.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

OCT 26 1939

THE SAX

Though it is nearly a hundred years since Adolphe Sax sat him down and devised the saxophone, the instrument is still an irregular member of classic society. Last week Dr. Koussevitzky got credit for the season's first novelty by sandwiching two saxophone solos into his symphony orchestra program.

The soloist, Sigurd Rascher, apparently did himself and his instrument proud and was warmly praised by the critics (the two we read) for his mellow tone and expert quaver. Yet it was plain to be seen that they regarded him as an interloper.

And we'd like to know why the sax has fallen into second rate company—dance orchestras and military bands. It has a beautiful voice, halfway between a horn and a reed. It can be as humorous as a bassoon and as melancholy as a 'cello. It is a very decent instrument, too, not at all bold or intrusive.

We've searched the music books to find out why it hasn't made good in high society, but nary a word can we find. And we'd appreciate very much a word from someone who knows why this lovely instrument has been consigned to jazz and squawk and clown and waste its sweetness on the midnight air.

CAMDEN, N. J.
COURIER

OCT 27 1939

M'DONALD WORKS LISTED BY BOSTON SYMPHONY

Two nocturnes for orchestra, entitled "San Juan Capistrano," by Harl McDonald, who combines the writing of music with the business management of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will be given the first performances anywhere by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Boston concerts of October 30 and 31.

The work, completed late in 1938, has two sections, "The Mission" and "Fiesta." Geographical suggestion for the music came from the quasi-medieval town of Capistrano in southern California on the Mexican border, where for three hundred years a mission has dominated the life of the people. The first of the two pieces described a solemn procession, during which an ecclesiastical tune is intoned amid the ringing of the mission bells. The second accompanies a festival in the mission square, and introduces a Spanish-Colonial "Jota" and a "Danza Dueto" in Habanero tempo.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NASHVILLE, TENN.
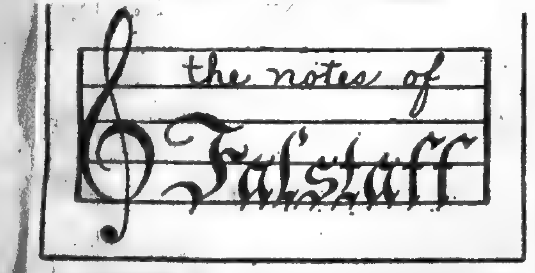
TIMES

OCT 25 1939



"Music is the recovered word of true feeling, liberated from the banality, hypocrisy and cruelty of life. Music is to help the soul of men. It is the pure language, regenerating, like mountain air."

—Serge Koussevitzky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
NEWS

OCT 27 1939

* * *

The centenarian saxophone made its solo debut this past week with the 58-year-old Boston Symphony orchestra. Sigurd Rascher of Copenhagen, former dance band man, offered Debussy's "Rhapsody for Orchestra and Saxophone" and Jacques Ibert's "Chamber Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra." The holograph sketch of the first is now owned by the New England Conservatory. The second was written for Rascher.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

OCT 28 1939

Boston Symphony to Play McDonald Works

Two nocturnes for orchestras, entitled "San Juan Capistrano—the Mission and Fiesta," will be given their first performances anywhere by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the concerts of October 30 and 31 in Boston.

C.S.M. Oct 26 1939

Music Notes

Emanuel Feuermann, cellist, will make his first appearance as soloist with the Boston Symphony at the next regular pair of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Nov. 3 and 4. Mr. Feuermann will be heard in the D major Concerto of Haydn for this instrument. Howard Hanson has been invited to conduct, as guest, the first concert performance of the Third Symphony. Richard Burgin will conduct the other numbers at this pair of concerts. He will open the program with "Pinocchio, A Merry Overture," by Ernst Toch. The concluding number will be Richard Strauss' "Don Juan."

♪ ♪ ♪

Monday-Tuesday Symphony

Monday evening at 8:15, and Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will open the series of six Monday and six Tuesday concerts in Symphony Hall. The program will open with two Nocturnes by Harl McDonald, entitled "San Juan Capistrano," which are dedicated to Dr. Koussevitzky, and are to have their first performance. Debussy's "The Sea," three symphonic sketches, will also be played, and in the second half, the Third Symphony of Beethoven, the "Eroica." Harl McDonald, manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, has based his Nocturnes on sights and sounds of the little mission community of Capistrano, which lies near the Mexican border in California. The first is entitled "The Mission," and the second "The Fiesta."

Emanuel Feuermann
Promised as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra next week.

68

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1939

Schumann's First Symphony Is Given Brilliant Performance

CLIPPING FROM IDENCE, R. I.
ULLETIN

CT 26 1939

THE SAX

is nearly a hundred Adolphe Sax sat him
evised the saxophone,
ent is still an irregular classic society. Last Koussevitzky got credit son's first novelty by two saxophone solos
mphony orchestra pro-

st, Sigurd Rascher, ap-id himself and his in-proud and was warmly
the critics (the two we his mellow tone and ex-
er. Yet it was plain to at they regarded him as per.

'd like to know why the allen into second rate
—dance orchestras and bands. It has a beautiful way between a horn and can be as humorous as and as melancholy as a s a very decent instru-
not at all bold or in-arched the music books

why it hasn't made good
ciety, but nary a word
. And we'd appreciate a word from someone why this lovely instru-
been consigned to jazz and clown and waste
on the midnight air.

DEN, N. J.
URIER

T 27 1939

LD WORKS LISTED
STON SYMPHONY

urnes for orchestra, en-
Juan Capistrano," by nald, who combines the music with the business
t of the Philadelphia will be given the first es anywhere by Serge
y and the Boston Symestra at the Boston
October 30 and 31.
k, completed late in wo sections, "The Mis-
"Fiesta." Geographical for the music came quasi-medieval town of in southern California
xican border, where for red years a mission has the life of the people.
of the two pieces desolemn procession, dur-
an ecclesiastical tune is nid the ringing of the ells. The second aca festival in the mission
d introduces a Spanish-
'Jota" and a "Danza
Habanero tempo.

week.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN

OCT 28 1939

CASTELNUEVO-TEDESCO TO MAKE HIS DEBUT

Italian Composer-Pianist to Be Philharmonic Soloist — Lhevinnes Play Again

Tomorrow afternoon at Carnegie Hall, Josef and Rosina Lhevinne will again be soloists with the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra in the Mozart Concerto for Two Pianos in F major (K. 242), a work in hwich they were heard at the Thursday-Friday pair of concerts. Mr. Barbirolli will open the program with Henry Gilbert's Comedy Overtures on Negro Themes. The second half will be devoted to two Preludes to Verdi's "Traviata" and Debussy's "La Mer."

On Tuesday evening the orchestra plays in Hartford's Bushnell Memorial Auditorium and on Wednesday evening in Boston's Symphony Hall. Mrs. Barbirolli is expected to be present at the Boston concert, the first time she will have heard her husband conduct in this country. The former Evelyn Rothwell arrives in New York Wednesday morning on the S. S. Washington and will go directly to Boston.

The soloist on Thursday evening, Friday afternoon and next Sunday afternoon will be the eminent Florentine composer-pianist Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco who will make his American debut at these concerts in the world premiere of his own Piano Concerto No. 2. He will also be represented later in the program by his Overture to "Twelfth Night," played for the first time in this country. The program's introductory number, Edgar's Introduction and Allegro for Strings. (Quartet and Orchestra.) The concert will close with the Overture-Fantasy, "Romeo and Juliet," of Tchaikovsky.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

OCT 28 1939

Short Series of Boston Symphony Opens Oct. 30

The Boston Symphony Orchestra belongs to all New England—for its pleasure to take and its support to give. The Monday evening—Tuesday afternoon concerts have been arranged for just this give and take. There are six of each series throughout the season. In their modest compass, they epitomize the year's progress. When the extra short series started, the programs were cautiously classical. Now they offer perfected performances of works recently given in the regular Friday-Saturday concerts—many of composers new to Symphony Hall or the most recent production of contemporary American composers.

It happens that the opening pair this season have no novelties, but draw their material from works given in the last few weeks. For Monday evening, October 30 and Tuesday at 3 o'clock, Oct. 31, (the commuters' matinee widely subscribed by out-of-town music lovers). The program will be: Arthur Foote's Suite for Strings in E Major; Debussy's "La Mer," (third symphonic sketches) and Beethoven's Third Symphony (the "Eroica").

This first program in the short series has no soloist, but for later dates Webster Aitken and Simon Barer, pianists, and Albert Spalding, American violinist, have been engaged. The last pair will form part of a Tschaikowski festival.

In the music room of the New Bedford Free Public Library is the seating plan of Symphony Hall which may be consulted.

There were at least a dozen New Bedford subscribers to this extra set of Symphony concerts last season, and Symphony Hall lists a larger number from Fall River.

A. C. R.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY CONCERT

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The third regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Sibelius... "Tapiola," Tone Poem, Op. 112
Rimsky-Korsakov... "Dubinushka," Russian Folk Song, Op. 62
Rimsky-Korsakov.. "The Battle of Kerjenetz," from the opera, "The Invisible City of Kitej and the Virgin Fevronia"
Roy Harris ....Symphony No. 3
Schumann Symphony No. 1 in B flat major Op. 38

Yesterday's concert was remarkably interesting from the musical point of view and the most sucessful so far this season for sheer perfection of orchestral playing. It is probably fair to say that you would search the world in vain for any finer or more sympathetic performances of the Sibelius "Tapiola" and the Schumann First Symphony. The Friday audience was sufficiently stirred to remain applauding after the latter. and it was evident that Dr. Koussevitzky and the orchestra were not unaware of the triumphant result of their efforts.

The only doubt concerning the concert was the presence and position on the program of the two Rimsky-Korsakov pieces. They certainly do not amount to much musically, and they were oddly and rather disturbingly placed between two works requiring studious attention. As unabashed orchestral sound they have their merits; but surely these would have been more fittingly appreciated just before the intermission.

Sibelius's "Tapiola" is one of his most imaginative tone poems. Like all of them. it is essentially fairly simple in construction. Its demands on the listener are mainly to recognize and take delight in the mysterious and subtle effects in the orchestration to produce atmosphere. Sibelius has been astonishingly bold and original in "Tapiola." and the result is a work of weird beauty. It was superbly interpreted yesterday.

Roy Harris's 3rd Symphony—or symphonic piece, if you prefer—was played last season and again at the American concerts this month. though it probably has never been so splendidly projected as it was yesterday. Mr. Harris was in the audience and came on to the platform to receive the applause, which he definitely deserved.

Familiarity with this work increases respect and liking for it. Architecturally it is of a piece, with contrast in moods and in the use of the orchestra. On paper this would be clearer than it is to the ear. For example, the restatement of the first violin theme is not fully heard against the powerful rhythmic motif in the brass and percussion. And the fugue is much looser to the ear, doubtless, than it would be if you pursued it in the score. We have one reservation to make. namely that the synthetic tone of the vibraphone mars rather than aids the charm of the pastoral section. Otherwise it remains a most impressive piece of music.

The latest to subscribe to the critical notion that Schumann was no symphonist are the authors of Messrs. Simon and Schuster's popular compendium, "Men of Music." These two critics, Messrs. Brockway and Weinstock, mention the Rhenish Symphony—in point of fact the least of Schumann's works in this form—patronizingly, barely refer to the B flat and the great D minor and ignore the C major altogether. Would that they could have heard yesterday's performance of the B flat!

Schumann's symphonies merely require the sympathetic attention of a fine conductor to bring out their superlative merits of spontaneous ideas and novelty of form. Their much maligned heaviness of orchestration will be forgotten in an interpretation as intense as we heard yesterday. Their ocasional naivete is as nothing to what we put up with in Bruckner. It is greatly to Dr. Koussevitzky's credit that he has been so staunch and inspired a conductor of Schumann. He has done a real service to music in not allowing these symphonies to drop out of the repertoire.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week Richard Burgin will conduct Toch's "Pinocchio, a Merry Overture": Haydn's Cello Concerto, with Emanuel Feuermann as soloist; Strauss's "Don Juan." Also, Howard Hanson will lead the first performance of his Symphony No. 3.

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The last must be first in a review of the Boston Symphony concert yesterday afternoon. In this case the last was the B-flat or "Spring" Symphony by Robert Schumann, given a heavenly performance by Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky and the orchestra.

It may be that the "Spring" Symphony seems most treasurable when heard on a cold, rainy afternoon in October. Without going too deeply into that speculation, let it be emphasized that the vernal beauties of Schumann's music were captivatingly brought out, another example of the miracles wrought by the Boston Symphony's proverbial tone and finesse, and Dr. Koussevitzky's imagination.

Warmth, sunshine and high spirits are in the score to start with. Yet, by his meticulous treatment of fine details, his choice of just the right pace and dynamic shadings, the conductor intensifies without exaggeration the music. The old argument that Schumann was a clumsy greenhorn at orchestration seemed pretty flimsy as one listened to the mellow colors of his palette. True, there are measures when the notes are packed in solidly, but such are exceptional.

The "Spring" Symphony is not far from being a tone poem, though the composer observed the requirements of form enough to make it a symphony in the strict definition of the word. Form was, however, a minor consideration in the mind of Schumann the creator of tonal fantasies, whose genius found no hampering limitations in compositions of small dimensions.

The afternoon as a whole was one of superlative orchestral playing, especially by the strings. "Tapiola," that Nordic poem in sound by Jean Sibelius, is remarkably atmospheric. Yesterday it was more persuasive than ever. With Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Dubinushka" and "The Battle of Kerjenetz," an entr'acte from the opera "The Invisible City of Kitej," performance was much more important than the scores themselves. Each is a colorful trifle, the former a setting of a Russian revolutionary song of 1905, and each is more suited to the Pops than a symphonic program.

The Third Symphony of Roy Harris, that took up the space just before intermission, grows upon one after several hearings. The first of the five sections may prove to be among the finest pages in American composition, with its broad diatonic theme for the lower stringed instruments. Equally distinguished are the second section, and the powerful fifth of strong brass and drums.

One cannot escape the impression that the pastoral episode and the fugue are less original. These two sections go along mechanically, reflecting an intellectual process, as if they had been worked out from theoretical principles. And they are definitely dry.

The Third Symphony proves that as an orchestrator Mr. Harris has developed markedly. The thick sonoroities of his First Symphony are no more; in their place are instrumental combinations firm but clear. If the work can be given a sort of mental cataloging, it is another, and significant, advance to symphonic mastery. Mr. Harris has been much debated. He continues to be an important figure in American music of today. Bowing from the stage after his work had been played, he was cordially applauded. The program will be heard again tonight.—C.W.D.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE

OCT 29 1939

Boston Symphony

Novelties and unusual features to grace the programs of the Boston Symphony orchestra during the 1939-'40 season are slowly but surely being announced. These items will be Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian," Mahler's "Das Lied von der Erde," Stravinsky's new symphony in C major and the same composer's "Œdipus Rex," a concert version of Tschaikowsky's opera "Pique Dame" [honoring the centenary of his birth], and Bach's B minor mass. Attention will be given to new works by American composers. As to standard music, the compositions of Mozart and Bach will be featured more extensively than usual.

HARRIS' WORK BY SYMPHONY

Schumann's First Given Felicitous Reading

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Was it in deference to the present situation in the Baltic that Dr. Koussevitzky, in making the programme of yesterday's Symphony concert, placed in juxtaposition Sibelius' "Tapiola" and Rimsky-Korsakov's "Dubinushka?" Anyway, there they were, the tonal glorification of Finland's forests and the orchestral fantasy on a Russian revolutionary song.

And while in search for motives, which probably never existed, it might be suggested that the conductor built the first part of the programme to flatter Roy Harris, whose Third Symphony came to its third Symphony Hall performance in less than a year. Certainly, after the inherent musical emptiness of "Tapiola" (hardly more than highly imaginative picture music) and of the "Dubinushka" and a second Rimsky-Korsakov trifle, "The Battle of Kerjenetz," from "The Invisible City of Kitej," Mr. Harris' symphony offered a soul satisfying experience.

Here, at last, was music that was trying only to be music, and full of melodic inventiveness, besides. If only Mr. Harris had ended as well as he began. There are arresting and moving pages in the first three sections of his work. But the final fugue, which should crown the whole, seems a bit forced; while the very end is a mere assault upon the eardrums, as though Mr. Harris were trying to beat down the listener's resistance, to stun him into acceptance of his tonal doctrines.

Once more, Mr. Harris was on hand to hear what seems to be his most promising score to date. Once more the audience received him cordially and Dr. Koussevitzky beamed his approval.

To return to Dr. Koussevitzky and his programmatic plots, it was clearly his intention to give his audience, in conclusion, a feast of pure, joyous music, and he chose for the purpose Schumann's First Symphony, the most wholly spontaneous and ebullient of its kind. In view of the charm of this music and of Dr. Koussevitzky's singularly felicitous way with it, it is ungrateful to suggest that repetitions of both the Second and Third Schumann Symphonies are long overdue. The First and the Fourth have enjoyed a preference on the conductor's part, perhaps wholly deserved.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CHICAGO, ILL.
NEWS

OCT 28 1939

Northwestern

NEXT Tuesday evening at the Auditorium Theater there will begin another chapter in the story of one of Chicago's most remarkable music enterprises.

In 1935 Chicago received word of an "innovation in adult education" when the first plans for a university course in "the history and enjoyment of music" were outlined. The dean of the university college of Northwestern University, Samuel N. Stevens, had completed arrangements with the Auditorium Theater whereby on certain evenings that fall and winter this hall would become a university college classroom. The scheme offered to students of the university and the general public alike an opportunity to attend a class in music appreciation taught by the world's outstanding concert artists.

Fifteen hundred persons subscribed for the first series of concerts and lectures. Next Tuesday evening, when Eugene Ormandy conducts the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra as the inaugural event of the fifth consecutive "History and Enjoyment of Music" series in this same Auditorium, there will be an attendance of 3,300 season subscribers—plus several hundred single ticket purchasers who are lucky enough to get the few single seats, specially held out and remaining for each event.

Following the Philadelphia Symphony, the course this year includes the Littlefield ballet, Jascha Heifetz, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Rachmaninoff, Marian Anderson, the Platoff Don Cossack Choir and Helen Jepson.

69

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

OCT 29 1939

LEADER AND PLAYERS

Relationship Between Conductor and Orchestra Depends on Who Dominates

By OLIN DOWNES

OSCAR LEVANT'S article "Music in Aspic," in the October, Harper's, has occasioned considerable discussion and may even have aroused resentment in some quarters. It is more than the amusing commentary of a man who knows exactly what he is talking about. It is the blunt and at the same time highly entertaining description of the conductor's relations with the orchestra, and an orchestra's relations with the conductor, and the effect of their relations upon the performance. It is "essentially a question of domination." Can the leader dominate the orchestra? Will the orchestra dominate the leader?

Mr. Levant does not mince words or neglect to call names in his analysis of this situation which bears so directly upon symphonic interpretation. He observes that a symphony orchestra can do more to break a conductor than to make him. He comments upon the fact that the average orchestral player goes as far with the conductor as is necessary—as, in a word, he is compelled or induced to go—and no farther. The fight for power begins with the first rehearsal, and it is often settled on the spot. Mr. Levant remarks that, as a matter of fact, there are only three conductors in America today who can control a performance so as to make ninety or a hundred players "not merely a cohesive group, but the single-minded extension of one personality." These three are Koussevitzky, Stokowski and Toscanini.

* * *

The customary attitude of an orchestra toward any new conductor, says Mr. Levant, who minces no adjectives, "may be epitomized as 'a hundred men and a louse.'" He thereupon remarks that "one of the smuggest, most cohesive groups in American music, with the greatest threat of power, is the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra; and it is closely followed by the Philadelphia Orchestra." Further, and beyond question, is the remark that "the opinion of an orchestral musician about a conductor or a piece of new music is quite invalid. So many factors of self-interest are concerned that the purely musical values involved in the judgment of each are beyond the player's objective appraisal."

It is undoubtedly a concomitant and a prevailing curse of the virtuoso conductor system that there should be a contest for power which is not merely that generated by the operation of artistic elements. "I have found," says Mr. Levant, "in my varied experience as a conductor, a soloist with orchestra, and ordinary listener, that there is a general misuse of power all round, depending in whose hands it happens to repose in any given instance."

* * *

Nevertheless, a performance that lacks the presence of a leader whose authority is unquestioned and who is implicitly obeyed by the men cannot be a performance of the first rank or quality. In no field is the need of centralized authority so evident and so quickly proved. An orchestra, of course, may feel reason to revolt when an incompetent leader, through pull, intrigue, or whatever means, is at its head. Conductors can, and conductors have, abused their authority over the players. But an orchestra has never yet attained the highest rank which had at its head a man conspicuous principally for good nature. The man who builds the orchestra and secures the finest performance is the man who is feared as well as admired. When the iron hand, with or without the velvet glove, is relaxed, and discipline and artistic standards allowed to drop the smallest interval, the whole standard of the instrumental body deteriorates. Also, an orchestra is not a static body. It either improves or declines in its quality; it does not stand still; the ineluctable responsibility for the state of affairs is that of the leader.

* * *

The establishment of control by the conductor may come down, in the last analysis, to a very realistic basis. Has the conductor or has he not the right to hire and fire? If he is the official head of the body and the permanent leader, his position with the men is strong. If he is a guest leader of a week or two, or a longer section of the season, but not the man in permanent authority, he is in a difficult place. It is, of course, unfortunate that orchestral players as a class silently test out their conductor and take advantage of his weaknesses if he has them, but they seem to have in few instances the esprit de corps and the regard for their own tradition which would insure the conductor, whatever his standing, the privilege of their courtesy and their scrupulous cooperation. It should not be "Does this fellow, this chap now imposed upon us, deserve our best?" It should certainly be, "We are the members of the —— orchestra. We never are heard to play badly. An inferior leader may be temporarily with us. Noblesse oblige. We have to maintain our ideals and standards." It should be a point of observation with the public that no conductor can make the orchestra play badly; that any conductor who appears with that orchestra is almost safe from criticism because of the quality of the men under him. But that is seldom the case and very seldom the attitude of the player.

* * *

Mr. Levant cites the instance of the two weeks during which Stokowski, when Toscanini was the Philharmonic-Symphony leader, appeared as "guest" with that body. It was an experience which Stokowski is said to have described as "one of the unhappiest of my life." At that time, when the same management controlled both orchestras, there was an exchange of conductors between them. Stokowski came to the Philharmonic-Symphony, Toscanini went to Philadelphia for a fortnight. Those who were present at the Philharmonic-Symphony concerts, and this writer was one of them, remember clearly the extraordinary way in which the orchestra, to all appearance obeying, obstructed at every turn the conductor, and unbelievably misrepresented his purpose in the performance of Brahms's Fifth symphony. At that time the orchestra was for Toscanini, and it palpably refused Stokowski its cooperation.

Very possibly Mr. Stokowski had been none too tactful. He is said to have requested, at the first rehearsal, a "hundred per cent cooperation." A member of the orchestra is quoted as, "'Well, you know, after all—a hundred per cent cooperation . . .!' as though to say, who does he think he is, anyway."

Moreover, in all the great orchestras there are true artists, men never so small as to be guilty of conceit, much too intelligent to forget for a moment the smallness of their knowledge, who delight in contributing their all to the glory of their art and the body of players of which they are members.

All human and artistic elements are there in the orchestra. Its leadership is one of the greatest tests that a man or a musician can know. The task of the leader and master of his art is to merge not only the instruments but the men into a harmony of intention and a unity of action which alone can communicate the perfection of immortal music. In its highest estate, its most compelling manifestations, this is one of the hardest and proudest tasks that the world has ever set a great artist.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

OCT 29 1939

THE ORCHESTRAS

JOSEF AND ROSINA LHEVINNE will reappear as soloists with the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra this afternoon in Carnegie Hall, repeating Mozart's concerto in F major, for two pianos (K. 242). John Barbirolli will also conduct a repetition of Debussy's "La Mer," heard last Thursday and Friday. The program begins with the late Henry F. Gilbert's "Comedy Overture on Negro Themes," which has not been played here by one of the major orchestras for ten years, and the preludes to Acts I and IV of Verdi's "La Traviata."

Of the two works by Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco which will be played here for the first time in next Thursday's and Friday's concerts, the second piano concerto, with the composer as soloist, and the overture to "Twelfth Night," comment will be found in another column. The program, which will be repeated next Sunday afternoon, Nov. 5, also includes Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for strings, Op. 47, and Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet."

The orchestra will make its first New England appearances under Mr. Barbirolli's direction this week, playing in Hartford's Bushnell Memorial Hall and in Symphony Hall in Boston on Wednesday. Mrs. Barbirolli is expected to arrive next Wednesday morning on the Washington in time to attend the evening's concert in Boston.

Sigurd Rascher, saxophonist, who made his American debut with the Boston Symphony on Oct. 20 and 21, will be heard with the Philharmonic-Symphony on Saturday and Sunday, Nov. 11 and 12, playing Debussy's rhapsody for saxophone and orchestra in a new edition by Ernest Ansermet and the first New York performance of Jacques Ibert's saxophone concertino.

Arturo Toscanini will conduct the NBC Symphony Orchestra in its fourth broadcast of the season over the NBC blue network and the second program of his Beethoven series next Saturday night, Nov. 4, from 10 o'clock to 11:30, offering the second and fourth symphonies and the third "Leonore" overture.

Philadelphia and Boston

The Philadelphia Orchestra will give the second concert of its regular New York series in Carnegie Hall Tuesday night, Nov. 7, when Eugene Ormandy will conduct Beethoven's first symphony and Brahms's second symphony. Marcel Tabuteau, first oboist of the orchestra, will be the soloist in the first local performance of Leopold Stokowski's arrangement for small orchestra of Mozart's quartet in F (K.370) for oboe and strings. This was first performed in Philadelphia in 1920.

The manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, Harl McDonald, will be represented in Serge Koussevitzky's programs for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's home concerts tomorrow night and Tuesday afternoon by the first performances of his "San Juan Capistrano," a set of two nocturnes suggested by the mission town of this name in Southern California. The individual titles of the works are "The Mission" and "Fiesta."

In the next concerts of the Boston Symphony's principal subscription series in Symphony Hall, next Friday afternoon and Saturday night, Howard Hanson will conduct the first concert performance of his third symphony. This has been played in radio concerts of the Columbia Symphony Orchestra under Howard Barlow in September, 1937, and of the NBC Symphony under Dr. Hanson in March, 1938. Richard Burgin will conduct the other numbers, including the first performances in these concerts of Ernst Toch's "Pinocchio" overture, Haydn's cello concerto in D, with Emanuel Feuermann as soloist, and Strauss's "Don Juan."

The Hartford Symphony Orchestra began its second season under Leon Barzin's direction in the Bushnell Memorial Hall last Tuesday with Frank Sheridan as soloist in Beethoven's "Emperor" concerto. The second concert in the subscription series of five will be given Tuesday night, Nov. 14.

Washington Season Opens

The National Symphony Orchestra of Washington, D. C., opens its ninth season at Constitution Hall this afternoon with Moriz Rosenthal, noted seventy-six-year-old pianist, as soloist in Saint-Saens's G minor concerto. Hans Kindler will conduct the Washingtonian, and probably the American premiere of Haydn's forty-sixth symphony, in B flat, which he discovered in the British Museum last June. At the time, the Library of Congress lacked a copy of this work, but has since obtained a photostat of the original manuscript from the Esterhazy collection in Budapest. Another work new to this country will be the suite, "Uriel Acosta," written for Gutzkow's drama of this title by Karol Rathaus, a Polish composer who came to New York last year. The National Symphony is to play Mary Howe's "Castellana" for two pianos Tuesday in Baltimore and Wednesday, Nov. 8, in Washington with Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff as the soloists.

In the Central States

Artur Rodzinski will open the Cleveland Orchestra's program for next Thursday and Saturday nights with three works new to Cleveland, Walter Piston's concerto for orchestra, Haydn's 102nd Symphony, in B flat, and Strauss's "Symphonia Domestica." The Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra, under Karl Krueger, began its season last Thursday night. For 1939-'40, it has added a Friday matinee subscription series, and will continue to present Sunday popular concerts and a Young People's series.

The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra began its thirty-seventh season and its third under the regular conductorship of Dmitri Mitropoulos last Friday. The regular subscription series has been extended from sixteen to eighteen concerts. The announced novelties include Rachmaninoff's third symphony, Schumann's violin concerto, Dukas's "Le Peri," Berg's Lyric Suite, Florent Schmitt's "Tragedy of Salome," John Verall's first symphony, Reger's four tone poems after paintings by Arnold Böcklin, Robert Sanders's Little Symphony in G and Aaron Copland's "El Salon Mexico."

Eighteen pairs of Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts are announced by the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, which begins its sixtieth season this week.

Symphony to Have Four Concerts This Week

Herald Oct 29

Tomorrow evening at 8:15, and on Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will open the series of six Monday and six Tuesday concerts in Symphony Hall. The program will open with two nocturnes by Harl McDonald, entitled "San Juan Capistrano," which are dedicated to Dr. Koussevitzky, and are to have their first performance. Debussy's "The Sea," three symphonic sketches, will also be played, and in the second half the third symphony of Beethoven, the "Eroica."

Harl McDonald, a western composer who now lives in Philadelphia as manager of the Philadelphia Orchestra, has based his nocturnes on sights and sounds of the little mission community of Capistrano, which lies near the Mexican border in California. The first is entitled "The Mission," and the second "The Fiesta."

Emanuel Feuermann, the illustrious 'cellist, will make his first appearance as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the next regular pair of concerts in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Nov. 3 and 4. Mr. Feuermann will be heard in the familiar concerto of Haydn for this instrument.

Howard Hanson has been invited to conduct, as guest, the first concert performance of the third symphony which he has lately composed. (His second symphony was performed at the concerts of American Music by this orchestra on Oct. 4 last.) Richard Burgin will conduct the other numbers at this pair of concerts. He will open the program with "Pinocchio, a Merry Overture," by Ernest Toch. The concluding number will be Richard Strauss' tone poem "Don Juan."

DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS

OCT 29 1939

Prokoviev to Appear With Boston Symphony

NEW YORK, Oct. 28 (UP).—Serge Koussevitzky is in his sixteenth season as conductor of the Boston Symphony. Nicolai Malko, Russian conductor, and Tauno Hannikainen of Finland, are scheduled to conduct for a week each in midseason.

Soloists will include Josef Hofmann,

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

OCT 29 1939

The innocent and whole-souled zeal of the musical amateur manifests itself in a thousand charming forms. Here, for example, is the Prokofieff Society, a little group of zealots who are otherwise occupied as undergraduates or faculty members of Dartmouth College.

It was begun spontaneously by three students whose common love for music in general and for Prokofieff's in particular drew them together for frequent phonograph sessions. Some two years ago, the three charter members went to Boston to hear Prokofieff play with the Boston Symphony. They admit that they acted as "a small but enthusiastic claque"—unofficial, naturally. Naturally, also, they went backstage after the performance to vent their enthusiasm in a more direct and personal form; but especially—and this was perhaps the secret reason for their trip—to notify Mr. Prokofieff of the existence of the society. The composer, a modest man, responded politely with somewhat incredulous thanks, and the society left happily for the Hanover hills.

It was begun spontaneously by that the group ordered their own stationery, indicating their headquarters as old Bartlett Hall; and on this stationery they wrote to Prokofieff telling him of their plans and activities. This communication seems to have convinced the composer of the actuality and seriousness of the organization, for he wrote back at once recognizing the society as "a solid fact" and forwarding a gift of several autographed scores. A second visit to Boston and a testimonial dinner for the composer blessed the society with proper sentiment and ceremony.

Under the direction of Roland J. Leich, composer himself and faculty member of Dartmouth, the society is pursuing its larger aim of "the advancement of a knowledge and appreciation of music." Last season a student-faculty orchestra gave an all-Prokofieff program featuring "Peter and the Wolf," with Professor E. B. Watson of the English Department as narrator. The concert had to be repeated a few days later.

Today the society has won official recognition as a Dartmouth undergraduate body, has acquired an honorary committee of distinguished names, and is planning chamber music concerts, lectures and discussion groups, musical evenings at faculty homes and phonograph sessions. And now, "in accordance with a long-cherished plan," it hopes that Prokofieff will visit Hanover this year on his American tour.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TORONTO, CANADA
STAR

OCT 28 1939

"SAX" IN BOSTON SYMPHONY

Boston Symphony made its first bre[illegible] into saxophonia last week when Sigurd Rascher, sax-crooner from a band, made Koussevitzky dizzy by playing an octave above the usual and crossing fingers on the stops. Tom Brown of Toronto (Brown Bros., saxophonists) please note.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR,

OCTOBER 30, 1939

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

Rembrandt Studio

Harl McDonald

Whose two nocturnes, "San Juan Capistrano," will have their first performance at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall this evening, to be repeated tomorrow afternoon.

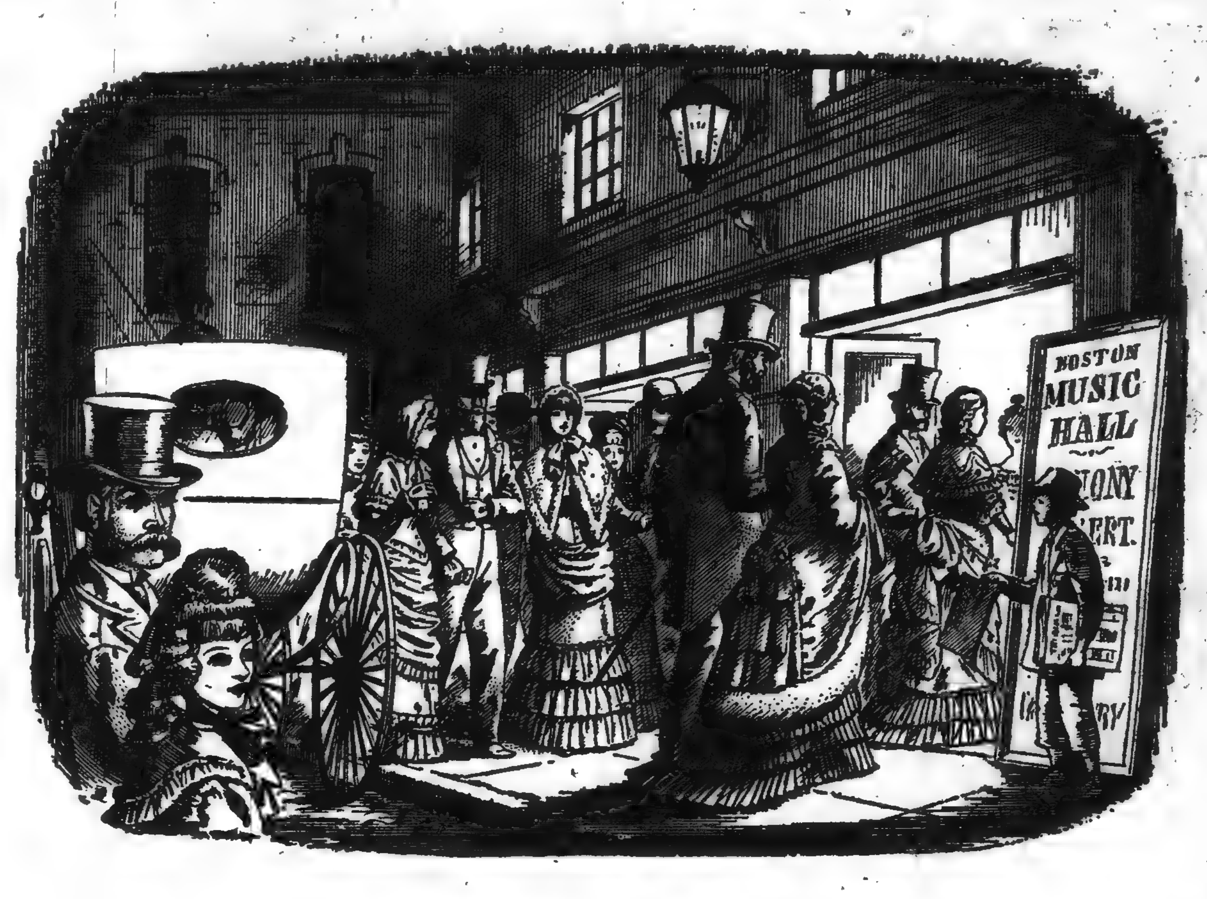
Symphony Repeats Program

All this does not mean that if we had the privilege of hearing Lotte Lehmann as often as we hear the Boston Symphony, we would not demand a judicious mixture on her programs of modern with the classical works.

The program of last Saturday's Boston Symphony concert (a repetition of Friday's program) was evidence of Koussevitzky's willingness and ability to satisfy such demands. Schuman's "Spring" Symphony, which closed the program, seemed to us, if anything, more rapturous, more spontaneous than in the Friday performance. Roy Harris's Third Symphony was much more enthusiastically received than on Friday and when the composer appeared on the stage to acknowledge applause there was something in the way of a major ovation for him.

The reason for this is difficult to put one's finger on. Perhaps Koussevitzky gave the Symphony a better performance Saturday evening, perhaps Saturday audiences are better disposed toward modern music. Perhaps evening audiences are keyed up to a more festive pitch. The fact is, however, that we ourselves enjoyed the work more than on Friday, and were more struck by its essentially melodic character.

Rimsky - Korsakoff's "Dubinushka" did not seem more noisy than on Friday, but Sibelius did seem more wildly dramatic. And that is saying a great deal.



★ 1881 ★

On Saturday, October 22nd, a queue formed early in the day outside the Music Hall, music lovers waiting to buy admission to the first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. By nightfall, narrow Music Hall Place, off Winter Street, and Hamilton Place were both thronged. And as concert time drew near, a never-ending procession of carriages turned slowly in from Tremont Street. It was indeed an auspicious beginning of a season during which more than 80,000 persons attended twenty concerts and twenty rehearsals.

IT was a different world in 1881 when Georg Henschel first raised his baton as conductor of the Symphony, a slower moving age, when life was simpler and the successful management of property a comparatively easy matter. People of means today are confronted with many perplexing problems of investment, taxes, bookkeeping and accounting which are making the personal supervision of their property increasingly difficult.

The selection of investments and all other matters pertaining to the management of property may be delegated to this Company under an Agency Account or a Trust.

Investment and Management of Property

Agent ★ Trustee ★ Guardian ★ Executor

OLD COLONY
TRUST COMPANY

17 COURT STREET, BOSTON

Member of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation

Allied with THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK of BOSTON

THIS CLIPPING FROM BROOKLINE, MASS.
CHRONICLE
10/26/39

Scores Of Local Children Apply For Concert Tickets

Applicants of tickets for the series of youth concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the auspices of the Youth Concerts Association of Boston include 132 pupils and teachers in the local public schools. The pupils are:

David Bloom, Shirley Applebaum, Jeanne Scheinfeldt, Florence Hoffman, Adele Saklad, Elinor Konowitz, Donald Gordan, Helen Ebell, Evelyn Bialer, Herbert Anker, Helen Talmanson, Miriam Shocket, Sheldon Konowitz, Lois Sterman, Lydia Sanderson, Ruth Hamburg, Robert Ehrmann, Priscilla Twiss, Robert Abrams, Louise Sternberg, Lee Pritzker, Ann Converse, Marcia Miller, Harriet Vitkin, Florence Cooper, Lucille Frank, Patricia Northridge, Zangwell Lasker, Carol Trockman, Zelda Cushner, Alan Tucker Tamara D'Luty, Selma Breger, Yvonne Heard, Judith Chernoff, Charlotte Shapiro, Phyllis Milgroom, Janice Berg, Roberta Rosenfield, Evelyn Kesell, Betty McLeary, Charles Waite, Robert McArthur, Nancy Gurvitz, Jerome Swartz, Roland Reed, Barbara Meisner, Michael Rudnick, Marcia Wolper, Ruth A. Meyers, Marvin Josolowitz, Adele Kellenberg, Karl Josolowitz, Joan Stern, Robert Lurie, Daniel Rubin, Ira Wein, Leonard Levine, Elizabeth Zulalian, Betty Sprague, Paul Dellamano, Rosalyn White, Beryl Mazer, Lorraine Solomon, Melvin Bergheim, Herbert Eisenberg, Murray Freeman, Eugene Kassman, Leon Groisser, Murray Levin, Lolii Stepanoff, Wendell Sykes, Albert Cline, Ruth Leavitt, Selma Crystal, Mary Cooper, Barbara Driscoll, Selma Slesinger, Lois Bronstein, Lila Kahn, Ruth Cline, Dorothy Goldstein, Jeanne Miller, Joan Strecker, Alice Kaman, Rena White, Lillian Cadiff, Marcia Goldman, Carol Silverstein, Martin Small, Barbara Ullian, David Hamburg, Ruth Bryant, Marshall Dana, Irwin Davlin, Jane Pinanski, Marcia Ravreby, Bernice Silin, Phyllis Silin, Fredric Hartstone, Jane Wiseman, Eunice Svetkey, Jean Ford.

Six concerts are planned with Wheeler Beckett conducting the orchestra, the first on Wednesday afternoon, November 8, at three-thirty o'clock. Edwin S. Webster of Brookline is a director of the sponsoring association, while Mrs. Halfdan Lee of this town is chairman of the advisory committee and local members of this are Mr. Lee, Mrs. John G. Palfrey, Mrs. Webster and Charles F. Weed. Residents on the sustaining members committee include Mrs. Henry N. Pratt, Miss Faith Harwood, Mrs. Reed Harwood, Mrs. George S. West and Mrs. E. Laurence Shaw, while Mrs. Paul White heads a committee of the wives of physicians of which Mrs. Kenneth Blackfan, Mrs. Edwin F. Cave and Mrs. Howard B. Sprague are members.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWOOD, MASS.
MESSENGER

OCT 27 1939

Sign for Concert Series

Many local residents are subscribing for the series of six commuters' concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be held ~~Tuesday~~ afternoons at 3 o'clock in Symphony Hall, Boston.

Among those who have already subscribed are:

Mrs. Charles Caverly, of 408 Prospect st., Norwood.

Mrs. Rebecca Birdsall, of 1 Woodley rd., Miss Mary Cole, of 17 Chestnut st., Mrs. Harold Cowen, of 12 Abbot rd., Mrs. R. M. Bailey jr., of Woodley rd., Miss Elizabeth N. Converse, of 66 Church st., Miss Mary Cormerais, of 22 Linden place, Mrs. Walter Dean, of 293 Walnut st., George W. Ellis, of 637 East st., and Mrs. Priscilla E. Barlow of 181 Cedar st., all of Dedham.

Miss Katherine Newell Adams, of 105 Plymton st., Walpole and Mrs. Charles Sumner Bird jr. and Miss Herbert L. Davis, of 24 Robbins rd. East Walpole.

The first concert will be held next Tuesday afternoon. The late start has made a special appeal to commuters, some of whom will travel as many as 100 miles to attend.

The full Symphony Orchestra of 110 musicians will play under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. This concert is a repeat of the regular Monday night concert.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

REPORTER

Foxboro, Mass.
10/28/39

To Hold Youth Concerts

The Youth Concerts which so delighted young people last season are to be given again this year in Symphony Hall, Boston, under the official title of "Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc. Youth Concerts." Wheeler Beckett will again conduct 70 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of six low-cost symphony concerts for young people of junior high or high school age. The dates are set for Wednesday afternoons at 3:30 o'clock, November 8th, December 6th, January 17th, February 7th, March 27th and April 10th or 24th.

Mrs Minot F. Inman has represented the Youth Concerts Association here and reports that thirty-nine Foxboro High School pupils have applied for series tickets so far this season.

Directors of the Youth Concerts Association are: Wheeler Beckett, Edwin S. Webster, Edward A. Taft, and Charles F. Hovey, Secretary-Treasurer.

Because admission prices are purposely kept low, communities which send pupils are organizing to help the Youth Concerts Association of Boston support these concerts. The committee in Foxboro is composed of Mrs Minot F. Inman, Mrs Harold Edgar Martin, and Mr Frederic W. Kempf, Supervisor of Music in the Foxboro Schools.

70

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR,

OCTOBER 30, 1939

Rembrandt Studio

Harl McDonald

Whose two nocturnes, "San Juan Capistrano," will have their first performance at the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall this evening, to be repeated tomorrow afternoon.

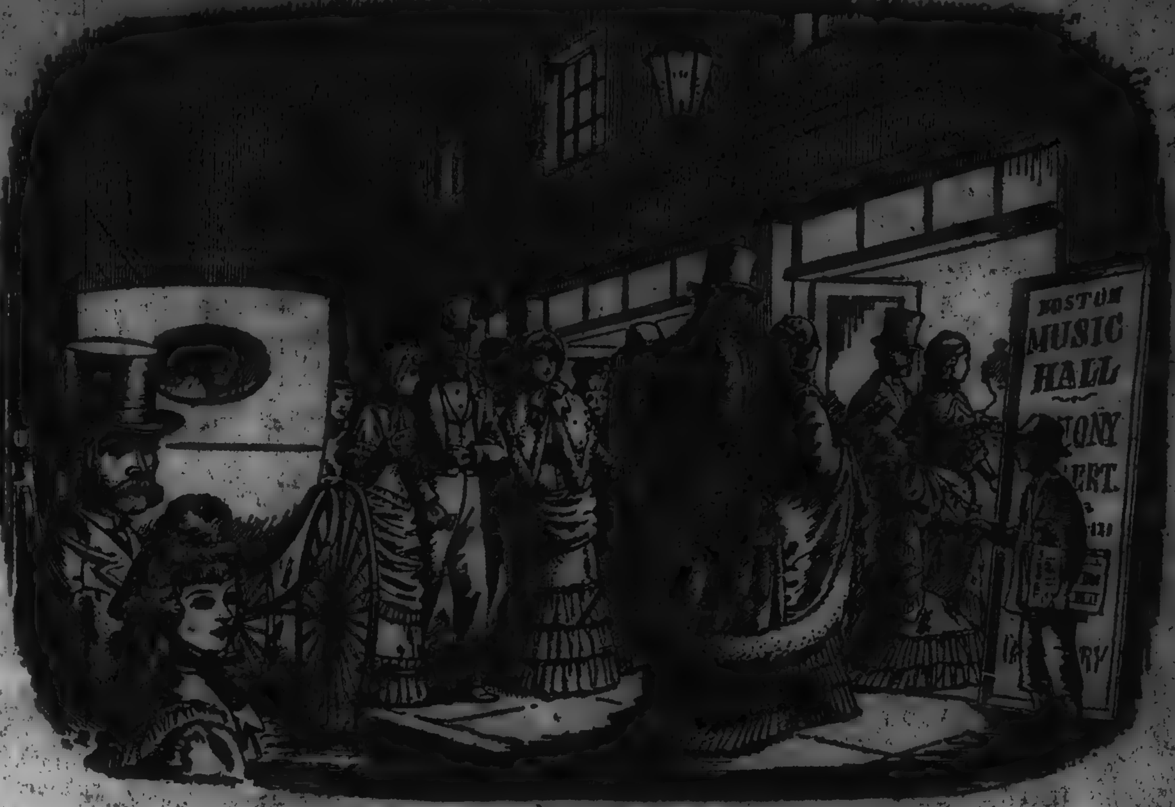
Symphony Repeats Program

All this does not mean that if we had the privilege of hearing Lotte Lehmann as often as we hear the Boston Symphony, we would not demand a judicious mixture on her programs of modern with the classical works.

The program of last Saturday's Boston Symphony concert (a repetition of Friday's program) was evidence of Koussevitzky's willingness and ability to satisfy such demands. Schuman's "Spring" Symphony, which closed the program, seemed to us, if anything, more rapturous, more spontaneous than in the Friday performance. Roy Harris's Third Symphony was much more enthusiastically received than on Friday and when the composer appeared on the stage to acknowledge applause there was something in the way of a major ovation for him.

The reason for this is difficult to put one's finger on. Perhaps Koussevitzky gave the Symphony a better performance Saturday evening, perhaps Saturday audiences are better disposed toward modern music. Perhaps evening audiences are keyed up to a more festive pitch. The fact is, however, that we ourselves enjoyed the work more than on Friday, and were more struck by its essentially melodic character.

Rimsky - Korsakoff's "Dubinushka" did not seem more noisy than on Friday, but Sibelius did seem more wildly dramatic. And that is saying a great deal.



★ 1881 ★

On Saturday, October 22nd, a queue formed early in the day outside the Music Hall, music lovers waiting to buy admission to the first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. By nightfall, narrow Music Hall Place, off Winter Street, and Hamilton Place were both thronged. And as concert time drew near, a never-ending procession of carriages turned slowly in from Tremont Street. It was indeed an auspicious beginning of a season during which more than 80,000 persons attended twenty concerts and twenty rehearsals.

It was a different world in 1881 when Georg Henschel first raised his baton as conductor of the Symphony, a slower moving age, when life was simpler and the successful management of property a comparatively easy matter. People of means today are confronted with many perplexing problems of investment, taxes, bookkeeping and accounting which are making the personal supervision of their property increasingly difficult.

The selection of investments and all other matters pertaining to the management of property may be delegated to this Company under an Agency Account or a Trust.

Investment and Management of Property

Agent ★ Trustee ★ Guardian ★ Executor

OLD COLONY
TRUST COMPANY
17 COURT STREET, BOSTON
Member of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation

Allied with THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK of BOSTON

THIS CLIPPING FROM BROOKLINE, MASS.
CHRONICLE
10/26/39

Scores Of Local Children Apply For Concert Tickets

Applicants of tickets for the series of youth concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the auspices of the Youth Concerts Association of Boston include 132 pupils and teachers in the local public schools. The pupils are:

David Bloom, Shirley Applebaum, Jeanne Scheinfeldt, Florence Hoffman, Adele Saklad, Elinor Konowitz, Donald Gordan, Helen Ebell, Evelyn Bialer, Herbert Anker, Helen Talmanson, Miriam Shocket, Sheldon Konowitz, Lois Sterman, Lydia Sanderson, Ruth Hamburg, Robert Ehrmann, Priscilla Twiss, Robert Abrams, Louise Sternberg, Lee Pritzker, Ann Converse, Marcia Miller, Harriet Vitkin, Florence Cooper, Lucille Frank, Patricia Northridge, Zangwell Lasker, Carol Trockman, Zelda Cushner, Alan Tucker Tamara D'Luty, Selma Breger, Yvonne Heard, Judith Chernoff, Charlotte Shapiro, Phyllis Milgroom, Janice Berg, Roberta Rosenfield, Evelyn Kesell, Betty McLeary, Charles Waite, Robert McArthur, Nancy Gurvitz, Jerome Swartz, Roland Reed, Barbara Meisner, Michael Rudnick, Marcia Wolper, Ruth A. Meyers, Marvin Josolowitz, Adele Kellenberg, Karl Josolowitz, Joan Stern, Robert Lurie, Daniel Rubin, Ira Wein, Leonard Levine, Elizabeth Zulalian, Betty Sprague, Paul Dellamano, Rosalyn White, Beryl Mazer, Lorraine Solomon, Melvin Bergheim, Herbert Eisenberg, Murray Freeman, Eugene Kassman, Leon Groisser, Murray Levin, Lolii Stepanoff, Wendell Sykes, Albert Cline, Ruth Leavitt, Selma Crystal, Mary Cooper, Barbara Driscoll, Selma Slesinger, Lois Bronstein, Lila Kahn, Ruth Cline, Dorothy Goldstein, Jeanne Miller, Joan Strecker, Alice Kaman, Rena White, Lillian Cadiff, Marcia Goldman, Carol Silverstein, Martin Small, Barbara Ullian, David Hamburg, Ruth Bryant, Marshall Dana, Irwin Davlin, Jane Pinanski, Marcia Ravreby, Bernice Silin, Phyllis Silin, Fredric Hartstone, Jane Wiseman, Eunice Svetkey, Jean Ford.

Six concerts are planned with Wheeler Beckett conducting the orchestra, the first on Wednesday afternoon, November 8, at three-thirty o'clock. Edwin S. Webster of Brookline is a director of the sponsoring association, while Mrs. Halfdan Lee of this town is chairman of the advisory committee and local members of this are Mr. Lee, Mrs. John G. Palfrey, Mrs. Webster and Charles F. Weed. Residents on the sustaining members committee include Mrs. Henry N. Pratt, Miss Faith Harwood, Mrs. Reed Harwood, Mrs. George S. West and Mrs. E. Laurence Shaw, while Mrs. Paul White heads a committee of the wives of physicians of which Mrs. Kenneth Blackfan, Mrs. Edwin F. Cave and Mrs. Howard B. Sprague are members.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NORWOOD, MASS.
MESSENGER

OCT 27 1939

Sign for Concert Series

Many local residents are subscribing for the series of six commuters' concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be held Tuesday afternoons at 3 o'clock in Symphony Hall, Boston.

Among those who have already subscribed are:

Mrs. Charles Caverly, of 408 Prospect st., Norwood.

Mrs. Rebecca Birdsall, of 1 Woodley rd., Miss Mary Cole, of 17 Chestnut st., Mrs. Harold Cowen, of 12 Abbot rd., Mrs. R. M. Bailey jr., of Woodley rd., Miss Elizabeth N. Converse, of 66 Church st., Miss Mary Cormerais, of 22 Linden place, Mrs. Walter Dean, of 293 Walnut st., George W. Ellis, of 637 East st., and Mrs. Priscilla E. Barlow of 181 Cedar st., all of Dedham.

Miss Katherine Newell Adams, of 105 Plympton st., Walpole and Mrs. Charles [illegible] jr. and Miss [illegible] Robbins rd.

The first concert will be held next Tuesday afternoon. The late start has made a special appeal to commuters, some of whom will travel as many as 100 miles to attend.

The full Symphony Orchestra of 110 musicians will play under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky. This concert is a repeat of the regular Monday night concert.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

REPORTER

Foxboro, Mass
10/28/39

To Hold Youth Concerts

The Youth Concerts which so delighted young people last season are to be given again this year in Symphony Hall, Boston, under the official title of "Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc. Youth Concerts." Wheeler Beckett will again conduct 70 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a series of six low-cost symphony concerts for young people of junior high or high school age. The dates are set for Wednesday afternoons at 3:30 o'clock, November 8th, December 6th, January 17th, February 7th, March 27th and April 10th or 24th.

Mrs Minot F. Inman has represented the Youth Concerts Association here and reports that thirty-nine Foxboro High School pupils have applied for series tickets so far this season.

Directors of the Youth Concerts Association are: Wheeler Beckett, Edwin S. Webster, Edward A. Taft, and Charles F. Hovey, Secretary-Treasurer.

Because admission prices are purposely kept low, communities which send pupils are organizing to help the Youth Concerts Association of Boston support these concerts. The committee in Foxboro is composed of Mrs Minot F. Inman, Mrs Harold Edgar Martin, and Mr Frederic W. Kempf, Supervisor of Music in the Foxboro Schools.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
OCT 31 1939

71

Phenomenal Growth of Interest in Symphony Music Is Met by Six Superb Concerts for Coming Season

Scheduled Course Brings Familiar, Famous Conductors

With another capacity audience expected, the Bushnell Concert Series opens tonight at 8:15.

The most interesting cultural development here during the past decade has been the phenomenal growth of public interest in symphony music.

Before the time of the dedication of the Bushnell Memorial in 1930, Hartford was hearing only an occasional symphony concert. Since that date, however, appreciation of the wonderful art-form has expanded so rapidly that now the Bushnell management is hard pressed to find seats for all who want to attend the concerts in its Symphony Series.

Again Six Concerts

This year the Bushnell has again scheduled six symphony concerts to be performed by five of the world's major orchestras. The New York Philharmonic-Symphony under the direction of its dynamic leader, John Barbirolli, is starting the course. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will bring his celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra here for two concerts. The other orchestras to be heard in the current course are the National Symphony with Dr. Hans Kindler, the Cleveland with Artur Rodzinski, and the Philadelphia with Eugene Ormandy.

By this time each of these orchestras has become firmly established in the favor of the Bushnell audience. Dr. Koussevitzky, who has been coming here steadily since 1930, is the dean of the Bushnell series conductors. He and his brilliant Bushnell concerts have virtually become a Hartford institution. His programs are always interesting, frequently even exciting. Many concert goers remember vividly their extraordinary sensations when they first heard under Koussevitzky's baton at the Bushnell the pulsing dissonances of Ravel's "Bolero."

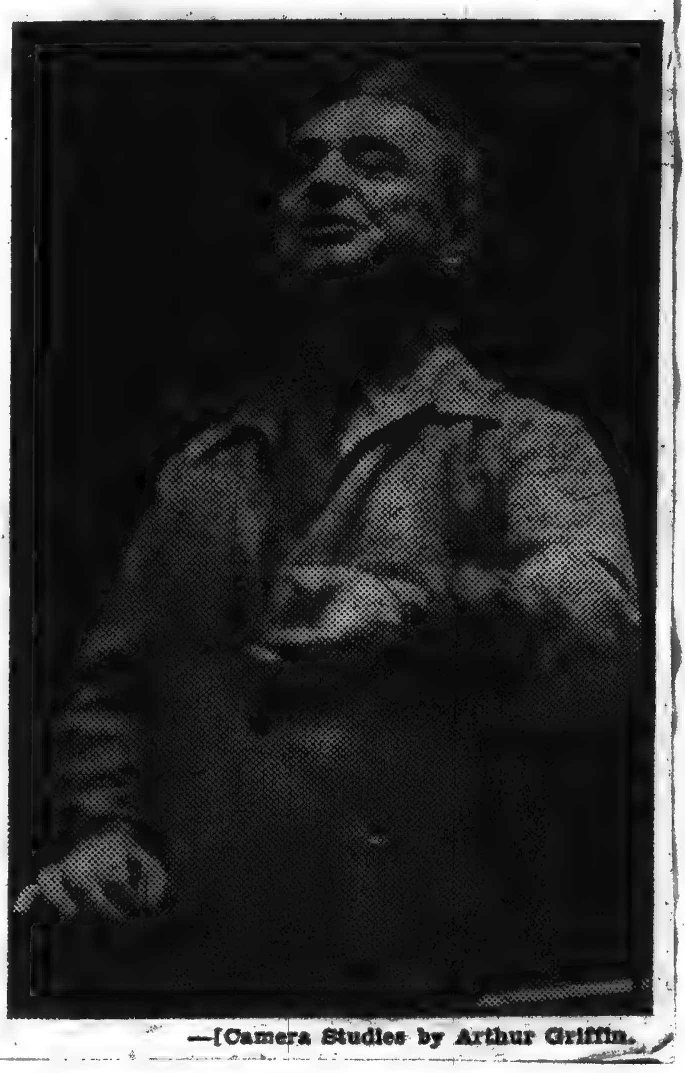
Barbirolli Will Come

Barbirolli is the slender Englishman who performed the almost incredible feat of stepping into the place of Arturo Toscanini and winning instant acclaim from the ever critical Philharmonic-Symphony audience. It had been feared for a time this season that the war would take him away from this country, but Americans learn with pleasure and relief that he is in a class not likely to be called for service soon.

Because of the scope and variety of the particular art which each brings to his respective podium, Dr. Kindler, Mr. Rodzinski and Mr. Ormandy will be welcomed back warmly again by the Hartford audience. With the exception of Metropolitan Grand Opera and the occasional world premiere of a play, the Bushnell Symphony concerts are the liveliest events on Hartford's cultural calendar. Both musically and socially, they are "tops," and from present indications the coming orchestra season will be one of the best in the history of the Bushnell.

Serge Koussevitzky as His Musicians See Him

The conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, shown here during a rehearsal, will bring his musicians here for two programs in the Bushnell Concert Series of 1939-1940. The Boston is the only one of the five major orchestras of the series which appears here twice during the season.



—[Camera Studies by Arthur Griffin.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
NOV 1 - 1939

Boston Orchestra Plays Hanson Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its first performance of Dr. Howard Hanson's Third Symphony Friday, with Dr. Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, conducting.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will lead the orchestra in its first New York City performance of the composition next week, and has invited Dr. Hanson to conduct its premier Boston performance Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. The famed Boston ensemble has previously played Dr. Hanson's second symphony, the "Romantic," and later in the year will play his first, the "Nordic."

THIS CLIPPING FROM PORTLAND, MAINE
PRESS HERALD
OCT 29 1939

Maine Musical Circles

By Wm. H. Brown, Jr.

Yves Chardon, noted composer and solo cellist for the Boston Symphony, sailed for France recently to enter the service of his native country. His summons to the colors came scarcely a week after he was released from a Boston hospital where he had been confined for two months, undergoing several operations. He was conscripted without investigation or examination, an example of the French policy: "A uniform for every man."

M. Chardon was to have appeared in a series of Bach concerts at Bowdoin College during the winter season. He was also to have produced Beethoven's extremely difficult Ninth Symphony this year in Boston.

The Countess Chardon, wife of the composer, has taken over her husband's duties as official of the Longy School in Cambridge, Mass.

* * *

The membership committee of the Portland Symphony Orchestra has auditioned and accepted three new members to the organization. They are: Marion Goodwin, Virginia Knight and Carolyn Corson. All three are to be members of the violin section.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle
OCT 31 1939

Hanson to Conduct Boston Orchestra In His Symphony

Dr. Howard Hanson left Rochester late yesterday for Boston to accept an invitation from Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to conduct his Third Symphony at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

This will be the first Boston performance of the symphony. Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct the Boston Symphony in the first New York performance of the symphony to be given in that city next week.

Dr. Koussevitsky has planned performances of Dr. Hanson's three symphonies for this season with the Boston orchestra. The second symphony — the "Romantic" — has been played previously at Boston concerts. Later in the year the first symphony—the "Nordic"—is scheduled for performance. Rochester has yet to hear a public performance of Dr. Hanson's Third Symphony which was written in commemoration of the Swedish tercentenary a year ago.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW YORK CITY
METRONOME
NOV - - 1939

Alfred Music Reprints Modern Drum Studies

Alfred Music Co. announces that the long out of print Modern Drum Studies by Simon Sternburg, member of the Boston Symphony and former drum columnist of METRONOME, has now been republished in a revised and enlarged edition containing 312 practical dance rhythm studies embracing American, continental, and oriental rhythms and including such instruments as the guiros, claves, bongos, and maracas.

A unique feature is 85 pages of solid drumming.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
NOV 1 - 1939

Another meeting of trustees of the Berkshire Music festival was held this afternoon at the Stockbridge home of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith to discuss the question of holding six or nine concerts at Tanglewood next August. It was announced after the meeting that no decision had been reached. Differences of opinion exist among the trustees as to the advisability of extending the concerts over a third week, and it was said that more time is needed to straighten out certain difficulties which have come to the top. The Boston Symphony orchestra, which will give the concerts, wants nine in three weeks. A trustee said tonight that the board hoped to reach a definite decision two weeks hence.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
DOWN BEAT
NOV 1 - 1939

WITH THE LONGHAIRS

Boston's Non-Union Symph Left Out

BY KURT POLNARIOFF
(First Violinist, Pittsburgh Symphony)

New York—The reason the Boston symphony didn't participate in the recent New York music festival was because Local 802 clamped down and forbade this infamously non-union outfit to take part. Some typical Back Bay ideas on democracy keep the boys from joining hands with the AFM.

Rex Riccardi, secy of Local 77, and incidentally of Italian extraction himself, asked Local 802 to join the Philly Local in a protest against Mussolini's Musical Morons' recent announcement of a violin contest to be held in Genoa next year to commemorate the birth of Paganini. The rules of this international(?) contest state quite plainly that it is open to all fiddlers except those of kosher extraction. That's like holding a bagpipe playing contest open to all but Scotchmen.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
11/1/39

WORDS About Music And Musicians

The fourth program for the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week finds Richard Burgin, concertmaster, as conductor, Dr. Howard Hanson as guest conductor and Emanuel Feuermann as cello soloist.

The first performances at these concerts of Toch's "Pinocchio, a Merry Overture", will open the program followed by Dr. Hanson's Symphony No. 3, conducted by the composer in first concert performances. Mr. Feuermann will be soloist in the Haydn Concerto for Violoncello in D major and the program will close with the Strauss "Don Juan" Tone Poem, Op. 20.

* * *

The second season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Youth Concerts, with Wheeler Beckett as conductor, will be given Wednesdays, Nov. 8, Dec. 6, Jan. 17, Feb. 7, Mar. 27 and Apr. 10 from 3:30 to 5 p. m.

The first program will include Nicolai's Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," the Ravel-Moussorgsky "Pictures at an Exhibition," Handel's "Water Music Suite" and the Liszt "Les Preludes."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
OCT 31 1939

21

Phenomenal Growth of Interest in Symphony Music Is Met by Six Superb Concerts for Coming Season

Scheduled Course Brings Familiar, Famous Conductors

With another capacity audience expected, the Bushnell Concert Series opens tonight at 8:15.

The most interesting cultural development here during the past decade has been the phenomenal growth of public interest in symphony music.

Before the time of the dedication of the Bushnell Memorial in 1930, Hartford was hearing only an occasional symphony concert. Since that date, however, appreciation of the wonderful art-form has expanded so rapidly that now the Bushnell management is hard pressed to find seats for all who want to attend the concerts in its Symphony Series.

Again Six Concerts

This year the Bushnell has again scheduled six symphony concerts to be performed by five of the world's major orchestras. The New York Philharmonic-Symphony under the direction of its dynamic leader, John Barbirolli, is starting the course. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will bring his celebrated Boston Symphony Orchestra here for two concerts. The other orchestras to be heard in the current course are the National Symphony with Dr. Hans Kindler, the Cleveland with Artur Rodzinski, and the Philadelphia with Eugene Ormandy.

By this time each of these orchestras has become firmly established in the favor of the Bushnell audience. Dr. Koussevitzky, who has been coming here steadily since 1930, is the dean of the Bushnell series conductors. He and his brilliant Bushnell concerts have virtually become a Hartford institution. His programs are always interesting, frequently even exciting. Many concert goers remember vividly their extraordinary sensations when they first heard under Koussevitzky's baton at the Bushnell the pulsing dissonances of Ravel's "Bolero."

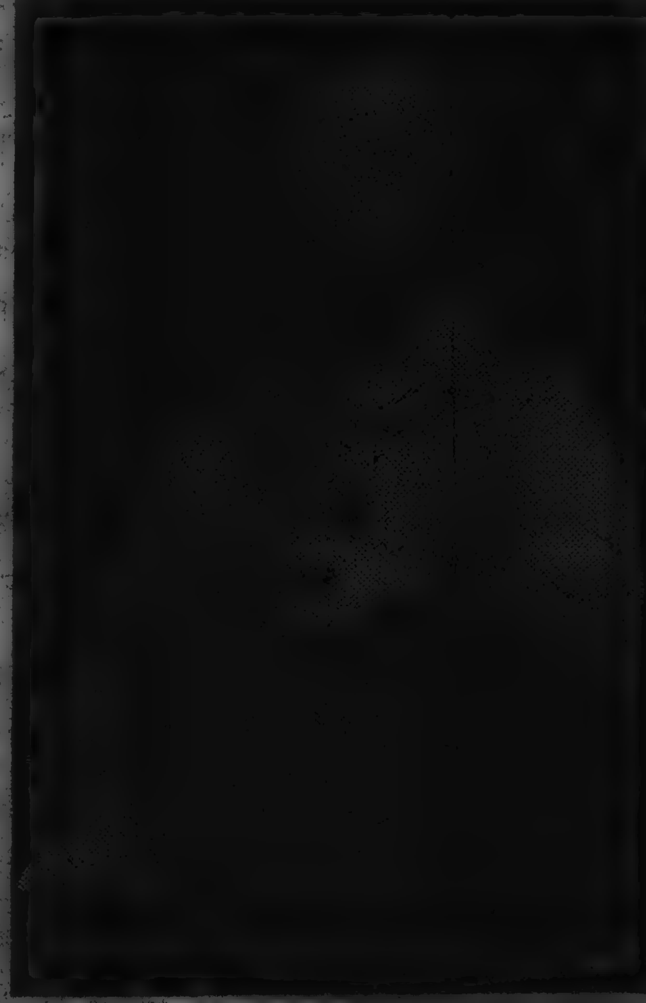
Barbirolli Will Come

Barbirolli is the slender Englishman who performed the almost incredible feat of stepping into the place of Arturo Toscanini and winning instant acclaim from the ever critical Philharmonic-Symphony audience. It had been feared for a time this season that the war would take him away from this country, but Americans learn with pleasure and relief that he is in a class not likely to be called for service soon.

Because of the scope and variety of the particular art which each brings to his respective podium, Dr. Kindler, Mr. Rodzinski and Mr. Ormandy will be welcomed back warmly again by the Hartford audience. With the exception of Metropolitan Grand Opera and the occasional world premiere of a play, the Bushnell Symphony concerts are the liveliest events on Hartford's cultural calendar. Both musically and socially, they are "tops," and from present indications the coming orchestra season will be one of the best in the history of the Bushnell.

Serge Koussevitzky as His Musicians See Him

The conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, shown here during a rehearsal, will bring his musicians here for two programs in the Bushnell Concert Series of 1939-1940. The Boston is the only one of the five major orchestras of the series which appears here twice during the season.



—[Camera Studies by Arthur Griffin.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
REPUBLICAN
NOV 1 - 1939

Another meeting of trustees of the Berkshire Music festival was held this afternoon at the Stockbridge home of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith to discuss the question of holding six or nine concerts at Tanglewood next August. It was announced after the meeting that no decision had been reached. Differences of opinion exist among the trustees as to the advisability of extending the concerts over a third week, and it was said that more time is needed to straighten out certain difficulties which have come to the top. The Boston Symphony orchestra, which will [illegible] the concerts, wants nine in three weeks. A trustee said tonight that the board hoped to reach a definite decision two weeks hence.

THIS CLIPPING FROM PORTLAND, MAINE
PRESS HERALD
OCT 29 1939

Maine Musical Circles

By Wm. H. Brown, Jr.

Yves Chardon, noted composer and solo cellist for the Boston Symphony, sailed for France recently to enter the service of his native country. His summons to the colors came scarcely a week after he was released from a Boston hospital where he had been confined for two months, undergoing several operations. He was conscripted without investigation or examination, an example of the French policy: "A uniform for every man."

M. Chardon was to have appeared in a series of Bach concerts at Bowdoin College during the winter season. He was also to have produced Beethoven's extremely difficult Ninth Symphony this year in Boston.

The Countess Chardon, wife of the composer, has taken over her husband's duties as official of the Longy School in Cambridge, Mass.

* * *

The membership committee of the Portland Symphony Orchestra has auditioned and accepted three new members to the organization. They are: Marion Goodwin, Virginia Knight and Carolyn Corson. All three are to be members of the violin section.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CHICAGO, ILL.
DOWN BEAT
NOV 1 - 1939

WITH THE LONGHAIRS

Boston's Non-Union Symph Left Out

BY KURT POLNARIOFF
(First Violinist, Pittsburgh Symphony)

New York—The reason the Boston symphony didn't participate in the recent New York music festival was because Local 802 clamped down and forbade this infamously non-union outfit to take part. Some typical Back Bay ideas on democracy keep the boys from joining hands with the AFM.

Rex Riccardi, secy of Local 77, and incidentally of Italian extraction himself, asked Local 802 to join the Philly Local in a protest against Mussolini's Musical Morons' recent announcement of a violin contest to be held in Genoa next year to commemorate the birth of Paganini. The rules of this international(?) contest state quite plainly that it is open to all fiddlers except those of kosher extraction. That's like holding a bagpipe playing contest open to all but Scotchmen.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle
OCT 31 1939

Hanson to Conduct Boston Orchestra In His Symphony

Dr. Howard Hanson left Rochester late yesterday for Boston to accept an invitation from Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to conduct his Third Symphony at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

This will be the first Boston performance of the symphony. Dr. Koussevitsky will conduct the Boston Symphony in the first New York performance of the symphony to be given in that city next week.

Dr. Koussevitsky has planned performances of Dr. Hanson's three symphonies for this season with the Boston orchestra. The second symphony — the "Romantic" — has been played previously at Boston concerts. Later in the year the first symphony—the "Nordic"—is scheduled for performance. Rochester has yet to hear a public performance of Dr. Hanson's Third Symphony which was written in commemoration of the Swedish tercentenary a year ago.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW YORK CITY
METRONOME
NOV -- 1939

Alfred Music Reprints Modern Drum Studies

Alfred Music Co. announces that the long out of print Modern Drum Studies by Simon Sternburg, member of the Boston Symphony and former drum columnist of METRONOME, has now been republished in a revised and enlarged edition containing 312 practical dance rhythm studies embracing American, continental, and oriental rhythms and including such instruments as the guiros, claves, bongos, and maracas.

A unique feature is 85 pages of solid drumming.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
11/1/39

WORDS About Music —And Musicians—

The fourth program for the Friday afternoon and Saturday evening concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week finds Richard Burgin, concertmaster, as conductor, Dr. Howard Hanson as guest conductor and Emanuel Feuermann as cello soloist.

The first performances at these concerts of Toch's "Pinocchio, a Merry Overture", will open the program followed by Dr. Hanson's Symphony No. 3, conducted by the composer in first concert performances. Mr. Feuermann will be soloist in the Haydn Concerto for Violoncello in D major and the program will close with the Strauss "Don Juan" Tone Poem, Op. 20.

• • •

The second season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Youth Concerts, with Wheeler Beckett as conductor, will be given Wednesdays, Nov. 8, Dec. 6, Jan. 17, Feb. 7, Mar. 27 and Apr. 10 from 3:30 to 5 p. m.

The first program will include Nicolai's Overture, "The Merry Wives of Windsor," the Ravel-Moussorgsky "Pictures at an Exhibition," Handel's "Water Music Suite" and the Liszt "Les Preludes."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
TIMES UNION
NOV 1 - 1939

Boston Orchestra Plays Hanson Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will [illegible]st performance of Dr. Howard Hanson's Third Symphony Friday, with Dr. Hanson, director of the Eastman School of Music, conducting.

Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, conductor of the Boston Symphony, will lead the orchestra in its first New York City performance of the composition next week, and has [illegible] Dr. Hanson to conduct its premier Boston performance Friday afternoon and Saturday evening. The famed Boston ensemble has previously played Dr. Hanson's [illegible], the "Romantic," [illegible] his [illegible]

Herald Nov. 2

MUSIC

PHILHARMONIC SYMPHONY

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra of New York, John Barbirolli, conductor, gave a concert last night in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

Elgar .... Introduction and Allegro for strings, Op 47
Ravel .... "Daphnis and Chloe," Suites Nos. 1 and 2.
Mozart ......Symphony in C major K. 338
Weinberger .... Variations and Fugue, "Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree"

A visit from the New York Philharmonic ought to be an occasion, one would think, when the musical in the town would quite normally turn out in force. It is an absolutely first class orchestra under a young conductor of talent that has been proved successfully, if not sensationally, in the past few seasons. The comparative indifference—not of those who came to the hall, but of those who failed to come—argues that as a general public we are either too smug in the security of the virtues of our own orchestra or not really musical or both!

It is considered a cardinal sin of criticism to scold the public, to which the retort is that righteous astonishment is not petulance. Here was an admirable opportunity to listen and compare the merits of one great orchestra with those of another, and it was an opportunity that largely failed to capture the imagination of the public. Let it be said again, that those who did fill two-thirds of Symphony Hall last night showed a keen appreciation of what was presented to them.

Mr. Barbirolli began his concert with one of Elgar's most impressive works, one that delights the heart of a string player and that silences the rather harshly unsympathetic attitude to this composer's music that prevails in this country. Elgar knew exactly how to write for string sonorities and to exploit them subtly and to marvelous effect. Naturally the Philharmonic's superb strings were most advantageously heard.

Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" we have come, not altogether without the aid of New York's critical enthusiasm, to regard as a special property of the Boston Symphony and its conductor. Mr. Toscanini and the NBC last winter did but convince us in our pride. Mr. Barbirolli wisely produced the first suite as well and guided it into the familiar second with nine measures of the ballet score not previously heard in concerts here. If a fault is to be found—and it must be found—it lies in the somewhat crude, if musically convincing, interpretation. Sonorities were not as thoughtfully produced, crescendi from pianissimo to fortissimo were not as broad and hence not as exciting as we have been used to. Nevertheless the performance was far more sympathetic than what we heard from the NBC.

Another criticism of Mr. Barbirolli's occasional lack of regard for just sonority was his retention of all the high strings and reduction of the 'celli and double basses in the Mozart. The result was an odd balance of tone, and especially in the finale where the first violins overpowered the woodwind. The conductor's tempi were admirable in this charming symphony; and if he occasionally erred on the side of fastidiousness in his reading, there is something to be said for a hint of mannerism in the early music of Mozart.

Jaromir Weinberger's Variations and Fugue, "Under The Spreading Chestnut Tree," had its first Boston performance last night. The music, of a very obvious and even trivial character, has received much praise for its wit. But this is of a clumsy nature in Mr. Weinberger's hands. Such widely different composers as Strauss and Prokofieff have done somewhat similar music far more cleverly and with much more deliciously entertaining results. The variations are in the nature of pastiches, and they have at least the merit of being easy to follow.

The Philharmonic is so fine an orchestra—a fact one sometimes forgets after hearing it on the air after Sunday luncheon—that it was a quickening pleasure to listen to it in the flesh in Symphony Hall under Mr Barbirolli's guidance.

Globe Nov. 2

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

New York Philharmonic

John Barbirolli and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra made another visit to Symphony Hall last night. Their concert was exceptionally interesting and pleasurable. In the first place, it extends one's tonal horizons to hear a major American orchestra from another city, and in the second, Mr. Barbirolli's program was unhackneyed.

The evening began with Sir Edward Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for strings, and ended with the first Boston performance of the Variations and Fugue, by Jaromir Weinberger, on the English tune "Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree." In between came the two "Daphnis and Chloe" suites by Ravel, and one of the less frequently heard Mozart symphonies, that in C major, No. 34 (K. 338).

Mr. Barbirolli has developed as technician and interpreter. His first-rank orchestra responds very sensitively to his demands. All that was evident in Mr. Barbirolli's able reading of the Ravel suites, virtuoso music that exacts the utmost of players' technic, and of a conductor's imagination. While it seems true that Mr. Barbirolli still gives more attention to broad outlines and the flow of rhythm than to precision or subtle nuances, there was color in the "Daphnis and Chloe" pieces, together with vitality and a sufficient breadth of style.

The New York Philharmonic tone seems to have become deeper and richer since Mr. Barbirolli has been at the helm. While Elgar's comfortable, spacious music was a bit hurried, it enjoyed remarkable string sonorities.

Weinberger's Variations and Fugue indicate a composer with much theoretical learning and a fine sense of fun. He has taken a good tune and juggled it about cleverly. The first of the six variations is a canon, the second a bow to the old madrigalists, the third an apostrophe to Shakespeare's "The Black Lady," there is a suggestion of bagpipes in the fourth, the fifth is a pastorale and the six finds a solo bassoon solemnly intoning the same notes with as much persistence as Dickens' coachman Weller held forth on the subject of widows. For this information we are indebted to the composer's program notes, without which the music would still be enjoyable but not so clear.

The Fugue winds up in a burst of orchestral fireworks as the Chestnut Tree tune is combined with a double fugue. Here and there are echoes of Ravel's orchestral technic, and the fugue happily reminisces a bit of Weinberger's earlier and equally ingenious fugue—that from "Schwanda, the Bagpiper." The composer bowed from the stage.

Mr. Barbirolli's performance of the Mozart Symphony was a good, healthy one, completely free from the "Dresden china" over-refinement that used to be Mozart's lot, and yet sufficiently polished. Conductor and orchestra were enthusiastically received by an audience that should have been larger.—C. W. D.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

NOV 2 - 1939

THE SAXOPHONE.

[From the Providence Bulletin.]

Though it is nearly 100 years since Adolphe Sax sat him down and devised the saxophone, the instrument is still an irregular member of classic society. Last week Dr. Koussetvitsky got credit for the season's first novelty by sandwiching two saxophone solos into his symphony orchestra program.

The soloist, Sigurd Rascher, apparently did himself and his instrument proud and was warmly praised by the critics (the two we read) for his mellow tone and expert quaver. Yet it was plain to be seen that they regarded him as an interloper.

And we'd like to know why the sax has fallen into second rate company—dance orchestras and military bands. It has a beautiful voice, halfway between a horn and a reed. It can be as humorous as a bassoon and as melancholy as a 'cello. It is a very decent instrument, too, not at all bold or intrusive.

We've searched the music books to find out why it hasn't made good in high society, but nary a word can we find. And we'd appreciate very much a word from someone who knows why this lovely instrument has been consigned to jazz and squawk and clown and waste its sweetness on the midnight air.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MANCHESTER, N. H.
LEADER

V 2 - 1939

Jascha Heifetz to Give Boston Recital Nov. 12

Jascha Heifetz, world famous violinist and recent recruit to the ranks of Hollywood celebrities, will be heard in his only Boston recital of the season on Sunday afternoon November 12, at Symphony hall.

This will be Heifetz's first concert in Boston since the release of his new motion picture "They Shall Have Music." His work in this picture set a high standard of artistic excellence for the performance of music in a motion picture, and has afforded many the opportunity of studying his technique at "close range."

Heifetz does not rest on his fame in the concert hall and the motion picture studio. He is well known for his transcriptions for the violin from Bach, Schubert, Scarlatti, and other composers. He has also made many well known recordings, the most recent being that of the Brahms Violin Concerto with the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor. For relaxation, Heifetz plays the piano accordion, collects books, and plays a fast game of ping-pong.

Mail orders for the Boston recital are being accepted at the Symphony hall box-office, where seats are now on sale. The program which Mr. Heifetz will play will soon be announced.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
COURIER-CITIZEN

NOV 2 - 1939

Nocturnes Are Presented by Hub Orchestra

Large Audience Attends First Supplementary Concert — Works of Harl McDonald Featured.

Despite the downpour of rain, music-lovers from all over New England comfortably filled Symphony Hall in Boston on Tuesday afternoon for the first matinee concert in the supplementary series by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Novelty on the program in first performance was music by Harl McDonald, American composer and manager of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. It consisted of two nocturnes for orchestra, under the general title of San Juan Capistrano. This is a little Californian village on the Mexican border in which life today is much the same as it was years and years ago. Into music the composer had put his impressions, first of "The Mission" and then of "The Fiesta" in that little community. The subtitles set the musical scene. In the first nocturne it was to have been expected that the mission bells and a religious chant would be heard. By way of contrast, gaiety and movement were to be expected in the fiesta. These, to be sure, are not original themes. They have inspired many composers. Conspicuous originality on the part of Mr. McDonald was not to be anticipated. But in the two pieces was grateful and often colorful music that seemed to please the audience. On it Dr. Koussevitzky, to whom the pieces were dedicated, lavished sympathetic care.

The three impressionistic pictures of Debussy's "La Mer" are familiar as Dr. Koussevitzky portrays them. Again there was a superb performance of one of the most impressive compositions inspired by the changing moods of the sea.

As for the Beethoven "Eroica," conductor and orchestra may always be depended upon to reveal its beauties to the full. The bold attacks and sweeps of the strings, the incisive chords in the brass section again scored their effects.

S. R. F.

Post Nov. 2

CONCERT BY PHILHARMONIC

Mr. Barbirolli's Conducting Arouses Admiration

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

From hearing no orchestra but its own over a period of years, Boston has gone lately to the point where out-of-town bands have become quite the usual thing. Last evening it was the New York Philharmonic-Symphony, returning to Symphony Hall with Mr. Barbirolli again in command, in a programme of pieces by Elgar, Ravel, Mozart and Weinberger.

This reviewer confesses to an honest liking for the conducting of Mr. Barbirolli. Succeeding Toscanini was a tough assignment, but actually, the younger man has proved himself to be a leader of wider sympathies than the elder. Compare last evening's performance of the second suite from Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" with that given here last season by the N. B. C. orchestra under the revered Arturo. And Mr. Barbirolli is to be commended for his ingenuity in placing the two suites together on a concert programme. For once, the beginning of the second suite had the effect which it was meant to produce in the theatre.

Elgar was represented last evening by the "Introduction and Allegro" for strings, a familiar enough piece, more impressive for its scoring than for its strictly musical content. The Mozart item was the Symphony in C major, No. 34, an early work, not to be confused with the "Jupiter," in the same key. Mr. Barbirolli's Mozart is in the true 18th century spirit and offers grace without preciosity. In short, here was admirable Mozart admirably played.

And now to the real hit of the evening, Jaromir Weinberger's Variations and Fugue on the English folk-tune, "Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree," which recently had its world premiere at the Philharmonic Symphony's opening concert in New York. The composer of "Schwanda the Bagpipe Player" combines a pretty fancy with enormous musical erudition. Moreover, he is one of the few modern composers who, vertically speaking, seems actually to prefer a third to a second. Present last evening, Mr. Weinberger was at length summoned to the stage by Mr. Barbirolli to share the applause which his brilliant composition had occasioned.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEWARK, N. J.
NEWS

NOV 2 - 1939

Community Artists

Dorothy Maynor to Open Concert Series December 8

Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, will be the artist at the opening recital of the Community Concert Course of the Oranges at East Orange High School December 8, it was announced today by Mrs. William S. Nelson, secretary of the organization. Miss Maynor is said to have been "discovered" by Serge Koussevitzky, director of the Boston Symphony, and sang with the orchestra and also in a recital last season at the Berkshire Festival.

Others to appear in the series are Toscha Seidel, violinist, who will play at the second concert January 18, and Mieczyslaw Munz, pianist, to be heard in the closing event March 1.

THIS CLIPPING FROM

ARLINGTON, MASS.
ADVOCATE
11/2/39

Local Students to Hear Boston Symphony Concert

The program of the first Boston Symphony Orchestra, Inc., Youth Concert, which 25 Arlington high school young people will hear at 3:30 Wednesday afternoon, November 8 in Symphony Hall with Wheeler Beckett conducting 70 Boston Symphony players, is as follows: Nicolai's Overture to the Merry Wives of Windsor, Handel's Water Music Suite, Ravel-Moussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition, and Liszt's Les Preludes.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

NOV 2 - 1939

Tuesday Matinee Opens Short Symphony Series

After announcing Arthur Foote's Suite for Strings in E major to open the short series of six monthly paired programs by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky went current American again Tuesday afternoon and gave us 40-year-old, Colorado born Harl McDonald's "San Juan Capistrano" (Two Nocturnes for orchestra—"The Mission" and "Fiesta"). This was the novelty for the Tuesday "Commuters" concert following its first performance by the orchestra Monday night. Understandably the score is dedicated to Dr. Koussevitzky.

We found the "Mission" remote and of a delicate dream texture through which churchly processional melodies penetrate. It has refinement and flavor. The first portion of "Fiesta" is equally or more delicate of dynamic texture but the Jota rhythm emerging hints of a people down on our Southern borders whose life turns easily to gaiety. It seemed to this hearer that the dance rhythm was a trifle too much subdued; not quite felt. The relation of the other dance portion was just but both Jota and Habanera might be stepped up a trifle without losing character.

Again within two weeks we heard Debussy's expression of the sea he so loved "La Mer." Its beauty of orchestration paints many phases of shimmer and ruffle and stir; of brief inconstancies and battles with the element of the wind till one mighty wave, like Hokusai's print, rises up and breaks slowly into foam.

The noble "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven went its course as pensively joyous of Allegro, as eloquent of the Funeral March in changing memories of loss, as thistledown light of Scherzo and exchanting of final Allegro as the great Boston Symphony alone, we believe, can present it. Last night offered an immediate comparison of the resident symphony's golden tone with the New York Philharmonic under Barbirolli, as guest organization in Symphony Hall.

The next concerts in the short series will come Dec. 4 and 5. Simon Barer will be piano soloist.

A. C. R.

73

C.M.S. Nov. 2nd

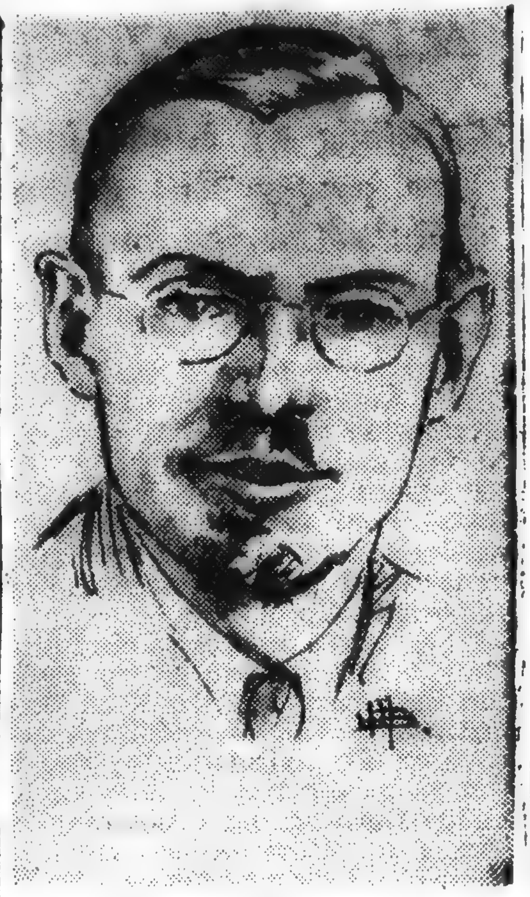
New Works by Hanson, Toch, For This Week's Symphony

By Alfred H. Meyer

Novelty in almost embarrassing riches awaits the public of the Symphony concerts this week. Dr. Howard Hanson's Third Symphony is to receive its first concert performance, with the composer conducting. Ernst Toch's "Pinocchio, a Merry Overture," is to be heard for the first time in Boston The distinguished cellist, Emanuel Feuermann, makes his bow to these audiences in the familiar old Concerto in D of Haydn.

Dr. Hanson wrote his new symphony in anticipation of the tercentenary of the first coming of the Swedes to America, and of the founding of the first Swedish settlement in Delaware, in 1638. He began work on it in 1936, conducted the first three movements of it at a radio concert over the CBS system, Sept. 19, 1937, conducted the whole of it with the NBC Orchestra March 26, 1938. The present performances are the first to be given in a concert hall.

In a pleasant interview this week, Dr. Hanson gave information that this new symphony marks a return, on his part, to an endeavor to express "Nordic" feeling in his music. His first symphony was entitled "Nordic." His second (which like the present one had its première in Boston) was entitled "Romantic" and constituted an act of rebellion on the part of the composer against the excessive "classicism" of the nineteen-twenties. The new symphony continues the trend of the first.



Howard Hanson

Who will direct the first concert performance of his Third Symphony at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Friday afternoon and Saturday evening.

* * *

Beyond this general "Nordic" feeling the symphony contains no programmatic elements. The first movement begins with an Andante lamentando, which serves principally to suggest a gray Northern atmosphere. The main body of the movement, Agitato, begins with a rugged, incisively rhythmed theme. The principal contrasting theme, religious in mood, has the contours of a Swedish chorale. The movement is a sonata-allegro. A feature of the movement is the gay dance tune which appears near the middle of the development section. This presently combines with previously heard thematic material to form the considerable climax which leads to the recapitulation.

The second movement, Andante tranquillo, peaceful and brooding in mood, ushers in very gradually a Northern folk-like tune. A smoothly lyrical horn theme brings the principal contrast.

The third movement, Tempo scherzando, vigorously rhythmic, is unusual in that the principal theme is a solo for kettledrums. The trio is based on a theme that is somewhat lyrical, together with a counterpoint derived from the tympani theme.

The Finale, Largamente e pesante, begins as a continuation of the scherzo. It serves in part as a recapitulation of the first two movements of the symphony, in part to furnish its own climactic ending to the whole. It deals with the brooding matter which introduces the first movement. It passes on to the religious feeling of the first-movement chorale. It develops its own melancholy principal theme, its march-like contrasting idea. With antiphonal treatment of the chorale it ushers in a climax, refers again to the rugged theme of the first movement and eventually, in the coda, to a climactic statement of the principal theme of the second movement, which Dr. Hanson considers the most important single thematic unit in the symphony.

* * *

In sharp contrast to the serious import of this symphony is the gay and sprightly little overture of Ernst Toch. When Mr. Toch was teaching at the New School for Social Research in New York, he happened at one time to be entertained at the home of its director, Alvin Johnson. The children had been given C. Collodi's "Pinocchio." Mr. Toch himself became interested in the doll which was carved out of wood, but which came to life to torment its maker. Its Eulenspiegel-like pranks must be set to music. And so the musical "Pinocchio," a Merry Overture" came into being—dedicated to Mr. and Mrs. Johnson.

The overture contains a wealth of thematic material, at times angular, as becomes a wooden doll, at times more flowing, but always witty, clever, gay. Toward the middle the angular principal theme yields a sparkling fugato. The handling of the orchestra is now dextrous, now piquant. And yes, even as in Dr. Hanson's symphony, there is near the end an amusing little tympani solo!

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN

NOV 4 - 1939

PHILHARMONIC OFFERS ALL-SCHUBERT CONCERT

Castelnuovo-Tedesco Soloist Again Tomorrow; Rascher, First Saxophone Accompanist

The Florentine composer-pianist Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco will be soloist for the third time tomorrow afternoon with the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall, repeating his own Second Piano Concerto. The orchestral part of the program is also a repetition of the Thursday-Friday pair: Introduction and Allegro for Strings; Elgar; Overture to "Twelfth Night," Castelnuovo-Tedesco; "Romeo and Juliet," Tchaikovsky.

John Barbirolli will devote the program of next Thursday evening and Friday afternoon to music of Schubert: Dances for Strings (Five Minuets and Six Trios), Symphony No. 2 in B-flat major and Symphony No. 7 in C major.

Sigurd Rascher, saxophonist, will be the saxophone soloist to appear at the Philharmonic's regular subscription concerts in its ninety-eight years of existence when he plays with the orchestra next Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon. He will be presented in two works, the first New York performance of Debussy's Rhapsody for Saxophone and Orchestra in the revised versoin of Ernest Ansermet and the first New York performance of Ibert's Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra.

Rascher made his American debut on Oct. 20 and 21 with the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky, the first saxophonist ever to have appeared with that organization. Rascher was born of a Swedish father and an English mother in Germany in 1907.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NUTLEY, N. J.
WEEKLY SUN

NOV 3 - 1939

Leon Carson

Musical Silhouettes—A Commentary On Music

CCC

"Love took up the harp of Life, and wrote on all the chords with might; Smote the chord of Self, that, trembling, passed in music out of sight:"
—Tennyson

In Memoriam

"Say that she loved all life; she met each day
Expectantly, wide-eyed, with warm relief.
Her heart was keen for joy. Though rough the way
She could spin beauty out of all her grief."
From "A Portrait" out of "The Constant Flame" by Charlotte Newton.

Orchestras

At least six of the great orchestras of America have already entered upon what now appears to be one of the finest of seasons for the instrument. Strong men of the baton, such as Koussewitzky, Ormandy, Stock, Rodzinski and Toscanini have resumed their work of direction.

It is interesting to note that the personnel of the major orchestras has never been a matter of more careful selection than it is today. Regardless of the views and criticisms of the critics as to individual conductors, it cannot be denied that they have been chosen only after a process of elimination, thus representing what might be called a survival of the fittest so far as American judgment is concerned.

While, unfortunately, there are other good native conductors who cannot find posts due to the scarcity of large, established symphonic bodies, the fact still remains that our leading orchestras have at the helm the men whom the supporters of symphonic movements prefer to have in charge of their concerts.

Aside from the foregoing thought, let us take heed of the fact that today America is almost the only land where great symphonic music can be heard without the interference of war, and this together with the radio carrying into millions of homes the message of humanity inherent in the works of the masters, makes America a place of blessed repose.

Still Strong

In 1919 the following comment appeared in one of the New York papers:

"Rachmaninoff was one of the real lions of last year's music season. He is likely to be the same this winter judging from the reception he got at his piano recital in Carnegie Hall a fortnight back."

Today Sergei Rachmaninoff is going stronger than ever, and on Saturday afternoon, November 11, will again appear in the same Carnegie Hall for his only New York recital of the season. Thirty years ago Rachmaninoff made his first appearance as conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TELEGRAPH

NOV 4 - 1939

Boston Symphony Announces Slate

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its season of five concerts in Carnegie Hall on Thursday evening, November 23, and Saturday afternoon, November 25.

Serge Kousevitsky will present the following program at the orchestra's concerts in Boston on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening next: Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, Piston's Concertina for piano and orchestra (Jesus Maria Sanroma) and Brahms Symphony No. .

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
JEWISH EXAMINER

NOV 3 - 1939

Sigurd Raschner Saxophone Soloist At Carnegie Hall Next Saturday

Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco, Florentine composer-pianist, will again be the soloist with the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra this Sunday afternoon at Carnegie Hall playing his own Second Piano Concerto. The orchestral numbers include Introduction and Allegro for Strings, Elgar; Overture to "Twelfth Night," Castelnuovo-Tedesco and Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet."

John Barbirolli will offer an all-Schubert program next Thursday evening and Friday afternoon at Carnegie. The items include Dances for Strings (Five Minutes and Six Trios), Symphony No. 2 in B-flat major and Symphony No. 7 in C major.

Sigurd Rascher, saxophonist, will be the first saxophone soloist to appear at the Philharmonic's regular subscription concerts in its ninety-eight years of existence, when he plays with the orchestra next Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon. He will be presented in two works: the first New York performance of Debussy's Rhapsody for Saxophone and Orchestra and the first local performance of Ibert's Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra. Rascher made his American debut on Oct. 20 with the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky. The orchestra program for Saturday and next Sunday includes the Handel-Harty Suite, "the Royal Fireworks," the Second Symphony of Schumann, and Debussy's Berceuse Heroique.

Ernest Schelling returns from Switzerland this Saturday to take up his duties as conductor of the Concerts for Young People. The first of the series of six Saturday morning concerts at Carnegie Hall open on November 18. The Carnegie Hall series has been augmented this year by another series of three Town Hall concerts. These are scheduled for Dec. 11, Jan. 22 and Feb. 19.

Globe Nov. 4

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

Richard Burgin conducts the Boston Symphony concerts this week. That is, all but one number—Howard Hanson's Third Symphony—whose first concert performances are directed by the composer himself. There is also a new soloist, Emanuel Feuermann the cellist, who has chosen to play at his Boston Symphony debut the gracious Concerto of Haydn. The program begins with "Pinocchio, a Merry Overture," by Ernst Toch, and is concluded with that eternally youthful tone poem of Richard Strauss, "Don Juan."

That Mr. Burgin's powers as conductor seem to grow each year is a mild way of saying that he has become a very fine conductor indeed. His reading of "Don Juan" yesterday was one of the best within memory. The whole thing was clear; you could plainly hear several themes going on contrapuntally at the same time, and there were passion and atmosphere. His reading had, furthermore, the sculptured outlines resulting from a musicianly, well-conceived interpretation of a large score. And the orchestral tone was gorgeous.

So finely adjusted were soloist and accompaniment during the Haydn Concerto, the performance may be termed a true collaboration of talents. Neither outshone the other disadvantageously. Mr. Feuermann, whose musicianship has been hailed elsewhere, proved it to the Friday audience by deft technic, a dry but pure and well-poised tone and a fastidious style. Generally speaking, he suggests a miniaturist who delights in perfection of small details (even if his intonation of the cadenzas was not absolutely correct). His phrasing is of a "yielding softness" where others play more crisply. There is something to be said for both sides. Mr. Feuermann was very cordially received.

Howard Hanson says in the program book that his Third Symphony ". . . springs definitely from the north, and has its genesis in the composer's reverence for the spiritual contribution that has been made to America by the sturdy race of northern pioneers who, as early as 1638, founded the first Swedish settlement on the Delaware, and who were in later centuries to constitute such a mighty force in the conquering of the West." No other title is given, and no program, despite the composer's further statement that the Third, like his Second Symphony, ". . . stands as an avowal against a certain coldly abstract, would-be non-sentimental music professed by certain composers of high gifts."

If a title were needed, "Homage to Sibelius" would do very nicely. The harmonic and rhythmic treatment, the instrumentation of all four movements bring vividly to mind the symphonic traits of the Finnish master. Mr. Hanson writes fluently; the dimensions of his work are vast; his sonorities are grandiosely effective when the full orchestra is unrolling a spreading tapestry of sound. But no matter how agreeable, the music is derivative, neither American nor individual. Mr. Hanson was warmly applauded.

Toch's cheerful little overture about the Italian puppet whose nose grew longer each time he told a lie, furnished a spicy beginning for the concert. These performances are the first at Boston Symphony concerts, though the Overture has been heard at the Pops. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:15.—C. W. D.

74

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN
NOV 4 - 1939

Music and Musicians

A Saxophonist, a Tenor and a Fiddler—Messrs. Rascher, Peerce and Francescatti.

By WILLIAM G. KING.

Young Sigurd Rascher is a man with a mission. He's engaged in a single-handed campaign to restore the jazz-abused saxophone to its birthright of musical respectability.

Last month he made his American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and next Saturday and Sunday he is to appear as soloist with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony. Before he came to this country he had proved the merits of his chosen instrument and his own virtuosity in Europe and Australia.

"The saxophone," he will tell you in his fluent but slightly Scandinavian-tinged English, "was an honest instrument before jazz gave it a bad name. It is still an honest instrument. How it is used makes the difference. That is true of nearly everything, isn't it? With a knife, one can cut bread, and with a knife one also can kill a man, but the quality of the knife is not changed.

"Of all the wind instruments, I think the saxophone is most suitable for solo playing. It offers the greatest possibilities for altering expression, color, pitch, tone. It is as flexible, almost, as a violin or a 'cello. But to make the most of its possibilities, one must master it as thoroughly as a great violinist masters the fiddle, and that requires as much study and practice as the violinist gives to his instrument. The reason it has been so badly abused is that there has been no tradition of playing it. If a poor violinist scratches at the fiddle, everybody will know he is playing it badly, because there are so many fine violinists whose art is always before the public. Nobody will blame the violin, because the Heifetzes and Zimbalists have shown what its possibilities are. But when the jazz player makes a saxophone moan and sob and shriek and do other unpleasant things, how is the listener to know that this is just bad saxophone playing, that the saxophone can make beautiful music, too? I have made it my work to bring back the idea that the saxophone is a good instrument, to do justice to it."

Mr. Rascher, a slender, sober-faced young man with earnest hazel eyes behind horn-rimmed spectacles, and a mass of wiry red hair that springs up from his head like Loge's when he removes the tight-fitting beret he affects, says that everybody believed he was crazy when he declared his intention of becoming a "serious" saxophonist.

"Maybe I was," he admits gently.

He was born in Germany thirty-two years ago, the son of a Swedish physician and an Englishwoman. He spent most of his childhood in Switzerland. Then he went to Stuttgart, and studied the clarinet in the Hochschule fur Musik there. Financial difficulties ended his schooling, and because there was a greater demand for saxophonists than for clarinet-players, he learned to play the brass instrument. He earned his living in dance-bands for several years before he decided to embark on his new career. He made his debut as a soloist at the Hanover Music Festival in 1932. Shortly afterward, following an appearance in Copenhagen, the Royal Danish Conservatory organized a special saxophone class, and appointed him to the faculty. In 1934, he became a professor at the Malmo Music Conservatory of Sweden. Many prominent composers have written works especially for him, among them Jacques Ibert, Alexander Glazunoff, Eric Coates, Wolfgang Jacobi and Lars-Erik Larsson. He will play the Debussy Rhapsody for Saxophone and Orchestra, in a revised version by Ernest Ansermet, and Ibert's Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra, at his concerts with the Philharmonic-Symphony.

About Jan Peerce.

Jan Peerce is one of the best-known tenors in the United States, and one of the busiest, but he has never given a formal New York city recital. He will remedy that omission next Tuesday night at Town Hall.

He has been a featured artist at the Radio City Music Hall every season since its opening; he has appeared on scores of major radio programs; he has ventured successfully into grand opera, and Arturo Toscanini twice has chosen him to sing in performances of the Beethoven Ninth Symphony under his direction. Later this season, he also will appear as a soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Sergei Rachmaninoff.

Peerce was born thirty-five years ago on New York's lower East Side, the son of a caterer. When he was a youngster, he sang alto in the choir of a neighborhood house of worship, and also learned to play the violin. He worked his way through high school and Columbia University by fiddling in a three-piece band, of which his brother Max was the drummer, that toured the local "borscht circuit."

After he left school and married, he worked in various night club orchestras, doing the "vocal refrains"—sometimes as many as forty a night—as well as playing the violin. He spent part of his off-time taking singing lessons. The late Samuel L. Rothafel, the famous Roxy, happened to hear him sing at an anniversary dinner for Weber and Fields at the Hotel Astor, and offered him a part in the opening show of the Radio City Music Hall.

Just two hours before curtain-time, however, Roxy told him the lengthy show had to be cut, and that his song was being eliminated. Peerce ran out of the theater, burst into tears, and wandered through the rainy streets for hours. But the next day he went back to the theater. After all, he had a four weeks' contract which paid him a salary whether he sang or not, and nobody could keep him from standing around in the wings. Erno Rapee, musical director of the theater, noticed him, and on an impulse, decided to give him a chance. He arranged to have Peerce sing an off-stage song in the following show. The tenor received such an ovation that the next performance found him front stage and center, in a featured "spot" of his own. He's held it ever since. Meanwhile, he has continued to study intensively, with the determination to make as much of a career in the concert-halls and opera-houses as he has in the theater and radio.

New Violinist.

Zino Francescatti, the French violinist who has been hailed in his native land and in South America as one of the outstanding virtuosi of his generation, has arrived here to begin a seven weeks' sold-out tour of the United States. He will make his New York debut playing the Paganini Concerto with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra on November 18 and 19.

The French Government exempted him from military duty, along with certain other distinguished musicians who, it felt, could give more valuable service to France in the concert-halls of the world than in the trenches.

Mr. Francescatti, a sturdy, black-haired and brown-eyed young man with an infectious grin, was born in Marseilles on August 9, 1905. His father, Italian-born but a naturalized Frenchman, was a 'cellist in the orchestras of the Marseilles Opera and the Concerts Classiques. He also was a violinist of some note, a pupil of Ernesto Sivori, who was the only direct pupil of the fabulous Paganini.

The elder Francescatti was Zino's only teacher. After his death, when the boy was in his 'teens, Zino carried on by himself the system of training in violin, piano, harmony, theory, &c., which his father had outlined. His mother too, was a violinist, who met his father when she came to study with him. When Zino married, he also chose a fiddler, Yolande Potel de la Briere, graduate of the Paris Conservatoire.

He says he cannot remember when he did not have the urge to play the violin. When he was three, he used to take his undersized violin to bed with him, as other children take dolls or favorite toys. He played in public for the first time when he was five, and at ten, was soloist in a performance of the Beethoven Concerto with a Marseilles orchestra. His father, however, refused to permit him to be exploited as a child prodigy, so he retired after that event, making no other public appearances until his "second debut," as a soloist with the orchestra of the Concerts de Conservatoire at the Paris Opera, when he was twenty. Since then, he has played with most of the important orchestras of Europe, and has made extensive recital-tours of that continent. He went to South America for the first time last spring.

He owns two fine violins—a Guarneri and a Santo Serafin. He'll use the latter, which has a bigger tone, when he plays with the Philharmonic-Symphony.

His extra-musical interests include mountain climbing, adding to his collection of more than 20,000 stamps, and motoring.

With the Orchestras

Trans. Nov 4

Koussevitzky Plans Piston Piano Concertino—Menuhin Soloist in Chicago—Alec Templeton

Walter Piston's Concertino for Piano and Orchestra will be performed at the next regular pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Serge Koussevitzy, conductor, to be given in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Nov. 10 and 11. Jesus Maria Sanroma, who appeared in the first public performance of the Concertino, will be the soloist. Serge Koussevitzky will open the program with the First Symphony of Beethoven in C major, and close it with the Fourth Symphony of Brahms in E minor.

John Barbirolli will devote the New York Philharmonic-Symphony program of Thursday evening and Friday afternoon, Nov. 8 and 9, to Schubert: the Second and Seventh Symphonies and the "Dances for Strings." Sigurd Rascher, Danish saxophonist who made his American debut recently with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, appears with the Philharmonic on Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, Nov. 11 and 12, in the Debussy Rhapsody and the Ibert Concertino, the works which he played in Boston.

Marcel Tabuteau, first oboist of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will be the soloist with that organization when they appear in Carnegie Hall, New York, on Tuesday evening, Nov. 7, under the direction of Eugene Ormandy. Mr. Tabuteau will play the Mozart Quartet in F (K. 370) for oboe and strings, which has been rescored by Stokowski for oboe and small orchestra. The program will also include Beethoven's First Symphony and Brahms' Second.

Nikolai Sokoloff will open the Seattle Symphony season on Monday evening, Nov. 13, in the Music Hall Theater. His program includes Ernest Schelling's "Victory Ball," Brahms' First Symphony and works of Weber and Wagner.

The Cleveland Orchestra's fifth pair of concerts in Severance Hall, Thursday and Saturday evenings, Nov. 9 and 11, includes David van Vactor's Symphony in D major with the composer conducting, Michel Brusselman's Suite after the Paganini Caprices, Debussy's "La Mer" and the overture to Verdi's "Sicilian Vespers." The Cleveland Orchestra's first "Twilight" Concert of the season on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 12, will perform works of Borodin, Tchaikovsky, Turina, Granados, Saint-Saens, Strauss and Brahms.

Menuhin to Play Brahms

SYMPHONY OFFERING SPARKLING

Post Nov 4, 1939

Hanson's Symphony, Toch's "Pinocchio" Included

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

Richest in incident of any Symphony Concert in the season thus far was that of yesterday afternoon, which included the first concert performance of Howard Hanson's Third Symphony, under the baton of the composer, the first performance at the Symphony Concerts of Ernst Toch's "Pinocchio" and the first Boston appearance of a notable 'cellist, Emanuel Feuermann. The conductor was Richard Burgin.

MUSIC LIVELY, PLAYFUL

With so much to talk about it is difficult to know where to begin, unless it be at the beginning. Toch's Overture, then, is three years old and was played at a Pop Concert under Arthur Fiedler in 1938.

Subtitled "A Merry Overture," "Pinocchio" is exactly that. The music is lively, playful, deft, harmonically and orchestrally up-to-date, yet in one recurring melody reminiscent of an earlier, franker day. One might easily dismiss the piece as slight; yet it would be a good thing if more of our native-born composers had the address, the certainty of touch and sureness of effect, possessed by this Austrian exile who now makes California his home. The performance was as sparkling as the music.

The hand in the new Symphony is the hand of Howard Hanson, but the voice is that of Jan Sibelius. Wishing to pay homage to the northern pioneers who played so important a part in the settling of the West, Mr. Hanson, perhaps all unconsciously, fell to aping the musical and orchestral manner of the composer who, more than any other, has proved himself the ideal spokesman of the North.

Music Very Sibelian

If the Symphony is not all Sibelian, it is predominantly that and in so many ways that a well-informed musician coming unexpectedly upon it might take it for some Sibelius piece that he did not know.

There also are places where the resemblance is so pointed that the listener expects the music to go on as it does in the First, Second and Third Symphonies of the Finnish master. And there are things that fall below the Sibelius level as, for example, the banal theme from the second movement that is sonorously proclaimed at the end.

From the foregoing it may be inferred that the new Symphony sounds well. It does. Intrinsically it is more satisfying and satisfactory than its two predecessors, the "Nordic" and the "Romantic." Yesterday it and its composer were cordially received.

'Cellist Masterly

For his piece Mr. Feuermann chose the familiar Concerto of Haydn, and upon it he lavished the technical skill, the command of variedly beautiful tone, the musical sensibility, the feeling for style that have caused him to be recognized as one of the foremost masters of his instrument.

There is just one composition for 'cello with orchestra which Mr. Feuermann might have played that would have asked of him all that he had to give, the "Don Quixote" of Strauss. Since that has always been one of Dr. Koussevitzky's great achievements as conductor, it is to be hoped that the two may some time join forces in it.

But perhaps Dr. Koussevitzky is disenchanted with Strauss. Only "Zarathustra" was forthcoming last season, and yesterday he let Mr. Burgin have "Don Juan," of which gift the assistant conductor made the most. The performance of this still vital and glowing work, which first burst upon the world 50 years ago this month, was remarkable, alike for its eloquence and its clarity, its propulsive force and its fine proportioning, an ideal difficult of attainment.

By the time the end was reached, however, the concert had been in progress for a full two hours, the audience was in a hurry to leave and the deserving Burgin did not get quite the acknowledgment that was due him. Only soloists can be sure of their applause.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN
NOV 4 - 1939

Conducts Here

Igor Stravinsky, famous composer, will lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a program of his own works in Metropolitan Theatre on Nov. 28.

MUSIC

Stravinsky to Conduct Boston Symphony Here in Own Music.

Igor Stravinsky, famous contemporary composer, will conduct a program of his own music in this city with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the 28th. Stravinsky was to have conducted the orchestra in Boston last year, but was unable to come to this country.

Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, will be soloist with the orchestra in its concert here.

The program:
Jeux de Cartes
Capriccio for orchestra and piano
Petrouchka
L'Oiseau de Feu

* * *

A free concert will be given by a infonietta of 30 pieces, conducted by rederick Reitz-Meyer, in Attleboro igh school on Tuesday night. It is he second of a series. It will be pre-eded by a lecture on music apprecia-on, at 8:15.

The program:
endelssohn Fingal's Cave overture
ach ....Suite in E-major eethoven ....
.....Symphony No. 2, D-major
Mozart Marriage of Figaro overture

THE MUSIC SEASON UNDER WAY:

Trans Nov 4 1939

Hanson Symphony

Two New Works Are Given Premieres; Feuermann's Boston Symphony Debut

By EDWARD DOWNES

Yesterday for the first time this season, Dr. Koussevitzky took a well-earned rest from the regular subsciption series of the Boston Symphony, and relinquished his baton to our distinguished concert master, Richard Burgin. Yet though Dr. Koussevitzky was not before us in the flesh yesterday afternoon, his adventurous spirit presided over the program which brought two new compositions and one extremely distinguished new guest artist before Symphony audiences.

The new guest was Emanul Feuermann. He is new, it might be added, only to these concerts, for since his American debut five years ago with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Society under Bruno Walter, he has been heard in recital in this city and vicinity, and has established himself as one of the greatest living masters of his instrument. Some, who know Casals playing, assure us that Feuermann is the greatest of them all. The writer, not having had the priviledge of hearing Casals, cannot join such a discussion. There is, moreover, no need to indulge in odious comparisons. Mr. Feuermann is a great artist and that is enough.

"Pinocchio, a Merry Overture," which opened the program, receiving its first performance at these concerts, is by the Viennese composer Ernst Toch. Toch, like Feuermann, has made this country his home. His Merry Overture is a facile, melodic piece, as light-footed as the subject of its music, modern without being aggressively so, and altogether well calculated to entertain Pinocchio-lovers of every age.

Radio Commissioned Work

The other new composition on yesterday's program was Howard Hanson's Third Symphony, conducted by the composeer in what was its first concert performance. It was written as a commission for the Columbia Broadcasting System and its first three movements were first performed over a Columbia network two years ago with the composer conducting.

According to John Burke's instructive program annotations, Dr. Hanson has said of his score: "Like my second or 'Romantic' Symphony, the third one, too, stands as an avowal against a certain coldly abstract, would-be non-sentimental music professed by certain composers of high gifts."

Dr. Hanson's attitude is one which will find considerable support in music audiences and even among professional musicians. But it is unfortunate that to protest against the modern cult of classicism, one should have to write a score reminiscent of the romantics—if Sibelius be a romantic. For Hanson's Third Symphony, at least on first aquaintance, seemed reminiscent of Sibelius.

That does not mean that it is not a score of inherent strength and high musical value, but the question remains whether such a strong influence from another composer of a preceding generation is not an unhealthy thing. Sibelius was brought to mind yesterday by the general orchestral color of the whole work and by such details as the handling of the woodwind, or typical throbbing pedal points in the tympani.

Feuermann Plays Haydn

It is regrettable that another concerto could not have been found for Mr. Feuermann's debut, than the charming but hackneyed Haydn D major. However, Feuermann's performance was notable for its aristocratic restraint, the purity and finesse of the melodic line in the slow movement, the warmth of tone that never became lush and finally, of course, for the agility of his fingers. Let us hope that Mr. Feuermann will appear often with the Boston Symphony in the future. Yesterday the audience gave him a major ovation before allowing him to leave.

Last on yesterday's program was Burgin's interpretation of Strauss's interpretation of Lenau's interpretation of an ancient legend: Don Juan. Such is the stuff of art! It was in the tender slow passages of the middle part of this score that Mr. Burgin did some of the best conducting of the afternoon. In earlier parts of the score a little more gallantry of spirit, a little more steel and fire would not have been out of place. But it was, all in all, a satisfying performance, a performance which emphasized at once the terseness of Strauss's musical thought and the volcanic splendor of his orchestral garb.

Herald Nov 4

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

SYMPHONY CONCERT

The fourth regular concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Richard Burgin conducted, except when Howard Hanson led the first concert performance of his third symphony. Emanuel Feuermann, cellist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

Toch	"Pinocchio, a Merry Overture"
Hanson	Symphony No. 3
Haydn	Concerto for violoncello in D major
Strauss	"Don Juan," Tone Poem Op. 20

Dr. Hanson, composer and director of the Eastman School of Music, is clearly in a quandary. He has no title for his new symphony, so we must hasten to his assistance. Of course it is possible that its being the "Third" symphony induced the composer to that excessive employment of series of thirds. But we have a more suitable title than that for him, if he cares to make use of it. Why not call it simply "Sibelian Leaves"?

We can imagine Dr. Hanson addressing his students in Rochester somewhat as follows: "Gentlemen, I shall now compose for you a symphony in four movements in the style of Sibelius, a great composer of whom you may just possibly have heard. There, you see, it is as easy as that!" Doubtless the star pupil would point out that the professor had also been helped by Dvorak, not to mention Brahms and Wagner here and there. Even Sir Edward Elgar left his calling-card. But by and large the symphony is a slavish imitation of Sibelius.

It is only unfortunate that Dr. Hanson, if he did take his students into his confidence, did not extend the same courtesy to us. Regrettably he appears to have considered the third symphony an original work and a convincing challenge against "a certain coldly abstract, would-be non-sentimental music professed by certain composers of high gifts." Alas, not only did Dr. Hanson have nothing important to say, he also had no manner of his own with which to impart it to us. And the bold challenge to the "certain composers," who have so wickedly misused their "high gifts," has turned out to be a very damp squib indeed.

The other piece, which was likewise heard yesterday for the first time at these concerts, is a horse of another color. Ernst Toch's "Pinocchio, a Merry Overture" is delightful music. It is as neatly contrived and as bright as its title implies. Moreover it does not strain to be merry. It is a classically constructed overture, with a fugue in the middle and a recapitulation. Although Mr. Fiedler introduced "Pinocchio" at a Pop concert, the present performance proves that it is worthy of more serious attention.

Hayden's familiar Cello Concerto is nowadays thought to have been written not by him at all but by Anton Kraft (1752-1820), his pupil. As Sir Donald Tovey has said, this does not make any difference. Haydn never "put forward his full powers" in the concerto form, as did Mozart. It remains, whoever wrote it, the most popular concerto for the cello.

Very often virtuosi choose to display their skill by mauling this work out of all recognition in an effort, apparently, to make it sound like Tchaikovsky. Mr. Feuermann, happily, is not one of these. His performance was a joy. A lovely tone, good taste and fluent technique united to make this one of the best interpretations imaginable.

Mr. Burgin elected to end the program with what is, all in all, Strauss's finest tone poem, "Don Juan." No malicious spirit seduced him to substitute a Sibelius tone poem at the last moment. Strauss was on the program and Strauss we got. Mr. Burgin and the orchestra were in good form in this brilliant war-horse, and the result was a satisfactory end to a strange concert.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week Dr. Koussevitzky will return to the platform to lead Beethoven's First Symphony, Walter Piston's Concertino for piano and orchestra (Mr. Sanroma, soloist) and Brahms' fourth symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

NOV 5 - 1939

SYMPHONY PROGRAMME

Walter Piston's Concertino for Piano and Orchestra will be performed at the next regular pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, to be given in Symphony hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, November 10 and 11. Jesus Maria Sanroma, who appeared in the first public performance of the Concertino, will be the soloist. Serge Koussevitzky will open the programme with the First Symphony of Beethoven in C major, and close it with the Fourth Symphony of Brahms in E minor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& Republican

NOV 5 - 1939

Berkshire Hills Events Headed by Birthday of Giraud Foster of Lenox

Leading Summer Resident of the Town Issues Invitations to 89th Anniversary Dinner at Bellefontaine Wednesday Night — Mr and Mrs Giraud Van Nest Foster, His Son and Daughter-in-Law, Plan House Party — Birthday Has Been Important Event of Late Season for More Than 40 Years — Mr Foster Is President of Lenox Club and Lake Mahkeenac Boat Club, and Senior Warden of Trinity Episcopal Church — Valuation of Berkshire Estates Lists Tanglewood, Summer Home of Boston Symphony, at $42,650 — Brookside at Great Barrington, Only Maintenance Endowed Berkshire Estate, Has Assessed Valuation of $154,800—Many Departures Listed as Season Closes

Special Dispatch to The Sunday Union and Republican

BERKSHIRE HILLS, Nov. 4—Giraud Foster has issued invitations to his 89th birthday dinner at Bellefontaine, Lenox, next Wednesday evening. His son and daughter-in-law, Mr and Mrs Giraud Van Nest Foster (Ruth Wood) of Swingalong Plantation, Wilson, La., have arrived for the event and will have a house party at Mr Foster's palatial home. For more than 40 years his birthday dinner has been one of the important society entertainments of the late Berkshire season. President of the Lenox club and Lake Mahkeenac Boat club, and senier warden of Trinity Episcopal church, Mr Foster has been for four decades a leading summer resident of Lenox. The assessed valuation of his estate is $151,200, of which $75,000 is on the house.

Berkshire Estates Valued

Tanglewood at Stockbridge, owned by the Boston Symphony orchestra, has an assessed valuation of $42,650, of which $15,000 is on the $80,000 music shed. It is expected a decision will be reached in two weeks whether six or nine concerts will be given next August. Opinion is divided among the trustees of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival corporation, Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, president.

Brookside at Great Barrington, owned by Miss Gertrude Dudley Walker, is the only maintenance-endowed Berkshire estate. Her father, the late William Hall Walker, inventor and an executive of the Eastman Kodak company, set apart in his will a fund of $1,500,000, the income to be used for care and upkeep of the property, which has assessed valuation of $154,800. Miss Walker's greenhouses and Italian garden, which are carried on the books of the Great Barrington assessors at $13,000 and $8000 respectively, are the largest and finest in the Berkshire hills.

With more than 700 acres at Eastover, Lenox, the late Harris Fahnestock retired New York city banker, who died recently, had the largest estate in area of any Lenox or Stockbridge summer resident.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DENVER, COLO.
ROCKY MT. NEWS

NOV 5 - 1939

Koussevitsky in 16th Season

Two Guest Conductors To Appear This Year

Serge Koussevitzky is in his 16th season as conductor of the Boston Symphony. Nicolai Malko, Russian conductor, and Tauno Hannikainen of Finland, are scheduled to conduct for a week each in mid-season.

Soloists will include Josef Hofmann, Rudolph Serkin, Walter Gieseking and Jan Smeterlin, pianists; Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, and Emanuel Feuermann, cellist.

Among works announced by Dr. Koussevitzky are Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," conducted by the composer; Debussy's "Martyrdom of St. Sebastian;" Mahler's "Song of the Earth," and a piano concerto of Prokofieff, played by the composer.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

N. Y. Section

NOV 5 - 1939

Concert Course in Oranges

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

EAST ORANGE, N. J., Nov. 4—Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano, will sing at the opening recital of the Community Concert Course of the Oranges on Dec. 8 at East Orange High School. Miss Maynor sang with the Boston Symphony in a recital last season at the Berkshire Festival.

Other artists in the series are Toscha Seidel, violinist, who will appear at the second concert on Jan. 18, and Mieczyslaw Munz, pianist, who will be heard on the closing program March 1.

Hanson Repeats Symphony

On Saturday evening, the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave a second performance of Howard Hanson's Third Symphony under the direction of the composer. Though in places the derivative character of this music seemed even clearer than on first hearing, there were long passages, especially in the first and second movements that improved with closer acquaintance.

Above all perhaps, one was impressed with the honesty of this music and the honesty of a man who, eschewing the neo-classical band-wagon of the musically smart, has dared to proclaim himself a romantic in a day and age when that means to lay one's self open to ridicule. That takes the courage of one's convictions and a character we respect.

Besides there is always the amusing possibility that the days of neo-classicism are numbered. Seven years ago in Paris it was gravely explained to this reporter that Stravinsky was now terribly vieux jeu and the future belonged to the romantics. Who knows? Dr. Hanson may be much more modern than we suspect!

76

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

NOV 5 - 1939

THE ORCHESTRAS

MARIO CASTELNUOVO-TEDESCO, Florentine composer-pianist who is now living near New York, will reappear with the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra under John Barbirolli's direction this afternoon in Carnegie Hall as soloist in his second piano concerto. His overture to "Twelfth Night" and the other works on last Thursday's program, Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for Strings and Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet," also will be repeated.

Mr. Barbirolli will devote the Philharmonic-Symphony's Carnegie Hall programs for next Thursday night and Friday afternoon, Nov. 9 and 10, to music by Franz Schubert, including six minuets and trios for strings, the second symphony, in B flat, and the last symphony, in C major. Sigurd Rascher, who is the first saxophonist to appear with this orchestra in its ninety-two years' career, will make his New York debut in the concerts of next Saturday night, opening the popular-priced students' series, and Sunday afternoon, Nov. 11 and 12, playing Debussy's rhapsody for saxophone in Ernest Ansermet's revised version and, for the first time here, Jacques Ibert's concertino for saxophone and orchestra. He played both works for his American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Oct. 20 and 21.

He was born in Germany, of a Swedish father and an English mother, in 1907. In Stuttgart, where he had attended high school, he studied the clarinet from 1925 to 1927, but had to interrupt his studies on account of financial difficulties. Turning to the saxophone, he became a jazz player for three years, until halted by illness. Deciding to cultivate the saxophone as a concert instrument, he was graduated from the Stuttgart High School for Music with highest honors in 1931, and made his debut in Hanover in 1932. Meanwhile, to meet the problem of repertoire, he had persuaded many prominent composers to write for him. After two years as a professor at the Royal Danish Conservatory in Copenhagen, he joined the faculty of the conservatory of Malmo, Sweden, in 1934, and now lives in that country.

Debussy's Saxophone Rhapsody

Debussy's saxophone rhapsody is the result of a commission given him, probably in 1901, by Mrs. Richard J. Hall, a Boston patroness of music and amateur saxophonist, who was a sponsor of the Boston Orchestral Club, an amateur group which was active from 1884 to 1911. But, according to John N. Burk's Boston Symphony program notes, Debussy was not enthusiastic about composing for the saxophone and too conscientious to dash off music carelessly for a medium with which he was unfamiliar. In 1911 Debussy finally sent Mrs. Hall a sketch with practically the full notation and the solo part complete, but with only occasional indications of the orchestration. In 1919 Roger-Ducasse provided a full score from the sketch and the work was first played in Paris on May 11 of that year with André Caplet conducting.

It was played by the Boston Symphony in 1932, with Louis Speyer performing the solo on the English horn. Mr. Ansermet, in his edition, has amplified the saxophone part by adding to it passages assigned by Roger-Ducasse to other wind instruments. Debussy's original sketch has been lent by the Hall family's estate to the New England Conservatory in Boston. Ibert's concertino, composed in 1935 and dedicated to Mr. Rascher, was first played by him at a concert of "Le Triton" in Paris on May 2, 1935.

Debussy's "Berceuse Heroique" will also be played next Saturday night as an Armistice Day observance. Sir Hamilton Harty's arrangement of Handel's Fireworks Music and Schumann's Second Symphony complete the program, which, except for the Berceuse, will be repeated next Sunday. The program for the following Thursday and Friday, Nov. 16 and 17, has not yet been announced. According to an earlier statement, Mr. Barbirolli has been considering either Bela Bartok's "Wonderful Mandarin" or Arthur Bliss's "Checkmates" for those dates. On Saturday night and Sunday afternoon, Nov. 18 and 19, before the orchestra leaves on its fortnight's tour, Zino Francescatti, young French violinist, will make his New York debut as soloist in Paganini's concerto in D major.

Philadelphia Orchestra

Marcel Tabuteau, first oboist of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will be the soloist in the second concert of its Carnegie Hall series under Eugene Ormandy's direction next Tuesday night, playing Leopold Stokowski's arrangement for small orchestra of Mozart's quartet in F major (K 370) for oboe and strings, composed in 1781. Mr. Stokowski's version was introduced in Philadelphia in 1920, but has not yet been played here. Two symphonies, the first of Beethoven and second of Brahms, complete the program. Mr. Tabuteau, who was born in Compiegne and studied in Paris, came to America on Walter Damrosch's recommendation, and played under his direction in the New York Symphony. After some years with the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, when Arturo Toscanini was one of its conductors, he joined the Philadelphia Orchestra in 1915.

Other New York Concerts

With this concert, the orchestra is completing its first tour of the season. Leopold Stokowski will conduct its Philadelphia concerts of next Friday and Saturday, and its next New York concert on Nov. 21.

The training orchestra of the National Orchestral Association will give the first Carnegie Hall concert of its tenth season under Leon Barzin's direction Monday night, Nov. 13, with Marcel Maas, Belgian pianist, as soloist in Mozart's concerto in D minor and Franck's Symphonic Variations. The program begins with Beethoven's third "Leonore" overture and closes with the first performance of de Bourguignon's "Puzzle" suite.

Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra's first concerts of the season in Carnegie Hall on Thursday night and Saturday afternoon, Nov. 23 and 25. The programs have not yet been announced. The works to be heard next Friday and Saturday in Boston at Symphony Hall are Beethoven's first symphony, Walter Piston's piano concertino, with J. M. Sanroma as soloist, and Brahms's fourth symphony.

In the benefit concert to be given in Madison Square Garden on Monday night, Nov. 27, for the benefit of the Musicians' Fund of Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians, Dr. Frank Black will conduct an orchestra of 150 N. B. C. Symphony, Philharmonic-Symphony and Metropolitan Opera players, with Emanuel Feuermann, cellist, and Teresa Steine, eleven-year-old pianist, as soloists.

Out of Town

Hans Kindler will open the National Symphony Orchestra's "Beloved Masterpieces" series in Washington at Constitution Hall this afternoon, conducting Tchaikovsky's fifth symphony and works of Weber, Bizet and Johann Strauss. Next Wednesday night Pierre Luboshutz and Genia Nemenoff will be the soloists in the "Castellana" concerto for two pianos by Mary Howe, of Washington, and Mozart's concerto in E flat.

The Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra will begin its third season since its reorganization and its second under Fritz Reiner's regular conductorship next Friday night and Sunday afternoon. There will be sixteen pairs of subscription concerts. Vladimir Bakaleinikoff, who was for many years associate conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony, will be assistant conductor and first violist. The new concertmaster, Hugo Kolberg, formerly held this position with the Berlin Philharmonic under Wilhelm Furtwaengler.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

NOV 5 - 1939

Saxophonist in Symphonic Debut

Rascher to Play With Philharmonic—A Schubert Program

This afternoon the Florentine composer-pianist, Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco, will be soloist for the third time with the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall, playing his own Second Piano Concerto.

The orchestral part of the program is also a repetition of last week's Thursday-Friday pair: Introduction and Allegro for Strings, Elgar; Overture to "Twelfth Night," Castelnuovo-Tedesco; "Romeo and Juliet," Tchaikovsky.

John Barbirolli will devote the program of next Thursday evening and Friday afternoon to music of Schubert: Dances for Strings (Five Minuets and Six Trios), Symphony No. 2 in B-flat major and Symphony No. 7 in C major.

Sigurd Rascher, saxophonist, will be the first saxophone soloist to appear at the Philharmonic's regular subscription concerts in its 98 years of existence when he plays with the orchestra next Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon. He will be presented in two works: the first New York performance of Debussy's Rhapsody for Saxophone and Orchestra in the revised version of Ernest Ansermet, and the first New York performance of Ibert's Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra. Rascher made his American debut on Oct. 20 and 21 with the Boston Symphony under Koussevitzky, the first saxophonist ever to have appeared with that organization.

The orchestral program for Rascher's debut includes the Handel-Harty Suite, "The Royal Fireworks," the Second Symphony of Schumann, and (because it is Armistice Day) Debussy's Berceuse Heroique (In Memoriam to the Fallen).

Ernest Schelling who, at the beginning of the war, acted as postman for the village of Celigny in Switzerland in place of the regular postman, who was called to the border, returned yesterday on the liner Vulcania, accompanied by Mrs. Schelling. The series of six Saturday morning Concerts for Young People at Carnegie Hall opens Nov. 18. It will be Mr. Schelling's 17th season as conductor.

The Carnegie Hall series, with a sellout in sight, has been augmented this year by another series of three Town Hall concerts, scheduled for the Monday afternoons of Dec. 11, Jan. 22 and Feb. 19. For this series there are still good seats in all parts of the house, although almost all the loges have been taken by subscription.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

NOV 5 - 1939

SCHUMAN WINS PRIZE

WILLIAM SCHUMAN, New York composer, is the first recipient of the new award in composition offered jointly by the Town Hall and the League of Composers. The members of the selection committee which made the choice and represented both organizations were Mrs. Theodore Steinway, Olga Samaroff Stokowski, Aaron Copland and Randall Thompson.

As winner of the award, Mr. Schuman has been commissioned to compose a work either for a soloist or a chamber music ensemble. He also will receive $200 donated by the league. The composition must be completed in time for presentation this season in Town Hall, where it will receive its première, either by an artist or group of artists slated to appear in that auditorium. It will be included as part of a regular program.

Mr. Schuman was born in this city in 1910. He received the Bachelor of Science and Master of Arts degrees at Columbia University. Later he studied abroad. He taught at Columbia in 1936 and at present is a member of the faculty of Sarah Lawrence College. He now holds a Guggenheim Fellowship. His compositions, which include several symphonies, have been performed in this city and in Austria. One of his symphonies was played recently by Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Schuman is now writing his third string quartet, which he hopes to finish next month.

In a statement thanking the selection committee for its part in making the award, Walter W. Naumburg, chairman of the Town Hall music committee, said that he hoped the award would become another important part of the Town Hall's new policy of enlarging the scope of the institution's concert department.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

NOV 5 - 1939

William Schuman Wins Composition Award

The young American composer, William Schuman, has been chosen the first recipient of the new Award in Composition offered under the joint auspices of the Town Hall and the League of Composers. The choice was made by a selection committee representing both organizations and composed of Aaron Copland, Mrs. Theodore Steinway, Madame Olga Samaroff Stokowski and Randall Thompson.

According to the terms of the award, the winner has received a commission to write a composition for solo performer, or a chamber music work, suitable for performance in Town Hall, and will receive a check for $200 which has been donated by the League of Composers. The original manuscript is to be finished in time for performance during the current season and will be offered for a first hearing to an artist or a group of artists who are scheduled to appear in Town Hall during the season, for inclusion in their performance in that auditorium.

Believing that the most important works result from commissions rather than competitions, the selection committee decided to select a young composer who, in its opinion, possessed exceptional talent and whose work thus far merited further encouragement.

Mr. Schuman was born in New York in 1910. He received his Bachelor of Science and Master of Arts degrees from Columbia University and later studied abroad. Mr. Schuman was a member of the faculty at Columbia in 1936 and is now on the faculty of Sarah Lawrence College. His works have been played in New York and in Austria, and he has written several symphonies, one of which was recently played by Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony. Mr. Schuman at present is a holder of a Guggenheim Fellowship.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH

NOV 5 - 1939

NEW FRIENDS OF MUSIC IN 4TH SEASON

New York —(U.P.)— The New Friends of Music, a business man's highly successful venture into the realm of musical philanthropy, opened its fourth consecutive season on Sunday afternoon, Oct. 29, at Town Hall, New York.

The first concert featured the Budapest String Quartet, with William Primrose, Scottish violinist of the NBC Symphony Orchestra, and Ellen Stone, cornetist, as assisting artists.

The New Friends was founded in 1936 by Ira A. Hirschmann, department store executive, and a gifted amateur pianist.

Joseph Szigeti's American tour opens with the Boston and New York premieres of the Ernest Bloch Concerto under Serge Koussevitzky, in Symphony Hall, Boston, on Jan. 5 and 6; at Carnegie Hall, New York, on Jan. 11. It was this work which the London Times last spring called "the event of the Royal Philharmonic's 127th season" and the Manchester Guardian termed "the crown of Szigeti's career."

The violinist also plays in January with the Saidenberg Sinfonietta of Chicago and the Miami Symphony. On Feb. 6 he appears with the Louisville Symphony. His tour will end in April with a sonata program at Washington's Library of Congress together with the composer-pianist, Bela Bartok, celebrating the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Anniversary Festival.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

NOV 5 - 1939

WITH THE NATION'S ORCHESTRAS

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, will open its New York season of five concerts Nov. 22 in Carnegie Hall. The orchestra's program, to be directed by Dr. Koussevitzky this Friday afternoon and Saturday night in Boston, consists of Beethoven's First symphony; Walter Piston's Concertino for Piano and Orchestra, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist, and Brahms's Fourth symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

NOV 6 - 1939

Boston Symphony Friends May Attend Annual Meeting Nov. 14

Members of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Society are privileged to attend the annual meeting which takes place this year on Nov. 14 at 4 p. m. in Boston at Symphony Hall, according to Reginald C. Foster, chairman of the Friends.

A short musical program by the orchestra under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will follow. Miss Dorothy Maynor, soprano, will be the soloist.

Trustees of the orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky will receive members at tea at the conclusion of the music in the upper foyer where a special exhibition of tapestries, lent by the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, will be on view.

Many Hartford music lovers are members of the Friends of the Orchestra.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

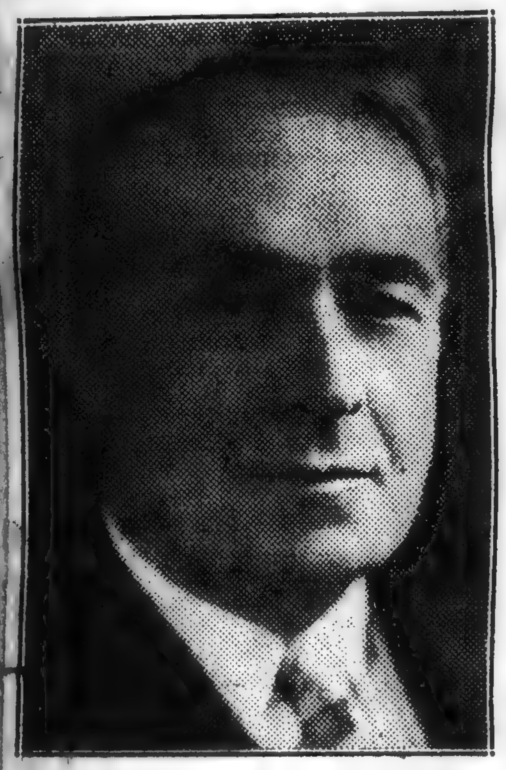
77

NOV 8 - 1939

Koussevitzky Will Present Franck Work

Famous D Minor Symphony and Two American Pieces on Boston Program Here

Two important American works and a highly popular classic symphony make up the program as announced Tuesday by William H. Mortensen, managing director of the Bushnell Memorial for the Boston Symphony Orchestra concert at the Memorial on Tuesday evening, November 21. In this, the second event of the Bushnell Concert Series, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will lead his musicians in a list that includes William Schuman's "American Festival Overture"; Randall Thompson's "Symphony No. 2 in E minor," and the Cesar Franck "Symphony in D minor."



DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY.

The Schuman Overture was first performed on October 6 of this year by the Boston Symphony. Thompson's Second Symphony, composed 1930-31, was first performed by the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, under Howard Hanson on March, 24, 1932. It has since had frequent performances by other orchestras.

Mr. Schuman has contributed the following interesting comment about his overture: "American Festival Overture" was composed last summer for these concerts of American music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first three notes of this piece will be recognized by some listeners as the "call to play" of boyhood days. In New York City it is yelled on the syllables, "Wee-Awk-Eee" to get the gang together for a game or a festive occasion of some sort. This call very naturally suggested itself for a piece of music being composed for a very festive occasion. From this it should not be inferred that the Overture is program music. In fact, the idea for the music came to mind before the origin of the theme was recalled. The development of this bit of "folk material" then, is along purely musical lines.

The first section of the work is concerned with the material discussed above, and the ideas growing out of it. This music leads to a transition section and the subsequent announcement by the Violas of a Fugue subject. The entire middle section is given over to this Fugue. The orchestration is at first for strings alone, later for wood winds alone and finally, as the Fugue is brought to fruition, by the strings and wood winds in combination. This climax leads to the final section of the work, which consists of opening material paraphrased and the introduction of new subsidiary ideas. The tempo of the work, save the last measures, is fast."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

NOV 8 - 1939

Boston Symphony To Play Works By Contemporaries

"The American Festival Overture" by William Schuman, the Second Symphony of Randall Thompson and the Cesar Franck Symphony in D minor make up the program which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform at the Bushnell Memorial Tuesday evening, Nov. 21, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

This will be the second event of the Bushnell Concert Series.

Schuman's Overture is a recently composed work, having been played for the first time this season by the Boston Orchestra. Mr. Thompson's Symphony had its first performance in 1932 and has since frequently appeared on symphony programs.

The Cesar Franck work, now one of the most popular symphonies ever written, got off to a dismal start when it was first played at the Paris Conservatoire in 1889. Vincent d'Indy, a pupil of Franck, describes as follows the attitude of the audience at that first hearing:

"The subscribers could make neither head nor tail of it, and the musical authorities were much in the same position. I inquired of one of them—a professor at the Conservatoire and a kind of factotum of the committee—what he thought of the work.

"'That, a symphony?' he replied in contemptuous tones. 'But, by dear sir, who ever heard of writing for the English horn in a symphony? Just mention a single symphony by Haydn or Beethoven introducing the English horn. There, well, you see—your Franck's music may be whatever you please, but it will certainly never be a symphony.'

"This was the attitude of the Conservatoire in the year of grace 1889. At another door of the concert hall, the composer of 'Faust' (Gounod), escorted by a train of adulators, male and female, fulminated a kind of papal decree to the effect that this symphony was the 'affirmation of incompetence pushed to dogmatic lengths.'"

"Of course," writes Charles O'Connell, "this was but one more instance of the curious inability of most people to accept with open mind and heart anything that differs from the conventional. It has happened before, in music; it happened with each succeeding season, and it will continue to happen as long as human nature remains what it is.

"Nevertheless, we are still, in these days, puzzled by it, especially when we consider the extraordinary popularity of this symphony, its wealth of tender and beautiful melody, its drama, its conflict of mind and spirit, its opulent tonal color. The French say that to understand it is to forgive all. Since we think we have come to understand this music, it is possible, that, unlike Franck's contemporaries, we can forgive daring and originality and even honesty of purpose that disregards all else."

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW BEDFORD, MASS.
MERCURY

NOV 9 - 1939

I. Stravinsky to Conduct Own Works in Providence

Igor Stravinsky will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its ~~second visit to~~ Providence this season at the Metropolitan Theater on Tuesday evening, Nov. 28, at 8:30. The program will be entirely of the noted Russian composer's own works. Two are familiar from many performances in visits of the Russian ballet and on symphony programs—"Petrushka" and "Oiseau de Feu" (Firebird). Less well known numbers are "Jeux de Cartes" and "Capriccio" (with Jesus Sanroma as soloist).

Stravinsky is living in Cambridge this season, having left Paris, where he has taken out French citizenship, because of the war. He occupies the Charles Eliot Norton Chair of Poetry at Harvard, the first composer to be so honored. His discussions in the New Lecture Hall have been followed with keen interest by students at Harvard and Radcliffe and from the music schools of Boston.

During the Winter, Stravinsky will conduct his own works with major orchestras throughout the country. Boston will not have his services till Spring, when he conducts the orchestra in Symphony Hall, during Koussevitzky's vacation period, in a Stravinsky festival in which he will probably also appear as soloist for piano.

A. C. R.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LONG ISLAND CITY, N. Y.
STAR-JOURNAL

NOV 9 - 1939

Douglaston Music Guild Named To Aid Tanglewood Festival

For the second consecutive year the Douglaston Music Guild, with headquarters at 42-15 Douglaston parkway, Douglaston, has been named the official Long Island representative for the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood near Lenox, Mass.

The festival, which has gained national attention, will again stage six concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra early in August. A large delegation from Queens attended the concert series last August and numerous reservations have been planned with the guild for this season.

Active in plans for the festival is Lyra Nicholas, of Douglaston, director of the Douglaston Music Guild. Mrs. Nicholas recognized as a concert pianist and composer of children's songs, has been reelected to the board of advisers for the event.

New recruits are being added each week to the Guild Choral, a chorus of women which rehearses each Friday morning in the Guild Hall.

The choral group is under the direction of Olive Ayer Dutton, official choral conductor of the New York State Federation of Women's Club, the Garden City Women's Club Choral and the Singers' Club of Plandome. Miss Dutton is a member of the Dessoff Choirs. She studied under Frederick E. Bristol and Madame Frieda Ashforth of Manhattan and won a scholarship with Emilio deGorgoza.

The Douglaston group, which opened its two-hour weekly rehearsals on Oct. 13, will hold its third annual spring concert on April 20.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ST. LOUIS, MO.
POST-DISPATCH

NOV 9 - 1939

'PRELUDE AND FUGUE' SYMPHONY OFFERING

Orchestra to Introduce It in U. S.—'Peter and Wolf' Also at Week's Concerts.

With Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony as the principal offering, the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra will give the first performances in St. Louis of two other works in its second pair of subscription concerts tomorrow afternoon and Saturday night at Municipal Auditorium.

Serge Prokofieff's musical fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," which is to be played at today's student concert by the orchestra, will be one of the two new works scheduled for the regular concerts.

Charles Galloway, St. Louis baritone, will have the part of the narrator in the novelty, which was written in 1936 and heard in this country for the first time at a Boston Symphony Orchestra concer[redacted]

The other new offering is "Prelude and Fugue," by the Italian composer, Francesco Manfredini. It is being introduced in the United States by the St. Louis orchestra.

The program follows:

Prelude and Fugue— Francesco Manfredini
(First Time in America)
Alborado del Gracioso — — — Ravel
"Peter and the Wolf" — — Prokofieff
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica" — Beethoven
I. Allegro con brio.
II. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai.
III. Scherzo: Allegro vivace.
IV. Finale: Allegro Molto.

Piston Concertino in Prospect

C.S.M.
Nov 9, 1939

By Alfred H. Meyer

For a "first performance at these concerts" Prof. Walter Piston's Concertino for Piano and Orchestra comes to the week-end program at Symphony Hall with Jesús María Sanromá as soloist. This concertino was played in Boston by Mr. Zighera's chamber orchestra, Feb. 24, 1938. It also has been played in New York City and in Rochester. It was written as one of the first group of six works commissioned by the Columbia Broadcasting Company for radio performance, and had its first performance over the Columbia Broadcasting System on June 20, 1937, with Mr. Piston conducting and Mr. Sanromá as soloist.

The Concertino has "no program or descriptive purpose," writes Mr. Piston. It is "concerned only with musical ideas and their development." It is scored for piccolo, flute, oboes, clarinets, bassoons, horns in pairs, and strings. Originally the number of strings was small. At present full strings are used. The idiom is that of contemporary dissonant counterpoint with which those who know Mr. Piston's music are familiar.

The Concertino is in a single movement, divisible into five sections, and requires about 14 minutes for performance. It begins allegro con spirito with preluding chords in the orchestra. In the third measure the piano begins with a brightly rhythmed line in double octaves. This is presently repeated in the orchestra. It is followed by a more relaxed idea, "meno mosso, espressivo," for solo piano. We have here the two contrasting ideas of a sonata-exposition.

After a mild climax the second section, allegro (l'istesso tempo) continues with a more lilting, scherzo-like music. A fugato in wood-winds leads eventually to the third section, adagio. This is essentially lyric, with the theme given first to a solo 'cello, then to solo piano, then developed in the orchestra against arpeggiating piano figures. Finally it yields to contrapuntal treatment in piano. This in turn introduces the piano cadenza, which leads to the fourth section, a recapitulation of the opening section, with the principal theme now in the orchestra, and with its contrasting theme in a developed form again in the piano.

The fifth section, piu allegro, is a faster and more brilliant variant of the second section, with the fugato now speeded up and in strings. The Coda continues with a rhythmic climax, vivace, with a short, spirited development of the material of the last section. It will be noted that this short concertino contains briefly all the elements of a full four-movement work.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ST. LOUIS, MO.
STAR TIMES

NOV 10 1939

MUSICIANS SCOFF IDEA OLD VIOLINS CAN BE DUPLICATED

BOSTON, Nov. 10.—(U. P.) — A group of Boston Symphony Orchestra violinists [redacted] finding of a Harvard scientist that tones of fabulously-priced old violins "can be practically duplicated by modern $100 instruments." Their consensus was "just show us where we can find the wonderful $100 violins," after being told that Dr. Frederick A. Saunders of the Jefferson Physics Laboratory had reported to the American Acoustical Society at Iowa City, Ia., Saturday the results of tests with a photographic sound-analyzer.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE-DEMOCRAT

NOV 10 1939

Beethoven's 'Eroica' at Symphony Today

Two new compositions will be heard along with Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony when the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, with Vladimir Golschmann conducting, presents its second pair of subscription concerts of the season, this afternoon and tomorrow night, at the Municipal Auditorium.

Serge Prokofieff's musical fairy tale, "Peter and the Wolf," which was given its first local performance at yesterday's student conference, will be repeated for the regular concerts. Charles Galloway, well-known St. Louis barytone, is singing the part of the narrator in the novelty. The work was written by the Russian composer-pianist in 1936, and was heard in this country for the first time at a Boston Symphony Orchestra con~~cert in March, 1938. Each char~~acter of the tale is presented by an instrument in the orchestra.

The second new offering to be heard is "Prelude and Fugue" by the seventeenth and eighteenth century Italian composer, Francesco Manfredini, which will be given its first American performance by Golschmann.

Discovered by a French singer-musicologist in a European library, the composition will be given its first American performance by Golschmann. The work is lofty and calm at the beginning, but ends in a magnificent climax.

The program, in detail, follows:

Prelude and Fugue Francesco Manfredini
(First time in America)
Alborado del Gracioso Ravel
"Peter and the Wolf" Prokofieff
Symphony No. 3, "Eroica" Beethoven
1. Allegro con brio.
2. Marcia funebre: Adagio assai.
3. Scherzo: Allegro vivace.
4. Finale: Allegro Molto.

Symphony Violinists Hit Professor's Tone Findings

Traveler
Nov. 10
1939

A group of Boston Symphony Orchestra violinists today ridiculed the finding of a Harvard scientist that tones of fabulously-priced old violins "can be practically duplicated by modern $100 instruments," the United Press reported.

Their consensus was "just show us where we can find the wonderful $100 violins," after being told that Dr. Frederick A. Saunders of the Jefferson physics laboratory had reported to the American Acoustical Society at Iowa City, Ia., Saturday the results of tests with a photographic sound-analyzer.

"So the professor used an analyzer for tone," said Louis Krasner, violin soloist appearing with the orchestra. "Can he make an analyzer for genius? When a laboratory experiment pretends to show that the tones of the old makers' violins are like those of modern ones, the mechanics do not tell the whole truth. They can only compare superficialities."

Pointing to a Gofrilla made about 1725 and owned by Violinist Nicholai Kassman, Gaston Elcus, a first violin, wanted to know if the professor "can tell me where to find a fiddle as good as this one for less than $2500."

"For many years," he said, "I have been trying new violins. As a result, I now play a $3000 instrument made by Tononi in 1750. It responds with such little effort compared with the new ones, and it gives such a clear pianissimo that it is worth the high price."

PROFESSOR EXPLAINS VIOLINISTS MISINFORMED

"I am afraid the members of the Boston Symphony orchestra have been misinformed and have entirely the wrong slant on my findings with a photographic sound analyzer," Prof. Saunders said today on hearing the reports of the orchestra members.

"What I did find was that certain features of tone quality can be duplicated, but they cannot be duplicated altogether," Prof. Saunders said.

Refusing to comment further on the reports, Prof. Saunders said he would like to talk with the orchestra leader and "set him straight on my findings."

18

Neo-Classical Gaiety

Transcript Nov 11 1939

Koussevitzky Conducts Piston Concertino; Sanroma Soloist in Brilliant Performance

By EDWARD DOWNES

Sandwiched between two grandiose symphonic structures, Beethoven's First and Brahms' Fourth Symphonies, the Concertino for piano and chamber orchestra of Walter Piston made its first appearance on the programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist and Serge Koussevitzky directing the ensemble.

Mr. Sanroma, whose collaborations with the Boston Symphony have made him a familiar figure hereabouts, was in excellent pianistic fettle. With admirable aplomb he tossed off the most fearsome scales and glittering passage-work seemed to drip off the ends of his fingers. For this composition asks considerable technique of the soloist when taken at yesterday's tempo, and that tempo, we know, has the sanction of the composer.

The work is not pretentious. It is not a concerto in one movement, but a vivacious concertino, with the emphasis, perhaps, on the diminutive ending of the word. Slow lyric passages there are, but they appeared largely as foils to the deft allegros.

In spite of, or perhaps because of the strict logic of its form and calculated proportions, the concertino has a certain urbane grace and gaiety. It carefully avoids getting involved with any disturbing romantic emotions, and it is very light-hearted—so light-hearted indeed, that it gets a little self conscious about it at moments in a determined effort not to be taken too seriously.

As a sparkling and not too difficult to understand piece of modern neo-classicism, the new work was received with an enthusiasm unusual in Friday audiences. Mr. Piston was obliged to appear and share the applause with Koussevitzky and Sanroma.

Virtuoso Beethoven First

The program began with a virtuoso performance of Beethoven's First Symphony that one would have to go far to match today. Particularly the last movement had a transparency, a delicacy and precision which, considering the speed taken, were almost miraculous. On the other hand the question arises whether such a tempo, for all its brilliance, is one to bring out the maximum musical content of that movement. To be sure, Beethoven has marked his finale, "Allegro molo e vivace," very fast and vivaciously, but it is generally accepted that an allegro in Beethoven's day was somewhat slower than it is today.

Koussevitzky's tempo on the other hand was a shade faster than that ordinarily taken, even today, with the result that the whole last movement was a tour de force of breathless delicacy, which however sacrificed an appreciable amount of its own melodic charm.

Because the first two Beethoven symphonies seem to us so much like their Haydn-Mozart models, there is always the danger of our thinking of them as 18th century "period" pieces. The gap between the Second and Third Symphonies may be enormous, but after all they were both written by Beethoven.

Authoritative Brahms

A stirring performance of the Fourth Symphony of Johannes Brahms followed the intermission. Here no inhibition stood between Dr. Koussevitzky and the powerful emotion of the Brahms score. The result was a powerfully dramatic interpretation, from the opening allegro, which is almost an allegretto, to the impassioned utterance of the final passacaglia.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the next two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Nov. 17 and 18. The opening number will be the American Festival Overture of William Howard Schuman, which was written for the Boston Symphony's two preseason concerts of American music. The program also includes Randall Thompson's Second Symphony in E minor and Cesar Franck's D minor Symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

NOV 11 1939

Saxophonist

A MINUTE shred of musical history will be made the evening of Armistice Day, when, if all goes well, a saxophonist will appear with the Philharmonic, in Carnegie Hall. The soloist is a young man named Sigurd Rascher, a graduate of numerous Continental jazz bands. He will play, for the first time in New York, Debussy's Rhapsody for Saxophone and Orchestra, and Jacques Ibert's Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra. He made his American début last month with the Boston Symphony, playing the same two pieces, and received from the critics what amounts, in Boston, to rave notices ("An extraordinary technique"—Durgin, Boston Globe; "Indeed a virtuoso"—Williams, Boston Herald). We found the virtuoso and his hotcha instrument in an ice-cold apartment at the extreme western end of Seventieth Street. His wife and three-month-old son are living in Strängnäs, Sweden. His windows offer a view of the New York Central tracks and a large billboard reading "Hear Paul Whiteman in the Terrace Room at the Hotel New Yorker." Rascher finds this tantalizing, because he has long admired Whiteman's phonograph records and would like to go right down to the Terrace Room. He told us that he was practicing most of the day for his Philharmonic appearance, however, so Whiteman would have to wait. The apartment was cold because Rascher likes it that way. "When my hands turn blue, I like it best," he gloated.

Rascher was born in Berlin of a Swedish father and an English mother. He is thirty-two, a reddish-blond fellow with topaz eyes and a perpetual surprised expression. He has been a professional musician, off and on, for the past thirteen years. As a boy, he studied clarinet, but changed to the saxophone because somebody told him it was easier. For three years, 1926 through 1929, he played with bands all over Switzerland, Holland, and Germany, in cafés, movie houses, and hotels. For the next three years he taught woodcraft in a Berlin private school. During this period he decided on a career as a serious saxophonist. Since there were almost no compositions for the instrument, he asked a number of composers to help him out. Quite a few did—Ibert, Glazunov, Coates, and such relatively obscure men as Jacobi, Bentzon, and Tarp. In 1932, Rascher made his first appearance with a symphony orchestra, at the Hanover Music Festival. He played a concerto especially composed for him by one Edmund von Borck, and from that day on he never again played a note of jazz. In 1934 he was appointed Professor of Saxophone at the Royal Danish Conservatory in Copenhagen, a position he still holds. The Conservatory is generous with leaves of absence, and Rascher has been able to give concerts in most of Europe and Scandinavia, as well as Australia.

The saxophone, Rascher will tell you, is the finest solo wind instrument, either reed or brass. His technique is all his own, and involves cross-fingering as well as other matters too abstruse to explain. When he started his serious study of the sax, Rascher was surprised at the unsuspected technical resources it offered; for instance, he found it would play a whole octave higher than anybody thought it would. His instrument is no grander than you'd find in an ordinary band; it's a gold-plated Beuscher, made in Elkhart, Indiana, which he bought two years ago in London. The ideal surroundings for playing or listening to saxophone music, Rascher assured us, are the depths of a forest in winter. He plays the sax all by himself in the Swedish forests, he told us, adding, "You should hear it—something!" When he arrived in New York he was all for practicing in Central Park, but the Philharmonic management tactfully discouraged him.

MUSIC

Herald Nov 11

SYMPHONY CONCERT

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The fifth concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

Beethoven, Symphony No. 1 in C major Op. 21
Piston, Concertino for piano and orchestra
Brahms. Symphony No. 4 in E minor Op. 98

This was one of those concerts where criticism must either load itself down with superlatives or take a holiday and be mercifully brief. It was a beautifully balanced program superbly played. Since the two symphonies are indisputably masterpieces each in its own way, what more is there to say?

Perhaps Beethoven's First Symphony is not universally considered a masterpiece. The finale is first-class fooling, and the whole symphony is a marvel of gaiety in the manner of Haydn. No breath of the new romanticism disturbs it; it is straight, classical 18th century. The fact that it lives so securely in its own right—not because it is the first symphony of a great composer—should entitle it to our full respect. Certainly there are few works that can be so heartily enjoyed Moreover the only way to hear this music is at the hands of a crack orchestra such as the Boston Symphony.

We looked up our review of Mr. Piston's Concertino after the performance by the Zighera Chamber Orchestra in 1938 and find with some dismay that the work was rather solemnly slated. The diminutive in the title should have been the clue, for the composer had clearly no intention of writing a very serious concerto. It is actually a merry and attractive piece, with the somewhat too prolonged counterweight of a dreamy slow movement.

Why the program notes insist that the Concertino is in five sections is curious, though doubtless capable of being literally proved. Surely it consists in a first movement leading to a slow movement, a recapitulation and a coda. Like all Mr. Piston's music, its form is logical and precise.

Mr. Sanroma was just the pianist for the Concertino, and indeed has been the soloist in the other performances. He had exactly the right solidity of touch and neat technique for the rapid, percussive passages; and he also brought out the more lyrical subjects effectively. There was cordial applause for soloist and conductor, as well as for Mr. Piston who came onto the platform to acknowledge it.

Having offered a light first half of the program, Dr Koussevitzky turned his attention and his talents as a conductor to the tragic in the 4th Symphony of Brahms A good argument could be sustained for this as the finest of all Brahm's symphonies. On the intellectual side it is much the most impressive, and the emotional values come to be appreciated as correspondingly profound. Yesterday's was a stirring performance, with orchestra and conductor in splendid form.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week the program is as follows: William Schuman's American Festival Overture; Randall Thompson's Symphony No. 2 in E minor; Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Globe

MUSIC

Nov. 11

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Piano Concertino by Walter Piston of the Harvard music faculty received first Boston Symphony performance yesterday afternoon. Jesus Maria Sanroma took the solo part. The work stood midway upon an otherwise strictly conservative program, which had Beethoven's First Symphony as its beginning and the Fourth Symphony of Brahms for conclusion. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted.

Mr. Piston's Concertino was not new to Boston. Bernard Zighera had conducted it at a Jordan Hall concert in February, 1938. Commissioned by the Columbia Broadcasting System, it was first heard over the air, Mr. Sanroma as soloist, two years ago last June. The original orchestration was of chamber proportions; for the Boston Symphony concerts a somewhat larger body of instruments are used.

Without making too extravagant a figure one may say that the dominating characteristic of Walter Piston's music is its understatement. He never labors a point; his humor—and there is a lot in the Concertino—is subtle and concise; his harmony, though dissonant, has an air of logic about it.

For a number of years Mr. Piston has been generally regarded as one of the most resourceful composers, technically speaking, the United States has produced. Perhaps his least strong point—to put it that way—is the dryness of his melody. It is as if his melody were constantly subordinated to the requirements of writing in a concentrated style where form is of the greatest importance.

Only for a short space during the five sections of the Concertino does he really lift up the voice of the piano in song. And then, in the belief of this reviewer, he is at his best. Yet on the other hand, the fine detail, the fluent rhythms with their suggestion of Bach-returned-to-earth, and the sheer healthiness of the rest of the work are not to be lightly considered. Piston's music may take several hearings to be thoroughly enjoyed, but from very first acquaintance it is patently music by one who is as sensitive and independent an artist as can be found today.

The composer was fortunate in his soloist, for Mr. Sanroma played his part with the skill, gusto and sheer brilliance that have won him distinction as a performer of the moderns. Mr. Piston, who bowed from the stage, Mr. Sanroma and Dr. Koussevitzky all were the object of what used to be called an "ovation."

Beethoven's First Symphony was good to hear again, especially in the perfectly proportioned reading—with reduced orchestra—Dr. Koussevitzky bestowed upon it. Some treat the Symphony as if it were breakable, making too much of the 18th Century spirit and fearing if they cut loose a bit, they will be guilty of an assault upon style. Beethoven was never breakable; in fact a little roughness was part of his musical character. The Koussevitzky interpretation could not be called rough, but it does give plenty of rein to the Beethoven caprice and sudden contrasts.

Music may be all things to all men. Such is the variable nature of the art. No harm is done, therefore, by referring to Brahms' E minor Symphony as "Autumnal," shabby though that adjective may be. It is also a supremely noble and lofty sort of music, and lends itself—within reasonable limits—to romantic treatment. Despite errors on the part of the first horn in the slow movement, yesterday's performance was extremely satisfying, lyrical and poetic in the first three movements, rising to grandeur in that heroic passacaglia which serves as finale. The program will be repeated tonight.—C. W. D.

BEST SO FAR BY SYMPHONY

Post Nov. 11

Most Attractive Concert of the Season

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

From one listener's point of view the most attractive concert of the Symphony season thus far, that of yesterday afternoon, offered the first (and least) of the symphonies of Beethoven, the last (and greatest) of the symphonies of Brahms and Walter Piston's concertino for piano and orchestra. The soloist in the concertino was Jesus Maria Sanroma. Dr. Koussevitzky conducted.

The performance of the concertino was the first at the Symphony concerts, although the work had been heard in Jordan Hall from Mr. Zighera's Chamber Orchestra. Mr. Sanroma was the pianist then.

If commissioned works are likely to give the impression of music that is ordered rather than spontaneously created, this concertino is a pleasant exception to the rule. The beginning and the end are full of high spirits; the slow division, for all its modern dissonance, has genuine lyric beauty.

No one goes about his task with more adroitness and assurance than does Mr. Piston in this beguiling composition. And when a resident orchestra, resident conductor, resident pianist and resident composer can combine forces to such happy result as that of yesterday, the community has reason to plume itself. Though the applause was intended for all three of them, Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Sanroma graciously insisted that Mr. Piston take the lion's share.

To call the C major Symphony Beethoven's "least" is not to deny its perennial charm and appeal. Granted that the Andante stems from Haydn and the Finale from Mozart, the Symphony remains one of the finest examples of what may be called the second classical period, just as Mr. Piston's concertino is an excellent representative of the third. In both instances we have music existing purely for and by itself and devoid of intruding personality.

Of a different order was the alleged classicism of Brahms, which in reality, comes much closer to romanticism. And here, especially, Brahms, the individual, speaks from every measure of this, his most characteristic symphony. In its three predecessors we may hear also the voices of Mendelssohn, Schumann and Beethoven. Also, it is only in this symphony that he gives a work of true symphonic caliber throughout. The second movement is something more than a romanza, the third something more than an intermezzo. It is, in fact, the only scherzo in them all.

Barring a technical slip or two, the performance was the finest that Dr. Koussevitzky has yet given, while that of the Symphony of Beethoven came as near to perfection as anything in this imperfect world is likely to come.

THIS CLIPPING FROM OMAHA, NEB.
WORLD-HERALD

NOV 11 1939

Copy Stradivarius Tone? Pooh-Pooh, Say Violinists

Boston, Nov. 10 (U.P.)—A group of Boston Symphony orchestra violinists today ridiculed the finding of a Harvard scientist that tones of fabulously-priced old Stradivarius violins "can be practically duplicated by modern one hundred-dollar instruments."

"Just show us where we can find the wonderful one hundred-dollar violins," they said. After being told that Dr. Frederick A. Saunders of the Jefferson physics laboratory had reported to the American Acoustical society at Iowa City, Ia., recently the results of tests with a phographic sound-analyzer.

"So the professor used an analyzer for tone," said Louis Krasner, violin soloist with the orchestra. "Can he make an analyzer for genius? When a laboratory experiment pretends to show that the tones of the old makers' violins are like those of modern ones, the mechanisms do not tell the whole truth. They can only compare superficialities."

Pointing to a violin made about 1725 and owned by Violinist Nicholai Kassman, Gaston Elcus, a first-violinist with the orchestra, wanted to know if the professor "can tell me where to find a fiddle as good as this one for less than $2,500."

Neo-Classical Gaiety

Nov 11 1939

Koussevitzky Conducts Piston Concertino; Sanroma Soloist in Brilliant Performance

By EDWARD DOWNES

Sandwiched between two grandiose symphonic structures, Beethoven's First and Brahms' Fourth Symphonies, the Concertino for piano and chamber orchestra of Walter Piston made its first appearance on the programs of the Boston Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist and Serge Koussevitzky directing the ensemble.

Mr. Sanroma, whose collaborations with the Boston Symphony have made him a familiar figure hereabouts, was in excellent pianistic fettle. With admirable aplomb he tossed off the most fearsome scales and glittering passage-work seemed to drip off the ends of his fingers. For this composition asks considerable technique of the soloist when taken at yesterday's tempo, and that tempo, we know, has the sanction of the composer.

The work is not pretentious. It is not a concerto in one movement, but a vivacious concertino, with the emphasis, perhaps, on the diminutive ending of the word. Slow lyric passages there are, but they appeared largely as foils to the deft allegros.

In spite of, or perhaps because of the strict logic of its form and calculated proportions, the concertino has a certain urbane grace and gaiety. It carefully avoids getting involved with any disturbing romantic emotions, and it is very light-hearted—so light-hearted indeed, that it gets a little self conscious about it at moments in a determined effort not to be taken too seriously.

As a sparkling and not too difficult to understand piece of modern neo-classicism, the new work was received with an enthusiasm unusual in Friday audiences. Mr. Piston was obliged to appear and share the applause with Koussevitzky and Sanroma.

Virtuoso Beethoven First

The program began with a virtuoso performance of Beethoven's First Symphony that one would have to go far to match today. Particularly the last movement had a transparency, a delicacy and precision which, considering the speed taken, were almost miraculous. On the other hand the question arises whether such a tempo, for all its brilliance, is one to bring out the maximum musical content of that movement. To be sure, Beethoven has marked his finale, "Allegro molo e vivace," very fast and vivaciously, but it is generally accepted that an allegro in Beethoven's day was somewhat slower than it is today.

Koussevitzky's tempo on the other hand was a shade faster than that ordinarily taken, even today, with the result that the whole last movement was a tour de force of breathless delicacy, which however sacrificed an appreciable amount of its own melodic charm.

Because the first two Beethoven symphonies seem to us so much like their Haydn-Mozart models, there is always the danger of our thinking of them as 18th century "period" pieces. The gap between the Second and Third Symphonies may be enormous, but after all they were both written by Beethoven.

Authoritative Brahms

A stirring performance of the Fourth Symphony of Johannes Brahms followed the intermission. Here no inhibition stood between Dr. Koussevitzky and the powerful emotion of the Brahms score. The result was a powerfully dramatic interpretation, from the opening allegro, which is almost an allegretto, to the impassioned utterance of the final passacaglia.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the next two concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Nov. 17 and 18. The opening number will be the American Festival Overture of William Howard Schuman, which was written for the Boston Symphony's two preseason concerts of American music. The program also includes Randall Thompson's Second Symphony in E minor and Cesar Franck's D minor Symphony.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.
NOV 11 1939

Saxophonist

A MINUTE shred of musical history will be made the evening of Armistice Day, when, if all goes well, a saxophonist will appear with the Philharmonic, in Carnegie Hall. The soloist is a young man named Sigurd Rascher, a graduate of numerous Continental jazz bands. He will play, for the first time in New York, Debussy's Rhapsody for Saxophone and Orchestra, and Jacques Ibert's Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra. He made his American début last month with the Boston Symphony, playing the same two pieces, and received from the critics what amounts, in Boston, to rave notices ("An extraordinary technique"—Durgin, Boston Globe; "Indeed a virtuoso"—Williams, Boston Herald). We found the virtuoso and his hotcha instrument in an ice-cold apartment at the extreme western end of Seventieth Street. His wife and three-month-old son are living in Strängnäs, Sweden. His windows offer a view of the New York Central tracks and a large billboard reading "Hear Paul Whiteman in the Terrace Room at the Hotel New Yorker." Rascher finds this tantalizing, because he has long admired Whiteman's phonograph records and would like to go right down to the Terrace Room. He told us that he was practicing most of the day for his Philharmonic appearance, however, so Whiteman would have to wait. The apartment was cold because Rascher likes it that way. "When my hands turn blue, I like it best," he gloated.

Rascher was born in Berlin of a Swedish father and an English mother. He is thirty-two, a reddish-blond fellow with topaz eyes and a perpetual surprised expression. He has been a professional musician, off and on, for the past thirteen years. As a boy, he studied clarinet, but changed to the saxophone because somebody told him it was easier. For three years, 1926 through 1929, he played with bands all over Switzerland, Holland, and Germany, in cafés, movie houses, and hotels. For the next three years he taught woodcraft in a Berlin private school. During this period he decided on a career as a serious saxophonist. Since there were almost no compositions for the instrument, he asked a number of composers to help him out. Quite a few did—Ibert, Glazunov, Coates, and such relatively obscure men as Jacobi, Bentzon, and Tarp. In 1932, Rascher made his first appearance with a symphony orchestra, at the Hanover Music Festival. He played a concerto especially composed for him by one Edmund von Borck, and from that day on he never again played a note of jazz. In 1934 he was appointed Professor of Saxophone at the Royal Danish Conservatory in Copenhagen, a position he still holds. The Conservatory is generous with leaves of absence, and Rascher has been able to give concerts in most of Europe and Scandinavia, as well as Australia.

The saxophone, Rascher will tell you, is the finest solo wind instrument, either reed or brass. His technique is all his own, and involves cross-fingering as well as other matters too abstruse to explain. When he started his serious study of the sax, Rascher was surprised at the unsuspected technical resources it offered; for instance, he found it would play a whole octave higher than anybody thought it would. His instrument is no grander than you'd find in an ordinary band; it's a gold-plated Beuscher, made in Elkhart, Indiana, which he bought two years ago in London. The ideal surroundings for playing or listening to saxophone music, Rascher assured us, are the depths of a forest in winter. He plays the sax all by himself in the Swedish forests, he told us, adding, "You should hear it—something!" When he arrived in New York he was all for practicing in Central Park, but the Philharmonic management tactfully discouraged him.

---

36 Nov 11

MUSIC

SYMPHONY CONCERT

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

The fifth concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. Jesus Maria Sanroma, pianist, was the soloist. The program was as follows:

Beethoven,
Symphony No. 1 in C major Op. 21
Piston,
Concertino for piano and orchestra
Brahms, Symphony No. 4 in E minor Op. 98

This was one of those concerts where criticism must either load itself down with superlatives or take a holiday and be mercifully brief. It was a beautifully balanced program superbly played. Since the two symphonies are indisputably masterpieces each in its own way, what more is there to say?

Perhaps Beethoven's First Symphony is not universally considered a masterpiece. The finale is first-class fooling, and the whole symphony is a marvel of gaiety in the manner of Haydn. No breath of the new romanticism disturbs it; it is straight, classical 18th century. The fact that it lives so securely in its own right—not because it is the first symphony of a great composer—should entitle it to our full respect. Certainly there are few works that can be so heartily enjoyed. Moreover the only way to hear this music is at the hands of a crack orchestra such as the Boston Symphony.

We looked up our review of Mr. Piston's Concertino after the performance by the Zighera Chamber Orchestra in 1938 and find with some dismay that the work was rather solemnly slated. The diminutive in the title should have been the clue, for the composer had clearly no intention of writing a very serious concerto. It is actually a merry and attractive piece, with the somewhat too prolonged counterweight of a dreamy slow movement.

Why the program notes insist that the Concertino is in five sections is curious, though doubtless capable of being literally proved. Surely it consists in a first movement leading to a slow movement, a recapitulation and a coda. Like all Mr. Piston's music, its form is logical and precise.

Mr. Sanroma was just the pianist for the Concertino, and indeed has been the soloist in the other performances. He had exactly the right solidity of touch and neat technique for the rapid, percussive passages; and he also brought out the more lyrical subjects effectively. There was cordial applause for soloist and conductor, as well as for Mr. Piston who came onto the platform to acknowledge it.

Having offered a light first half of the program, Dr. Koussevitzky turned his attention and his talents as a conductor to the tragic in the 4th Symphony of Brahms. A good argument could be sustained for this as the finest of all Brahm's symphonies. On the intellectual side it is much the most impressive, and the emotional values come to be appreciated as correspondingly profound. Yesterday's was a stirring performance, with orchestra and conductor in splendid form.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week the program is as follows: William Schuman's American Festival Overture; Randall Thompson's Symphony No. 2 in E minor; Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Globe Nov 11

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

The Piano Concertino by Walter Piston of the Harvard music faculty received first Boston Symphony performance yesterday afternoon. Jesus Maria Sanroma took the solo part. The work stood midway in an otherwise strictly conservative program, which had Beethoven's First Symphony as its beginning and the Fourth Symphony of Brahms for conclusion. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducted.

Mr. Piston's Concertino was not new to Boston. Bernard Zighera had conducted it at a Jordan Hall concert in February, 1938. Commissioned by the Columbia Broadcasting System, it was first heard over the air, Mr. Sanroma as soloist, two years ago last June. The original orchestration was of chamber proportions; for the Boston Symphony concerts a somewhat larger body of instruments are used.

Without making too extravagant a figure one may say that the dominating characteristic of Walter Piston's music is its understatement. He never labors a point; his humor—and there is a lot in the Concertino—is subtle and concise; his harmony, though dissonant, has an air of logic about it.

For a number of years Mr. Piston has been generally regarded as one of the most resourceful composers, technically speaking, the United States has produced. Perhaps his least strong point—to put it that way—is the dryness of his melody. It is as if his melody were constantly subordinated to the requirements of writing in a concentrated style where form is of the greatest importance.

Only for a short space during the five sections of the Concertino does he really lift up the voice of the piano in song. And then, in the belief of this reviewer, he is at his best. Yet on the other hand, the fine detail, the fluent rhythms with their suggestion of Bach-returned-to-earth, and the sheer healthiness of the rest of the work are not to be lightly considered. Piston's music may take several hearings to be thoroughly enjoyed, but from very first acquaintance it is patently music by one who is as sensitive and independent an artist as can be found today.

The composer was fortunate in his soloist, for Mr. Sanroma played his part with the skill, gusto and sheer brilliance that have won him distinction as a performer of the moderns. Mr. Piston, who bowed from the stage, Mr. Sanroma and Dr. Koussevitzky all were the object of what used to be called an "ovation."

Beethoven's First Symphony was good to hear again, especially in the perfectly proportioned reading—with reduced orchestra—Dr. Koussevitzky bestowed upon it. Some treat the Symphony as if it were breakable, making too much of the 18th Century spirit and fearing if they cut loose a bit, they will be guilty of an assault upon style. Beethoven was never breakable; in fact a little roughness was part of his musical character. The Koussevitzky interpretation could not be called rough, but it does give plenty of rein to the Beethoven caprice and sudden contrasts.

Music may be all things to all men. Such is the variable nature of the art. No harm is done, therefore, by referring to Brahms' E minor Symphony as "Autumnal," shabby though that adjective may be. It is also a supremely noble and lofty sort of music, and lends itself—within reasonable limits—to romantic treatment. Despite errors on the part of the first horn in the slow movement, yesterday's performance was extremely satisfying, lyrical and poetic in the first three movements, rising to grandeur in that heroic passacaglia which serves as finale. The program will be repeated tonight.—C. W. D.

BEST SO FAR BY SYMPHONY

Post Nov 11

Most Attractive Concert of the Season

BY WARREN STOREY SMITH

From one listener's point of view the most attractive concert of the Symphony season thus far, that of yesterday afternoon, offered the first (and least) of the symphonies of Beethoven, the last (and greatest) of the symphonies of Brahms and Walter Piston's concertino for piano and orchestra. The soloist in the concertino was Jesus Maria Sanroma. Dr. Koussevitzky conducted.

The performance of the concertino was the first at the Symphony concerts, although the work had been heard in Jordan Hall from Mr. Zighera's Chamber Orchestra. Mr. Sanroma was the pianist then.

If commissioned works are likely to give the impression of music that is ordered rather than spontaneously created, this concertino is a pleasant exception to the rule. The beginning and the end are full of high spirits; the slow division, for all its modern dissonance, has genuine lyric beauty.

No one goes about his task with more adroitness and assurance than does Mr. Piston in this beguiling composition. And when a resident orchestra, resident conductor, resident pianist and resident composer can combine forces to such happy result as that of yesterday, the community has reason to plume itself. Though the applause was intended for all three of them, Dr. Koussevitzky and Mr. Sanroma graciously insisted that Mr. Piston take the lion's share.

To call the C major Symphony Beethoven's "least" is not to deny its perennial charm and appeal. Granted that the Andante stems from Haydn and the Finale from Mozart, the Symphony remains one of the finest examples of what may be called the second classical period, just as Mr. Piston's concertino is an excellent representative of the third. In both instances we have music existing purely for and by itself and devoid of intruding personality.

Of a different order was the alleged classicism of Brahms, which in reality, comes much closer to romanticism. And here, especially, Brahms, the individual, speaks from every measure of this, his most characteristic symphony. In its three predecessors we may hear also the voices of Mendelssohn, Schumann and Beethoven. Also, it is only in this symphony that he gives a work of true symphonic caliber throughout. The second movement is something more than a romanza, the third something more than an intermezzo. It is, in fact, the only scherzo in them all.

Barring a technical slip or two, the performance was the finest that Dr. Koussevitzky has yet given, while that of the Symphony of Beethoven came as near to perfection as anything in this imperfect world is likely to come.

THIS CLIPPING FROM OMAHA, NEB.
WORLD-HERALD
NOV 11 1939

Copy Stradivarius Tone? Pooh-Pooh, Say Violinists

Boston, Nov. 10 (U.P.)—A group of Boston Symphony orchestra violinists today ridiculed the finding of a Harvard scientist that tones of fabulously-priced old Stradivarius violins "can be scientifically duplicated by modern one hundred-dollar instruments."

[illegible] where we can [illegible] hundred-dollar violins," they said. After being told that Dr. Frederick A. Saunders of the Jefferson physics laboratory had reported to the American Acoustical society at Iowa City, Ia., recently the results of tests with a phographic sound-analyzer.

"So the professor used an analyzer for tone," said Louis Krasner, violin soloist with the orchestra. "Can he make an analyzer for genius? When a laboratory experiment pretends to show that the tones of the old makers' violins are like those of modern ones, the mechanisms do not tell the whole truth. They can only compare superficialities."

Pointing to a violin made about 1725 and owned by Violinist Nicholai Kassman, Gaston Elcus, a first-violinist with the orchestra, wanted to know if the professor "can tell me where to find a fiddle as good as this one for less [illegible]."

Piston's Piano Concertino

79

C.S.M.
Nov 11, 1939

The Arts in Boston

Walter Piston's Concertino for piano and orchestra is the novel item on the program of the fifth pair of concerts of the Boston Symphony season, the first of which was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall, with Dr. Koussevitzky again on the stand after a week's holiday. The program opened with the First Symphony of Beethoven, and closed with the Brahms Fourth.

Mr. Piston's Concertino, composed for the radio and played last year at a concert of Bernard Zighera's Chamber Orchestra, is, as he has declared, concerned only with musical ideas and their development. We have had occasion before now to speak with respect of Mr. Piston's scholarship and of his workmanship. He has exercised those qualities once more in this work, which is remarkable for its firm design and deft execution. It is written in the dissonant counterpoint that Mr. Piston favors, and that is now somewhat dated. Like most works of its period, this one is rather more successful in its livelier parts than in its slow section, whose nostalgia seems self-conscious.

Jesús María Sanromá, who introduced the Concertino, was again the soloist yesterday. Particularly sympathetic to music of this type, Mr. Sanromá gave a brilliant performance of the difficult work, and he was supported by an equally brilliant accompaniment under Dr. Koussevitzky's baton.

Beethoven's First Symphony was performed with a reduced orchestra, and performed with such clarity, elegance and flexibility that the audience recalled the conductor three times. And the mighty Brahms Fourth roused the hearers to the usual thunders of applause.

L. A. S...

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

NOV 12 1939

NOTES HERE AND AFIELD

71

THE opening pair of concerts of the New York season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Serge Koussevitzky, Thursday night, Nov. 23, and Saturday afternoon, Nov. 25, in Carnegie Hall, will constitute a festival of American music, at which eight native works will be presented. For the evening program Dr. Koussevitzky has chosen Arthur Foote's Suite for Strings; Walter Piston's Concertino for piano, with Jesús María Sanromá as soloist; Roy Harris's Third symphony, and the Second symphony by Randall Thompson.

William Schuman's "American Festival" overture, written for this orchestra, will lead off the matinee list, which will contain further Edward Burlingame Hill's new violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist; Howard Hanson's Third symphony and John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers." In the last-named work Dorothy Maynor, soprano, and Leonard Franklin, tenor, will be the assisting artists.

THIS CLIPPING FROM DAVENPORT, IA.
DEMOCRAT-LEADER

NOV 12 1939

SIGURD RASCHER

. . . was born of Swedish-English parents in Germany in 1907, at first he studied clarinet and then turned to the saxophone. He became a jazz player but decided to pursue a career of serious music. In order to enlarge the repertoire of serious works for his instrument he asked a number of composers to write special music for him. Since his concert debut as a saxophonist in 1932 at the Hanover music festival he has played in Europe, the British Isles, Australia, Tasmania and New Zealand. He made his American debut last month with the Boston Symphony and was the first saxophonist ever to play with that organization.

THIS CLIPPING FROM TOLEDO, OHIO
TIMES

NOV 12 1939

Saxophone In Debut At N. Y. Philharmonic

John Barbirolli Conducts Program of Handel, Schumann, Ibert, Debussy

The saxophone is nearly a century old. It was invented by Adolphe Sax, a Belgian, about 1840. French operagoers were introduced to it as an orchestral instrument when Jean Kastner used it in his "Le Dernier Roi de Juda" in 1844. A year later the French army bands adopted it officially. Since then it has appeared in the scores of Meyerbeer, Thomas, Saint-Saens, Bizet, d'Indy, Richard Strauss and others.

The New York Philharmonic-Symphony orchestra is three years less than a century old. Today Adolphe Sax's invention, an imperishable asset of the modern dance orchestra, makes its appearance as a solo instrument for the first time at the Philharmonic's regular subscription concerts. Sigurd Rascher is the artist and he will be heard in Columbia network's regular broadcast at 3 p. m. John Barbirolli again conducts and Deems Taylor is intermission commentator.

Rascher made his American debut last month with the Boston symphony, the first saxophonist to have played with the organization. He plays two works with the Philharmonic, one written for him. The first is Debussy's Rhapsody for Saxophone and Orchestra, which was commissioned by Mrs. Richard Hall of Boston in 1903; the second, Jacques Ibert's Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra, dedicated to Rascher. Barbirolli opens the concert with the Handel-Harty "Royal Fireworks" and after intermission conducts Schumann's Second symphony.

Rascher, born of Swedish-English parents in 1907 in Germany, at first studied clarinet. Turning to the saxophone, he became a jazz player but after three years decided on a career in serious music. In order to enlarge the repertaire of serious works for saxophone he asked a number of composers to write special music for him. Since his concert debut as saxophonist in 1932 at the Hanover Music festival he has played on tour in Europe, the British Isles, Australia, Tasmania and New Zealand.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

NOV 12 1939

SANDERS THEATRE PROGRAMME

The Boston Symphony orchestra will give a concert in Sanders theatre, Cambridge, Thursday evening, November 16. The programme will include the Violin Concerto of Edward Burlingame Hill, in which Ruth Posselt will appear as soloist with the orchestra. Serge Koussevitzky will conduct the Third Symphony of Howard Hanson, which was heard at the Boston concerts under the composer's direction. The opening number will be Arthur Foote's Suite for Strings.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

NOV 12 1939

Those who missed last week's concerts by the Boston Symphony, may hear their substance repeated by going to Carnegie Hall on Nov. 23, where Dr. Koussevitzky will open the orchestra's New York season. The program includes, as you probably know, the Beethoven first, Walter Piston's concertino for piano and orchestra with Sanroma as soloist, and the Brahms fourth.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

NOV 12 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY

Two symphonies will figure upon the programme for the next pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky, conductor, to be given in Symphony hall, Friday afternoon, and Saturday evening, November 17 and 18. They will be the Symphony of César Franck, in D minor, and the Second Symphony of Randall Thompson. This symphony was first heard at the Boston Symphony concerts in 1934. The opening number will be the American Festival Overture of William Schuman which was written for the special concerts of American music, performed by this orchestra October 4 and 6, and heard on the latter date.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

NOV 12 1939

THE ORCHESTRAS

SIGURD RASCHER, saxophonist, will reappear as soloist with the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra under John Barbirolli's direction this afternoon in Carnegie Hall, repeating Debussy's rhapsody for saxophone in Ernest Ansermet's new edition and Jacques Ibert's saxophone concertino. Brahms's Academic Festival Overture and Schumann's second symphony complete the program.

◆

Arthur Bliss, English composer, will be the guest conductor with the Philharmonic-Symphony next Thursday night and Friday afternoon in Carnegie Hall in the first public performances in the United States of a suite from his ballet "Checkmate." The ballet, written for the week of British music at the Paris Exposition in 1937, was first performed at the Theatre des Champs-Elysees on June 15. It has been performed more than 100 times in England, and would also have been staged in Vienna and Prague, had political events taken a different course. The scenario, designed by the composer, has two players and nearly thirty chessmen as its characters. The players announce themselves as Love and Death fighting for the lives of their subjects, and the drama ends with the checkmate of the red king. The other numbers, under Mr. Barbirolli, are Smetana's overture to "The Bartered Bride" and Brahms's fourth symphony.

After these concerts Mr. Bliss will leave for Berkeley, Calif., where he is succeeding Randall Thompson as head of the University of California's music department.

Young People's Concerts

On Saturday morning at Carnegie Hall the Philharmonic-Symphony Society will begin its seventeenth season of concerts for young people under Ernest Schelling's direction. The program, the first of six with the illustration of musical form as their general subject, will be largely devoted to music of the eighteenth and earlier centuries. The other concerts, also on Saturday mornings, are scheduled for Dec. 23, Jan. 20, Feb. 17, March 2 and April 13. Except for a few boxes and single parquet seats, the series is sold out by subscription. Good seats are still available for the more elementary series of three concerts for children on Monday afternoons, Dec. 11, Jan. 22 and Feb. 19, in Town Hall, at 3:45, which will feature music demonstrating the use of the instruments of the orchestra.

Mr. Schelling, who ten for this orchestra; Edward Burlingame Hill's new violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist, the suite from John Alden Carpenter's ballet "Skyscrapers," with Dorothy Maynor and Leonard Franklin as the singers and Howard Hanson's third symphony.

The Schuman and Hill works will be heard here for the first time and the Hanson symphony for the first time in a New York concert hall—it has had two radio performances here. The Boston Symphony has given the first concert performances of the works by Schuman, Hill, Harris, Carpenter and Hanson.

Dr. Koussevitzky will conduct the Boston Symphony's first concert of the season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Friday night, Nov. 24. His program for next Friday afternoon and Saturday night in Boston includes the Schuman overture and the Thompson symphony, with Franck's symphony after the intermission.

Out of Town

Leopold Stokowski will begin his second program of the season with the Philadelphia Orchestra in the Philadelphia Academy of Music next Friday afternoon and Saturday night with Mozart's overture to "The Marriage of Figaro," Brahms's fourth symphony, Debussy's three nocturnes, "Nuages," "Fêtes" and "Sirenes," and Moussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition," which will be heard for the first time in a new arrangement for orchestra completed by Mr. Stokowski last summer. A small chorus of women members of the University of Pennsylvania Choral Society will sing in "Sirenes."

Albert Spalding will play the Brahms violin concerto with the National Symphony Orchestra of Washington, D. C., next Wednesday night, in a program also including Mondonville's "Arlecchinata" and Sibelius's second symphony. Nino Martini, Metropolitan Opera tenor, will be the soloist next Monday.

Emanuel Feuermann

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
SUNDAY UNION
& Republican

NOV 12 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
UTICA, N. Y.
OBSERVER DISPATCH

NOV 12 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

NOV 12 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY WILL PLAY IN N. Y.

American Music Featured in Programs for Festival by Serge Koussevitzky.

TWO CONCERTS PLANNED

Listed Composers Include Harris, Thompson, Schuman, Hill, Foote and Carpenter

New York, Nov. 11.—(AP)—The most ambitious short American music festival in many years will be undertaken Nov. 23 and 25 in Carnegie Hall here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which annually plays five pairs of concerts in New York, and five single concerts in Brooklyn.

Serge Koussevitzky, 15 years conductor of what is known as one of the great orchestras of all time, has chosen music of all types and age levels for his two-concert festival.

The first program opens, for example, with a work especially written for the Boston players by one of the younger generation, William Schuman, called an "American Festival Overture." The same program includes also a new violin concerto by 67-year-old Edward Burlingame Hill with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and two works by the middle generation: Roy Harris's Third Symphony, and Randall Thompson's Second Symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky has decided to lead off his second concert with a suite by one of the elder statesmen of American music, Arthur Foote, whose work is having a greatly increased popularity of late.

John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers" is also to be heard, and two works by younger men, a new symphony by Howard Hanson, his third, and Walter Piston's Concertino for Piano, in which Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist.

The concert will also afford Dorothy Maynor, the newly discovered Negro soprano who was heard privately this summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Symphony Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., her first New York orchestral appearance. She, with Leonard Franklin, will sing the incidental solos in "Skyscrapers."

Always a crusader for new American music, Dr. Koussevitzky points out that he and his orchestra gave the first performances of the music by Harris, Schuman, Hill, Carpenter and Hanson.

C.S.M. Nov. 16, 1939

80

New American Music for Symphony

Program to Offer Works By Schuman and Thompson

By Alfred H. Meyer

To Franck's favored Symphony Dr. Koussevitzky adds two American works for the week's symphony programs: William Schuman's "American Festival Overture (1939)," and Randall Thompson's Second Symphony. Both were performed at the pre-season concerts of American music given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Schuman's overture was written last summer specifically for those concerts.

The first three notes of the overture are the motto on which the whole is based. They are simply a descending and ascending minor third, favorite interval of newsboys in crying their wares and of many others in many pursuits. Mr. Schuman writes, "In New York City it is yelled on syllables 'Wee-Awk-Eee,' to get the gang together for a game or a festive occasion of some sort." What more natural, then, than that the remembered cry should suggest itself as the basis for an overture for a festival of American music? "Let's get the gang together and play our music."

* * *

Mr. Schuman is highly adept in using this initial motive in a variety of ways. Not only the usual contraputal developments spring from it (this is a matter of course) but all manner of new themes in new moods actually grow out of it.

The middle section is a fugue. The subject is announced by violas. It also is related to the initial motive by the fact that its first two notes are a rising minor third. At the climax of the fugue—and it is a very merry fugue—there is fresh development of the intial theme, and with it the third and final section of the overture.

* * *

More significant than the above is the rhythmic spirit of the overture. Throughout one finds that persistent "four-four" which is the rhythmic frame-work of our popular music. In all probability this rhythmic set-up was not deliberately planned by Mr. Schuman, but was a natural and spontaneous vehicle of expression for him. All the better. For thus one of the great common denominators of the music of the people becomes also a common denominator in an art-work. A national music arises more surely and definitively by the natural infiltration of a national idiom than by conscious planning.

With this same spirit Randall Thompson's second Symphony has much in common. It is as objective a music as that of the most classical of classicists. When the symphony was new the composer let it be known that he had wanted to write the most natural music it was possible for him to conceive. There was to be no sophisticated theorizing or deliberate choice of idiom. The four movements are gay and sparkling, with many a hint of jazz theme or blues melody. Of which Mr. Thompson says:

"If there are 'Americanisms' in the symphony, it is not because I tried to put them there, or because I tried to write an American music. They are there because they are my most natural mode of musical speech. If there is jazz in my music, it is not because I tried to put jazz into it, but because I am using the dialect most natural to me as the result of the environment in which I grew up." Again, in such a way is a music of genuine national feeling most likely to come to full fruition.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

NOV 16 1939

Boston Symphony Gave First Hartford Concert in 1885

By BILLY S. GARVIE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which comes to the Bushnell next Tuesday evening, gave its first Hartford concert under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke in Roberts Opera House, Oct. 20. 1885.

"It was a surprise to all," said The Times in reviewing the concert. "There was a spirit of accuracy and shading and the playing of the Oberon Overture showed that Herr Gericke is a good conductor and has in his orchestra excellent material.

"It was heard to better advantage in the Rubinstein ballet music and in Raff's interesting symphony," continued the review, "and it played admirably in the Schumann concerto."

Carl Baermann was to have been the piano soloist of the evening, but The Times reported: "Herr Baermann, owing to illness, was replaced by Carl Felton, an accomplished pianist. He played the beautiful Schumann Concerto in A minor and had an enthusiastic recall. He was heard in a Chopin Ballade and in the Fourth Hungarian Rhapsody by Liszt."

Looking well into the future, the review concluded, "The program and the way it was given pleased all. If this orchestra plays here again, it may expect a success in every way."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
STAMFORD, CONN.
ADVOCATE

NOV 17 1939

Musical Elite Startled By Saxophonist

BY DAVID RABINOWITZ

Musical New York, which has learned to take many startling innovations in stride, was shaken to its core, last Sunday. On that day, there appeared as soloist for the Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra, not a pianist, nor a violinist, nor yet a vocalist, but of all things a saxophonist.

This was news indeed. In the 92 years of the famous orchestra's existence no such thing had ever happened before. Many an old-subscriber sighed wistfully, "What is the world coming to."

The reason for all the excitement is clear. The saxophone, in the minds of many, is an outcast instrument, to be confined to jazz bands and night clubs. The thought of this instrument invading the concert hall seemed almost a calamity. But these worried individuals need have had no fears whatsoever. The saxophone behaved beautifully in its exalted company, and the soloist, Sigurd Rascher, proved to be a true musical artist, playing with superb skill, refinement and persuasive warmth.

Speaking with Sigurd Rascher after the concert, I was struck by the genuine musicianship of the man. Here was no trickster, but an honest and very accomplished artist, who loved the saxophone as many others love their pianos or fiddles. He made his American debut several weeks ago as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his performance at that time brought enthusiastic reviews from the critics.

The saxophone was invented by Adolphe Sax, who studied the flute and clarinet at the Brussels Conservatoire. Two years later, in 1842, Sax came to Paris and began to exploit his new instrument. As a result of a special competition, he acquired a monopoly which enabled him to supplant all the horns, oboes and bassoons of the French Army with saxophones. Subsequently, Meyerbeer, Saint-Saens, Bizet and Richard Strauss employed the instrument for orchestra.

After this article was written, I heard a tenor sing so well that I am adding this all too brief notice. Hardesty Johnson sang as soloist with the St. Cecilia Society of Old Greenwich, and gave a thrilling demonstration of a voice which, in many respects, reminds one of the "Golden Era" at the Metropolitan.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN

NOV 13 1939

Mrs. Henry J. Davenport Hostess To Boston Symphony Committee; Concert Series Begins Nov. 24

Mrs. Henry J. Davenport, executive chairman of the Brooklyn Committee for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is giving a tea today, at her home, No. 40A Monroe place, for the members of the committee, which is assisting in plans for the five concerts to be given here this season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music by the orchestra. The first will be given on Friday evening, Nov. 24.

The concerts, now in their 54th year in the borough are represented under the auspices of Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, of which James G. McDonald is president; the Philharmonic Society of of Brooklyn, R. Huntington Woodman, chairman and the Brooklyn Committee. Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman of the committee. The vice-chairmen are Mrs. Edward C. Blum and Mrs. William H. Good. Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow is membership chairman of the committee and Mrs. William G. James heads a Junior Committee group serving with the committee.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

NOV 15 1939

Talented Violinist Guest Artist with Hartford Symphony

By MADELIN BARTLETT

A very talented young violinist, Ruth Posselt, and two new compositions graced the second concert of the season by the Hartford Symphony Orchestra under Leon Barzin's direction at the Bushnell Tuesday evening.

Highlight of the program was the Mozart Sinfonia Concertante in E flat for violin and viola with orchestra, in which Mr. Barzin took the second solo part with Miss Posselt. The work was eloquent and replete with discriminating artistry. Miss Posselt's violin spoke in lovely tones, clean, strong and sweet and Mr. Barzin played with an easy fluency of rich tone that made their duets and cadenzas sheer joy to hear.

Mr. Barzin's skill and musicianship gave clear evidence of his outstanding ability as a violist.

Heck Conducts

The orchestra, under the wise guidance of George Heck, assistant conductor, played with a fine restraint, the tone nicely subdued although firmly supporting when the soloists were playing, and rising in smooth swells to take the limelight in their own passages. There was perfect understanding and agreement among soloists, conductor and orchestra that lifted the performance into the five-star class.

Miss Posselt also appeared as soloist in the American premiere of the Concertstuk for violin and orchestra by Henriette Bosmans; nor could it have been in more sympathetic hands. Miss Posselt played with an assurance and verve that made the work's content readily discernible and stressed its musical value. It proved to be a stimulating Concertstuk with a pleasing minor melody and a pulsating underrhythm. Delightful at first hearing, it is a composition that will stand many repetitions.

Soloist Unaffected

Miss Posselt's ability needs no more stress than is given it by the fact that Dr. Serge Koussevitzky has interested himself in her future. Her performance last night certainly showed why. She goes about her playing in a workmanlike fashion that brooks no frills or attention to her personality; her violin commands the listener's full attention. Yet there is warmth and color in addition to technical skill. She was completely sincere and unassuming and the audience applauded her with wholehearted approval.

The second new work was de Bourguignon's "Puzzle" Suite for Orchestra, which takes its name from the fact that each choir of the orchestra has one of the movements as a solo, the final Fugue assembling them all like the parts of a jigsaw puzzle.

Interest Increases

The work increased in interest with each succeeding movement, the brasses the losers in a wandering opening Fanfare. The woodwind Scherzo was gay and amusing and the Complainte, which the strings took, offered nice sweeps of melody. But the last movement was long and dull enough to cause some eight persons within easy view to doze. And like a puzzle, once it is solved, it holds little further interest.

The orchestra added another "best" to its standard of performance last night. Throughout the program, which also included the Berlioz Overture to "Benvenuto Cellini" and the Tschaikowsky "Romeo and Juliet" Fantasy Overture, the musicians played with gratifying freedom, only the "Puzzle" finding them at all scorebound. A nice attention to detail made them responsive to Mr. Barzin's slightest gesture. There was a self-confidence and a polish about their playing that has never before lasted so smoothly throughout a long and difficult program.

The audience evidenced its delight in the concert with prolonged applause which recalled Mr. Barzin for several bows.

MUSIC

ans. Nov 1

Boston Symphony Plays in Cambridge

By Edward Downes

The Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky gave the second of its season's concerts in Sanders Theater, Cambridge, last night before a large and festive audience. The program consisted entirely of works which belonged to the more traditional, conservative trend of American composition.

Arthur Foote's E major Suite for String Orchestra, Opus 63, composed in 1907, impressed, as it did at the pre-season concerts of American music, with its own excellent craftsmanship, its fresh and pleasing inspiration.

Ruth Posselt, young American violinist, was the soloist in the Violin Concerto, Opus 38, of Professor Edward Burlingame Hill of the music department of Harvard University. Miss Posselt proved herself a well schooled musician and her intonation was of the purest and truest.

Professor Hill composed his Violin Concerto between 1933 and 1937. While it is not a daringly original or revolutionary work, it would not be fair either to call it simply eclectic. It has a definitely personal note, it is, of course, of solid musical facture and the orchestration is effective without being showy. It is cast in the traditional three movements, the middle movement being perhaps the most poetic, with its intimacy of mood and some particularly happy passages, which stand out in the memory, between the solo violin and clarinet over soft harmonies of the strings.

After the concerto there was an ovation for all the principals involved: Miss Posselt, Dr. Koussevitzky and specially, of course, for Professor Hill. Miss Posselt will repeat the Concerto with the Boston Symphony when it pays its first visit of the year to Carnegie Hall, New York, with Dr. Koussevitzky again presiding.

After the intermission Howard Hanson's Third Symphony was given, not under the direction of the composer as at the recent pair of concerts in Symphony Hall, but under the baton of Koussevitzky.

Berkshire Festival To Last Three Weeks

The Berkshire Symphonic Festival announced today that the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Dr. Koussevitzky will be at Tanglewood for a three weeks' Festival next year. The extension of the season was voted by Trustees of the Festival Association after meetings with the Trustees of the Orchestra.

This means six weeks of musical activity at Tanglewood since the orchestra plans to open its academy, in charge of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky and Professor G. Wallace Woodworth of Harvard University, in July.

The nine Festival concerts will be given the first three weekends in August. An operating committee has been designated consisting of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith, Festival president, of Stockbridge and New York, Mrs. Bruce Crane of Dalton, Laurence E. Connor, and George K. Edman of Pittsfield, with two members to be appointed by the orchestra board.

Herald Nov. 18

81

MUSIC

By ALEXANDER WILLIAMS

SYMPHONY CONCERT

The sixth regular concert by the Boston Symphony orchestra, Serge Koussevitzky conducting, was given yesterday afternoon in Symphony Hall. The program was as follows:

William Schuman
American Festival Overture (1939)
Randall Thompson
Symphony No. 2 in E minor
Franck ....Symphony in D minor

Dr. Koussevitzky has taken his position of "godfather of American symphonic music" seriously. The two free concerts in early October might have been considered a sufficient gesture by a less indulgent and conscientiaus parent. But since then he has repeated many works and added more, and next week he is taking hem under his wing to New York. It has been a significant move in the cause of native art and typical of the energy and idealism of Dr. Koussevitzky. Doubtless the public would have set up a howl had they known what was in store for them at the beginning; but, now that all is over for a time, no one can be said to have suffered.

William Schuman's Overture celebrates this "festival"—everything is a festival nowadays—with loud cries of joy. It is true that a fugue interrupts the rejoicing for a while, but the outcry is redoubled at the end. The piece seemed to us, as it did six weeks ago, an effective and exuberant score. The end, to be sure, might have come sooner. On the whole, though, it is a very creditable work. Mr. Schuman was present to acknowledge the applause.

Randall Thompson's Symphony is well made music that consistently sounds well. Its fault lies not in the technique but in the emotional and spiritual conventionality. The result is that the symphony does not wear. It is immediately attractive, but easily becomes stale on repeated hearings. We admire the skill of the composer and not what he has to say. That skill is, of course, a considerable compensation.

We are aware that Mr. Thompson is not above displaying a sense of humor in music. His setting for chorus of a W. C. T. U. leaflet, daintily entitled "Apples Are God's Bottles," is both mischievous and funny. This sense of humor crops up in the finale of the symphony in the Allegro con spirio section. It is perhaps a little whimsical. No matter, that is a legitimate effect. But Mr. Thompson cannot have it both ways. The other, "Old Man River" sections are in sentimental vein, what Elgar used commonly to denote by the term "Nobilmente." In other words, the general impression is one of slickness at the expense of vitality.

Franck's Symphony is one of those imperfect works of art that remain firmly in the affections of the people in spite of their faults, like Cologne or Milan cathedrals or a number of paintings one could name. Franck's kindliness and the sheer joy of his inspiration shine through his music, no matter how often a sequence is repeated or how padded a movement is. It is a symphony that draws people who listen to music unintellectually, and that is a valuable function. Those of us who no longer care to hear it very often can console ourselves by listening to the performance, the beautiful tapestry of orchestral sound.

This performance was extraordinarily fine yesterday. The Franck Symphony frequently brings out the worst side in a conductor and tempts him to horrid excesses. Yesterday Dr. Koussevitzky indulged in no such vagaries. The score was superbly read. The tempo of the second movement was not dragged nor that of the last hurried. Sonorities were just right. Could anything have been lovelier than the playing in the second movement, for example? Such an interpretation as this banishes most of one's intellectual prejudice.

The concert will be repeated tonight. Next week the orchestra will make its first out-of-town trip. The concerts of Dec. 1 and 2 will be conducted by Igor Stravinsky and devoted to his music.

THIS CLIPPING FROM WEST WARWICK, R. I.
Pawtuxet Valley Times

NOV 18 1939

Stravinsky Booked to Conduct Orchestra

A musical event of real importance will be the pending visit to Providence of Igor Stravinsky, the great Russian conductor, who is to conduct the Boston Symphony orchestra in a ~~concert of his~~ own music, at the Metropolitan Theatre on Tuesday evening. Mr. Stravinsky is now making his third sojourn in America, and is now giving a course of lectures under the auspices of Harvard University in Cambridge. He will conduct the orchestra in Boston later in the same week.

The Providence program will include the music of "The Card Game," a ballet in three deals, which will then have its first performance in New England; his "Capriccio for Piano and Orchestra," in which Jesus Maria Sanroma will appear as soloist, and suites from his two early ballets, "Petrouchka" and "The Fire-Bird."

Globe Nov. 18

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Boston Symphony Orchestra

One striking fact about this Boston Symphony season is that we are hearing plenty of American music. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky continues a benefactor of some leading American composers by playing their compositions with relative frequency. These good works ought certainly to make an object of deeply felt gratitude from the creative musicians concerned.

There are two American scores on the Symphony program for this week—the "American Festival Overture" of young William Schuman, and Randall Thompson's extraordinary Second Symphony. The remaining number is the D minor Symphony of Cesar Franck, unheard at these concerts for three years.

Many kind words have been directed at Mr. Thompson's Symphony. All of them have been deserved. This reviewer has a notion it will prove a milestone in American composition, after sufficient time has passed so that it can be looked at more objectively than is possible today.

Thompson unquestionably has put into the Symphony a definitely American flavor, something of the spirit of the land and the period. The touches of jazz, the jaunty air of the music, its naturalness and lack of pretense; all these add up to a distinctive piece of work. A good many—one is inclined to say most—contemporary scores infer that their creators set themselves austere technical problems, and were quite willing to show the public how much esthetic perspiration it took to solve them. There is absolutely nothing of that in the joyous ease of the Thompson Second Symphony. A pity the company was not present to acknowledge the warm applause by the Friday audience.

Schuman's Overture is different. When first played at one of the Boston Symphony's pre-season concerts of American works, the Overture was impressively clever but rather dry and to some extent forced. Another hearing does not substantially alter those convictions. Mr. Schuman bowed from the stage at the end of the performance.

Cesar Franck's only Symphony has reached the period in its existence when it engenders violent partisans—for or against. A tonal holy-of-holies to some, others find it long and tedious, music whose appeal has been worn thin by repetition, whose secrets have been yielded up so that no longer can one find new beauties in its depths.

Allowing for unexplainable differences in taste, this reviewer sits squarely in the middle of the argument, willing to admit that it sounds best after a good, long rest, yet stirred by Franck's passionate conviction and the magnificence of his instrumental colors. Perhaps the true reason that it may not wear so well as the symphonies of Brahms, for example, is because Franck was essentially not a symphonist, at least not in the traditional sense.

He was ilke Bruckner in that his themes are long and complete, not well suited to symphonic "development." With Bruckner he apparently did not possess an organizing mind; his symphony progresses by episodes, from one climax to another, one repetition to another until the ear has been surfeited.

The performance was another recreative triumph for Dr. Koussevitzky, a demonstration by the orchestra of superlative technic. Here and there, however, eloquence came dangerously near to over-statement.

Next week the Boston Symphony goes upon its first seasonal visit to New York. Igor Stravinsky will be guest conductor of a program of his own music at the Symphony Hall concerts two weeks hence.

C. W. D.

MORE AMERICANA

Transcript Nov 18 1939

Koussevitzky Leads Boston Symphony —Audience Frosty to Young Radical

Frigidly, politely and firmly, a Boston Symphony audience revolted yesterday afternoon at the very beginning of the regular Friday matinee Symphony concert. All through the opening number, an "American Festival Overture," by 29-year-old William Schuman, there had been much dubious shaking of heads. But when Dr. Koussevitzky finished his exhilarating performance of the overture on a particularly strong discord, a shudder of disapproval ran through the hall and the applause that followed was so weak that it constituted a negative demonstration. One felt that only impeccable manners and a certain instinctive restraint stood in the way of more positive expressions of annoyance.

Applause or no applause, the unruffled Dr. Koussevitzky returned to the stage drawing modest Mr. Schumann with him for a brief bow and handshake with the concertmaster. Such applause as there was this time was led by Dr. Koussevitzky.

Mr. Schuman's frosty reception was interesting in view of the fact that his same "American Festival Overture" was well received at the Boston Symphony's pre-season concert of American music for which it was written and where it had its first performance on Oct. 6 last. It will be amusing to see how it is received at this evening's repetition.

The overture shows unmistakable talent. It impressed us as a more logical and organic whole, a more likable piece of music, than it had at its first successful hearing six weeks ago. There is, of course, a great deal of naked brass, loudly insistent upon the crasser of Mr. Schuman's disharmonies. But it is not done to "epater le bourgeois." The composer had something to say. If he is very positive in the way he says it, that is the privilege of a young artist.

Urbane American Work

Randall Thompson's delightfully urbane Second Symphony in E minor is unobtrusively, ingratiatingly American. The flavor of our folk song is in it and so are the odors of Tin Pan Alley. But the important thing is that these elements are assimilated and worked into an easy, homogeneous style.

When Stravinsky or Ravel, or even when some Americans use jazz, it sounds like a quotation in a foreign idiom. Nothing in Mr. Thompson's Symphony sounds like a quotation. And yet it is full of Americanisms, catchy rhythms, "hot" harmonies, witty phrases and good-humored loquacity. A pregnant rhythmic motive runs through the first movement, its syncopated measure setting the style of the whole composition.

The second movement, Largo, has more than a hint of the blues with, curiously enough, an almost classical repose and a far flung melodic line. The scherzo is in seven-four time and the final movement, though it has its monumental passages, is almost like another scherzo.

In contrast to the Schuman work, Thompson's Symphony was understood at once and enthusiastically acclaimed by the audience.

After the intermission Dr. Koussevitzky led his listeners into the thrice familiar territory of the Cesar Franck Symphony. Here they were able to follow without qualms or inhibitions and enjoy a lyric landscape with background of shifting chromaticism. The performance was colorful and dramatic.

The next pair of concerts on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Dec. 1 and 2, will be conducted by Igor Stravinsky who presents, for the first time in Boston his "Card Game," a ballet in three deals, his Capriccio for piano and orchestra with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist, Petroushka and the Symphony of Psalms.

The Monday evening and Tuesday afternoon concerts of Dec. 4 and 5 will have Simon Barer as soloist in the Second Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto. Koussevitzky will also conduct Prokofieff's Classical Symphony and Schumann's "Spring" Symphony.

E. D.

REPEAT LIST BY SYMPHONY

Post Nov. 18

American Music Given Predominance

The Symphony concert of yesterday afternoon was unique in the annals of the orchestra in that it offered two pieces, William Schuman's "American Festival Overture" and Randall Thompson's Second Symphony, already presented on a previous programme this season. The explanation is, of course, that these earlier performances took place in the likewise unprecedented pre-season concerts, devoted to American music. Some, perhaps not a very large proportion of yesterday's audience, had already heard Overture and Symphony when they were played on the afternoon of Oct. 6. For many, one or both must have been new experiences, since the Schuman work was composed last summer and the Thompson Symphony had been played only once before at the regular concerts, in the season of 1933-34. No novelty, in any sense, was the third and final number on the programme, the familiar—some would say too familiar—Symphony of Franck.

Next week the orchestra will play in New York two all-American programmes, closely resembling those above referred to.

To return to yesterday's concert, Overture and Symphony again established themselves as uncommonly interesting contributions to the fast-mounting pile of American scores. Mr. Schuman has still to free himself from a tendency towards roughness of texture, but his exuberant Overture marks a big advance over the experimental and astringent Symphony of last season.

In sharp contrast to Mr. Schuman's acerbities are the urbanities of Mr. Thompson's Symphony, music of an almost popular cast, placing its dependance upon frank melodies and, as a rule, equally outspoken rhythms. The Scherzo is at once the most subtle and the most arresting movement of the four. The new director of the Curtis Institute has always preferred to write music that charmed and entertained, rather than music that startled, irritated and perplexed.

As was the case last month, the Symphony was most enthusiastically received yesterday, but this time the composer was not there to acknowledge the applause. Mr. Schuman, however, was on hand and he and his piece were the recipients of much handclapping. The performance of Franck's Symphony was one calculated to arouse an audience and that is exactly the effect which it had.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
MORNING UNION

NOV 18 1939

FUND OF $10,000 SEEN NEEDED FOR NEW SYMPHONY

Former Subscribers Meet to Consider Possibility of Revival

A guarantee fund of $10,000 would be necessary to revive the Springfield Symphony Orchestra Society, Armand Balendonck, a symphony conductor, estimated at a meeting of a small group of former subscribers and directors of the society in the George Walter Vincent Smith Art Gallery last night.

Called by E. H. Marsh

The meeting was called by Edward H. Marsh, manager of the Wagner concerts, for the purpose of discussing the possibility of reviving the symphony. In the absence of Mr. Marsh, who is ill, Mrs. Rosamond Chapin presided.

While invitations to last night's meeting were purposely limited, it was the consensus that all former Springfield Symphony subscribers and directors should be invited to the next meeting. In the meantime the group will attempt to arouse widespread interest.

Mr. Balendonck, former conductor of the Buffalo (N. Y.) and Newark (N. J.) symphony orchestras, was the main speaker. He said that a local symphony would be a project of "tremendous civic meaning" and would have vast cultural, moral, entertainment and commercial advantages.

"The progressive city in art is the progressive city in business," he said. "For a relatively small investment the symphony will pay large dividends."

It was said last night that Mr. Marsh favored approaching all civic organizations including the Chamber of Commerce for financial assistance. Atty. Abraham Kamberg urged that all former subscribers and directors be circularized and the co-operation of the union be sought for the project.

WPA Imposes Limits

William Haddon, director of the Federal Music Project for Massachusetts, explained that under the present setup it would be impossible to incorporate the Springfield symphonic unit into another local symphony organization. Recent WPA regulations forbid the charging of admission fees for any performance by a Federal unit.

If the regulations are modified the 32 members of the local unit might become a neucleus for the larger group, he added. He said that school concerts given by the WPA units are developing a large audience of music lovers.

Mr. Haddon said that one-tenth of the personnel of the Boston Symphony has been taken from the ranks of the Federal Music Project in this state and that 70 former players are now associated with major symphony orchestras in the country.

Mr. Balendonck expressed the hope that the new unit might give its first concert next spring with the possibility that half a dozen concerts would be given the following season.

In Festival Mood

C. S. M. Nov. 18 1939

The Arts in Boston

The Festival of American music which preceded the subscription season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is proving a fruitful source of material for the regular concerts. We have already had from it the Third Symphony of Roy Harris. Yesterday we heard William Schuman's "American Festival" Overture and Randall Thompson's Symphony No. 2, in E minor. The latter of course had been played here in 1934. Next week in New York the orchestra will give two concerts, both with all-American programs.

Yesterday's concert closed with the César Franck Symphony. Thus the occasion assumed a festival air which was quite appropriate in view of the number of young people, home from school, in the audience.

Mr. Schuman, whose Symphony was received rather coolly last year, wrote this overture for the pre-season festival of American music. It is therefore classifiable as "occasional" music, a term usually employed in a derogatory sense, and not always without reason. But a piece is not necessarily inferior because written for an occasion. Many of the classics were so written, and in the matter of overtures Brahms' "Academic Festival" is an example of good music composed under such a handicap.

Mr. Schuman's overture is ingratiating, lively music. It is based on a three-note "call to play" of his boyhood, and it maintains a youthful aspect through most of its length. Its style is nervous and its harmonies are dissonant according to a recent fashion. The most interesting part of the work is its middle section, which is a fugue.

Mr. Thompson's Second Symphony is a pleasant, unassuming work which neither pretends to nor attains big proportions. Its chief appeal is rhythmic rather than melodic. The middle section of the final movement struck us as the most interesting musically at yesterday's performance. It displays a wit and an inventiveness that were less evident in the preceding Scherzo. The symphony was well received by the audience.

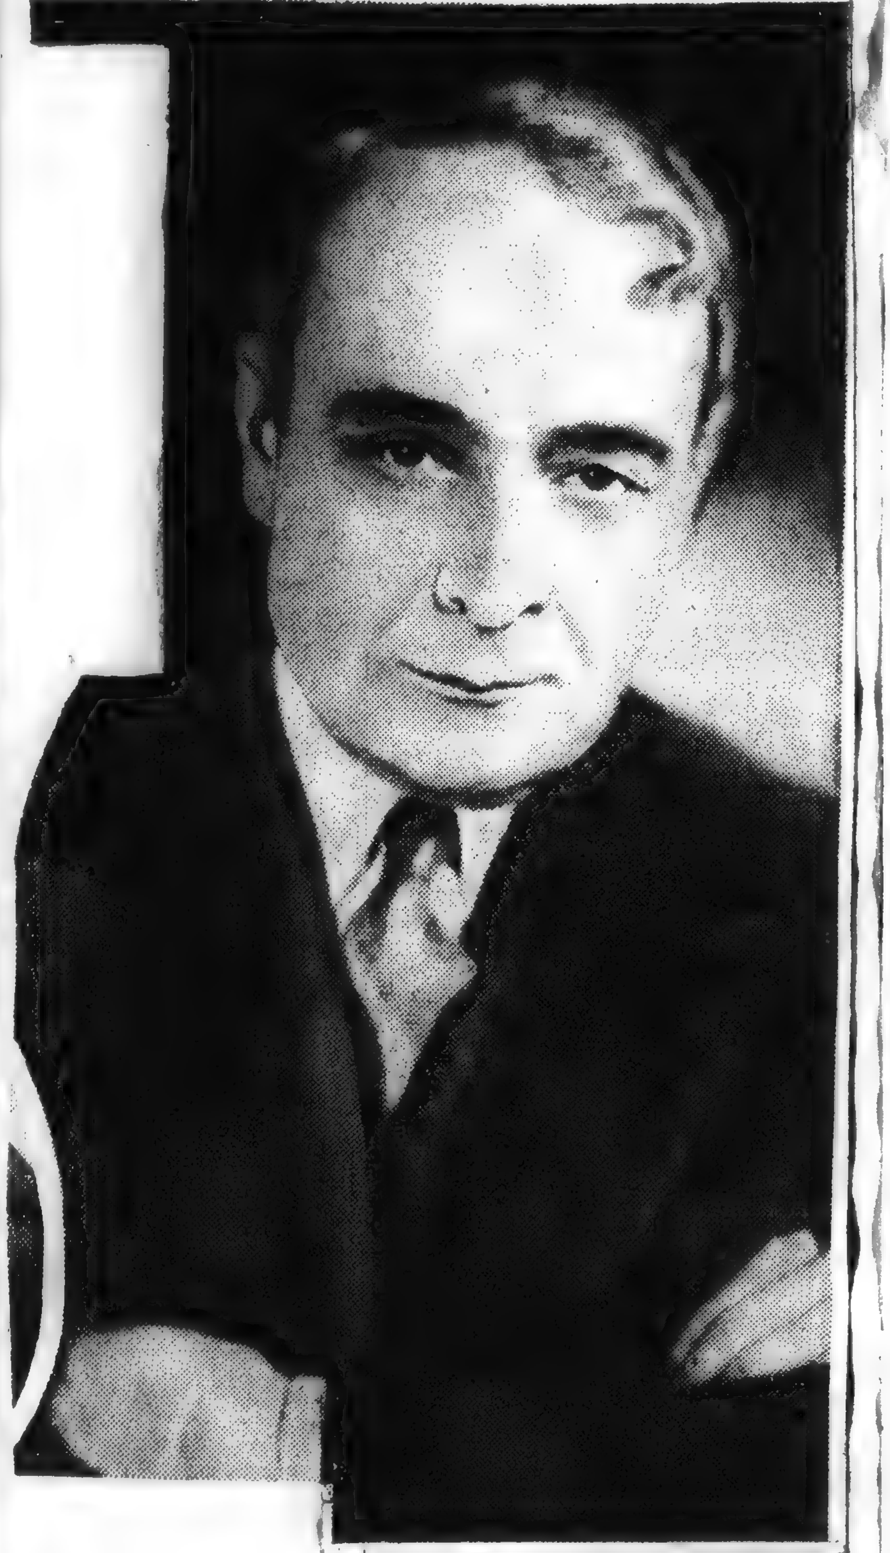
Dr. Koussevitzky gave Franck's Symphony his characteristically dramatic treatment, which goes far to protect it from the charges of dulness and sentimentality often brought against it. The orchestra played it with a virtuosity amazing even after all these years.

L. A. S.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

NOV 18 1939

EVENTS OF THE WEEK



Serge Koussevitzky opens the New York season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall Thursday evening, November 23, appearing also Saturday afternoon. Another performance is scheduled for the Brooklyn Academy of Music Friday night.

Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony In American Bills

Serge Koussevitzky announces a "Festival" of American music for the opening pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall this season, to be given next Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon. Eight American works will constitute these programs. The first will consist of the American Festival Overture by William Schuman, written for this orchestra; Edward Burlingame Hill's Violin Concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist; the Third Symphony of Roy Harris, and the Second Symphony of Randall Thompson.

The matinee program will open with Arthur Foote's Suite for Strings, and continue with Walter Piston's Piano Concertino, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist; John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers" (Dorothy Maynor and Leonard Franklin taking the vocal parts); and Howard Hanson's Third Symphony. The works by Schurman, Hill, Harris, Carpenter, and Hanson have had their first concert performances by this orchestra.

The Boston Symphony will give its first Brooklyn concert in a series of five for the current season at the Academy of Music Friday evening, November 24. The first half of its program will be given over to American composers and will feature as soloists Ruth Posselt, Dorothy Maynor and Leonard Franklin. The program will consist of the following numbers: Foote, suite for strings; Hill, violin concerto; Carpenter, "Skyscrapers," and Franck, symphony.

The Academy of Music concerts by the Boston Symphony are held under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society and a Brooklyn committee.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CITIZEN

NOV 18 1939

Music Notes

Boston Symphony Opens Annual Brooklyn Series At Academy on Friday

Koussevitzky Orchestra to Present Three Soloists in First of Five Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give its first Brooklyn concert in a series of five for the current season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, next Friday evening. The first half of its program will be given over to American composers and will feature three soloists: Ruth Posselt, violinist; Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Leonard Franklin, tenor. The following program will be played:

Foote, Suite in E major, Op. 63, for String Orchestra.

Hill, Concerto for Violin, Op. 38.

Carpenter, "Skyscrapers" (A Ballet of Modern American Life).

Franck, Symphony in D minor.

The Academy of Music concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are held under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, and a Brooklyn committee.

A discussion of the program will be held Tuesday afternoon by Jonathan Schiller, lecturer in music at the Institute and director of the RCA Victor Lecture Bureau. Mr. Schiller will illustrate his discussion with recordings. He will speak in the lecture hall of the Brooklyn Academy of Music at 4 p. m.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

NOV 18 1939

Boston Symphony fills in while Philharmonic tours.

Our own Philharmonic will go aroving next week, a venture that should do much for prestige along the outland byways. There was a time, when railroad fares were lower and the world easier in its collective mind, when orchestras, opera and ballet troupes, and vast theatrical companies were able to roam at will.

But the Philharmonic, save for an occasional "jump", hasn't been doing much of this sort of thing since that memorable jaunt to Europe with Toscanini. Budgets are ticklish things, and boards of directors have grown restive.

The resultant gap in the orchestral routine of Carnegie Hall will be filled quite nicely, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men are due for the first pair of concerts in their New York season on Thursday evening, Nov. 23, and on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 25.

The ASCAP ruction with the unions having robbed Dr. Koussevitzky of his intention to celebrate here the growth of "American music", a task that he subsequently performed in Boston—supposedly where musical unions do not flourish—he has announced this deferred "Festival" for the first two concerts. Following are the programs:

Nov. 23—William Schumann, American Festival Overture; Edward Burlinghame Hill, Violin Concerto (Ruth Posselt, soloist); Roy Harris, Symphony No. 3; Randall Thompson, Symphony No. 2.

Nov. 25—Arthur Foote, Suite for Strings; Walter Piston, Concertino for Piano and Orchestra (Jesus Maria Sanroma, soloist); John Alden Carpenter, "Skyscrapers" (Dorothy Maynor-Leonard Franklin); Howard Hanson, Symphony No. 3.

WALTHAM, MASS.
NEWS TRIBUNE

NOV 18 1939

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a "festival" of American music in two concerts to be given in Carnegie Hall, New York, on Nov. 23 and 25.

Eight American works will be given. The first concert will consist of the American Festival overture of William Schuman, written for the Boston Symphony; a new violin concerto by Edward Burlingame Hill, with Ruth Posselt as soloist; the Third Symphony of Roy Harris, and Randall Thompson's Second Symphony.

On the ensuing program will be heard Arthur Foote's Suite for Strings; Walter Piston's Piano Concertino, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist; John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers" and Howand Hanson's Third Symphony.

The lowly saxophone, butt of jokes and purveyor of hot jazz rhythm, is making some headway as a serious instrument, with Sigurd Rascher, young Anglo-Swede, as its apostle.

Rascher appeared first with the Boston Symphony, and was well received by critics in New England's citadel of culture. Now he has played with the New York Philharmonic - Symphony under John Barbirolli. The audience was politely appreciative of his performance in Debussy's Rhapsody for Orchestra and Saxophone and Jacques Ibert's Chamber Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra.

One of Rascher's difficulties is to find enough "classic" music suitable for the saxaphone to give him a repertoire. Some pieces have been composed especially for him.

Rascher is professor of saxophone at the Royal Danish Conservatory, the Danes having taken to the orphan instrument before American had a chance to "discover" it.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.
NOV 18 1939

MUSIC

IN EXPLANATION of my contention that Toscanini nowadays conducts but is not heard I pointed out that the performance he produces with fanatical zeal for exactly the right sonorities and right plastic proportions reaches the ears of the radio audience with those sonorities and proportions altered by the acoustic defects of Studio 8H, by the limitations in frequency and volume range of transmitting apparatus, by the deficiencies of most of the radio sets in American homes. I forgot to add that with the sonorities produced with such care by Toscanini there emerges from the radio—even from the finest Scott—a whistle caused by interference from another station. And I will add now that from many radios the performance emerges combined with the program of the Mutual Broadcasting System—the first movement of the recent performance of Beethoven's "Eroica," for example, with jazz; the second movement with Trans-Radio news. And this is to say nothing of the disturbances added by the master aerials, most of them defective, that are being installed in apartment houses.

All this is interesting because American broadcasting companies are loud about the benefits the American radio audience receives from the American system of commercial broadcasting; and these claims may be questioned. N. B. C., for example, has much to say about the symphony orchestra it established for broadcasting in 1937, about its engagement of Toscanini, and about these as the "climax to its presentation of the best in music for eleven years" (to quote from the brochure published to celebrate the occasion). But as far back as 1928 I heard in London the fine symphony orchestra established by the non-commercial British Broadcasting Corporation; and this orchestra's public and broadcast concerts each week under conductors who later included Koussevitzky and Toscanini were part of a program which assured the English radio audience an average of two hours of the best music every evening. This was at a time, which continued as late as 1930-31, when N. B. C. was occasionally picking up—and dropping—concerts by one or another of the American orchestras; when the Philadelphia Orchestra might be heard in a few special broadcasts but N. B. C.'s week-in, week-out orchestral offerings were typified by the Saturday night General Electric Hour in which Walter Damrosch conducted programs of things like Delibes's "Sylvia," Massenet's "Elegy," Grainger's "Molly on the Shore," Handel's Largo, Rubinstein's "Melody in F," Mendelssohn's "Spring Song," with an occasional movement or two of a symphony; when N. B. C. offered no programs of Carnegie or Town Hall caliber at all on week-day nights, and its total for the week might be two hours. (The Metropolitan Opera broadcasts began in 1931-32.)

If, then, N. B. C., out of regard for the commercial value of Toscanini's celebrated name, established an orchestra for radio in 1937, it did what the B. B. C., out of regard for great music, did ten years earlier; if American commercial broadcasting gave the American radio audience Toscanini's performances in 1937, it gave this audience Damrosch's General Electric Hour before that (in 1927 it was Damrosch whose name was sufficiently celebrated for Mr. Sarnoff to acquire it as a commercial asset and to consider Damrosch a great conductor); and American commercial broadcasting gives this audience Toscanini's performances mixed with a whistle, jazz, and Trans-Radio news. For these interferences are caused by stations on adjacent wave lengths that broadcast with too great power; they use that much power to cover more territory; and they cover more territory to be able to charge advertisers more for time. I am fully aware that the B. B. C.'s broadcasts also suffer from interference; but I am pointing out a particular interference that results from the commercialization of broadcasting in this country.

The opening concerts of the New Friends of Music have fulfilled my predictions. Concert programs repeat a limited repertory; but an organization that sets out merely to play what is unplayed will give its audience a few neglected masterpieces like the Viola Quintet K. 614 of Mozart of the second Friends concert, but a greater number of works that deserve their obscurity, like the Horn Quintet K. 407 of the first concert, the Duo K. 423 for violin and viola of the second. And there has been the usual inequality in performances: the players of the Duo were quite undistinguished; but what made the Viola Quintet an unforgettable experience was the way it was played by the new Primrose Quartet and William Carboni—with the combination of technical mastery, emotional warmth, and distinction of musical style all raised to sheer incandescence that has been heard until now only from the Budapest Quartet.

The Divertimento K. 334 of Mozart for strings and two horns recorded for Columbia by the Lener Quartet and Aubrey and Dennis Brain (M-379, $7.50) is the one recorded a few years ago by Harty with the London Philharmonic. The Leners include two dull movements which Harty wisely omitted; and they make things worse with a performance as stodgy as Harty's was light-footed; but the older recording sounds shabby. Ernst Victor Wolff and Janos Scholz have recorded a good performance of Bach's Sonata No. 3 for harpsichord and viola da gamba (X-147, $3.50), which I find more attractive than the other two sonatas of the group, but not one of Bach's most consequential works. And Barlow and the Columbia Broadcasting Symphony have done another of their better jobs wih Goldmark's melodious "Rustic Wedding" Symphony (M-385, $7.50). The rest next time.

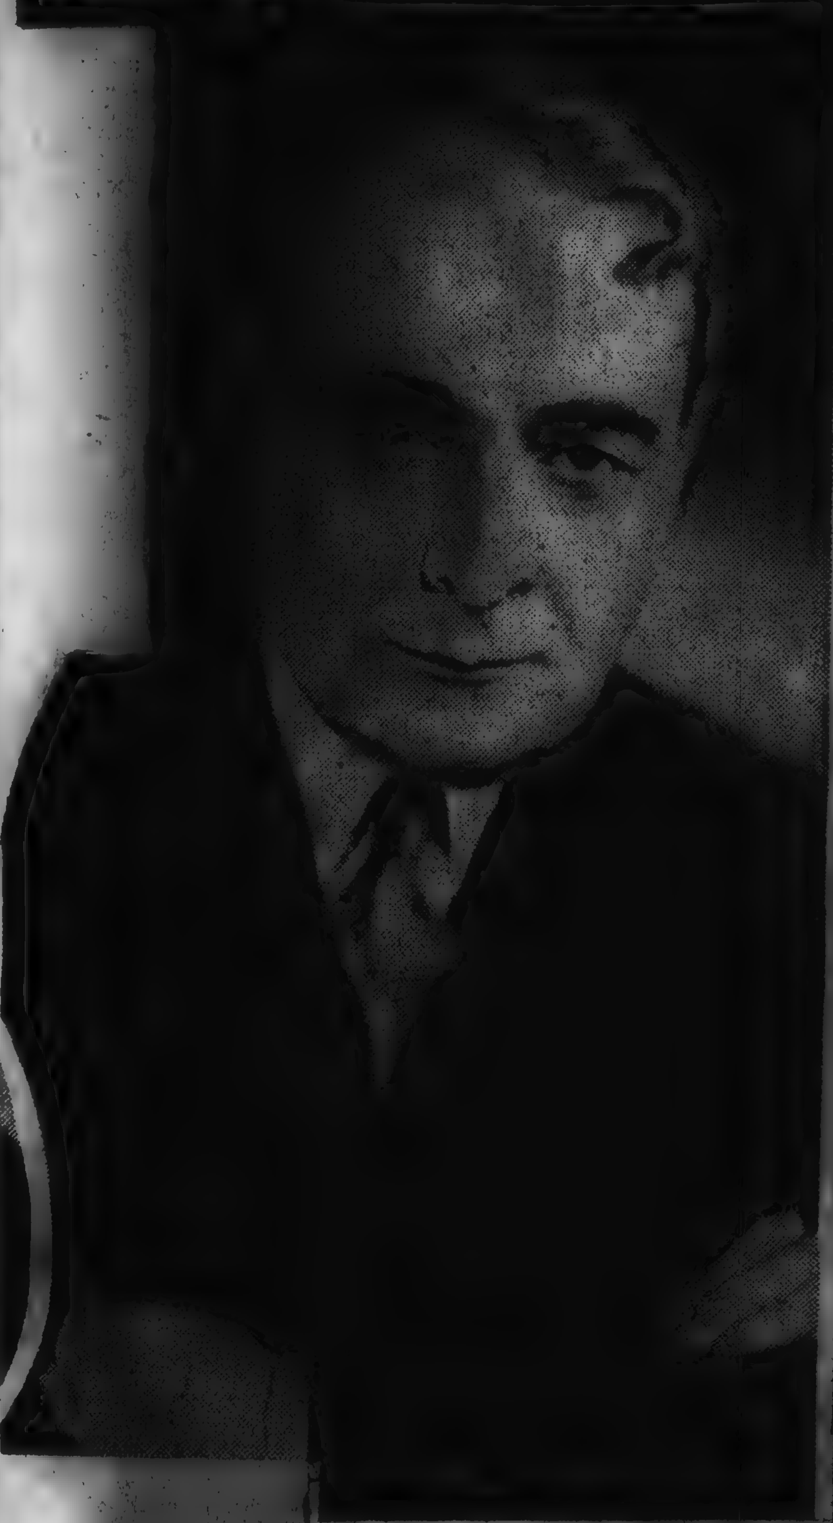
B. H. HAGGIN

82

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

NOV 18 1939

EVENTS OF THE WEEK



Serge Koussevitzky opens the New York season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall Thursday evening, November 23, appearing also Saturday afternoon. Another performance is scheduled for the Brooklyn Academy of Music Friday night.

Koussevitzky and Boston Symphony In American Bills

Serge Koussevitzky announces a "Festival" of American music for the opening pair of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall this season, to be given next Thursday evening and Saturday afternoon. Eight American works will constitute these programs. The first will consist of the American Festival Overture by William Schuman, written for this orchestra; Edward Burlingame Hill's Violin Concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist; the Third Symphony of Roy Harris, and the Second Symphony of Randall Thompson.

The matinee program will open with Arthur Foote's Suite for Strings, and continue with Walter Piston's Piano Concertino, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist; John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers" (Dorothy Maynor and Leonard Franklin taking the vocal parts); and Howard Hanson's Third Symphony. The works by Schurman, Hill, Harris, Carpenter, and Hanson have had their first concert performances by this orchestra.

The Boston Symphony will give its first Brooklyn concert in a series of five for the current season at the Academy of Music Friday evening, November 24. The first half of its program will be given over to American composers and will feature as soloists Ruth Posselt, Dorothy Maynor and Leonard Franklin. The program will consist of the following numbers: Foote, suite for strings; Hill, violin concerto; Carpenter, "Skyscrapers," and Franck, symphony.

The Academy of Music concerts by the Boston Symphony are held under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society and a Brooklyn committee.

CITIZEN

NOV 18 1939

Music Notes

Boston Symphony Opens Annual Brooklyn Series At Academy on Friday

Koussevitzky Orchestra to Present Three Soloists in First of Five Concerts

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give its first Brooklyn concert in a series of five for the current season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, next Friday evening. The first half of its program will be given over to American composers and will feature three soloists: Ruth Posselt violinist; Dorothy Maynor, soprano Leonard Franklin, tenor. The following program will be played:

Foote, Suite in E major, Op. 63 for String Orchestra.

Hill, Concerto for Violin, Op. 38.

Carpenter, "Skyscrapers" (A Ballet of Modern American Life).

Franck, Symphony in D minor.

The Academy of Music concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are held under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society, and a Brooklyn committee.

A discussion of the program will be held Tuesday afternoon by Jonathan Schiller, lecturer in music at the Institute and director of the RCA Victor Lecture Bureau. Mr. Schiller will illustrate his discussion with recordings. He will speak in the lecture hall of the Brooklyn Academy of Music at 4 p. m.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
CUE
NEW YORK, N. Y.

NOV 18 1939

Boston Symphony fills in while Philharmonic tours.

Our own Philharmonic will go a-roving next week, a venture that should do much for prestige along the outland byways. There was a time, when railroad fares were lower and the world easier in its collective mind, when orchestras, opera and ballet troupes, and vast theatrical companies were able to roam at will.

But the Philharmonic, save for an occasional "jump", hasn't been doing much of this sort of thing since that memorable jaunt to Europe with Toscanini. Budgets are ticklish things, and boards of directors have grown restive.

The resultant gap in the orchestral routine of Carnegie Hall will be filled quite nicely, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dr. Koussevitzky and his men are due for the first pair of concerts in their New York season on Thursday evening, Nov. 23, and on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 25.

The ASCAP ruction with the unions having robbed Dr. Koussevitzky of his intention to celebrate here the growth of "American music", a task that he subsequently performed in Boston—supposedly where musical unions do not flourish—he has announced this deferred "Festival" for the first two concerts. Following are the programs:

Nov. 23—William Schumann, American Festival Overture; Edward Burlinghame Hill, Violin Concerto (Ruth Posselt, soloist); Roy Harris, Symphony No. 3; Randall Thompson, Symphony No. 2.

Nov. 25—Arthur Foote, Suite for Strings; Walter Piston, Concertino for Piano and Orchestra (Jesus Maria Sanroma, soloist); John Alden Carpenter, "Skyscrapers" (Dorothy Maynor-Leonard Franklin); Howard Hanson, Symphony No. 3.

NEWS TRIBUNE

NOV 18 1939

Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a "festival" of American music in two concerts to be given in Carnegie Hall, New York, on Nov. 23 and 25.

Eight American works will be given. The first concert will consist of the American Festival overture of William Schuman, written for the Boston Symphony; a new violin concerto by Edward Burlingame Hill, with Ruth Posselt as soloist; the Third Symphony of Roy Harris, and Randall Thompson's Second Symphony.

On the ensuing program will be heard Arthur Foote's Suite for Strings; Walter Piston's Piano Concertino, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist; John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers" and Howard Hanson's Third Symphony.

The lowly saxophone, butt of jokes and purveyor of hot jazz rhythm, is making some headway as a serious instrument, with Sigurd Rascher, young Anglo-Swede, as its apostle.

Rascher appeared first with the Boston Symphony, and was well received by critics in New England's citadel of culture. Now he has played with the New York Philharmonic - Symphony under John Barbirolli. The audience was politely appreciative of his performance in Debussy's Rhapsody for Orchestra and Saxophone and Jacques Ibert's Chamber Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra.

One of Rascher's difficulties is to find enough "classic" music suitable for the saxaphone to give him a repertoire. Some pieces have been composed especially for him.

Rascher is professor of saxophone at the Royal Danish Conservatory, the Danes having taken to the orphan instrument before American had a chance to "discover" it.

THIS CLIPPING F
NATION
NEW YORK, N. Y.
NOV 18 1939

MUSIC

In EXPLANATION of my contention that Toscanini nowadays conducts but is not heard I pointed out that the performance he produces with fanatical zeal for exactly the right sonorities and right plastic proportions reaches the ears of the radio audience with those sonorities and proportions altered by the acoustic defects of Studio 8H, by the limitations in frequency and volume range of transmitting apparatus, by the deficiencies of most of the radio sets in American homes. I forgot to add that with the sonorities produced with such care by Toscanini there emerges from the radio—even from the finest Scott—a whistle caused by interference from another station. And I will add now that from many radios the performance emerges combined with the program of the Mutual Broadcasting System—the first movement of the recent performance of Beethoven's "Eroica," for example, with jazz; the second movement with Trans-Radio news. And this is to say nothing of the disturbances added by the master aerials, most of them defective, that are being installed in apartment houses.

All this is interesting because American broadcasting companies are loud about the benefits the American radio audience receives from the American system of commercial broadcasting; and these claims may be questioned. N. B. C., for example, has much to say about the symphony orchestra it established for broadcasting in 1937, about its engagement of Toscanini, and about these as the "climax to its presentation of the best in music for eleven years" (to quote from the brochure published to celebrate the occasion). But as far back as 1928 I heard in London the fine symphony orchestra established by the non-commercial British Broadcasting Corporation; and this orchestra's public and broadcast concerts each week under conductors who later included Koussevitzky and Toscanini were part of a program which assured the English radio audience an average of two hours of the best music every evening. This was at a time, which continued as late as 1930-31, when N. B. C. was occasionally picking up—and dropping—concerts by one or another of the American orchestras; when the Philadelphia Orchestra might be heard in a few special broadcasts but N. B. C.'s week-in, week-out orchestral [illegible] were typified by the Saturday night General Electric Hour in which Walter Damrosch conducted programs of things like Delibes's "Sylvia," Massenet's "Elegy," Grainger's "Molly on the Shore," Handel's Largo, Rubinstein's "Melody in F," Mendelssohn's "Spring Song," with an occasional movement or two of a symphony; when N. B. C. offered no programs of Carnegie or Town Hall caliber at all on week-day nights, and its total for the week might be two hours. (The Metropolitan Opera broadcasts began in 1931-32.)

If, then, N. B. C., out of regard for the commercial value of Toscanini's celebrated name, established an orchestra for radio in 1937, it did what the B. B. C., but of regard for great music, did ten years earlier; if American commercial broadcasting gave the American radio audience Toscanini's performances in 1937, it gave this audience Damrosch's General Electric Hour before that (in 1927 it was Damrosch whose name was sufficiently celebrated for Mr. Sarnoff to acquire it as a commercial asset and to consider Damrosch a great conductor); and American commercial broadcasting gives this audience Toscanini's performances mixed with a whistle, jazz, and Trans-Radio news. For these interferences are caused by stations on adjacent wave lengths that broadcast with too great power; they use that much power to cover more territory; and they cover more territory to be able to charge advertisers more for time. I am fully aware that the B. B. C.'s broadcasts also suffer from interference; but I am pointing out a particular interference that results from the commercialization of broadcasting in this country.

The opening concerts of the New Friends of Music have fulfilled my predictions. Concert programs repeat a limited repertory; but an organization that sets out merely to play what is unplayed will give its audience a few neglected masterpieces like the Viola Quintet K. 614 of Mozart of the second Friends concert, but a greater number of works that deserve their obscurity, like the Horn Quintet K. 407 of the first concert, the Duo K. 423 for violin and viola of the second. And there has been the usual inequality in performances: the players of the Duo were quite undistinguished; but what made the Viola Quintet an unforgettable experience was the way it was played by the new Primrose Quartet and William Carboni—with the combination of technical mastery, emotional warmth, and distinction of musical style all raised to sheer incandescence that has been heard until now only from the Budapest Quartet.

The Divertimento K. 334 of Mozart for strings and two horns recorded for Columbia by the Lener Quartet and Aubrey and Dennis Brain (M-379, $7.50) is the one recorded a few years ago by Harty with the London Philharmonic. The Leners include two dull movements which Harty wisely omitted; and they make things worse with a performance as stodgy as Harty's was light-footed; but the older recording sounds shabby. Ernst Victor Wolff and Janos Scholz have recorded a good performance of Bach's Sonata No. 3 for harpsichord and viola da gamba (X-147, $3.50), which I find more attractive than the other two sonatas of the group, but not one of Bach's most consequential works. And Barlow and the Columbia Broadcasting Symphony have done another of their better jobs wih Goldmark's melodious "Rustic Wedding" Symphony (M-385, $7.50). The [illegible] [illegible] time.

B. H. HAGGIN

THIS CLIPPING FROM
SOUTH HAVEN, MICH.
TRIBUNE

NOV 18 1939

Music World

New York, Nov. 18. (UP) - Leopold Stokowski, conductor emeritus of the Philadelphia Orchestra, is experimenting again — this time with the arrangement of instruments in the orchestra.

The present conventional grouping is radically altered. The strings are moved from the front to the rear, where the brasses, woodwinds and tympani now sit. The lighter strings thus would be united with the basses, conventionally at the left rear.

Stokowski believes the new arrangement adds tonal quality for the listener and gives better balance to the music, especially in unifying the strings. His acoustical experiments, Stokowski says, have shown that the sound waves are reflected more strongly to the audience from the rear of the inclosure in which the musicians sit, rather than from the front. Hence, he believes, the more delicate strings are more tonically effective out in the auditorium when the emanate from the back of the orchestra.

Stokowski has been conducting the Philadelphia Orchestra during November.

* * *

Serge Koussevitsky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a "festival" of American music in two concerts to be given in Carnegie Hall, New York, on Nov. 23 and 25.

Eight American works will be given. The first concert will consist of the American Festival overture of William Schuman, written for the Boston Symphony; a new violin concerto by Edward Burlingame Hill, with Ruth Posselt as soloist; the Third Symphony of Roy Harris, and Randall Thompson's Second Symphony.

On the ensuing program will be heard Arthur Foote's Suite for Strings; Walter Piston's Piano Concertino, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist; John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers" and Howand Hanson's Third Symphony.

* * *

The lowly saxophone, butt of jokes and purveyor of hot jazz rhythm, is making some headway as a serious instrument, with Sigurd Rascher, young Anglo-Swede, as its apostle.

Rascher appeared first with the Boston Symphony, and was well received by critics in New England's citadel of culture. Now he has played with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony under John Barbirolli. The audience was politely appreciative of his performance in Debussy's Rhapsody for Orchestra and Saxophone and Jaques Ibert's Chamber Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra.

One of Rascher's difficulties is to find enough "classic" music suitable for the saxophone to give him a repertoire. Some pieces have been composed especially for him.

Rascher is professor of saxophone at the Royal Conservatory, the Danes having taken to the orphan instrument before America had a chance to "discover" it.

* * *

New York was treated to another invocation with the world premiere of "Bacchanale" by the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo during its season at the Metropolitan Opera House, which ends tomorrow to permit the company to go on tour.

"Bacchanale" is by Salvador Dali, the surrealist painter, with choreography by Leonide Massine. It is programmed as a "paranoic" performance of the Venusberg music from Wagner's "Tannhaeuser."

It is an absurd, fantastic burlesque, amusing to people who like that sort of thing, and certainly spectacular.

Usually, when New Yorkers do not like a new work, they receive it in cold silence or with damningly faint applause. However, in the packed audience at the Metropolitan, there was hissing and muttering from outraged lovers of the classic ballet.

* * *

Robert Casadesus, French pianist, who has been appearing in Holland and Switzerland, will return to this country for a tour early next year. He will open in Washington on Jan. 15.

Subsequent appearances include engagements with the Houston Symphony on Jan. 22; Davenport Symphony, Jan. 29; CincinnatiSymphony on Feb. 9 and 10; Chicago Symphony on March 7, 8 and 10; Chicago Symphony, Jan. 29; Cincinnati Symphony phony on March 14 and 15 and Minneapolis Symphony on April 5.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

NOV 18 1939

Dorothy Maynor, who makes her recital debut at Town Hall tomorrow evening, is tho young Negro soprano "discovered" by Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony this summer. Mr. Koussevitzky heard her in private audition and was so impressed that he asked her to sing at a party he gave to the musicians gathered for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Miss Maynor was born in Norfolk, Va., the daughter of a Methodist preacher. At 14 she entered the Hampton Institute and a few years later toured Europe with its famous Negro Chorus. She has been continuing her vocal studies in New York for the past three years.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

NOV 19 1939

Serge Koussevitzky takes the Boston Symphony to New York this week. The large gap left by the intermission will be filled, and well, by Adolf Busch and Rudolf Serkin, who have prepared a recital of sonatas for violin and piano in Jordan Hall Friday night. The program: Schumann's A minor sonata, Bach's D minor partita for unaccompanied violin, two impromptus by Schubert and the Beethoven C minor sonata, No. 2.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
SUNDAY HERALD

NOV 19 1939

Boston This Week At Woolsey Hall

Dr. Koussevitzky must have liked Howard Hanson's new Symphony No. 3. After playing the Rochesterian's work for the first time last week in Boston, he will present it in New Haven next Wednesday night when the Boston Symphony is next in the Woolsey hall series.

The Boston also will play Mozart's overture to "Figaro," and Schuman's Symphony No. 1.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LAWRENCE, MASS.
EAGLE

NOV 18 1939

Negro Soprano In Debut Tomorrow

New Yorker Praises Koussevitzky's Festival Find

Miss Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano "discovered" by Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival last summer, makes her Town Hall debut in New York tomorrow.

The New Yorker in its current issue had the following to say of Miss Maynor:

The great discovery of the new musical season is undoubtedly Dorothy Maynor, the Negro soprano. Season, hell! Let's make her the discovery of the decade. Miss Maynor is the protege of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony. It's a matter of public record that the first time she sang for him, last August, he called her "a native Flagstad." After giving him plenty of time to cool off, a friend of his recently asked him if he still meant it, and he cried heatedly, "I meant more than that!" And if you don't believe Koussevitzky, maybe you'll believe the Times: "One of the outstanding voices of the day." Anyway, most of the musical folk we know think that her debut, which takes place this Sunday evening, will be an event comparable to the debuts of Galli-Curci and Heifetz. Town Hall has been sold out for more than a week, and you could not get a seat now for love or money.

Miss Maynor was absolutely unknown last August when she turned up at the Berkshire Music Festival, an annual outdoor affair held near Stockbridge. She had come to hear the music, and to try her luck at getting an audition with Koussevitzky. This was arranged for her by one of the patronesses of the Festival, and she sang one afternoon after a concert. The conductor jumped up and down, shouting, "It's a miracle! It is a musical revelation! The world must hear her!" This happened to be the day before a picnic which Koussevitzky was giving for his men, and he insisted that she sing for them. On less that twenty-four hours' notice, Miss Maynor did a little program of German Lieder, Negro spirituals, and the "Ho-Yo-To-Ho!" from Wagner's "Walkure." It was kind of a tough job, since she had never before sung solo in public and her audience was made up of professional musicians, with a sprinkling of critics; but she did so satisfactorily that the next thing she knew, she was making records with the Boston Symphony.

Miss Maynor is twenty-eight. She's very short, very buxom, very dark, and excruciatingly modest. She told us (speaking with no trace of a Southern accent) that her reactions when the heavens opened last August were "fear and daze." "I didn't sleep for three nights," she added. She has been training only three years for solo work, but her musical background is extensive. She was born in Norfolk, Virginia, where her father, now dead, was a Methodist minister. When she was fourteen, she entered Hampton Institute, near Norfolk. Four years later, in 1929, she toured Europe as a member of the Institute's famous choir. After Hampton, she attended the Westminster Choir School in Princeton, planning eventually to become a voice teacher. Her friends kept urging her to study for concert work, however, and in 1936 she came to New York to do it; first she studied with Wilfred Klamroth, then with John Alan Haughton, who is still her teacher. She and her mother have a small apartment on Seventh Avenue, near 114th Street, where at the moment, she is working like a dog. "It has all come so suddenly that I must make every moment count," she told us. She's up at six, does two hours of memorizing, then an hour of French and an hour of German. Then she has a lesson, lunches, takes a walk in Central Park, and returns to her apartment for an afternoon of study almost as concentrated as the morning's. We asked if she felt nervous about her debut, and she said, "Well, you can say I'm anxious. You can say I'm hoping and praying I'll prove acceptable." At this point, her modesty almost floored the interview completely. "You can say," she said, "that I hope I'll be able to give the best interpretations I'll be able to give."

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

NOV 18 1939

Maynor

THE great discovery of the new musical season is undoubtedly Dorothy Maynor, the Negro soprano. Season, hell! Let's make her the discovery of the decade. Miss Maynor is the protégée of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony. It's a matter of public record that the first time she sang for him, last August, he called her "a native Flagstad." After giving him plenty of time to cool off, a friend of his recently asked him if he still meant it, and he cried heatedly, "I meant more than that!" And if you don't believe Koussevitzky, maybe you'll believe the Times: "One of the outstanding voices of the day." Anyway, most of the musical folk we know think that her début, which takes place this Sunday evening, will be an event comparable to the débuts of Galli-Curci and Heifetz. Town Hall has been sold out for more than a week, and you couldn't get a seat now for love or money.

Miss Maynor was absolutely unknown last August when she turned up at the Berkshire Music Festival, an annual outdoor affair held near Stockbridge. She had come to hear the music, and to try her luck at getting an audition with Koussevitzky. This was arranged for her by one of the patronesses of the Festival, and she sang one afternoon after a concert. The conductor jumped up and down, shouting, "It is a miracle! It is a musical revelation! The world must hear her!" This happened to be the day before a picnic which Koussevitzky was giving for his men, and he insisted that she sing for them. On less than twenty-four hours' notice, Miss Maynor did a little program of German Lieder, Negro spirituals, and the "Ho-Yo-To-Ho!" from Wagner's "Walküre." It was kind of a tough job, since she had never before sung solo in public and her audience was made up of professional musicians, with a sprinkling of critics; but she did so satisfactorily that the next thing she knew, she was making records with the Boston Symphony.

Miss Maynor is twenty-eight. She's very short, very buxom, very dark, and excruciatingly modest. She told us (speaking with no trace of a Southern accent) that her reactions when the heavens opened last August were "fear and daze." "I didn't sleep for three nights," she added. She has been training only three years for solo work, but her musical background is extensive. She was born in Norfolk, Virginia, where her father, now dead, was a Methodist minister. When she was fourteen, she entered Hampton Institute, near Norfolk. Four years later, in 1929, she toured Europe as a member of the Institute's famous choir. After Hampton, she attended the Westminster Choir School in Princeton, planning eventually to become a voice teacher. Her friends kept urging her to study for concert work, however, and in 1936 she came to New York to do it; first she studied with Wilfred Klamroth, then with John Alan Haughton, who is still her teacher. She and her mother have a small apartment on Seventh Avenue, near 114th Street, where, at the moment, she is working like a dog. "It has all come so suddenly that I must make every moment count," she told us. She's up at six, does two hours of memorizing, then an hour of French and an hour of German. Then she has a lesson, lunches, takes a walk in Central Park, and returns to her apartment for an afternoon of study almost as concentrated as the morning's. We asked if she felt nervous about her début, and she said, "Well, you can say I'm anxious. You can say I'm hoping and praying I'll prove acceptable." At this point, her modesty almost floored the interview completely. "You can say," she said, "that I hope I'll be able to give the best interpretations I'll be able to give."

THIS CLIPPING FROM SOUTH HAVEN, MICH.
TRIBUNE

NOV 18 1939

Music World

New York, Nov. 18. (UP) – Leopold Stokowski, conductor emeritus of the Philadelphia Orchestra, is experimenting again — this time with the arrangement of instruments in the orchestra.

The present conventional grouping is radically altered. The strings are moved from the front to the rear, where the brasses, woodwinds and tympani now sit. The lighter strings thus would be united with the basses, conventionally at the left rear.

Stokowski believes the new arrangement adds tonal quality for the listener and gives better balance to the music, especially in unifying the strings. His acoustical experiments, Stokowski says, have shown that the sound waves are reflected more strongly to the audience from the rear of the inclosure in which the musicians sit, rather than from the front. Hence, he believes, the more delicate strings are more tonically effective out in the auditorium when the emanate from the back of the orchestra.

Stokowski has been conducting the Philadelphia Orchestra during November.

• • •

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a "festival" of American music in two concerts to be given in Carnegie Hall, New York, on Nov. 23 and 25.

Eight American works will be given. The first concert will consist of the American Festival overture of William Schuman, written for the Boston Symphony; a new violin concerto by Edward Burlingame Hill, with Ruth Posselt as soloist; the Third Symphony of Roy Harris, and Randall Thompson's Second Symphony.

On the ensuing program will be heard Arthur Foote's Suite for Strings; Walter Piston's Piano Concertino, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist; John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers" and Howard Hanson's Third Symphony.

• • •

The lowly saxophone, butt of jokes and purveyor of hot jazz rhythm, is making some headway as a serious instrument, with Sigurd Rascher, young Anglo-Swede, as its apostle.

Rascher appeared first with the Boston Symphony, and was well received by critics in New England's citadel of culture. Now he has played with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony under John Barbirolli. The audience was politely appreciative of his performance in Debussy's Rhapsody for Orchestra and Saxophone and Jacques Ibert's Chamber Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra.

One of Rascher's difficulties is to find enough "classic" music suitable for the saxophone to give him a repertoire. Some pieces have been composed especially for him.

Rascher is professor of saxophone at the Royal Conservatory, the Danes having taken to the orphan instrument before America had a chance to "discover" it.

• • •

New York was treated to another invocation with the world premiere of "Bacchanale" by the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo during its season at the Metropolitan Opera House, which ends tomorrow to permit the company to go on tour.

"Bacchanale" is by Salvador Dali, the surrealist painter, with choreography by Leonide Massine. It is programmed as a "paranoic" performance of the Venusberg music from Wagner's "Tannhaeuser."

It is an absurd, fantastic burlesque, amusing to people who like that sort of thing, and certainly spectacular.

Usually, when New Yorkers do not like a new work, they receive it in cold silence or with damningly faint applause. However, in the packed audience at the Metropolitan, there was hissing and muttering from outraged lovers of the classic ballet.

• • •

Robert Casadesus, French pianist, who has been appearing in Holland and Switzerland, will return to this country for a tour early next year. He will open in Washington on Jan. 15.

Subsequent appearances include engagements with the Houston Symphony on Jan. 22; Davenport Symphony, Jan. 29; Cincinnati Symphony on Feb. 9 and 10; Chicago Symphony on March 7, 8 and 10; Chicago Symphony, Jan. 29; Cincinnati Symphony phony on March 14 and 15 and Minneapolis Symphony on April 5.

TH[illegible] FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

NOV 18 1939

Dorothy Maynor, who makes her recital debut at Town Hall tomorrow evening, is tbo young Negro soprano "discovered" by Serge Koussevitzky of the Boston Symphony this summer. Mr. Koussevitzky heard her in private audition and was so impressed that he asked her to sing at a party he gave to the musicians gathered for the Berkshire Symphonic Festival. Miss Maynor was born in Norfolk, Va., the daughter of a Methodist preacher. At 14 she entered the Hampton Institute and a few years later toured Europe with its famous Negro Chorus. She has been continuing her vocal studies in New York for the past three years.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
JOURNAL

NOV 19 1939

Serge Koussevitzky takes the Boston Symphony to New York this week. The large gap left by the intermission will be filled, and well, by Adolf Busch and Rudolf Serkin, who have prepared a recital of sonatas for violin and piano in Jordan Hall Friday night. The program: Schumann's A minor sonata, Bach's D minor partita for unaccompanied violin, two impromptus by Schubert and the Beethoven C minor sonata, No. 2.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BRIDGEPORT, CONN.
SUNDAY HERALD

NOV 19 1939

Boston This Week At Woolsey Hall

Dr. Koussevitzky must have liked Howard Hanson's new Symphony No. 3. After playing the Rochesterian's work for the first time last week in Boston, he will present it in New Haven next Wednesday night when the Boston Symphony is next in the Woolsey hall series.

The Boston also will play Mozart's overture to "Figaro," and Schuman's Symphony No. 1.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORKER
NEW YORK, N. Y.

NOV 18 1939

Maynor

THE great discovery of the new musical season is undoubtedly Dorothy Maynor, the Negro soprano. Season, hell! Let's make her the discovery of the decade. Miss Maynor is the protégée of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony. It's a matter of public record that the first time she sang for him, last August, he called her "a native Flagstad." After giving him plenty of time to cool off, a friend of his recently asked him if he still meant it, and he cried heatedly, "I meant more than that!" And if you don't believe Koussevitzky, maybe you'll believe the Times: "One of the outstanding voices of the day." Anyway, most of the musical folk we know think that her début, which takes place this Sunday evening, will be an event comparable to the débuts of Galli-Curci and Heifetz. Town Hall has been sold out for more than a week, and you couldn't get a seat now for love or money.

Miss Maynor was absolutely unknown last August when she turned up at the Berkshire Music Festival, an annual outdoor affair held near Stockbridge. She had come to hear the music, and to try her luck at getting an audition with Koussevitzky. This was arranged for her by one of the patronesses of the Festival, and she sang one afternoon after a concert. The conductor jumped up and down, shouting, "It is a miracle! It is a musical revelation! The world must hear her!" This happened to be the day before a picnic which Koussevitzky was giving for his men, and he insisted that she sing for them. On less than twenty-four hours' notice, Miss Maynor did a little program of German Lieder, Negro spirituals, and the "Ho-Yo-To-Ho!" from Wagner's "Walküre." It was kind of a tough job, since she had never before sung solo in public and her audience was made up of professional musicians, with a sprinkling of critics; but she did so satisfactorily that the next thing she knew, she was making records with the Boston Symphony.

Miss Maynor is twenty-eight. She's very short, very buxom, very dark, and excruciatingly modest. She told us (speaking with no trace of a Southern accent) that her reactions when the heavens opened last August were "fear and daze." "I didn't sleep for three nights," she added. She has been training only three years for solo work, but her musical background is extensive. She was born in Norfolk, Virginia, where her father, now dead, was a Methodist minister. When she was fourteen, she entered Hampton Institute, near Norfolk. Four years later, in 1929, she toured Europe as a member of the Institute's famous choir. After Hampton, she attended the Westminster Choir School in Princeton, planning eventually to become a voice teacher. Her friends kept urging her to study for concert work, however, and in 1936 she came to New York to do it; first she studied with Wilfred Klamroth, then with John Alan Haughton, who is still her teacher. She and her mother have a small apartment on Seventh Avenue, near 114th Street, where, at the moment, she is working like a dog. "It has all come so suddenly that I must make every moment count," she told us. She's up at six, does two hours of memorizing, then an hour of French and an hour of German. Then she has a lesson, lunches, takes a walk in Central Park, and returns to her apartment for an afternoon of study almost as concentrated as the morning's. We asked if she felt nervous about her début, and she said, "Well, you can say I'm anxious. You can say I'm hoping and praying I'll prove acceptable." At this point, her modesty almost floored the interview completely. "You can say," she said, "that I hope I'll be able to give the best interpretations I'll be able to give."

LAWRENCE MASS
EAG

NOV 18 1939

Negro Soprano In Debut Tomorrow

New Yorker Praises Koussevitzky's Festival Find

Miss Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano "discovered" by Serge Koussevitzky at Tanglewood, during the Berkshire Symphonic Festival last summer, makes her Town Hall debut in New York tomorrow.

The New Yorker in its current issue had the following to say of Miss Maynor:

The great discovery of the new musical season is undoubtedly Dorothy Maynor, the Negro soprano. Season, hell! Let's make her the discovery of the decade. Miss Maynor is the protege of Serge Koussevitzky, conductor of the Boston Symphony. It's a matter of public record that the first time she sang for him, last August, he called her "a native Flagstad." After giving him plenty of time to cool off, a friend of his recently asked him if he still meant it, and he cried heatedly, "I meant more than that!" And if you don't believe Koussevitzky, maybe you'll believe the Times: "One of the outstanding voices of the day." Anyway, most of the musical folk we know think that her debut, which takes place this Sunday evening, will be an event comparable to the debuts of Galli-Curci and Heifetz. Town Hall has been sold out for more than a week, and you could not get a seat now for love or money.

Miss Maynor was absolutely unknown last August when she turned up at the Berkshire Music Festival, an annual outdoor affair held near Stockbridge. She had come to hear the music, and to try her luck at getting an audition with Koussevitzky. This was arranged for her by one of the patronesses of the Festival, and she sang one afternoon after a concert. The conductor jumped up and down, shouting, "It's a miracle! It is a musical revelation! The world must hear her!" This happened to be the day before a picnic which Koussevitzky was giving for his men, and he insisted that she sing for them. On less that twenty-four hours' notice, Miss Maynor did a little program of German Lieder, Negro spirituals, and the "Ho-Yo-To-Ho!" from Wagner's "Walkure." It was kind of a tough job, since she had never before sung solo in public and her audience was made up of professional musicians, with a sprinkling of critics; but she did so satisfactorily that the next thing she knew, she was making records with the Boston Symphony.

Miss Maynor is twenty-eight. She's very short, very buxom, very dark, and excruciatingly modest. She told us (speaking with no trace of a Southern accent) that her reactions when the heavens opened last August were "fear and daze." "I didn't sleep for three nights," she added. She has been training only three years for solo work, but her musical background is extensive. She was born in Norfolk, Virginia, where her father, now dead, was a Methodist minister. When she was fourteen, she entered Hampton Institute, near Norfolk. Four years later, in 1929, she toured Europe as a member of the Institute's famous choir. After Hampton, she attended the Westminster Choir School in Princeton, planning eventually to become a voice teacher. Her friends kept urging her to study for concert work, however, and in 1936 she came to New York to do it; first she studied with Wilfred Klamroth, then with John Alan Haughton, who is still her teacher. She and her mother have a small apartment on Seventh Avenue, near 114th Street, where at the moment, she is working like a dog. "It has all come so suddenly that I must make every moment count," she told us. She's up at six, does two hours of memorizing, then an hour of French and an hour of German. Then she has a lesson, lunches, takes a walk in Central Park, and returns to her apartment for an afternoon of study almost as concentrated as the morning's. We asked if she felt nervous about her debut, and she said, "Well, you can say I'm anxious. You can say I'm hoping and praying I'll prove acceptable." At this point, her modesty almost floored [illegible]

THIS CLIPPING FROM WORCESTER, MASS.
TELEGRAM

NOV 19 1939

Koussevitzky Is Crusader For New American Music

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 (AP)—The most ambitious short American music festival in many years will be undertaken Nov. 23 and 25 in Carnegie Hall here by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which annually plays five pairs of concerts in New York, and five single concerts in Brooklyn.

Serge Koussevitzky, fifteen years conductor of what is internationally known as one of the great orchestras of all time, has chosen music of all types and age levels for his two-concert festival.

American Works

The first program opens, for example, with a work especially written for the Boston players by one of the younger generation, William Schuman, called an "American Festival Overture." The same program includes also a new violin concerto by 67-year-old Edward Burlingame Hill with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and two works by the middle generation: Roy Harris' Third Symphony, and Randall Thompson's Second Symphony.

Dr. Koussevitzky has decided to lead off his second concert with a suite by one of the elder statesmen of American music, Arthur Foote, whose work is having a greatly increased popularity of late.

Carpenter's "Skyscrapers"

John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers" is also to be heard, and two works by younger men, a new symphony by Howard Hanson, his third, and Walter Piston's Concertino for Piano, in which Jesus Maria Sanroma will be the soloist.

The concert will also afford Dorothy Maynor, the newly discovered Negro soprano who was heard privately this Summer at Dr. Koussevitzky's Berkshire Symphonic Festival at Stockbridge, Mass., her first New York orchestral appearance. She, with Leonard Franklin, will sing the incidental solos in "Skyscrapers."

Always a crusader for new American music, Dr. Koussevitzky points out that he and his orchestra gave the first performances of the music by Harris, Schuman, Hill, Carpenter and Hanson.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
LOWELL, MASS.
SUNDAY TELEGRAM

NOV 19 1939

MONDAY-TUESDAY SERIES

Serge Koussevitzky announces the programme for the second pair of concerts of the series given on Monday evenings and Tuesday afternoons, by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Symphony Hall. This pair will take place on December 4 and 5. The distinguished soloist of this pair of concerts will be Simon Barer, the celebrated pianist, who will make his first appearances in Boston on this occasion. Mr. Barer will be heard in the Second Piano Concerto of Serge Rachmaninoff, in C major. Dr. Koussevitzky will open the programme with Prokofieff's Classical Symphony, and also perform the First, or "Spring" Symphony of Robert Schumann.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

NOV 19 1939

Program Has Symphony Of Great Beauty

Boston Orchestra Will Perform Cesar Franck Classic at Bushnell Tuesday

The Cesar Franck "Symphony in D minor," the principal feature of the program to be played at the Bushnell Memorial on Tuesday evening of this week by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has come to be one of the best loved of all orchestral works. This beautiful composition is the final work of a program that includes also two modern American compositions. The first of these is Schuman's "American Festival Overture" (1939) and the other, Randall Thompson's "Symphony No. 2 in E minor."

In his book, "Symphonic Masterpieces," Olin Downes, music critic of the New York Times, writes as follows:

"The dark, glowing, mystical symphony of Cesar Franck is constantly suggestive of the organ on which he was wont to improvise in the loft of Ste. Clotilde's in Paris. Franck was a Belgian, a poor music-teacher in Paris, one of the meek whose praises are sung in the "Beatitudes" which he set to music. He had lived a hard youth at the hands of a father whose intention it was to exploit his precocious musical talent; for Franck, at an early age, could play the piano brilliantly. Because of this exploitation, and other repressive circumstances, Franck was long in reaching his creative maturity. As a young, industrious and not over-fortunate musician he married a wife whom he came to fear, and the wedding party climbed over the barricades of the Commune. In an age of social corruption and vitiated public taste, a period of cynical materialism, Franck pursued his way, and his music falls upon the ear like the still small voice of vision and faith. He never arrogated virtue to himself, but composed, in his prosperous years, two hours in the early morning, before he began to trot around Paris giving lessons, and in the evening gathered about him a group of young disciples which came to include some of the leading composers of modern France. By the self-seeking, Franck was ignored; and when he died, as the result of a street accident, professors of the Conservatoire where he taught were pointedly absent from the obsequies.

When his symphony was first performed in 1888 it was ridiculed by eminent authorities and coldly received by the public. But when Franck was asked about it, according to Vincent d'Indy, his pupil and biographer, his face glowed and he answered happily, "Oh, it sounded well, just as I thought it would."

Franck has been called a composer without dramatic spirit. What is meant is probably his complete innocence of theatricalism. His symphony is the inner drama of doubt and triumph. His is the cry of the man who supplicates: "Lord, I believe; help thou my unbelief."

THIS CLIPPING FROM DALLAS, TEXAS
NEWS

NOV 19 1939

THE MUSICAL DIGEST:

Stokowski Reseating Plan Just Another Press Stunt

BY PIERRE V. R. KEY,

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—Apparently when he cannot think of something more likely to get himself into print, the one-and-only Leopold Stokowski rearranges the seating of an orchestra (usually, as in this case once again, the Philadelphia Symphony).

Years ago, when he was even more intent upon publicity than he is today, Stokie massed all the fiddles together and ranged the celli at his right, where the second violins have been seated for many moons. He declared that the tone of the various sections was thus more perfectly balanced.

A few days ago Stokowski began his period of conducting the Philadelphia band with the brasses down front, the string sections behind. "Sounds better so," said the blond maestro.

How can he be right? From where I sit it sounds to me like another attempt to snare the spotlight than common sense acoustics.

Honoring the Sax.

Lifted from the realm of jazz into the more esthetic spaces of a symphonic atmosphere, that instrument was heard recently with less of the wail and moaning to which it is customarily addicted.

The occasion was a popular Philharmonic-Symphony program, during which (for the first time in its many years of activity) a saxophone soloist was made a center of attraction.

Profesionally introduced here, after a rousing success in his American debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Sigurd Rascher played the solo portions of Debussy's Rhapsody for saxophone and orchestra and the Ibert Chamber Concertino with virtuoso technique and a musicianship which proved the eminence accorded him. It was a mellow, ingratiating tone Rascher drew from his instrument; a tone in which there was a variety of color I never before heard from a saxophone.

Supreme Art.

Supreme interpretive art flourished within a few hours during a recent day, when Serge Rachmaninov played his first pianoforte recital of the season, Arturo Toscanini conducted the NBC Symphony in another program of his Beethoven cycle, and Elisabeth Schumann sang a recital of German lieder suitable for the soprano voice.

Rachmaninov's pianism is something so complete, so cameolike in the clarity of each detail, so perfectly proportioned in its musical architecture, that one is moved to speak of it as incomparable. Such it seemed to most of the audience in Carnegie Hall.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MUNCIE, IND.
STAR

NOV 19 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
WHEELING, W. VA.
NEWS

NOV 19 1939

The World Of Music

By LOUIS F. KEEMLE.

NEW YORK, Nov. 18 (U.P.)—Leopold Stokowski, conductor emeritus of the Philadelphia Orchestra, is experimenting again—this time with the arrangements of instruments in the orchestra.

The present conventional grouping is radically altered. The strings are moved from the front to the rear, where the brasses, woodwinds and tympani now sit. The lighter strings thus would be united with the basses, conventionally at the left rear.

Stokowski believes the new arrangement adds tonal quality for the listener and gives better balance to the music, especially in unifying the strings. His acoustical experiments, Stokowski says, have shown that the sound waves are reflected more strongly to the audience from the rear of the inclosure in which the musicians sit, rather than from the front. Hence, he believes, the more delicate strings are more tonically effective out in the auditorium when they emanate from the back of the orchestra.

Stokowski has been conducting the Philadelphia Orchestra during November.

* * *

Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will present a "festival" of American music in two concerts to be given in Carnegie Hall, New York, on Nov. 23 and 25.

Eight American works will be given. The first concert will consist of the American Festival overture of William Schuman, written for the Boston Symphony; a new violin concerto by Edward Burlingame Hill, with Ruth Posselt as soloist; the Third Symphony of Roy Harris, and Randall Thompson's Second Symphony.

On the ensuing program will be heard Arthur Foote's Suite for Strings; Walter Piston's Piano Concertino, with Jesus Maria Sanroma as soloist; John Alden Carpenter's "Skyscrapers" and Howand Hanson's Third Symphony.

* * *

The lowly saxophone, butt of jokes and purveyor of hot jazz rhythm, is making some headway as a serious instrument, with Sigurd Rascher, young Anglo-Swede as its apostle.

Rascher appeared first with the Boston Symphony, and was well received by critics in New England's citadel of culture. Now he has played with the New York Philharmonic-Symphony under John Barbirolli. The audience was politely appreciative of his performance in Debussy's Rhapsody for Orchestra and Saxophone and Jacques Ibert's Chamber Concertino for Saxophone and Orchestra.

One of Rascher's difficulties is to find enough "classic" music suitable for the saxophone to give him a repertoire. Some pieces have been composed especially for him.

Rascher is professor of saxophone at the Royal Danish Conservatory, the Danes having taken to the orphan instrument before America had a chance to "discover" it.

* * *

New York was treated to another innovation with the world premiere of "Bacchanale" by the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo during its season at the Metropolitan Opera House, which ends tomorrow to permit the company to go on tour.

"Bacchanale" is by Salvador Dali, the surrealist painter, with choreography by Leonide Massine. It is programmed as a "paranoic" performance of the Venusberg music from Wagner's "Tannhaeuser."

It is an absurd, fantastic burlesque, amusing to people who like that sort of thing, and certainly spectacular.

Usually, when New Yorkers do not like a new work, they receive it in cold silence or with damningly faint applause. However, in the packed audience at the Metropolitan, there was hissing and muttering from outraged lovers of the classic ballet.

* * *

Robert Casadesus, French pianist, who has been appearing in Holland and Switzerland, will return to this country for a tour early next year. He will open in Washington on Jan. 15.

Subsequent appearances include engagements with the Houston Symphony on Jan. 22; Davenport Symphony, Jan. 28; Cincinnati Symphony on Feb. 9 and 10; Chicago Symphony on March 14 and 15, and Minneapolis Symphony on April 5.

* * *

Desire Defauw, Belgian conductor, is due in this country to conduct the National Broadcasting Symphony Orchestra on the Saturday night concerts from Dec. 9 to 30, during the mid-season absence of Arturo Toscanani.

Toscanini will take over the orchestra again on March 16. Other conductors during his absence will be Bruno Walter and Bernardino Molinari.

* * *

Paul Althouse, Metropolitan Opera tenor, will begin his season with the Chicago City Opera tomorrow (Sunday) singing in Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust."

Jascha Heifetz will give his only New York recital this season at Carnegie Hall on Dec. 6. Among the numbers he will play will be "The Lark," described as "a poem in the form of a rondo," written for Heifetz by Mario Castelnuovo-Tedesco, Italian composer.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW ORLEANS, LA.
TIMES-PICAYUNE

NOV 19 1939

THIS CLIPPING FROM
INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
STAR

NOV 19 1939

Although the works of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart (1756-1791) and Robert Schumann (1810-1856) have often been heard on local programs, Howard Hanson is a newcomer as regards a hearing of one of his symphonies here. Born of Swedish parents, Hans and Hilma Hanson, at Wahoo, Nebraska, in 1896, Mr. Hanson was first taught by his mother, and continued his studies in Luther College and the University School of Music in his native state.

He studied composition at the Institute of Musical Art in New York with Percy Goetschius, and later at the Northwestern University School of Music at Evanston, under C. Lutkin and Arne Oldberg. Taking his degree in 1916, he taught at the "College of the Pacific" in San Jose, California. In 1921 he was elected to a three-year fellowship in composition at the American Academy in Rome. Returning to America in 1924, he was appointed director of the Eastman School of Music at Rochester, New York, the position which he now holds.

His first ("Nordic") Symphony was performed at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, April 5, 1929, the composer conducting. The "Romantic" Symphony No. 2, composed for the fiftieth anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was performed on November 28, 1930, Serge Koussevitzky conducting. The same symphony was included in the special programme of American music by this orchestra in Symphony Hall on October 4 last, again under the direction of Dr. Koussevitzky.

In addition to the three symphonies, Dr. Hanson's orchestral works include the symphonic poems "North and West" (1923), "Lux Aeterna" (1923), and "Pan and the Priest" (1926). There is an Organ Concerto (1926), and a suite from "Merrymount." "Merrymount," a three-act opera to a libretto of Richard Stokes, was produced by the Metropolitan Opera Company in New York in 1932. Choral works include "The Lament of Beowulf" (1925); "Heroic Elegy" (1927); Songs from "Drum Taps," after Walt Whitman (1935); and a transcription for chorus and orchestra of Palestrina "Pope Marcellus Mass" (1937). Chamber works include a piano quintet, a piano quartet, and a string quartet.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
Democrat-Chronicle

NOV 19 1939

Hanson Symphony To Be Played At Festival

DR. Howard Hanson's Third Symphony will be featured by the Boston Symphony Orchestra's festival of American music Saturday afternoon in the second of two performances in Carnegie Hall, New York, under Serge Koussevitsky's direction. This will be its first hearing in a New York concert hall.

The Third Symphony, written in commemoration of the Swedish tercentenary about a year ago, was given in Boston last month by the Boston orchestra, with Dr. Hanson conducting, when it achieved a notable triumph.

THIS CLIPPING FROM NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

NOV 19 1939

Hanson's Symphony To Be Played Here In Concert Nov. 22

Making the first of their annual appearances here, the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear in Woolsey Hall on Wednesday evening, the event marking the second offering of the current Woolsey Hall Concert Series. The famed musical body of 110 musicians will be under the baton of the distinguished Russian conductor, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, who, since assuming the leadership of the organization in 1924, has conducted every local concert by them since that time.

Considered one of the greatest program builders among symphonic conductors, Dr. Koussevitzky has arranged a particularly interesting evening of fine music for the forthcoming occasion, with selections from Mozart, Hanson and Schumann being the order of the performance. The Mozart work having been writing in 1786, the Schumann in 1841 and the Hanson in 1936, this concert will offer the compositions of three different centuries, thus providing an interesting contrast in musical writing.

Mozart's Overture to "The Marriage of Figaro" will be the opening selection, and Howard Hanson's Symphony No. 3 will follow and conclude the first half of the program. The remainder of the evening will be given over Schumann's First Symphony, which was played for the first time in this country back in 1853 by the Musical Fund Society.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
TUCSON, ARIZ.
STAR

NOV 19 1939

The Boston Symphony orchestra, under Serge Koussevitsky's baton, will open its New York season with a pair of concerts in Carnegie hall Nov. 23 and 25. The two will constitute a festival of American music, with eight native works being played. Arthur Foote, Walter Piston, Roy Harris, Randall Thompson, William Schuman, Edward Burlingame Hill, Howard Hanson, and John Alden Carpenter will be represented.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

NOV 19 1939

867

Boxholders Listed For Symphony Which Will Start Nov. 24

Prominent Residents Take Boxes for the Season; People's Institute Will Honor Mrs. Roosevelt at Luncheon on Dec. 7

Mrs. Edward C. Blum announces the list of Brooklyn residents who have taken boxes for the series of five concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give in the Brooklyn Academy of Music this season. Mrs. Henry J. Davenport is executive chairman of the Brooklyn Committee sponsoring the 54th season of the Boston Symphony beginning Nov. 24, and Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman. Mrs. Blum is chairman of boxes.

Box one will be used consecutively by Mrs. William H. Good, Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. Frederic B. Pratt, Mrs. Frank E. Simmons and Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Mrs. David C. Johnson.

Mrs. Dean C. Osborne has taken box two for the season; Mrs. Benjamin Prince has taken box three for the season, and the Brooklyn Woman's Club has taken box four. Miss Emma Jessie Ogg has reserved box five for the Adelphi Alumnae.

Box six has been taken for two concerts by Mrs. Thomas E. Murray Jr., and for one concert by Mrs. Helen Jones Quinn.

The Army and Navy will use box seven alternately during the season, with the Navy using it at the opening concert, Friday, Nov. 24. Box nine has been taken by the Brooklyn Girl Scouts.

Mrs. Davenport announces the Boston Symphony concerts will be given on Nov. 24, Jan. 12, Feb. 15, March 15 and April 5 in the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The first half of the November concert will be devoted to the works of the modern American composers, Arthur Foote, Edward B. Hill, and John Alden Carpenter, and the last half will be given over to the Cesar Franck Symphony in D minor. A lecture on the opening program will be given by Jonathan Schiller at the Institute at Academy of Music at 4 o'clock on Tuesday.

The concerts are presented under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences of which James G. McDonald is president; the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn of which R. Huntington Woodman is president and the Brooklyn committee chairmen assisting the Brooklyn committee are Mrs. Blum, in charge of boxes, with Mrs. Walter Truslow as co-chairman; Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, membership. Mrs. Marion P. North is the new chairman for Junior League members.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

B'Klyn Section

NOV 19 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN BROOKLYN FRIDAY

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Will Open Current Season at Academy of Music

With a program featuring American composers, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will open its current season of five concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Friday night.

Soloists will be Ruth Posselt, violinist; Dorothy Maynor, soprano, and Leonard Fr[redacted]enor. The program will consist of Foote's suite in E major, Op. 63, for string orchestra; Hill's concerto for violin, Op. 38; Carpenter's "Skyscrapers" and Franck's symphony in D minor.

The Boston Symphony concerts at the Academy are under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society and a Brooklyn committee.

On Tuesday afternoon the program will be discussed by Jonathan Schiller, lecturer in music at the institute and director of the RCA Victor Lecture Bureau, at the Academy. The subject will be illustrated with recordings.

Young Artist Series to Open

The Young Artist Series of the institute will open next Sunday afternoon at the Academy with a recital by Cosmo Pusateri, American pianist-composer. Mr. Pusateri will be the first of five artists under 29 years of age to be presented in a professional recital.

The institute has felt for a long time the need of encouraging young musicians of exceptional talent in gaining public recogntion, it was explained. The current season's series, it was said, was an experiment in public approval of this form of sponsorship. Should the series be successful, the institute plans to venture further in the same direction.

Mr. Pusateri will offer selections from Bach, Liszt, Chopin, Chasins, Pusateri and Delibes-Dohnanyi.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

NOV 19 1939

Large Numbers

The Ballet Russe, finally arrived from the war zones, has concluded a brilliant New York engagement and comes to New England for one evening only. That would be in Providence, on Saturday evening of this week, with "Devil's Holiday" (Paganinni), "Igrouchka," "Carnaval" (Schumann), and "Capriccio Espagnole" as program. Three of these are novelties of the season.

Speaking of Providence, Igor Stravinsky will lead the Boston Symphony there in a program of his won works; this is the first of several concerts to be directed by the noted Russian expatriate, now resident at Harvard for the year.

For those who anticipate opera bills, especially those given on additional matinees, these may be put down as certain: "Parsifal," December 7 and January 5; "Tristan und Isolde," December 21. Sixteen benefits in all are arranged for the season.

Americana

Dr. Koussevitsky has played an American work on every program this far in the season. In addition to the dozen or so brought out for the Festival in Boston, others have been added, among them Edward Burlingame Hill's new violin concerto, Howard Hanson's new Third Symphony and Walter Piston's Concertino for piano and string orchestra. The idea is catching on, and Mr. Barbirolli is directing Arthur Foote's charming suite for strings this afternoon in the broadcast concert.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MISSOULA, MONT.
MISSOULIAN

NOV 19 1939

Dorothy Maynor, of whom you will remember that she was the sensation of the 1939 Berkshire Festival, preludes her New York appearance with the Boston Symphony by making her debut in the city in solo recital today. Waldemar Giese, bass-violinist, and Tenor Edouard Grobe also make solo appearances. Baritone David Elwyn of Los Angeles shares the hopes and trepidation of a public audition for the Metropolitan Opera company with a soprano who has been there before, Anna Steck of Brooklyn. Two experienced performers, Soprano Rosemarie Brancato and Pianist Henrietta Schumann, join with Erno Rapee's orchestra for a program including the Overture to "Sakuntala" by Goldmark, Rachmaninov's Rhapsody on a Theme by Paganini, for Piano and Orchestra, and selections from "Die Fledermaus" of Johann Strauss.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

B'Klyn Section

NOV 19 1939

BROOKLYN ACADEMY HAS WEEK'S PROGRAM

Lectures, Music and Meetings Cover Wide Range

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences will present the following program this week at the Brooklyn Academy of Music:

Sunday, 3 P. M.—Lecture: "Contemporary Books Worth Reading," by William Lyon Phelps.

Monday, 11 A. M.—Third lecture of the series, "Significant Events of the Week," by Howard Pierce Davis, editor and radio commentator. James G. McDonald, chairman; 4 P. M.—Discussion Group Meeting. Second of the series, "The United States and World Affairs." David H. Popper, leader; 8:15 P. M.—Lecture: "Psychology, a New Voice Crying in the Wilderness," by Professor Harry A. Overstreet, former head of the Department of Philosophy, College of the City of New York; 8:30 P. M.—Lecture: "The Mental Limits of Picture Making," illustrated with blackboard and lantern slides, by Nicholas Haz, F. R. P. S.

Tuesday, 4 P. M.—Lecture on this week's program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by Jonathan Schiller, director of the RCA Victor Lecture Bureau; 7:30 P[redacted]Observatory Meeting, conducted by the Department of Astronomy. Subject: "The Moon, Jupiter and Saturn, and Double Stars." William Henry in charge; 8:15 P. M.—Lecture: "The Appeal to Experience," by Gail Kennedy.

Wednesday, 4 P. M. and 8:15 P. M.—Lecture: "Cruising to Chile," illustrated with motion pictures in color, by Branson De Cou.

Friday, 4 P. M.—Lecture: "The Newspaper in its Infancy," illustrated with lantern slides, by Dr. Curt L. Heymann; 8:15 P. M.—Round Table Meeting, conducted by the Department of Astronomy. Subject: "Instruments and Measurements." G. V. Plachy, leader; 8:30 P. M.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Saturday, 10:45 A. M.—Honorable Hugh Wilson, former Ambassador to Germany and Minister to Switzerland. Lecture: "Diplomacy." Sixth of the series, "Choosing Your Career," designed for high school and college students. (Open only to students); 3 P. M.—Lecture for young people: "Adventures Among the Insects," illustrated with colored lantern slides, by Edwin Way Teale, naturalist. Also: motion picture short subjects; 8:15 P. M.—Motion-picture program.

Sunday, Nov. 26, at 3 P. M.—Cosmo Pusateri, American pianist-composer. First recital in the Young Artists Series.

The Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, which originally planned to close its New York engagement last week, was held over, and now designates today's matinee and evening performances as the last of the run. In the chamber music field, there are three events all featuring quartets and Beethoven. The Perole and American Art Quartets offer one Beethoven work apiece, the former the B Flat, and the latter the F Major Opus 59, No. 1. The New Friends of Music concert brings his Viola Quintet in C Major Opus 29 executed by the Budapest Quartet and William Primrose, the similar work in B Flat by Mozart (K 174), and the latter's Serenade for Winds in E Flat, by members of the orchestra.

If the quantity of music on the west coast today is smaller, only one announcement having reached us, the quality is certainly of the highest. Kirsten Flagstad makes her second appearance of the season with the San Francisco Symphony under the baton of Edwin MacArthur. The concert opens with the Overture to Schubert's "Rosamunde" Suite, after which Miss Flagstad sings Leise, Leise from Weber's "Der Freischuetz." Orchestral renditions of works by Debussy and Ravel separate this from Miss Flagstad's next offering, a group of Grieg songs. The program closes, as did last Wednesday's with excerpts from Wagner's "Goetterdaemmerung," namely Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey, Siegfried's Death and Funeral March, and Bruennhilde's Immolation Scene and the Finale.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER

NOV 19 1939

mainly about musical manhattan

BY ALMA LUBIN.

TODAY is a big day in the life of one artist. Twenty-eight years old and never having sung in public at all before last summer Dorothy Maynor, the Negro soprano, is naturally a little excited over the fact that she sings her debut New York recital this evening. Taken in itself a debut at 28 is a little late to be exactly a singer's choice. But if the voice is of the extraordinary quality attributed to Miss Maynor's, and if the artist has her awareness of the possibilities for growth in maturity—"I'm so glad to grow old! Indeed, I welcome each birthday for it means that perhaps I am a bit closer to being an artist. No singer really achieves artistic greatness until middle-age" —then a few years behind schedule is a very minor matter."

* * *

If ever there was a case of wasting sweetness on the desert air, here it is. Koussevitzky, later really the first one to see a great artistic career for her, was himself impatient of granting her the first audition. Last summer, busy with his Berkshire Festival, he tried hard to avoid another commitment, when their mutual friend attempted to corner him. But finally beaten down by her insistence he agreed to hear the singer next day after his double bass auditions. A rather plump, short, unprepossessing young Negro woman was brought to him, and she proceeded to sing her songs in the great empty hall. Never too charitable in his dealings with singers, it seems the conductor was completely floored by what he heard.

An amazing range — she sings both Pamina and Queen of the Night in The Magic Flute — her voice is reputed to be of an overwhelmingly beautiful quality, supported by an intense and imaginative temperament, and great artistry. Or at least so felt Koussevitzky, who immediately asked her to sing at the big open-air picnic he was giving the orchestra that week. In one short week, then, years of disappointment vanished, dreams began to come to life and a career was launched.

* * *

Word has just now slipped out about the delay at the Ballet Russe, some nights ago when the Dali and Massine version of Wagner's Venusberg music had its premiere. The intermission which preceded the sensational opening was itself sensational—it lasted one full hour. There were probably several factors, but it seems that the matter of costumes was the chief one. The genius who designs costumes for the company deserves that title in more ways than one—as practically every important opening has met the same fate of no costumes at curtain time, and only the frenzied backstage drama of the other evening manages to save the situation. Always a magnificent artistic success those first nights, the costumes proverbially have important seams still to be sewed.

The company, assembled in the wings and otherwise ready to go on, consequently join in the final touches to their costumes themselves. And while a very gracious audience only tentatively began to whistle and stomp its impatience on this recent occasion even Massine himself was darting among the dancers, sewing them into their tights. At last everything seems ready, but then a cry of despair, "Heavens, our lobsters! Where are they?" Again frenzied scurrying. In triumph the box of red lobsters is discovered. The men stand in line and each is subjected to more sewing, for they all must wear a lobster. Finally all ready, the signal is given. The curtain goes up, and looking as cool as a cucumber each dancer steps on to the stage.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

NOV 19 1939

Bostonians Play At the Academy

Opening Concert Will Feature Native Composers

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give its first Brooklyn concert in a series of five for the current season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music next Friday evening, Nov. 24. The first half of its progfam will be devoted to American composers and will feature three soloists: Ruth Posselt, violinist; Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Leonard Franklin, tenor.

The following program will be played:

Foote ——————Suite in E major, Op. 63, for String Orchestra
Hill ——————Concerto for Violin, Op. 38
Carpenter ———"Skyscrapers" (A Ballet of Modern American Life)
Franck ——————Symphony in D minor

The Academy of Music concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are held under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society and a Brooklyn committee.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

NOV 19 1939

PROGRAMS OF THE WEEK

NEW YORK music audiences will have an opportunity to hear two of the leading conductors of the country when Leopold Stokowski makes his first appearance here with the Philadelphia Orchestra on Tuesday, and Serge Koussevitzky, conducting programs devoted to American composers, appears with his Boston Symphony on Thursday and Friday. A novelty on Mr. Stokowski's program will be his own arrangement of Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Complete programs for the current week follow:

Thursday

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Carnegie Hall, 8:45 P. M. Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky; soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano.

Suite in E, for string orchestra, Op. 63. Arthur Foote
Concertino for piano and orchestra..Piston
Symphony No. 3...............Roy Harris
Symphony No. 2, in E minor....Thompson

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Brooklyn Academy of Music, evening. Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky; soloists, Ruth Posselt, violin; Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Leonard Franklin, tenor.

Suite in E, Op. 63, for string orchestra, Foote
Concerto for violin, Op. 38.............Hill
Skyscrapers ....Carpenter
Symphony in D minor........Cesar Franck

Saturday

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Carnegie Hall, 2:30 P. M. Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky; soloists, Ruth Posselt, violin; Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Leonard Franklin, tenor.

American Festival Overture (first time), Schuman
Violin concerto, Op. 38 (first time in New York) ....Hill
Skyscrapers ....Carpenter
Symphony No. 3 (first time)..........Hanson

THIS CLIPPING FROM
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

NOV 19 1939

Bostonian Season

Serge Koussevitzky is in his 16th season as conductor of the Boston symphony. Nicolai Malko, Russian conductor, and Tauno Hannikainen, of Finland, are scheduled to conduct for a week each in mid-season. Soloists will include Josef Hofmann, Rudolph Serkin, Walter Gieseking and Jan Smeterlin, pianists; Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, and Emanuel Feuermann, 'cellist. Among works announced by Dr. Koussevitzky are Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," conducted by the composer; Debussy's "Martyrom of St. Sebastian;" Mahler's "Song of the Earth," and a piano concerto of Prokofieff, played by the composer.

87

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

NOV 19 1939

Boxholders Listed For Symphony Which Will Start Nov. 24

Prominent Residents Take Boxes for the Season; People's Institute Will Honor Mrs. Roosevelt at Luncheon on Dec. 7

Mrs. Edward C. Blum announces the list of Brooklyn residents who have taken boxes for the series of five concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the leadership of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give in the Brooklyn Academy of Music this season. Mrs. Henry J. Davenport is executive chairman of the Brooklyn Committee sponsoring the 54th season of the Boston Symphony beginning Nov. 24, and Adrian Van Sinderen is chairman. Mrs. Blum is chairman of boxes.

Box one will be used consecutively by Mrs. William H. Good, Mrs. Edward C. Blum, Mrs. Frederic B. Pratt, Mrs. Frank E. Simmons and Mrs. Maxwell Lester, Mrs. David C. Johnson.

Mrs. Dean C. Osborne has taken box two for the season; Mrs. Benjamin Prince has taken box three for the season, and the Brooklyn Woman's Club has taken box four.

Miss Emma Jessie Ogg has reserved box five for the Adelphi Alumnae.

Box six has been taken for two concerts by Mrs. Thomas E. Murray Jr., and for one concert by Mrs. Helen Jones Quinn.

The Army and Navy will use box seven alternately during the season, with the Navy using it at the opening concert, Friday, Nov. 24. Box nine has been taken by the Brooklyn Girl Scouts.

Mrs. Davenport announces the Boston Symphony concerts will be given on Nov. 24, Jan. 12, Feb. 15, March 15 and April 5 in the Brooklyn Academy of Music. The first half of the November concert will be devoted to the works of the modern American composers, Arthur Foote, Edward B. Hill, and John Alden Carpenter, and the last half will be given over to the Cesar Franck Symphony in D minor. A lecture on the opening program will be given by Jonathan Schiller at the Institute at Academy of Music at 4 o'clock on Tuesday.

The concerts are presented under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences of which James G. McDonald is president; the Philharmonic Society of Brooklyn of which R. Huntington Woodman is president and the Brooklyn committee chairmen assisting the Brooklyn committee are Mrs. Blum, in charge of boxes, with Mrs. Walter Truslow as co-chairman; Mrs. M. Preston Goodfellow, membership. Mrs. Marion P. North is the new chairman for Junior League members.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

NOV 19 1939

Large Numbers

The Ballet Russe, finally arrived from the war zones, has concluded a brilliant New York engagement and comes to New England for one evening only. That would be in Providence, on Saturday evening of this week, with "Devil's Holiday" (Paganinni), "Igrouchka," "Carnaval" (Schumann), and "Capriccio Espagnole" as program. Three of these are novelties of the season.

Speaking of Providence, Igor Stravinsky will lead the Boston Symphony there in a program of his own works; this is the first of several concerts to be directed by the noted Russian expatriate, now resident at Harvard for the year.

For those who anticipate opera bills, especially those given on additional matinees, these may be put down as certain: "Parsifal," December 7 and January 5; "Tristan und Isolde," December 21. Sixteen benefits in all are arranged for the season.

Americana

Dr. Koussevitsky has played an American work on every program this far in the season. In addition to the dozen or so brought out for the Festival in Boston, others have been added, among them Edward Burlingame Hill's new violin concerto, Howard Hanson's new Third Symphony and Walter Piston's Concertino for piano and string orchestra. The idea is catching on, and Mr. Barbirolli is directing Arthur Foote's charming suite for strings this afternoon in the broadcast concert.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

B'Klyn Section

NOV 19 1939

BOSTON SYMPHONY IN BROOKLYN FRIDAY

Dr. Serge Koussevitzky Will Open Current Season at Academy of Music

With a program featuring American composers, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting, will open its current season of five concerts at the Brooklyn Academy of Music on Friday night.

Soloists will be Ruth Posselt, violinist; Dorothy Maynor, soprano, and Leonard Fr[illegible]enor. The program will consist of Foote's suite in E major, Op. 63, for string orchestra; Hill's concerto for violin, Op. 38; Carpenter's "Skyscrapers" and Franck's symphony in D minor.

The Boston Symphony concerts at the Academy are under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society and a Brooklyn committee.

On Tuesday afternoon the program will be discussed by Jonathan Schiller, lecturer in music at the institute and director of the RCA Victor Lecture Bureau, at the Academy. The subject will be illustrated with recordings.

Young Artist Series to Open

The Young Artist Series of the institute will open next Sunday afternoon at the Academy with a recital by Cosmo Pusateri, American pianist-composer. Mr. Pusateri will be the first of five artists under 29 years of age to be presented in a professional recital.

The institute has felt for a long time the need of encouraging young musicians of exceptional talent in gaining public recogntion, it was explained. The current season's series, it was said, was an experiment in public approval of this form of sponsorship. Should the series be successful, the institute plans to venture further in the same direction.

Mr. Pusateri will offer selections from Bach, Liszt, Chopin, Chasins, Pusateri and Delibes-Dohnanyi.

THIS CLIPPING FROM MISSOULA, MONT.
MISSOULIAN

NOV 19 1939

Dorothy Maynor, of whom you will remember that she was the sensation of the 1939 Berkshire Festival, preludes her New York appearance with the Boston Symphony by making her debut in the city in solo recital today. Waldemar Giese, bass-violinist, and Tenor Edouard Grobe also make solo appearances. Baritone David Elwyn of Los Angeles shares the hopes and trepidation of a public audition for the Metropolitan Opera company with a soprano who has been there before, Anna Steck of Brooklyn. Two experienced performers, Soprano Rosemarie Brancato and Pianist Henrietta Schumann, join with Erno Rapee's orchestra for a program including the Overture to "Sakuntala" by Goldmark, Rachmaninov's Rhapsody on a Theme by Paganini, for Piano and Orchestra, and selections from "Die Fledermaus" of Johann Strauss.

The Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo, which originally planned to close its New York engagement last week, was held over, and now designates today's matinee and evening performances as the last of the run. In the chamber music field, there are three events all featuring quartets and Beethoven. The Perole and American Art Quartets offer one Beethoven work apiece, the former the B Flat, and the latter the F Major Opus 59, No. 1. The New Friends of Music concert brings his Viola Quintet in C Major Opus 29 executed by the Budapest Quartet and William Primrose, the similar work in B Flat by Mozart (K 174), and the latter's Serenade for Winds in E Flat, by members of the orchestra.

If the quantity of music on the west coast today is smaller, only one announcement having reached us, the quality is certainly of the highest. Kirsten Flagstad makes her second appearance of the season with the San Francisco Symphony under the baton of Edwin MacArthur. The concert opens with the Overture to Schubert's "Rosamunde" Suite, after which Miss Flagstad sings Leise, Leise from Weber's "Der Freischuetz." Orchestral renditions of works by Debussy and Ravel separate this from Miss Flagstad's next offering, a group of Grieg songs. The program closes, as did last Wednesday's with excerpts from Wagner's "Goetterdaemmerung," namely Dawn and Siegfried's Rhine Journey, Siegfried's Death and Funeral March, and Bruennhilde's Immolation Scene and the Finale.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

B'Klyn Section

NOV 19 1939

BROOKLYN ACADEMY HAS WEEK'S PROGRAM

Lectures, Music and Meetings Cover Wide Range

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences will present the following program this week at the Brooklyn Academy of Music:

Sunday, 3 P. M.—Lecture: "Contemporary Books Worth Reading," by William Lyon Phelps.

Monday, 11 A. M.—Third lecture of the series, "Significant Events of the Week," by Howard Pierce Davis, editor and radio commentator. James G. McDonald, chairman; 4 P. M.—Discussion Group Meeting. Second of the series, "The United States and World Affairs." David H. Popper, leader; 8:15 P. M.—Lecture: "Psychology, a New Voice Crying in the Wilderness," by Professor Harry A. Overstreet, former head of the Department of Philosophy, College of the City of New York; 8:30 P. M.—Lecture: "The Mental Limits of Picture Making," illustrated with blackboard and lantern slides, by Nicholas Haz, F. R. P. S.

Tuesday, 4 P. M.—Lecture on this week's program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, by Jonathan Schiller, director of the RCA Victor Lecture Bureau; 7:30 P[illegible]—Observatory Meeting, conducted by the Department of Astronomy. Subject: "The Moon, Jupiter and Saturn, and Double Stars." William Henry in charge; 8:15 P. M.—Lecture: "The Appeal to Experience," by Gail Kennedy.

Wednesday, 4 P. M. and 8:15 P. M.—Lecture: "Cruising to Chile," illustrated with motion pictures in color, by Branson De Cou.

Friday, 4 P. M.—Lecture: "The Newspaper in its Infancy," illustrated with lantern slides, by Dr. Curt L. Heymann; 8:15 P. M.—Round Table Meeting, conducted by the Department of Astronomy. Subject: "Instruments and Measurements." G. V. Plachy, leader; 8:30 P. M.—The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Serge Koussevitzky.

Saturday, 10:45 A. M.—Honorable Hugh Wilson, former Ambassador to Germany and Minister to Switzerland. Lecture: "Diplomacy." Sixth of the series, "Choosing Your Career," designed for high school and college students. (Open only to students); 3 P. M.—Lecture for young people: "Adventures Among the Insects," illustrated with colored lantern slides, by Edwin Way Teale, naturalist. Also: motion picture short subjects; 8:15 P. M.—Motion-picture program.

Sunday, Nov. 26, at 3 P. M.—Cosmo Pusateri, American pianist-composer. First recital in the Young Artists Series.

THIS CLIPPING FROM CINCINNATI, OHIO
ENQUIRER

NOV 19 1939

mainly about musical manhattan

BY ALMA LUBIN.

TODAY is a big day in the life of one artist. Twenty-eight years old and never having sung in public at all before last summer Dorothy Maynor, the Negro soprano, is naturally a little excited over the fact that she sings her debut New York recital this evening. Taken in itself a debut at 28 is a little late to be exactly a singer's choice. But if the voice is of the extraordinary quality attributed to Miss Maynor's, and if the artist has her awareness of the possibilities for growth in maturity—"I'm so glad to grow old! Indeed, I welcome each birthday for it means that perhaps I am a bit closer to being an artist. No singer really achieves artistic greatness until middle-age"—then a few years behind schedule is a very minor matter."

* * *

If ever there was a case of wasting sweetness on the desert air, here it is. Koussevitzky, later really the first one to see a great artistic career for her, was himself impatient of granting her the first audition. Last summer, busy with his Berkshire Festival, he tried hard to avoid another commitment, when their mutual friend attempted to corner him. But finally beaten down by her insistence he agreed to hear the singer next day after his double bass auditions. A rather plump, short, unprepossessing young Negro woman was brought to him, and she proceeded to sing her songs in the great empty hall. Never too charitable in his dealings with singers, it seems the conductor was completely floored by what he heard.

An amazing range — she sings both Pamina and Queen of the Night in The Magic Flute — her voice is reputed to be of an overwhelmingly beautiful quality, supported by an intense and imaginative temperament, and great artistry. Or at least so felt Koussevitzky, who immediately asked her to sing at the big open-air picnic he was giving the orchestra that week. In one short week, then, years of disappointment vanished, dreams began to come to life and a career was launched.

* * *

Word has just now slipped out about the delay at the Ballet Russe, some nights ago when the Dali and Massine version of Wagner's Venusberg music had its premiere. The intermission which preceded the sensational opening was itself sensational—it lasted one full hour. There were probably several factors, but it seems that the matter of costumes was the chief one. The genius who designs costumes for the company deserves that title in more ways than one—as practically every important opening has met the same fate of no costumes at curtain time, and only the frenzied backstage drama of the other evening manages to save the situation. Always a magnificent artistic success those first nights, the costumes proverbially have important seams still to be sewed.

The company, assembled in the wings and otherwise ready to go on, consequently join in the final touches to their costumes themselves. And while a very gracious audience only tentatively began to whistle and stomp its impatience on this recent occasion even Massine himself was darting among the dancers, sewing them into their tights. At last everything seems ready, but then a cry of despair, "Heavens, our lobsters! Where are they?" Again frenzied scurrying. In triumph the box of red lobsters is discovered. The men stand in line and each is subjected to more sewing, for they all must wear a lobster. Finally all ready, the signal is given. The curtain goes up, and looking as cool as a cucumber each dancer steps on to the stage.

* * *

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

NOV 19 1939

Bostonians Play At the Academy

Opening Concert Will Feature Native Composers

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, will give its first Brooklyn concert in a series of five for the current season at the Brooklyn Academy of Music next Friday evening, Nov. 24. The first half of its progfam will be devoted to American composers and will feature three soloists: Ruth Posselt, violinist; Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Leonard Franklin, tenor.

The following program will be played:

Foote ————Suite in E major, Op. 63, for String Orchestra
Hill ————Concerto for Violin, Op. 38
Carpenter ————"Skyscrapers" (A Ballet of Modern American Life)
Franck ————Symphony in D minor

The Academy of Music concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra are held under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the Brooklyn Philharmonic Society and a Brooklyn committee.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
TIMES

NOV 19 1939

PROGRAMS OF THE WEEK

NEW YORK music audiences will have an opportunity to hear two of the leading conductors of the country when Leopold Stokowski makes his first appearance here with the Philadelphia Orchestra on Tuesday, and Serge Koussevitzky, conducting programs devoted to American composers, appears with his Boston Symphony on Thursday and Friday. A novelty on Mr. Stokowski's program will be his own arrangement of Mussorgsky's "Pictures at an Exhibition."

Complete programs for the current week follow:

Thursday

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Carnegie Hall, 8:45 P. M. Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky; soloist, Jesus Maria Sanroma, piano.

Suite in E, for string orchestra, Op. 63, ...Arthur Foote
Concertino for piano and orchestra..Piston
Symphony No. 3..............Roy Harris
Symphony No. 2, in E minor....Thompson

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Brooklyn Academy of Music, evening. Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky; soloists, Ruth Posselt, violin; Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Leonard Franklin, tenor.

Suite in E, Op. 63, for string orchestra, ...Foote
Concerto for violin, Op. 38..............Hill
Skyscrapers ....Carpenter
Symphony in D minor........Cesar Franck

Saturday

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Carnegie Hall, 2:30 P. M. Conductor, Serge Koussevitzky; soloists, Ruth Posselt, violin; Dorothy Maynor, soprano; Leonard Franklin, tenor.

American Festival Overture (first time), ...Schumann
Violin concerto, Op. 38 (first time in New York) ....Hill
Skyscrapers ....Carpenter
Symphony No. 3 (first time)........Hanson

THIS CLIPPING FROM
FLINT, MICH.
JOURNAL

NOV 19 1939

Bostonian Season

Serge Koussevitzky is in his 16th season as conductor of the Boston symphony. Nicolai Malko, Russian conductor, and Tauno Hannikainen, of Finland, are scheduled to conduct for a week each in mid-season. Soloists will include Josef Hofmann, Rudolph Serkin, Walter Gieseking and Jan Smeterlin, pianists; Jascha Heifetz and Joseph Szigeti, violinists, and Emanuel Feuermann, 'cellist. Among works announced by Dr. Koussevitzky are Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex," conducted by the composer; Debussy's "Martyrom of St. Sebastian;" Mahler's "Song of the Earth," and a piano concerto of Prokofieff, played by the composer.

86

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

NOV 19 1939

BOSTON'S ORCHESTRA

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

ON MONDAY evening, Feb. 14, 1887, the nearly eighty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of their excellent Viennese conductor, Wilhelm Gericke, met their first New York audience in the old Steinway Hall which used to stand on Fifteenth Street east of Union Square. To illustrate the standard which they had achieved in six and a half seasons, they played a program of familiar music including Weber's overture to "Oberon," Beethoven's violin concerto with Franz Kneisel, the concertmaster, as soloist; the aria from Handel's "Xerxes" generally known as the "Largo" in Hellmesberger's arrangement, and Beethoven's fifth symphony.

Although in coming here this relatively new orchestra was facing comparison with the already veteran Philharmonic Society, then under Theodore Thomas, it received a very favorable review in "The New York Tribune," in which the writer, presumably Henry E. Krehbiel, found the concert "a delightful surprise," showing that the Boston organization "has been developed during the last few years into a band which can now be named with the best not only in this country but in Europe as well." According to M. A. DeWolfe Howe's history of the orchestra, some of the other critics gave the visitors from New England a more reserved welcome, but in general their first concert here had a good press and in this established a precedent that has been maintained in most of its other New York concerts of the following fifty-two years.

Except for the Largo (whose performance, with eighteen standing violinists playing in unison, was enthusiastically encored), Mr. Gericke's opening program would be a natural, if a somewhat conservative choice for next Thursday night or Saturday afternoon, when Serge Koussevitzky conducts the Boston Symphony's 110 musicians in their first New York concerts of the season in Carnegie Hall. But, instead of illustrating his orchestra's classic traditions, Dr. Koussevitzky is calling attention to a more recent, while not new, feature of its policy, its cultivation of American music, and will devote both Carnegie Hall programs to music by composers born in the United States. While not 100 per cent American, his first Brooklyn program next Friday night will include three American works before closing with Cesar Franck's symphony.

• • •

Music by Eight American Composers

Of the eight composers represented in the two Carnegie Hall concerts, all except Arthur Foote (1853-1937) are now living. Thursday's program, beginning with Mr. Foote's familiar suite in E major for strings, will also include Walter Piston's piano concertino, with Jesus Maria Sanroma, the orchestra's official pianist, as soloist; Roy Harris [illegible] symphony and Randall Thompson's second symphony. These works have been heard here before, although, except for the suite, not frequently.

Saturday's program will offer the first opportunity in this borough to hear Edward Burlingame Hill's violin concerto, with Ruth Posselt as soloist, and the American Festival overture, composed by William Schuman for the orchestra's pre-season concerts of American music at Symphony Hall on Oct. 4 and 6. Howard Hanson's third symphony, which has been played here in N. B. C. and Columbia radio programs, will have its first performance in a New York concert hall. Dorothy Maynor, the Negro soprano who makes her recital debut here tonight, and Leonard Franklin, tenor, will sing in John Alden Carpenter's music for the ballet "Skyscrapers," which has not been heard here for seven years.

• • •

Value of This Week's Programs

NO DOUBT, many of the Boston Symphony's present subscribers would find Mr. Gericke's introductory list of 1887 more welcome than either of Dr. Koussevitzky's all-American lists, and, as a matter of regular policy, American music is probably better served by giving home-grown works a reasonable representation in cosmopolitan programs throughout the season than by a concentration such as this. But, as an occasional event, an all-American program, if chosen with due regard to catholicity and musical standards, can be of great value in giving an idea of various aspects of American achievement in the orchestral field.

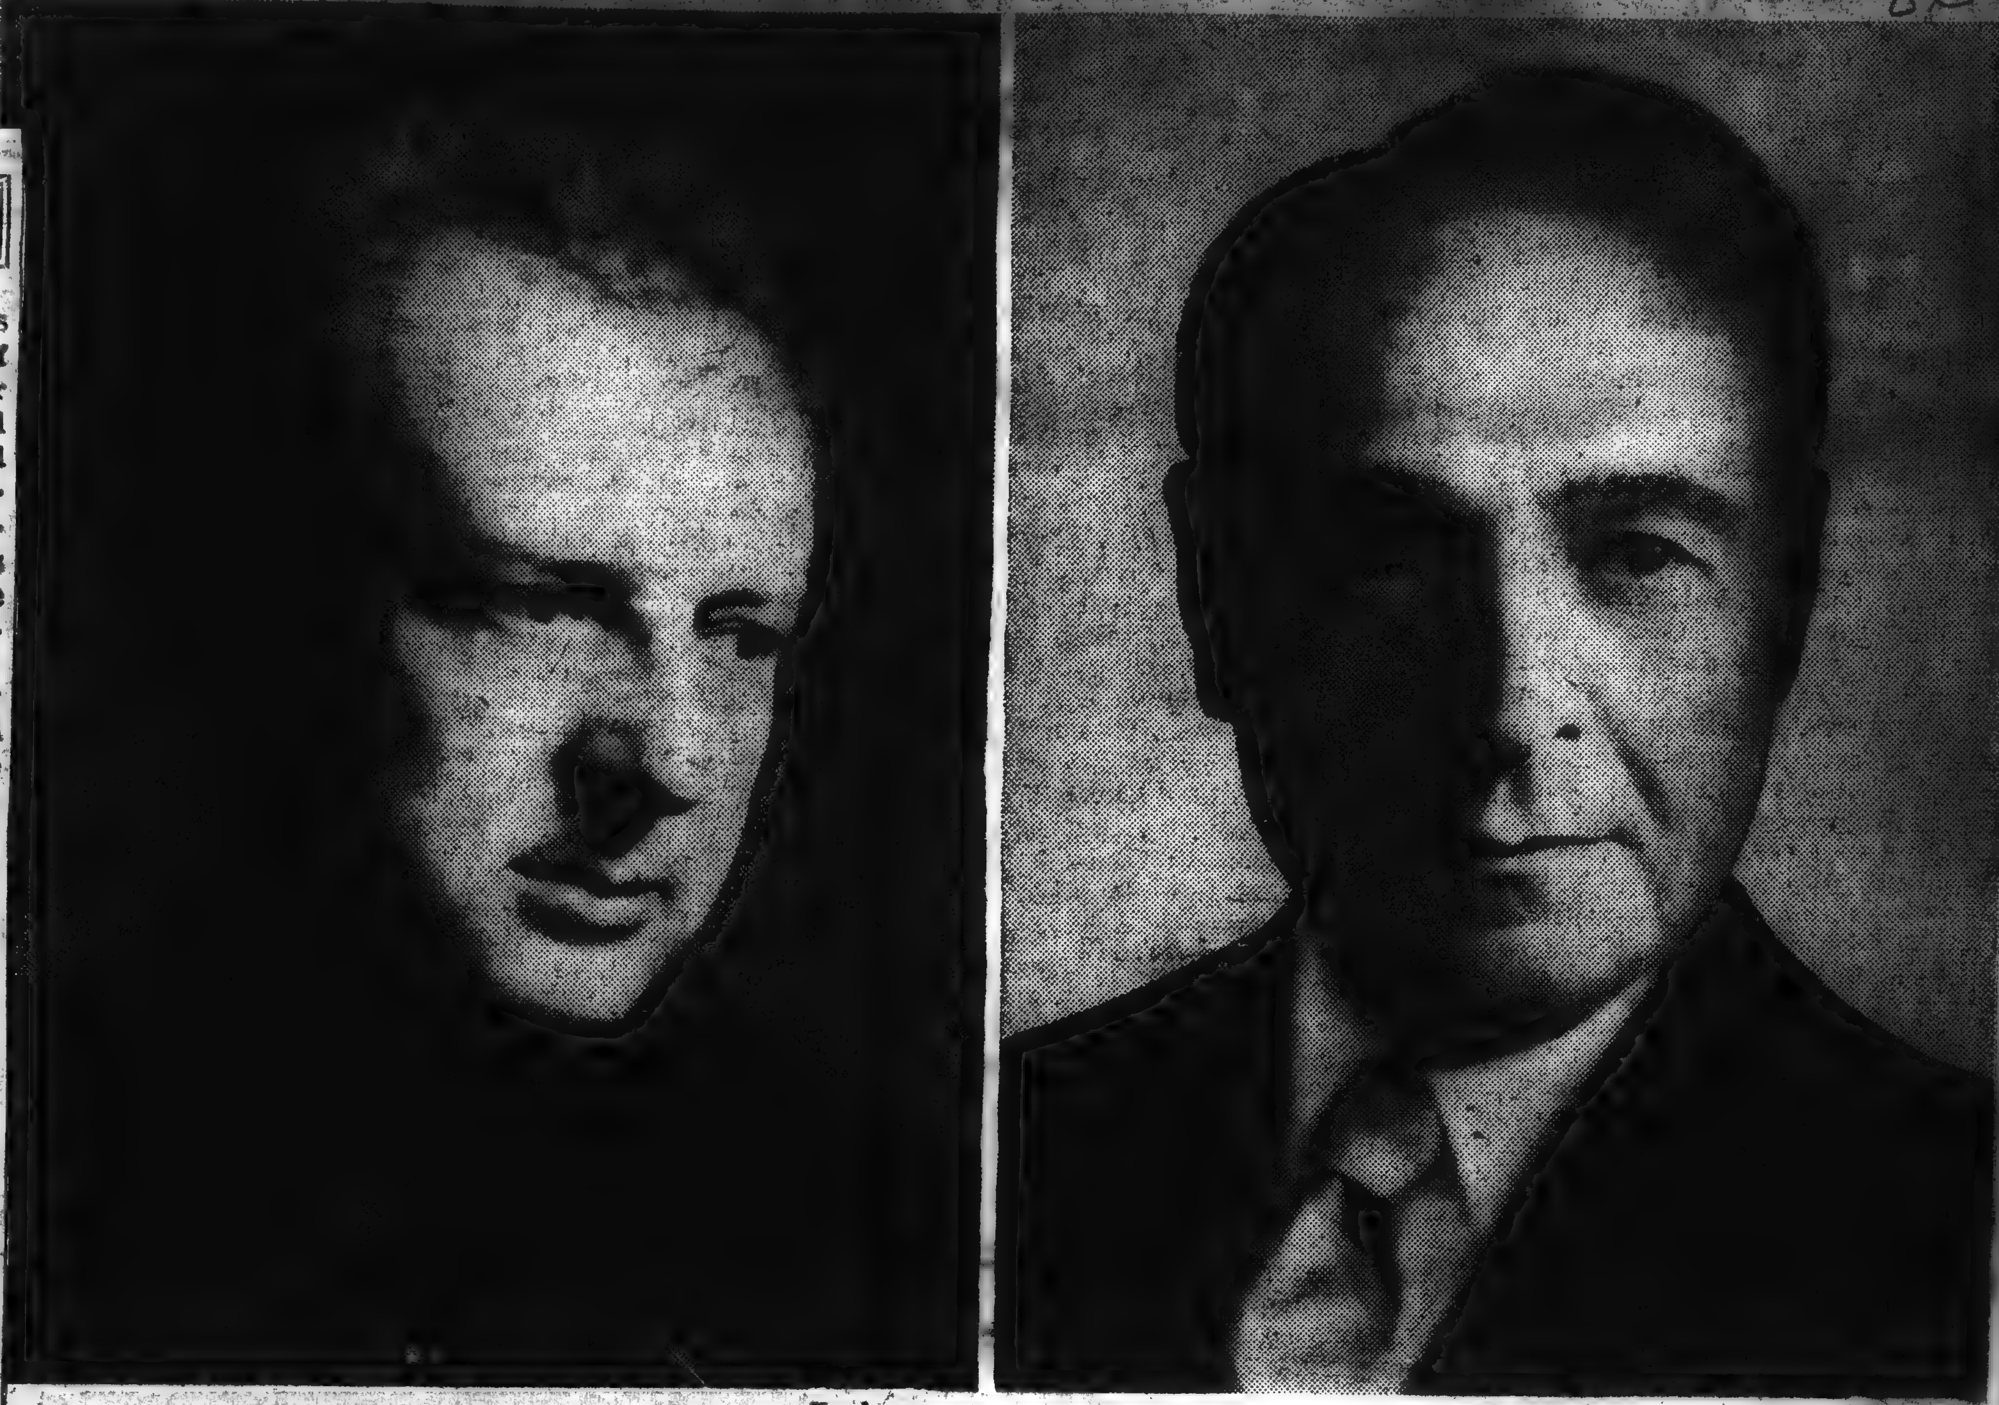
In these programs Dr. Koussevitzky shows a recognition of the importance of second, as well as of first, hearings in furthering the progress of American music, and is giving representation to composers of established or promising musical reputations, origins and styles. Mr. Hill, born in Cambridge, Mass., in 1872, is the senior composer on this list, whose junior member is Mr. Schuman, born in New York in 1910. Their music will probably not give an impression of complete national autarchy in regard to musical ideas, or suggest a single typically American style—nor is it particularly desirable that it should. What it is more likely to indicate is several trends and styles of increasingly independent and individual musical thought.

• • •

The Orchestra's Traditional Standing

CREATED and long maintained by Maj. Henry L. Higginson, a patron of singular foresight, munificence and selfless devotion to music and to the artistic interests of his city, the Boston Symphony Orchestra enjoyed for many years a relatively untroubled history, and ranked as one of the foremost organizations of its kind in the world. It faced one major crisis in its career in 1918, a few months before Maj. Higginson's death, when the war-time agitation against the continuance of Dr. Karl Muck's services ended with the conductor's internment, and a second in the winter of 1920, when the orchestra was depleted by a strike arising over the question of unionization. In restoring the organization to its traditional standing as one of the great artistic institutions of this country, great credit is due to the memorable work of Dr. Koussevitzky's predecessor, Pierre Monteux. Under its present leadership, the orchestra has long enjoyed a generally acknowledged and well deserved artistic fame. It may have its equals, but it is much to be doubted whether it has its superiors anywhere among the great orchestras of either hemisphere.

Conducting Their First New York Concerts of the Season



Vandamm
Bachrach
eft, Leopold Stokowski, who will direct the Philadelphia Orchestra Tuesday night in Carnegie Hall. Right, Serge Koussevitzky, who will appear with the Boston Symphony Thursday and Saturday in Carnegie Hall and Friday in Brooklyn

---

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW HAVEN, CONN.
REGISTER

NOV 19 1939

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will make the first of two annual appearances here in Woolsey Hall on Wednesday evening. This picture, by John B. Sanroma, was taken during a performance at Symphony Hall, Boston.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

NOV 20 1939

William Schuman Young Composer To Visit Hartford

He Will Hear His 'American Festival Overture' Played By Boston Symphony

William Howard Schuman, the composer of "American Festival Overture," the opening number on the Boston Symphony Orchestra program at the Bushnell Memorial tomorrow night is coming to Hartford to attend this performance, William H. Mortensen, manager of the Memorial, has announced.

The young composer who was born in New York City in 1910 attended the public schools in New York and was graduated with honors from Columbia University. He was the pupil of Max Persin in harmony, of Charles Haubiel in counterpoint, and studied composition in a more general sense with Roy Harris. He attended the Mozarteum Academy, in Salzburg, Austria. He is a member of the faculty of Sarah Lawrence College in Bronxville, New York, and is interested in problems of progressive education in relation to the arts.

Mr. Schuman writes as follows about his Overture: "American Festival Overture" was composed last summer for these concerts of American music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra."

"The first three notes of this piece will be recognized by some listeners as the 'call to play' of boyhood days. In New York City it is yelled on the syllables, 'Wee-Awk-Eee' to get the gang together for a game or a festive occasion of some sort. This call very naturally suggested itself for a piece of music being composed for a very festive occasion. From this it should not be inferred that the Overture is program music. In fact, the idea for the music came to mind before the origin of the theme was recalled. The development of this bit of 'folk material' then, is along purely musical lines."

87

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES

NOV 20 1939

Music:

A Word for the Friends Of the Boston Orchestra

By Carl E. Lindstrom

Today's column is not intended to be particularly informative. It concerns a matter which perhaps we should not be discussing at all; its news aspects will come up later.

Last week there was a meeting in Symphony Hall of the Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. About 800 to a thousand were present—culture-loving folk who, besides helping to support the orchestra by buying tickets, generously open up their purses and contribute sums ranging up to $500 each in order to meet the deficits which necessarily occur in the operation of any great symphony orchestra. There were many facts and figures but at the outset Reginald C. Foster, chairman of the Friends, made it clear that the meeting was a closed one, hence all the statistics were off the record.

Concert Calendar

Nov. 21: Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Serge Koussevitzky conducting; Bushnell, 8:15 p. m.

Nov. 22: Ernest White, New York organist; Trinity College Chapel, 8:15 p. m.

It is violating no confidence, however, to say that the cause proceeds apace and there is reason for encouragement about the present campaign. We are bound to hear more of it later. Since the fact has already been published there is no harm in repeating that during the season just passed there were 28 Friends in Hartford as opposed to only two or three the previous year. Hartford's interest in the Boston Orchestra is a well-grounded tradition for this distinguished group began coming here soon after its organization in 1881. As a matter of fact, the first concert was in 1885 and since then there have been few if any seasons here which did not count a visit from the Bostonians. Recently they have been coming twice each season in the Bushnell series.

* * *

It is also worth repeating that the Boston Symphony Orchestra has in a certain sense been rededicated to all New England. At first thought there might be some ground for apprehension about the possibility of a conflict with our own Hartford orchestra. Superficially, it might be pointed out that the Hartford orchestra too has broken the bounds of its geographic designation and aspires to be known as Connecticut's Symphony Orchestra. A more reasoned consideration of the picture dissipates any clash of thought. Contributions which Hartford people make to the Boston orchestra will not deplete the source of gifts to her own organization. It is axiomatic that there is a great deal of money in Hartford.

* * *

About one feature of last Tuesday's meeting it is possible to speak freely however. After the business session Dr. Koussevitzky and his men took their places on the platform and regaled the Friends with music of a kind which only they know how to play. The string body was heard in Arthur Foote's Suite in E Major, incomparably played.

Most interesting was the appearance of the already famous colored soprano Dorothy Maynor, whom Dr. Koussevitzky discovered last summer at Stockbridge. She was heard before a distinguished private gathering there at that time and some estimates of her ability appeared in the papers. Her Tuesday's appearance was not a public concert either but it is well to take some note of what sort of voice she has. She sang a Handel aria "Sleep, Why Dost Thou Leave Me?", an aria from Mozart's Magic Flute and a group of Negro spirituals.

Her voice is one of power and brilliance but this brilliance is not her greatest asset for the reason that it occasionally takes on a piercing quality. This she used without restraint in the spirituals and in these too she lapsed into a free use of negroid timbres, naturally highly suited to the context.

* * *

It was in the two arias that the greatest beauties of voice came out. She has some high tones which taken at half-voice have a lovely floating quality, pure head tones the like of which I have not heard in many a season. Her voice also has great flexibility and a trill in the Handel aria was something to remember for a long time.

DR. SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

Dr. Koussevitzky is tremendously enthusiastic about her. He considers Miss Maynor's a voice without peer in modern times. This is not conceded by the writer. As a matter of fact she has some technical flaws which considerably mar the performance. They are not irremediable. The formation of her tones leaves something to be desired. In singing one of the spirituals without accompaniment the stroke of the glottis was clearly and annoyingly obvious. It considerably marred the purity of the vocal line and she should get rid of it.

Miss Maynor appeared in New York Sunday but at this writing no reports are available.

* * *

Walton Deckelman, who is director of three of the city's choral groups, begins the season better equipped than ever for his arduous duties. Not content with the actual experience gained in rehearsals and concerts, he spent a part of the summer studying with Melius Christiansen, who for thirty-five years has been director of the famous mixed choir at Olaf's College. Mr. Christiansen held these classes at Penn Hall, Chambersburg, Pa.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
BULLETIN

NOV 20 1939

Music

Large Audience Attends Opening of Last Half of Chamber Music Series in Museum of R. I. School of Design; Brahms and Beethoven Are Played.

The last half of the chamber music series in the Museum of the Rhode Island School of Design was begun yesterday afternoon, with the largest audience that has attended thus far. Almost every chair was taken.

The Brahms quintet in B minor, Op. 115, for strings and clarinet, and the first of the three Rasoumovsky quartets, by Beethoven, were played.

Victor Polatschek, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, joined the Musical Art Quartet in the Brahms. Mr. Polatschek's tone in all registers and his supple mastery of the keys are sources of wonder and pleasure on all occasions, whether he is contributing to orchestral or chamber music.

The beautiful, and sometimes soporific quintet was elucidated with great skill. The artists evoked in full measure its mellowness and its musing and reflective moods. The contrasting timbres of strings and woodwind were set against each other in nice proportion, especially in the adagio, where the pastoral tones of the clarinet float upon muted strings, and in the third movement with its spirited mockery between the clarinetist and his companions.

The famous favorite from Beethoven's Op. 59—No. 1, in F-major—fared splendidly. It is superb string writing, never muddy, offering opportunities to one and all among the performers, recognizing for a change the fact that the 'cello can sing as well as grunt. The artists made its beautiful melodies soar or dance, as the moment required, and imparted to it throughout a rhythmic life that was thoroughly exciting. At times, however, quality of tone was sacrificed to vigor of attack and accent.

The audience applauded both works with enthusiasm.

A few of the main gallery pictures in the exhibition of contemporary American painting were rearranged for the benefit of yesterday's lookers and listeners. Coffee was served during intermission, with Mrs. Arthur M. Allen pouring.

Tonight's program:

Quartet in A minor, Opus 132....Beethoven
  Assai sostenuto—Allegro
  Allegro ma non tanto
  Molto adagio in the Lydian Mode
    (A restored one's holy song of thanks to Divinity)
  Alla macia, assai vivace
  Piu allegro—Allegro appassionato
II
Quartet in D major, Opus 64, No. 5
  (The Lark) ....Hayd
  Allegro moderato
  Adagio cantabile
  Menuetto: Allegretto
  Vivace

Y. L.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST

NOV 20 1939

WORDS AND MUSIC — By Samuel Chotzinoff

Beethoven 7th and Septet Share Toscanini's Program

Dorothy Maynor, in Debut, Shows Innate Musicianship and Appeal

The fourth concert of the Toscanini-N. B. C. Symphony Orchestra Beethoven cycle in Studio 8H in Radio City brought forward on Saturday night the "Egmont" Overture, the Septet and the Seventh Symphony.

Mr. Toscanini augmented the original number of instruments in the Septet with twenty-eight strings, and the result was a demonstration of the artistry and flexibility of the ensemble. The unanimity of the violins, for example, in very tricky passages that were meant for a solo player, was nothing short of remarkable. Yet for this listener, at least, the augmentation deprived the Septet of the intimate character of the original scoring. There was, to be sure, a gain in sonority commensurate with the acoustical requirements of a good-sized auditorium. But there was a corresponding loss in the individuality of the string parts as conceived by Beethoven.

The Septet, like all of Beethoven's earlier compositions, remains potent and beautiful music. In this respect Beethoven is like Wagner, whose early operas are as self-contained as his later. The Septet may be couched in the musical formality of its period, but through it Beethoven's spirit speaks in every page.

The performance of the Seventh Symphony brought the audience shouting to its feet. Here Mr. Toscanini achieved a blend of poetry and motion that gave validity to a celebrated critic's opinion that the Seventh Symphony is the apotheosis of the dance. The tempi which the conductor adopted were, as usual, so magically right for the character and thought of each section of the work that their justness came as a shock. And so pernicious is tradition that one heard with surprise the fast pace of the trio of the scherzo, even while one recognized that Mr. Toscanini was following not only the spirit but the letter of the score.

* * *

Dorothy Maynor, colored soprano indorsed by Serge Koussevitzky, made her New York debut at Town Hall last night before a capacity audience. Except for the inevitable group of spirituals Miss Maynor's program was both musically severe and taxing. It included songs and arias by Bach, Handel, Spontini, Mozart, Schumann, Schubert and Strauss.

Advance reports about the sensational character of the new soprano's voice and art proved, last night, to have a certain foundation. Miss Maynor's voice is clear and true and of a most appealing quality. Equally serviceable in all registers, it sounds beautiful in every gradation of power, except for very high tones forte which have a metallic ring. In pianissimo singing Miss Maynor may be said to be without a rival.

As an interpreter Miss Maynor impresses by the sincerity of her emotions and her natural feeling for phrasing. Simplicity and innate musicianship characterized her singing of Handel's "O Sleep, why dost thou leave me" and the arias "Ach, ich fuel's" and "Non mi dir" from Mozart's "The Magic Flute" and "Don Giovanni." Schumann's "Du bist wie eine Blume" was exquisitely sung, and Shubert's "Die Allmacht" was projected with true exaltation.

Miss Maynor scored a genuine success with an audience that had obviously come to hail a marvel. There will no doubt be further opportunities to hear and appraise more fully the soprano's striking gifts.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
BROOKLYN, N. Y.
EAGLE

NOV 20 1939

—MUSIC OF THE DAY—

Negro Soprano Hailed In Town Hall Debut

Dorothy Maynor's Voice Exceptional; Francescatti in Philharmonic Debut

By MILES KASTENDIECK

One of the great debuts of our time took place in Town Hall last night. Dorothy Maynor, the new Negro soprano, with a voice so magnificent that it must be ranked among the very few truly great voices of the day, made musical history in her first public recital. News of what might happen had spread as the result of the attention she had attracted when she sang for Koussevitzky at the Berkshire Festival last August.

The result was that a capacity audience assembled, confident that they were to hear something out of the ordinary. They did. Their memory of this event will probably span a lifetime. In short, she was marvelous.

Through arias, lieder and spirituals, Miss Maynor sang her way with unaffected grace, noteworthy poise and natural manner. This was her big moment and she came through nobly. She has everything that a singer could want in a voice; she has an interpretative sense that promises her development into a true artist; she has a production that except for a few small matters readily corrected is founded on perfect breath control; and she has a winning personality. What a future lies before her if she is wisely managed and not exploited.

The most striking characteristic of her voice, aside from its general timbre, is the sweetness of quality she attains in one of the most notable pianissimos this writer has ever heard. The voice itself is wide in range and equal throughout its compass; what roughness appears can be easily ironed out if she will pay heed to her advisers. It was a joy to sit back and listen to its expressiveness and drink in the sheer beauty of its quality.

A group of Bach, Handel and Spontini opened the program. It was necessary for Miss Maynor to overcome some not unexpected nervousness at first. But that did not detract from an impressive performance of Handel's "O Sleep, why dost thou leave me," from "Semele." It was in two Mozart arias: "Ach, ich fuhl's," from "The Magic Flute," and "Non mi dir," from "Don Giovanni," that she revealed all her powers and resourcefulness. Her emotional adjustment to the content of each indicated that she had what was needed to project these works in the right fashion.

Having proved herself worthy in these arias of a great tradition of song, she turned to the lieder of Schumann, Schubert, Wolf and Strauss and gave a series of interpretations that were arresting. It was necessary for her to repeat Schumann's "Du Bist wie eine Blume" and she might just as well have encored Schubert's "Gretchen am Spinnrad," "Du bist die Ruh" and "Die Allmacht." The applause was deafening. Then she came out to sing the "Ave Maria" in the most appealing manner with a ravishing pianissimo.

A group of spirituals was climaxed with an encore without accompaniment: "Were you there?" Four Strauss songs, "Zur Ruh, Zur Ruh," "Frulingsfeier," "Die Nacht" and "Kling" completed the printed list. The audience was loath to leave. It had come prepared for the unusual. It remained to be further astounded and delighted.

Miss Maynor was born in Norfolk, Va., the daughter of a Methodist minister, and received her first musical training in the choir of her father's church. At 14 she entered Hampton Institute, where she received her first vocal lessons, and a few years later toured Europe with the institute's famous Negro chorus. Planning to become a music teacher, she enrolled in the Westminster Choir School at Princeton, N. J., but was persuaded to pursue a career as a vocalist. Following this she went to New York to continue her vocal studies.

Miss Maynor went to Stockbridge, Mass., last August, to hear the festival and was presented to Dr. Koussevitzky, who agreed to hear her in an audition. Dr. Koussevitzky was so impressed by Miss Maynor's singing that he asked her to appear as soloist the following day at his annual outing for members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

in that his father was a pupil of Sivori, who in turn was at the time the only surviving pupil of Paganini himself. Virtuosity went hand and hand with virtuosity in this debut.

With a sound technical foundation, a pleasing, firm tone and an awareness of musical phrasing and values, Mr. Francescatti surmounted the difficulties in his path with comparative ease and effective results. He is a violinist who will bear watching.

John Barbirolli conducted the first performance by the society of Arthur Foote's suite in E major for string orchestra, a thoroughly delightful work to hear, cannily made and definitely appealing. Its three movements are conventionally contrived but also stamped with the composer's individuality. The work was well played and equally well received.

With the performance of the Brahms Second Symphony the orchestra suspended its concerts here for the next fortnight while it tours the hinterland.

* * *

NBC CONCERT

Little can be said that has not already been said about the Toscanini Beethoven cycle with the NBC Symphony Orchestra. There was, however, an unusual feature to the fourth program last Saturday night, namely, the inclusion of the seldom heard Septuor in E flat, opus 20. The youthful, spirited character of the music was happily recreated in this performance so that it scored instant response from the studio audience. The "Egmont" Overture and the Seventh Symphony were played according to the Toscanini tradition.

* * *

OTHER EVENTS

Edouard Grobe, tenor, sang in Town Hall yesterday afternoon, revealing a light, pleasing voice somewhat limited in range and a rather straightforward delivery of his program with little differentiation among the styles or moods of the songs of Brahms and Strauss which came in the second half of his list.

With the Budapest Quartet and William Primrose to bring real quality to the performances of Beethoven's Quintet in C and Mozart's Quintet in B flat, the New Friends of Music concert in Town Hall yesterday at the twilight hour gave considerable pleasure. Also on this program was Mozart's Serenade in E flat for woodwinds and French horns, played by members of the New Friends of Music Orchestra under the direction of Josef Blant.

The young people flocked to Carnegie Hall on Saturday morning to hear their "Uncle Ernest" Schelling begin the seventeenth season of the Philharmonic-Symphony's concerts for young people and entered earnestly into the study of musical form according to the Schelling tradition.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE

NOV 20 1939

Miss Maynor Has Song Debut At Town Hall

Negro Soprano, Praised by Koussevitzky, Is Heard by Expectant Audience

By Jerome D. Bohm

An audience fully prepared to hear the soprano counterpart of Marian Anderson filled Town Hall last night at the debut of Dorothy Maynor, so great was the curiosity to hear this twenty-eight-year-old Negro singer, who was first heard last summer at the Berkshire Festival when she sang at the reception given by Serge Koussevitzky for members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and officials of the Berkshire Festival committee, after having greatly impressed Mr. Koussevitzky at a privatee hearing the preceding day.

Miss Maynor, a native of Norfolk, Va., is the daughter of a Methodist minister. She began her vocal training at the Hampton Institute, which she entered at the age of fourteen, and has toured Europe as a member of the Institute's Chorus. She is short in stature and plump, but she has a winning smile and a modesty of demeanor which won her audience even before she had uttered a sound.

The ordeal of facing for the first time an audience which is prepared for sensational accomplishments is not an enviable one, especially when that audience consists in a goodly part of prominent musicians and voice-teachers. It is scarcely to be wondered at, therefore, if Miss Maynor gave evidence of nervousness in her opening Bach air, "To Thee, Jehovah." But in the ensuing "O Sleep, Why Dost Thou Leave Me," of Handel, the warm, transparent texture of the soprano's voice and the beautifully proportioned phrasing in mezza-voce which was to characterize so much of her later efforts were already observable.

An entirely different test of her abilities, and one not always successfully met, was the following aria, "Tu che invoce con orrore," from Spontini's "Vestale." Here some of the defects of production which were to occur again when voluminous top tones were demanded were first noticeable, but they might have been attributed here to excitement and the early appearance on the program of so arduous a contribution.

For her next offerings, Miss Maynor chose two of the most difficult of Mozart's arias—Pamina's "Ach, ich fuehl's" from "Zauberfloete" and Donna Anna's "Non mi dir," from "Don Giovanni." The first of these was delivered, from the tonal aspect, in flawless fashion. Those floating, soft tones which are Miss Maynor's chief glory at present, were utilized here to the greatest advantage, and stylistically, the interpretation was admirable.

That want of breath control is not an inherent fault in Miss Maynor's equipment was obvious. For she frequently uttered long, expertly controlled phrases of the utmost loveliness. But this was always when the voice was not employed full strength. Nothing could have been more enchanting than her revelations of Schumann's "Liebeslied" and "Du bist wie eine Blume," or more especially of Schubert's "Ave Maria." The latter was given as an encore and in a manner which can only be described as exquisite.

But regrettable as it is, the fact remains that Miss Maynor's high register needs further schooling. And it would be an injustice to herself if she did not immediately set about remedying this defect. In such Lieder as Schubert's "Die Allmacht," "Gretchen am Spinrad," and in the tremendously taxing "Fruehlingsfeier" and "Kling" of Richard Strauss, well-placed, gleaming top tones alternated with others which were pinched and forced, vitiating their effectiveness. This should not prove an insuperable obstacle to overcome, for Miss Maynor's range is potentially wide.

In addition to the above-mentioned items, Miss Maynor sang a group of Negro spirituals. These she wisely refrained from attempting to interpret as art songs, but published in true Negro style. The accompanist was Arpad Sandor.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
SUN

NOV 20 1939

SENSATION MADE BY NEGRO SOPRANO

Dorothy Maynor Excites Capacity Audience.

By OSCAR THOMPSON.

A remarkable new Negro soprano, Dorothy Maynor, daughter of a Virginia Methodist minister, made an exciting first appearance in Town Hall last night. Though perhaps not twenty persons among those present had heard her sing a note, the cards plainly were stacked for a sensation. What had been written and said about Miss Maynor's informal debut at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's picnic last summer had prompted such curiosity that she drew a capacity house. She did not need to sing to evoke the first rousing applause. But when she did sing, the putting of palm to palm was prodigious.

Plump, smiling Miss Maynor should go far. She has all the basic requirements for unusual success. In recent memory few vocalists have begun their careers with such ready acclaim. Few have had the gifts that Miss Maynor clearly possesses in prodigal abundance. But not everything that she did last night was of the level of these gifts. Some of her singing was singing in the raw. In the opinion of this reviewer she was only about 50 per cent ready for a New York debut.

But when fully half a singer's work is exceptional—and some of it phenomenal—it is not easy to say that she should have waited a year or two for the triumph that came to her so easily last night. Her best was equal to the best of its kind anywhere. The most experienced artists have their faults. Miss Maynor has hers. The most serious is the glottis stroke. Last night it produced a recognizable click in the middle of otherwise smoothly sung phrases, chiefly when words began with open vowel sounds. For the sake of the singer's entire future, this should be corrected forthwith.

Beauty Chiefly in Soft Voice.

The beauty of the voice—and it is no ordinary beauty—is in its mezza-voce, piano and pianissimo. Though excitement placed a handicap on the singer in her opening Bach air, the soft tones with which she floated Handel's "O Sleep" were of delicious color and texture. One might wait a lifetime to hear Schumann's "Du bist wie eine Blume" sung with such exquisite sensitivity. Schubert's "Du bist die Ruh," if not quite so impeccable, and "Ave Maria," the latter an extra, had the same magical soft flow. The singer had the breath for some extremely long phrases, when sung softly, but did not always manage it as successfully for shorter ones in the full voice.

Miss Maynor sang with a plenitude of feeling and with a fine command of lyric line. But the results were unequal. An air from Mozart's "Magic Flute" ("Ach, ich fuehls" was presented with rare skill; the "Non mi dir" from "Don Giovanni" began well, then lost its stride and ended a little clumsily. The high voice was often knifelike in its edge; the low voice sometimes pushed. Though the audience applauded "Die Allmacht" almost more than any other number, the singer was spent in its final phrases and there was anti-climax rather a burst of power. Her Negro spirituals had the charm of an infectious personality, though the tonal refinement with which they were sung took from them something of their racial tang. But, to repeat, Miss Maynor should go far, so distinctive and appealing is her tone at its best, and so limitless would seem to be the possibilities of her vocal technic, if judiciously guided and guarded against overambitious use at the start.

Arpad Sandor played as an artist who knew he was accompanying some one quite out of the ordinary.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
HARTFORD, CONN.
COURANT

NOV 21 1939

Koussevitzky Here Tonight For Concert

Leads Boston Symphony Orchestra in Second Program of Bushnell Concert Series

A capacity audience of music lovers will be at the Bushnell Memorial tonight for the second event of the Bushnell Concert Series, a program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky. This concert is scheduled to begin at 8:15 o'clock.

Tonight's program is first of two which the Boston Symphony will play at the Bushnell Memorial this season. Dr. Koussevitsky will lead his musicians in an unusually interesting list which has been announced as follows: "American Festival Overture" by William Schuman; "Symphony No. 2" by Randall Thompson and "Symphony in D Minor" by Cesar Franck.

One of the interesting features of tonight's concert is the fact that Mr. Schuman, the composer of the opening work, is coming to Hartford for this concert. When the New York Philharmonic-Symphony appeared here last month in the first event of the series, Jaromia Weinberger likewise came to Hartford to hear the performance of his Variations and Fugue, "Under the Spreading Chestnut Tree."

Both Mr. Schuman and Mr. Thompson are young Americans. The former is 29 years old and the latter 40. The two works in question were enthusiastically received when played during the recent Boston Symphony concerts of All-American music.

The Cesar Franck Symphony which has not been heard in the Bushnell Series for several years is one of the best loved works in the orchestral field, and the fact that Dr. Koussevitzky is going to conduct it tonight has stimulated much favorable comment from Hartford symphony lovers. It was first heard in the Bushnell Concert Series under the baton of Leopold Stokowski.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEWPORT NEWS, VA.
TIMES - HERALD

NOV 22 1939

N. Y. MUSICIANS LAUD CONCERT OF HAMPTONIAN

Dorothy Maynor, Negro Soprano, Receives Overwhelming Applause in Town Hall Concert.

Dorothy Maynor, Negro soprano of Norfolk, and formerly a student at Hampton institute, made her debut in a concert Sunday night in Town hall in New York city.

The institute graduate has sung many times in Ogden hall, her last being a concert here about two years ago.

This summer national prominence was gained by the 28-year-old Negro singer when her voice was acclaimed director of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Before her New York debut, the woman appeared on a program with the Boston Symphony orchestra in a performance of Carpenter's "Skyscrapers," and in addition she made several records with the orchestra.

Town hall was sold out for the performance and in the New York Herald Tribune, Jerome D. Bohm reported, "She is short in stature and plump, but she has a winning smile and a modesty of demeanor which won her audience even before she had uttered a sound.

The singer is the daughter of the late Rev. John J. Mainor and just prior to her debut adjusted the spelling of her name, changing the "i" to "y."

Originally she entered Hampton institute as a student of home economics but because of her vocal talent, was persuaded to change to the department of music. She spent 10 years at the institute in the academy and the college. She was a member of the institute choir that toured Europe in 1929 under the direction of Nathaniel R. Dett.

Following her graduation in 1933, she studied at Westminister school at Princeton, N. J.

Among the institute people who attended the debut were Ernest Hays, organist; Mrs. Harry D. Howe, Estelle Thomas, Irene Sanders, Mrs. Alexander Purves and Mr. and Mrs. Robert Ogden Purves.

THIS CLIPPING FROM
NEW YORK, N. Y.
POST
NOV 22 1939

89

"The World MUST HEAR Her"

Post Photo By Gaston.

DOROTHY MAYNOR: HUMBLE

By MICHEL MOK

